Sir Thomas Armſtrong. When I was before the Council, my Lord, they ordered that I ſhould have Counſel allotted me, but I could have no benefit by that Order; for when I was taken, I was robbed of all the Money I had, and have not had one Penny reſtored to me, nor any Money ſince, I know not whether the Law allows Perſons in my Condition to be robbed and ſtripped.

L. C. J. I know nothing at all of that Matter, Sir Thomas.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. My Lord, I know Lawyers will not plead without Money, and being robbed I could not have wherewithall to Fee them.

L. C. J. Sir Thomas Armſtrong. You take the Liberty of ſaying what you pleaſe; you talk of being robbed, no body has robbed you that I know of.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. No body ſays you do know of it; but ſo it is.

L. C. J. Nay, be as angry as you will, Sir Thomas, we are not concerned at your Anger. We will undoubtedly do our Duty.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. I ought to have the benefit of the Law, and I demand no more.

L. C. J. That you ſhall have by the Grace of God. See that Execution be done on Friday next according to Law. You ſhall have the full benefit of the Law.

Then the Priſoner was carried back to Newgate, and afterwards upon a Petition, the Court ordered Mrs. Matthews to be releaſed out of Cuſtody without Fees.

This Attainder was Reverſed in B. R. on a Writ of Error, 6 W. III. 4 Mod. 366.

Die Jovis 6. Nov. Anno Dom. 1684. Mich. Ter. 36 Car. 2. B. R.

At the Seſſion of Niſi Prius for the City of London, held at Guild-hall.

Pritchard verſus Papillon.

London ſſ. SIR William Pritchard, late Lord Mayor of the City of London, having in Eaſter Term laſt brought an Action upon the Caſe, for falſly, maliciouſly, and without probable Cauſe, procuring him to be arreſted and impriſoned in his Mayoralty, againſt Thomas Papillon, Eſq; The Defendant pleaded Not Guilty, and thereupon Iſſue being joyned, it came this Day to be tryed before the Lord Chief Juſtice Jefferies; and the Jury ſworn to try this Cauſe were theſe, Bartholomew Ferryman, Thomas Blackmore, Thomas Symonds, William Whatton, John Green, Thomas Amy, } Jur' { Joseph Baggs, Daniel Chandler, John Reynalds, John Allen, Joseph Caine, and William Withers, Jun.

Mr. Mundy. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, Sir William Pritchard, Knight, late Lord Mayor of the City of London, is Plaintiff, and Thomas Papillon, Esq; is the Defendant: And this, Gentlemen, is in a special Action upon the Case, wherein the Plaintiff does declare, That whereas the 12th of February in the 35th Year of this King, and before and after for several Months then next ensuing, he was Mayor of the City of London, being duly elected and sworn into the Office af Mayoralty of the said City, and according to the Custom of the said City time out of mind, he ought daily to attend the said Office in the diligent Government of the said City, according to the Duty of his said Office, which he was to execute to the Honour and Dignity belonging thereunto; That the Defendant, Thomas Papillon, being one of the Commonalty of the said City, and under the Government of the Plaintiff, by virtue of his Office aforesaid, not being ignorant of the Premisses, but contriving, and falsly, and maliciously envying the happy Estate of the Plaintiff in his said Office, as also unjustly to disturb the Plaintiff in the Execution of his said Office, the said 12th Day of February in the 35th Year aforesaid, the Defendant for Vexation to the Plaintiff, not having any lawful or probable Cause of Action against the Plaintiff, falsly and maliciously did prosecute the King's Writ of Alias Capias out of the Court of King's Bench against the Plaintiff, by the Name of Sir William Pritchard, Knight, directed to the then Coroner of the City of London; by which Writ it was commanded the said Coroner to take the Plaintiff, if found within the said City, and safely keep him, so as to have his Body before that Court at Westminster upon Wednesday next, after 15 Days of Easter then next following, to answer the now Defendant in a Plea of Trespass: And that the Defendant of his further Malice against the Plaintiff, afterwards and before the Return of the Writ, to wit, upon the 24th Day of April in the 35th Year aforesaid, at London, to wit, in the Parish of St. Mildred the Virgin, in the Poultry, in the Ward of Cheap, London, delivered the said Writ of Alias Capias to one John Brome, Gent. then being Coroner of the said City, to be executed; and then and there the Plaintiff, then being Mayor of the said City, by virtue of that Writ, maliciously and unjustly did procure to be taken, and arrested, and detained in Prison under the Custody of the said Coroner for the space of six Hours, to the Disgrace and Scandal of the Plaintiff and his said Office, as also to the manifest Damage, Prejudice, and Grievance of the Plaintiff: Whereas in Truth and in Fact the Defendant at the time of the taking, arresting, and detaining of the Plaintiff in Prison, as aforesaid, had not any just or probable Cause of Action against the Plaintiff in the Premises, whereby the Plaintiff says he is injured, and which he lays to his Damage 10000 l. To this the Defendant has pleaded Not Guilty. If we that are of Counsel for the Plaintiff shall prove this Matter unto you, Gentlemen, that we have laid in the Declaration that has been opened unto you, you are to find for the Plaintiff, and I hope will repair him in Damages for this Affront and Injury.

Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. At. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the Plaintiff; and this Action is brought, Gentlemen, to vindicate the Honour of the Chair from such Affronts as these, which in no Age, till of late days, our Times of Faction and Confusion it ever met with; That by a Person that is a Citizen of London, and one of the Commonalty, that ought to have paid Submission to the Lord Mayor as his Chief Magistrate, and was bound so to do by his Oath as a Freeman should, without Cause of Suit, arrest the Lord Mayor of the City. That there was no probable Cause, is evident by his not proceeding in the Action that he had thus brought. But, Gentlemen, we shall shew you in the Course of our Evidence, that there lay a further Malice in this Case, and that there was a Design in it against the Government. For we shall give you Evidence that this Design was laid to carry on the great Plot against the Lives of the King and his Brother, and for the Subversion of the Government. For they contrived it so, that they would imprison the Mayor, and then, thought they, the Loyal Citizens will interpose to rescue him, and then the Party should rise to assist the Officer, he having the Countenance of Authority, and being in the Execution of the King's Writ (especially if it be considered then who was Coroner) and so a publick Commotion would be made, a general Mutiny, and that would be a fit Opportunity, in the Confusion of the City wanting its Chief Governor, of doing what they designed. Gentlemen, We shall prove all that is laid in the Declaration; and likewise that the End of this Business was to have had a Commotion for the accomplishing their great Conspiracy as has been opened. That Sir William Pritchard was arrested in his Mayoralty, I suppose, will be agreed, or else we shall prove it.

Mr. Ward. Yes, yes, we agree it.

Mr. Finch.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will go on and prove the manner of it. Swear Mr. Gorges, and Mr. Keeling. (Which was done.) Mr. Keeling, Pray, will you tell my Lord, and the Jury, were you made a special Bailiff to arrest Sir William Pritchard when he was Lord Mayor, and what did you do upon it? Tell all you know of it, and what was designed by it.

Keeling. My Lord, All that I do know of it is this: It was upon the 24th Day of April, I have the Warrant here to shew, I met with Mr. Goodenough at Mr. Russel's the Cook in Ironmonger lane, and several others were there; and I went away a little while and came again: While I was gone from them, they put my Name into the Warrant, and upon that Warrant I did arrest Sir William Pritchard, who was then Lord Mayor, at the Suit of Mr. Thomas Papillon, I suppose this is the Gentleman. (Pointing to the Defendant.) I had no Order for it from Mr. Papillon, nor ever spoke with him about it; but I had Order from the Coroner, who upon the arrest-arresting of him took my Lord Mayor into his Custody.

Mr. At. Gen. Where was my Lord Mayor then?

Keeling. At Grocers-hall.

Mr. At. Gen. Was that the Place he kept his Mayoralty in?

Keeling. Yes, it was so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was he doing when you arrested him?

Keeling. There was some Disturbance upon it among the Officers and People there. The Coroner came up to him and said, Sir, I have a Writ against you, I pray you would please to give an Appearance at the Suit of Mr. Thomas Papillon, and another at the Suit of Mr. John Dubois, and some Words there pass'd between him and the Coroner; and my Lord Mayor refusing to give any Appearance, the Coroner Mr. Brome bid us execute our Warrants, upon which I came up to my Lord Mayor and touched him upon the Shoulder, and said, I arrest you at the Suit of Thomas Papillon Esq; and one Ferdinando Burley arrested him again at the Suit of Mr. John Dubois.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you do with him when you had arrested him?

Keeling. The Coroner dismiss'd us, and, as I take it, carried him home to his House.

Mr. At. Gen. What Instructions had you what to do, in case he made any Resistance, and did not submit to the Arrest?

Keeling. I know of no Instructions about any such thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was by, pray, when Orders were given you to arrest my Lord Mayor?

Keeling. Both the Goodenoughs.

Mr. At. Gen. He in the Proclamation, you mean, and his Brother?

Keeling. Yes, Richard and Francis Goodenough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And who else, pray?

Keeling. Several that I did not know.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember any body besides the Goodenoughs, in particular?

Keeling. There was one a Tallow-Chandler, and a great many that I did not know.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How many do you think there were? And where was it?

Keeling. I believe there were about thirty or forty, and it was at Russel's the Cook's in Ironmonger lane.

Mr. At. Gen. Did they all come along with you to Grocer's Hall to arrest my Lord Mayor?

Keeling. No, my Lord, they did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did any of them, and which, pray?

Keeling. Sir, I will tell you who did come to my Lord Mayor's. There was the Coroner, Francis Goodenough, Ferdinando Burley, and my self: And after my Lord was arrested, the Coroner bid us be gone, and he would look after my Lord Mayor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whither did you go after that?

Keeling. I went to Sir Harry Tulse's directly.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not you expect an Opposition? And had you not some Discourse what you should do in case there was an Opposition?

Keeling. No, I cannot tell any thing of that.

Mr. At. Gen. You say, there was a Meeting, or Consult, at Russel's, of forty People; Had you not there some Consultation what was to be done if my Lord Mayor did not obey the Arrest?

Keeling. I do not remember any thing about that at that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Was there at any other time before? Or did you hear any of those People discourse the Goodenoughs, or any of them, what they would have done in case they were resisted?

Keeling. I do not remember any Discourse of any such thing, before or after.

Sir George Jefferies.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Keeling, let me ask you a Question or two. Were you ever employed by the Coroner to be a special Bailiff to arrest any body before this time you speak of, that you arrested Sir William Pritchard?

Keeling. No, my Lord, I never was.

L. C. J. Then, pray recollect your self, who were at that Meeting, when, as you say, your Name was put into the Warrant for this Arrest?

Keeling. My Lord, When I went away for a little while, I left these Persons particularly that I did name, the two Goodenoughs, and one Burton, I think, and one Crompton, and that Tallow-Chandler; there were to the Number of thirty or forty that I did not know their Names.

L. C. J. But, pray, how came you to be employed in this Service then? Were you a Tradesman in Town then?

Keeling. Yes, in Wapping.

L. C. J. Good now, how came you to be employ'd in arresting my Lord Mayor more than any other of those thirty or forty that you say were there then?

Keeling. I went there among them, but did not know then that I should be concerned in this Business; and I went away a little while, and when I came back, they told me, that my Name was put into the Wrarant.

L. C. J. Pray tell us the whole Story, How you that were a Tradesman at Wapping, should come to be employed as a Bailiff to the Coroner of London to arrest my Lord Mayor? There must be some particular End in it.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Keeling, Tell the Court and the Jury the whole Story, and what it was that brought you into this.

Keeling. My Lord, Mr. Goodenough told me I must be concerned.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee tell us what Goodenough desired you to be concerned in?

Keeling. Upon my coming back to the Company that was at Russel's, Mr. Richard Goodenough told me, I must be concerned in the Business of arresting my then Lord Mayor, Sir William Pritchard: Said I to him, Mr. Goodenough, This is foreign and remote to my Business, to be concerned in such a Matter as this, it will seem very strange for me to do it. He press'd it upon me to do it; and, says he, if you will not do it, you will be a Man look'd ill upon, and it will be taken strangely from that Party; he meant, I suppose, the Discontented Party, the Faction, or what you please to call it, that were not contented with the Administration of the Government in the City at that time; and he urged it upon me with a great many Arguments. I opposed it with much Vigour a good while, while, but at laſt he prevailed upon me to go along with the Coroner; and Frank Goodenough his Brother ſaid he would go with me, and he did ſo; and we came and arreſted my Lord Mayor, as I told you before.

L. C. J. Where did Mr. Goodenough preſs you to be concerned in this Buſineſs, as you ſay?

Keeling. At Mr. Ruſſel's a Cook's in Ironmonger-Lane.

L. C. J. How came you thither?

Keeling. He ſent me a Letter to meet him there. He was at me before to be concerned in it, but I did not comply with him in it. Mr. Richard Goodenough it was, and Mr. Aſhurſt, I think it was Alderman Corniſh's Son in Law was by.

L. C. J. Was Nelthrop there?

Keeling. No, my Lord, he was not there, but they did not proceed then, becauſe my Lord and his Brethren were gone out of Town to wait upon the King, I think; And this was ſix Weeks or two Months before this Meeting at Ruſſel's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Keeling, recollect your ſelf. Had you any Diſcourſe with Goodenough, or any body elſe, what the Conſequence of ſuch an Arreſt would be?

Keeling. They told me, my Lord Mayor, and Court of Aldermen, had made an ill Return to the Mandamus's that were ſerved upon them for the ſwearing of Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois Sheriffs, and therefore Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois had good Cauſe of Action againſt them; and Goodenough ſaid, he had order from them to arreſt my Lord Mayor upon an Action, and deſired me to be concerned.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But pray remember what you ſaid before, Mr. Keeling, Why ſhould the diſcontented Party, as you call them, be concerned, and be angry with you if you did not arreſt my Lord Mayor?

Keeling. The particular Argument that he uſed with me to perſwade me to it, was this, That I having a Trade and Dealing among that Sort of People, they would think ill of me if I did not do it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But why ſhould the Party be angry with you, if you were not a Bailiff to arreſt my Lord Mayor, at the Suit of Mr. Papillon?

Keeling. I did not know the reaſon of their Anger, he might have ſomething in his Head that he did not reveal to me. But that was the Argument he uſed, The Party would think ill of me.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If you have done with this Witneſs, I would ask him a Queſtion. You ſay, Sir, that Goodenough told you, the Diſcontented Party would be angry with you, if you did not do it? Upon your Oath, was the Diſcontented Party named?

Keeling. No, Sir, but that Party of which Mr. Goodenough and I then was, and they were the Diſcontented Party, I think, for they were ſo diſcontented, that they would have killed the King and the Duke.

Mr. At. Gen. That is an Anſwer, I hope, to your Queſtion, Mr. Serjeant.

L. C. J. I think, when he names the Goodenoughs to be of the Party, no body queſtions but they were diſcontented.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He has explained well enough ſure what he meant by the Diſcontented Party, thoſe that were ſo diſcontented that they would have killed the King and the Duke. Thoſe were the Promoters of this Action, and Mr. Keeling muſt engage in it, or they would be diſpleaſed. Now, my Lord, we ſhall call Sir Henry Tulſe, and Sir Robert Jefferies, to ſhew what the Coroner did.

Keeling. I arreſted Sir Harry Tulſe afterwards.

Then Sir Harry Tulſe was called.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, we deſire Sir Harry Tulſe may not be ſworn, we have an Exception to his Teſtimony.

L. C. J. What is your Objection?

Mr. Ward. We are informed, he and the reſt of the Court of Aldermen, have joined their Purſes to carry on this Suit, and then, with Submiſſion, he is not a good Witneſs.

L. C. J. Ask him that Queſtion upon a Voyer dire.

Then he was ſworn upon a Voyer dire.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, is there any Order of the Court of Aldermen to lay out Money for this Cauſe out of their Joint Purſes, or the Publick City Stock?

Sir Harry Tulſe. Not that we know of.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, do you know whether Sir William Pritchard laid out Money in it, or who elſe doth?

Sir Harry Tulſe. I cannot give a poſitive Anſwer to that, who layeth out Money upon it, nor do I know of any ſuch Order as you ſpeak of.

Mr. Ward. Sir Harry Tulſe, though you know of no ſuch formal Order of the Court of Aldermen, yet is there not ſome Direction by the Court of Aldermen about expending Monies in a joint way?

Sir Harry Tulſe. I aſſure you, Sir, I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. Come, he has given a full Anſwer to your Queſtion, ſwear him.

[Which was done.

Mr. Holt. Sir Harry Tulſe, now you are ſworn, Pray, will you give an Account of what happened about this Matter within your knowledge: Pray tell the whole Story.

Sir Harry Tulſe. My Lord, about four of the Clock in the Afternoon, this Gentleman, and two more, came to me to my own Houſe, and he did arreſt me (I mean, Mr. Keeling, that was ſworn here before me) at the Suit of Mr. Papillon; and another of them did arreſt me at the Suit of Mr. Dubois: Said I to them, I do not know that I owe them, or either of them, a Farthing. But, what muſt I do? He told me, It was only to give an Appearance. Said I, Gentlemen, I ſhall conſider of that. Then, ſays he, you muſt go to my Lord Mayor: Why, where is he, ſaid I? Said he, He is in the Cuſtody of the Coroner at his Houſe. Where, ſaid I? He is gone to Skinner's Hall, ſaid he. This is well, ſaid I. So I called for my Man to bring my Cloak. Then they told me, If I pleaſed, they would take my Word till to morrow Morning, if I would promiſe to appear. I told them, they might do as they pleaſed. So they left me; and I went firſt to my Lord Mayor's Houſe, but found found him not there; so I went down to Skinner's Hall, and there I found my Lord Mayor all alone, and no Alderman, only the Officers. I asked his Lordship how he came there? He told me, he was arrested by the Coroner. I asked him how long he had been detained? And, he said, but a little time: And indeed I think it could not be long, for I met his Coach coming back, from Skinner's Hall when I went. After that he was detained there till about Eleven of the Clock, or thereabouts. This is all that I know of it.

L. C. J. What became of the Government of the City all that Time?

Sir Harry Tulse. There was presently a great Noise all about the City concerning my Lord Mayor's being arrested, and abundance of People were gathered together about the Door, but there came a Company of Soldiers of the Trained Bands, and they kept all quiet. There were great apprehensions of an Uproar. I saw nothing of hurt done though. And I asked Mr. Brome the Coroner, who was by, Am I a Prisoner too? For I was arrested to Day by a Warrant pretended to be from you. Says he, I have a Writ against you, and now you are here, I cannot let you go till you have given an Appearance. So I took my self to be detained there with my Lord Mayor in Custody, and staid as long as he staid, and went away with him.

Mr. Recorder. Swear Mr. Wells, the Common Cryer, and Sir John Peak.

Mr. Wells was Sworn.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Common Cryer, were you at my Lord Mayor's House when this Hubbub was made? Pray tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of it.

Mr. Wells. Yes, I was there.

Mr. Holt. Then tell what past.

Mr. Wells. I was not in the Hall where my Lord Mayor was, but in another Room by: And the Officers came running in to me, and told me, I must come to my Lord Mayor quickly, for he was arrested by some People. When I came, I found there were none of the Sheriffs Officers that used to arrest People; but the Room was full of other Persons. My Lord Mayor bid me take the Sword and go along with him, for the Sword-bearer was not then just at hand. I asked his Lordship whither he was going? The Coroner said, he was his Prisoner, and must go along with him to his House. My Lord Mayor bid me presently send out the Officers to summon a Lieutenancy, which I did. I desired the Coroner and his Men to be gone; said I, Cannot you let my Lord alone, and go about your Business? No, he said, except my Lord would give an Appearance, he must go along with him. I then asked him whither my Lord must go? He said, he had no Place but his own House to carry him to, and thither we went; where when we came, my Lord was put up into a little Room by himself, where were none but my self, and the Coroner, as I remember. My Lord Mayor bid me go and see for Sir James Edwards and Sir Harry Tulse, and my Lord Mayor that now is, and so I went, but I found they were arrested too before I came.

L. C. J. How did my Lord go away from thence?

Mr. Wells. In his Coach.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you by when he went away? And who was there?

Mr. Wells. Mr. Brome the Coroner was not there when my Lord Mayor went away, but there was Goodenough.

L. C. J. Ay, he was in trusty Hands upon my Word.

Mr. At. Gen. The Soldiers prevented the Design, and so they let him go again.

Mr. Recorder. Swear Sir John Peak. [Which was done.

Sir John, what can you say to this Business?

Sir John Peak. My Lord, I had order from the Lieutenancy to raise my Regiment upon the News of my Lord Mayor's being arrested; which I did in a very little time, and came with my Soldiers to Skinner's Hall, where I heard my Lord Mayor was, and prevented any Stir, as it was feared there would have been. But Mr. Keeling, I believe, can tell something more of the Design than he has spoken; for I remember at the Tryal of the Traitors at the Old Bailey, he did say, That after my Lord Mayor was arrested, they did intend something, but their Hearts misgave them when the Regiment was up.

L. C. J. That is nothing to this Cause, what he said there, now he remembers nothing of it. Have you done, Gentlemen, or will you call any more Witnesses?

Mr. At. Gen. We rest it here, my Lord, till we hear what they say to it.

L. C. J. Come then, what have you to say that are for the Defendant?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case with the Defendant, Mr. Papillon. I see, Gentlemen, it is a Cause of great Expectation, and by that means they would make it greater by far than indeed it is in it self. But, I suppose, you who are upon your Oaths, to try this Issue, will duly weigh and consider what it really is. Gentlemen, the Record tells you what it is, an Action upon the Case, wherein the Plaintiff declares, that the Defendant did arrest him, being then Lord Mayor, without any probable Cause, and out of Malice. Now as to that, Gentlemen, I conceive and think, I may appeal to my Lord Chief Justice in it, for Direction in Point of Law, that my Lord Mayor, if he do mistake in his Office, and do not do that which belongs to him to do, he is as much subject to the Process of Law and Actions, as any private Person in the City of London. If he does any Man an Injury, or does that which is not right in his Office, by which another Person is grieved, he is liable to the Prosecution of any particular Subject the King has, that is so grieved by him. Then they alledge, that this particular Action and Arrest thereupon was prosecuted and done out of Malice, and without probable Cause. Now what have they proved of that? They prove the Thing done, that he was arrested at the Defendant's Suit, and that he was kept in Custody six Hours. But if we can give you any Account of a probable Cause for it, that is sufficient to justify us from this Action. Gentlemen, the Question that you are to try is not, Whether this Man or that Man were duly chosen into such an Office, but whether there were any probable Cause for the Defendant to contest about the Choice. And herein the the Caſe will fall out to be thus. There was a difference in the City of London, as is very well known to every body, about the Choice of Sheriffs for the City, wherein the Defendant was one of the Competitors; there were upon the Nomination and Election in the Hall, a great many more Voices or Suffrages for one than for the other, which was certified to the Court of Aldermen and Lord Mayor, as is uſual; but ſome Conteſt being, a Poll was demanded and granted, and upon that Poll my Lord Mayor was pleaſed to declare the Election on one Side againſt Mr. Papillon, who yet was apprehended by the firſt Choice, to be one that had moſt Suffrages. But ſeveral Meetings there were, and ſeveral Common Halls aſſembled, ſo that it was a conteſted Matter, and as I ſaid, there had been a Report made on the Defendant's behalf. We inſiſt not upon the Right of Election, that has been otherwiſe determined. But when he is put in Nomination by the Electors in the City, and has many Suffrages, and he conceives himſelf rightly choſen, and they that are the Managers of the Election give ſuch an Account, that in their Judgment he was choſen; that ſurely was a probable Cauſe for him to proceed upon it. And if there be but a probable Cauſe to bring this to a Queſtion, no doubt he might very well take the Courſe the Defendant took. Here is no Arreſt without legal Proceſs; nay, their own Witneſſes ſay, there was an Offer to take an Appearance without putting it on ſo far as an Arreſt: If my Lord Mayor would have but given an Appearance, there had been an end, but he did not think fit to do that, and ſo the Proceſs of Law was executed upon him. Then here is the Caſe in ſhort: A Man thinks himſelf rightly and duly choſen into an Office, and has probable reaſon ſo to think, for the Judges of the Election think ſo too, and deliver that as their Opinion; ſo that though he is miſtaken, as the Event proves, yet he is not alone in his Miſtake, nor without ground of his Apprehenſion; then if it be (under favour) ſuch a Man has no other Proceedings to take in the World for ſettling this Matter, but to appeal to your Lordſhip, and that great Court where your Lordſhip ſits, to have a Writ to command the Mayor, or other proper Officer to ſwear ſuch a Man into the Office, or ſhew good Cauſe why he doth not. If the Mayor upon the Receipt of the Writ thinks fit to obey it, and ſwears the Man, all is well: If not, he muſt make a Return of the Writ, with the Cauſe why the Command of the Writ is not obeyed. Now the Suggeſtion of the Writ is, that he was duly choſen into ſuch an Office, and therefore he had a fair way to put this Matter to an end; if he would have returned he was choſen, or not choſen, there had been an end of the buſineſs, which he ought (under favour) to have done in Obedience to the King's Writ. What then follows upon his not doing ſo? The Party that is grieved hereby, has no other Courſe to take, but to bring his Action againſt the Mayor for it. This Courſe the Defendant took, by taking out a Writ againſt the Plaintiff: And what was the Effect of that Writ? It is indeed charged here by the Counſel on the other Side, That there was a Deſign of a diſcontented Party in it, and I know not what, and a great deal of Stir made, that a Coroner of the City of London ſhould arreſt my Lord Mayor. It may be it was not ſo reverently done; but yet if he thought he had good Cauſe of Action againſt him, he might do it lawfully. Doth this prove to you, that this was maliciouſly and unreaſonably done? Malice muſt be to the Perſon; Zeal and Earneſtneſs to have Right done to a Man's ſelf or another, in a legal Courſe of Juſtice, is not Malice, nor will make the Proſecution of the Action unreaſonable and groundleſs. Have they proved, to you, Gentlemen, any particular Diſcontent and Malice that is between the Plaintiff and Defendant? No truly, I think, by all the Proof that has been offered, the quite contrary does appear. The Defendant took out a Mandamus, directed to the Plaintiff, which was not duly returned: What then doth he do next? Doth he moſt violently arreſt him? That, with Submiſſion, he might do, and no Offence in Law: No, but he doth not do it, but only deſired from time to time, as we ſhall prove anon, that he would but give an Appearance, that would have put a Concluſion to this Diſpute. There is no Appearance given: Whereupon he is arreſted and detained in Cuſtody ſix Hours. If a Man be once in the Officer's Hands taken upon legal Proceſs, how long ſoever the Officer keeps him, is not at all to be laid upon the Perſon that brings the Suit, that is to be looked after by the Officer himſelf. Whatſoever was the Uſage in that Matter, we are not to anſwer for (though it is plain an Appearance would have done all preſently) we ſhall prove we gave order to uſe all Deference and Reſpect in the World. And beſides (though I would not ſpeak it to invalidate any of the Evidence given about the Right of Election one way or other, yet) there being a Return of the Defendant's Election by the Sheriffs to the Court of Aldermen; but they being of another Opinion, gave Order, that thoſe that thought themſelves aggrieved ſhould take their Remedy at Law: Which Order we have purſued in that regular Courſe that the Law has preſcribed. And I hope it will never come to that, that a Man (though miſtaken) conceiving himſelf to have a Right of Action, and ſuing out the King's Writ, ſhall ſuffer for ſo doing, unleſs particular Malice be made to appear. Here is a great Noiſe of Damage, and Diſrepute, and Diſgrace to the Plaintiff and his Office, and he has been pleaſed to reckon his own Damages at 10000 l. We ſay he has ſuſtained no Damage by any thing we have done, but we are quite not guilty of this unreaſonable and malicious Proſecution laid to our Charge. And that we are not guilty, the Matter that has been opened, we think will ſufficiently declare. For if there was a Conteſt about the Election, and the Sheriffs returned it as their Opinion, that the Defendant was choſen, though they and he too were miſtaken; yet that might give a probable Ground for his purſuing the Courſe he did take; and the very Court of Aldermen, and the Lord Mayor bidding them take their Courſe at Law, we ſure ſhall not be puniſhed for it. We did not proſecute our Queſtion in any malicious way, but in that Courſe that the Law allows, by taking out the King's Writ; and we hope the Law will protect us for it.

Mr. Williams. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to ſpare me a Word on the ſame ſide with Mr. Serjeant Maynard. I am of Counſel, Gentlemen, with with Mr. Papillon the Defendant in this Action. We do not insist upon it, nor now offer any thing to assert our Election; We did apprehend we were Elected, but that is ruled against us, and we rested satisfied with it. But we come here now before you upon this Question; Whether we had any probable Cause of Action, upon which we might take out this Process mentioned in the Declaration, which is a Capias upon a Latitat. And we do insist upon it, that this Action of the Plaintiff's must fall upon the Issue joined, if we can satisfy you, and shew that it was not malicious, and without probable Cause. And tho' our Cause of Action against the Plaintiff falls out in the Event not to be a good and sufficient Cause; yet if it were probable, it will evade this Action, and that is all we labour for. They do not attempt to prove, at least-wise I have not heard any thing of it, that there was any express Malice, any thing either said or done by the Defendant, more than the causing him to be arrested upon this Writ. It is very well known, it was in the City of London a very much controverted Question, Whether Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, or Sir Dudley North, and Mr. Rich, were chosen Sheriffs of London? I would not run over the History of it, it is but too well known and remember'd the Divisions that were in the City about it. Some were so much dissatisfied with the swearing Sir Dudley North, and Mr. Rich Sheriffs, as thinking them not duly Elected, that they would have the Court of King's-Bench moved, for the Writ of Mandamus to swear Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois. This Mandamus was moved for, and granted; and to this Writ the Mayor and Aldermen, to whom it was directed, made a Return that we were not Elected Sheriff of London; which Return was apprehended to be false; and really to try the Truth of this Return, was the Action brought against the Plaintiff. A Man that is injured by a False Return, hath indeed no other way to right himself, but by bringing an Action against them that made it. Upon this Action brought, I hope you are satisfied, Gentlemen, from the Evidence that has been already given, the Defendant proceeded regularly and orderly, in a decent manner, applying himself to get an Appearance to his Action. And we shall prove he did so; For, first, he took out a Latitat against my Lord Mayor, and by the Attorney gave him notice of it, and desired an Appearance; so that the Question in dispute might come to some Determination. But he was not pleased to give us an Appearance to that Writ; so we took out a Capias, gave him notice of it, and desired an Appearance, but could have no Appearance; whereupon we took out an Alias Capias, which is the Writ mentioned in the Declaration; and the Coroner who has been named, was then told, he should be called upon to make some Return to his Writ; which he acquainted my Lord Mayor with, and desired him to give an Appearance; which he refusing to do, the Officer was constrained to arrest him, to execute the King's Writ; and you hear how he treated him, with all the respect, and carried him to his own House, where he staid some Hours and then went away. All this time were we satisfied with what was done, we expected no more than an Appearance, which at last was given. Upon that Appearance we did declare, in the Beginning of Hilary or Easter Term (83.) But it fell out, that in Easter Term (83.) there was an Information for a Riot upon Midsummer-Day before, about this contested Election, came to be tryed. And that coming to Tryal, 10. Maii, and being found to be a Riot, and the Sheriffs sworn to be duly Elected; thereupon we were abundantly satisfied that we were mistaken, and under Misapprehensions, and that our Cause of Action would not hold, and we did discontinue it. Indeed, if we had prosecuted our Action after that, it would have been more like an angry and a silly Prosecution, and the whole have had a worse Construction, than the thing in it self would bear. But when we found the Opinion of the Court to be against us about our Election, we immediately discontinued our Action. Gentlemen, We shall prove these to have been our Proceedings, and that, I hope, will satisfy you we are not guilty according as we have pleaded.

Mr. Ward. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel on the same side, for the Defendant, and desire to be heard one Word as to some Things that have been said on the other side in this Cause. There have been some Questions asked that do very much reflect upon the Defendant, and which I would take out of this Cause. I shall take notice, first, what the Questions were, and then give them that Regard and Answer which they deserve. That which is urged, Gentlemen, by way of Crimination, in this Case against the Defendant, and an unjust as well as foreign Reflection (not at all concerning the Cause) is, as if the Defendant were acquainted with the Insurrection and Conspiracy that was intended against the King's Life, and for Subversion of the Government, and procured the Plaintiff, then Lord Mayor, to be arrested, to further and promote that Insurrection. But as that was insinuated only for Reflection's sake, so I hope you, Gentlemen, will be pleased to take notice, that not one Word of any such thing is proved at all, that the Defendant ever knew of any intended Insurrection, nor that this was done with any such Design: For even their first Witness, Keeling, from whose being employed by the Coroner in the Execution of the Writ upon Sir William Pritchard the Plaintiff, they would argue that somewhat else was designed in it, doth give a positive Denial of any such thing now upon his Testimony here. And Mr. Papillon the Defendant never knew him in his Life, nor employ'd him in this Business, nor ordered that he should be employed in it, nor ever saw him; but the Coroner gave him his Warrant to execute. If therefore Keeling and Goodenough were concerned in any ill Business, and have taken upon them to do that which they ought not to have done, that doth not signify any thing in this Case, nor ought to turn to the Defendant's Prejudice. Nor if any thing were done by the Officers that were to execute this Process, that were a Misfesance, or a Male-execution of their Office, that ought not to be imputed as a Fault in the Defendant. But for this Matter now before you, the Case will depend upon this Point chiefly, Whether the now Defendant had a reasonable Cause, or probable Ground, to bring an Action against the the Plaintiff at the time when it was brought, and this Arreſt made: For there is many a Man that, at the Commencement of his Action, doth conceive in himſelf he has a good probable Cauſe of Action againſt another Man, that in the Event of Things finds he was miſtaken, and hath no ſuch Cauſe; and thereupon deſiſts the Proſecution of it. Therefore the Probability of the Cauſe at the time when this Fact was done, is the Queſtion you now are to try. For we are not now conſidering, whether that probable Cauſe did continue and prove a good Cauſe; the Event of this Matter has proved it quite otherwiſe. Indeed the original Queſtion of this whole Cauſe was, Who were only Elected Sheriffs? And that at the time of ſuch Election made, a great Number of Votes paſſed for the Defendant, is, I think, very notorious, both upon the lifting up of Hands, and upon the Poll. Theſe things we ſhall offer to you, and ſhall make it out that theſe gave occaſion to the Defendant to conteſt the Election, and conſequently to the bringing of the Action that the Plaintiff was thus arreſted upon. If then there were ſuch things as theſe that we have opened, which gave a colour to controvert the Right, and the Defendant purſued the Method preſcribed by the Law to bring it to a Determination; and there was no particular Diſreſpect or Incivility offered to my Lord Mayor, then ſure there was no reaſon to bring this Action againſt us. And that there was no indecent Behaviour uſed towards the Plaintiff, doth appear from the Evidence that hath been given of the whole Tranſaction. All that was deſired of my Lord Mayor, was but an Appearance. For this was indeed an Action that did not require Bail, but an Appearance; tho', I muſt needs ſay, I never knew any one ſo averſe to give an Appearance to an Action as the Plaintiff was; for after a Latitat and Capias taken out, and being frequently acquainted with it, and at length upon application after the taking out of the Alias Capias, and many Attendances, with all the Deference and Reſpect imaginable, both to his Perſon and Office, not ſo much as a bare Appearance could be obtained. Upon the opening of the Declaration and the Cauſe, you have been told of the great Dangers that were in the Caſe, as to the Infringement of Publick Peace, and the Government, which has been very much aggravated on the other Side. But had the reaſonable Requeſt of the Defendant by his Attorney, or the Officer, ſo often repeated, been but complied with, it had been but ſending to any Attorney, and ordering an Appearance; and then, I hope, the Peace of the Kingdom had been in no Peril from ſuch a Deſign as this Arreſt. Which I would not have mentioned, nor ſhould have taken to be at all concerned in the Iſſue now before you to be tryed, but that I find them to be taken into the queſtion, when I hope you will conſider they are no way material to the Point in Controverſy. Now, Gentlemen, in our Defence againſt this Suit of the Plaintiff's, we ſhall call our Witneſſes to prove what we have opened. And our Defence will be in theſe Steps: Firſt, To ſhew the Inducement to our Action againſt the Plaintiff, which will ſhew there was a probable Cauſe. Secondly, Give an account of the reverent Carriage and Behaviour towards the Plaintiff in the Proſecution; how with reiterated Applications it was only deſired that the Plaintiff would give an Appearance, which he was not pleaſed to do; and that thereupon, with great Civility, the King's Writ was executed, as indeed I ſee no Proof to the contrary. For neither the Coroner, nor thoſe other People that gave their Aſſiſtance to him, were at all rude in their Carriage to my Lord Mayor; but as ſoon as the Arreſt was made, they were all turned off, and the Coroner ſtaid alone with my Lord, and went with him, in his Lordſhip's own Coach, to the Skinner's Hall, which was the Coroner's Houſe. Neither was there any thing ill done after all this was paſt: For upon the Plaintiff's Appearance, the now Defendant declared in his Action, and intended to purſue it; but it happened that afterwards, in a ſhort time, theſe things ſuffered ſome Debate in a Tryal that was here about a Riot at this Election, where the Queſtion of the Right and Election, was determined on the other ſide, which gave the Plaintiff in that Action, the Defendant in this, ſatisfaction that he was in a Miſtake, and ſo he thought fit to diſcontinue that Action, and proceeded no further——

L. C. J. No, Mr. Ward, that was not the Queſtion determined then.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I humbly conceive the Iſſue of that Cauſe did determine that Queſtion——

L. C J. No, no, I tell you it was not the Queſtion.

Mr. Ward. I muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip.——

L. C. J. I perceive you do not underſtand the Queſtion that was then, nor the Queſtion that is now. You have made a Long Speech here, and nothing at all to the purpoſe; you do not underſtand what you are about; I tell you it was no ſuch Queſtion.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I was only giving an account of what we ſhould prove as to the Fairneſs of our Proceedings——

L. C. J. But I muſt interrupt you, and tell you, all you have ſaid ſignifies nothing. And as to what you mention of the Tryal for the Riot; I ſay, if there be any Election to an Office at any time that is controverted or doubtful, you have Forms and Methods of Law to determine the Controverſy——

Mr. Ward. And we ſay, with Submiſſion, my Lord, we have only purſued ſuch Form and Method.

L. C. J. You are not to try Rights by Club-Law, by Riots, by Noiſe, and by Tumults. Therefore you are miſtaken, to ſay, that was the Queſtion upon the Tryal of the Riot. No, it was not the Queſtion; but the Defendants there were tryed for a notorious Offence, and diſorderly tumultuous Aſſembly, an Aſſembly that had like to have ſet us together by the Ears. Therefore you muſt not talk after that rate. If you will ſpeak, apply to the Buſineſs in hand. Do not make ſuch Excurſions, ad captandum Populum with your Flouriſhes, for that is all that is deſigned by your long Harangues. But I muſt not ſuffer it, I will have none of your Enamel, nor your Garniture. The Buſineſs of the Court is, and by the Grace of God it ſhall always be my Buſineſs, and ſo it ſhould be be the Counsel's too, Servare jus illæsum. But I see you do not understand the Question, and that makes you ramble so much in your Discourse.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I desire always to do my Duty; and do it as well as I can. I know very well, and hope to apply it to this Case, that in a Question of Right there are Forms and Methods of Law to be pursued, and I would defend my Client from this Action, by proving he did pursue that Method; and when he apprehended he had been before mistaken, he desisted from what he had begun ——

L. C. J. I tell you, I perceive you do not understand the Question.

Mr. Ward. If your Lordship will give me leave to explain my self, I hope I shall satisfy your Lordship.

L. C. J. Indeed, Mr. Ward, you do not understand the Question at all, but lanch out into an Ocean of Discourse that is wholly wide from the Mark. I see you do not understand it.

Mr. Ward. Will your Lordship please to hear me ——

L. C. J. Ay, if you would speak to the purpose; but I cannot sit here all Night to hear you make florid Speeches about Matters that are foreign to the Point before us. Come to the Question, Man; I see you do not understand what you are about.

Mr. Ward. My Lord ——

L. C. J. Nay, be as angry as you will, Mr. Ward, I do tell you agen, all you have said is nothing to the purpose, and you do not understand the Business.

Then there was a little Hiss begun.

L. C. J. Who is that? What in the Name of God! I hope we are now past that time of day, that Humming and Hissing shall be used in Courts of Justice; but I would fain know that Fellow that dare to hum or hiss while I sit here; I'll assure him, be he who he will, I'll lay him by the Heels, and make an Example of him. Indeed, I knew the time when Causes were to be carried according as the Mobile hiss'd or humm'd; and I do not question but they have as good a Will to it now. Come, Mr. Ward, pray let us have none of your Fragrancies, and fine Rhetorical Flowers, to take the People with.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I do not do any such thing; but if your Lordship would please to hear me, I would explain my self, I hope, to your Lordship's Satisfaction, and the Satisfaction of the Gentlemen of the Jury.

L. C. J. Hear you? Why, I did not interrupt you, Man, till you came to lanch out into extravagant things that did not at all concern the Cause. Keep close to the Question we come here to try, and I will hear you as long as you will. The single Question is here, Whether there were a probable Cause for your arresting the Plaintiff, or not?

Mr. Ward. My Lord, We did apprehend, I say, that we had a probable Cause; but when we found our Mistake, we discontinued our Action, paid Costs, and have a Receipt for them. This was it I was saying ——

L. C. J. Say what you can, in God's Name, that will conduce to the Point in hand, but do not make the People believe as tho' the Right of Sheriffs, or not Sheriffs, were determined upon the Tryal of a Riot.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. There are these things that are proper to be considered in this Question. Whether the Cause were probable, or not probable? And if not probable, whether malicious or not?

L. C. J. True, Brother; If People will but understand their Business, it is reduced to a narrow Compass; but if they will not understand what it is they come about, they will ramble from the Point, and who can help it? But we must keep to what is before us.

Mr. Williams. We shall make it out, that nothing was done but very civilly.

L. C. J. You must make it out, that nothing was done but what you had probable Cause at least for.

Mr. Williams. We will, my Lord, apply our selves to that which your Lordship directs. Call Mr. Brome, Mr. Courthope, and Mr. Cornish.

Mr. Brome sworn.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Brome, Are you sworn?

Mr. Brome. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Ward. Have you the Writs here? The Latitat and the Capias?

Mr. Brome. Truly, Sir, I have not; I did not bring them with me, they are at home at my House; if you please, I will fetch them.

Mr. Ward. Pray, can you tell, Sir, when the first Writ was returnable?

Mr. Brome. In Hilary Term.

Mr. Ward. When you had that Writ brought to you, Sir, what did you say to my Lord Mayor about it?

Mr. Brome. I went to my Lord Mayor with Mr. Goodenough, and desired my Lord that he would appear to it, as Mr. Goodenough told me he had desired of him himself before. But he said he would give no Appearance. If I would take him upon the Writ, I might do as I pleased, and he would consider and do as he should think fit, but he would not give any Appearance. I told him, I had Writs against several of the Aldermen upon the same account, and that I would wait upon them also; and I did so, and desired them to appear, and offered to take an Appearance from them, and gave my Lord Mayor and them time to consider of it, and came again; but they told me, they had considered of it, and would give no Appearance.

Mr. Williams. When was this, Sir?

Mr. Brome. In the beginning of Hilary Term, to the best of my remembrance.

Mr. Williams. What time did you give my Lord Mayor to consider of it?

Mr. Brome. About a Week, or some nine or ten Days time, as I remember.

Mr. Ward. Where was it that you had that Answer, that he had considered of it, and would give no Appearance?

Mr. Brome. It was at the Court of Aldermen.

Mr. Williams. Were the Writs brought agen to you?

Mr. Brome. There was not time to make a Return then, and so they let all alone till a little before the beginning of Easter Term, and then, one Day, Mr. Goodenough the Attorney brought me the Writs again, and threatened to complain to the Court of me, and acquaint them, that I had neglected the Execution of the King's Writs, two of them.

Mr. Ward. Upon your Oath, Sir, Did he threaten you, that if you did not make a Return of the Writ, he would complain?

Mr. Brome. He ſaid I had expoſed him to the Complaint of his Client; and if I did not do it, he would complain to the Court of me: If I would make a Return as I ought to do, well and good, if not——

Mr. Williams. If not, what then? Did he uſe any other Threatnings, pray Sir, but that he would complain to the Court?

Mr. Brome. He did threaten to complain of me.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay, Sir, he threatened you; what Anſwer did you make to him?

Mr. Brome. I did not uſe to execute Writs my ſelf, I told him: Thereupon he did propoſe two Perſons to me, Mr. Keeling, and one Mr. Burleigh; for he told me the Sheriff's Officers would not do it.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, did you endeavour to get any of the Sheriff's Officers to do it?

Mr. Brome. He told me he could not get any of them to do it.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Brome, What did you do after he had propoſed thoſe two Perſons to you?

Mr. Brome. After I had given thoſe Warrants to the Officers he had named, I told him, I was willing to go once more to my Lord Mayor, to ſee if I could get an Appearance of him without arreſting him; ſo I waited on him at his Houſe at Grocers-hall, but found him then at Dinner; ſo I went away, and came again about four a Clock, and I firſt ſpoke to Mr. Gibſon, and intreated him to let my Lord Mayor know, that I deſired to ſpeak with his Lordſhip at his leiſure: Afterwards when I came up to my Lord Mayor, he asked me, what was my Buſineſs? I told him the Writs were renewed, at the Suit of Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, and I was preſſed to make a Return; and I deſired his Lordſhip that he would be pleaſed to give an Appearance. He told me he was ready to ſubmit to the KING's Writ, but would not give an Appearance; thereupon the Officers named in the Warrant by my Command did arreſt him.

Mr. Ward. How often did you wait upon my Lord Mayor for an Appearance upon both the Writs, before he was arreſted?

Mr. Brome. Several times, I cannot exactly tell how often.

Mr. Williams. Had you Directions, if he would pleaſe to give an Appearance, to take an Appearance, and not to arreſt him?

Mr. Brome. I had Directions to take an Appearance, if he would give it.

Mr. At. Gen. From whom had you that Direction, Mr. Brome?

Mr. Brome. From the Attorney Goodenough.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Brome, let me ask you a Queſtion or two; how long had you been Coroner before?

Mr. Brome. About two Years before, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Had you ever made any Warrants upon Writs of Capias before?

Mr. Brome. Yes, my Lord, ſeveral.

L. C. J. Who did you uſe to make your Warrants to, to be executed?

Mr. Brome. I never keep my Warrants, they that execute them have them.

L. C. J. But anſwer me, To whom did you make them?

Mr. Brome. To one of the Sheriff's Officers commonly.

L. C. J. Then I ask you, upon your Oath, did you before this Time ever make any Warrants to any other Perſon, till ſuch time as you made theſe Warrants to arreſt Sir William Pritchard?

Mr. Brome. I have made ſeveral to the Sheriff's Officers, that I cannot remember now particularly.

L. C. J. But mind my Queſtion, Man, and anſwer me directly, for I expect you ſhould anſwer me poſitively to it. Have you ever at any time made any Warrants to any other but the Sheriff's Officers till this time?

Mr. Brome. I cannot remember that I have.

L. C. J. How then came you at Ruſſel's Houſe to diſcourſe with Mr. Goodenough, about who would be fit to execute the Writ, when you uſed to employ the Sheriff's Officers, and there were ſo many of them?

Mr. Brome. He told me he could get no one of them to execute it.

L. C. J. But there muſt be ſomething more in it than ordinary, that you and Goodenough, and all thoſe other People ſhould come to meet about ſuch a thing as this, to diſcourſe and conſider who ſhould be fit to be put into a Warrant to make an Arreſt upon a Capias, when before that time you uſed to make it to thoſe that are verſed in thoſe Matters.

Mr. Brome. When the Attorney came with a Writ, and deſired a Warrant upon it, it is uſual to take whom he nominates, and make him the Officer to execute it.

L. C. J. Then give me, if you can, any one ſpecial Inſtance wherein you have taken the Direction of the Attorney, whoſe Name to put into the Warrant.

Mr. Brome. Yes, my Lord, I can.

L. C. J. Do then, let's hear it, when was that?

Mr. Brome. I did it in the Caſe of His Royal Highneſs againſt Mr. Pilkington: Mr. Swift came for a Warrant, and directed me whom to put into it.

L. C. J. What Directions did he give you?

Mr. Brome. He gave me the Names in writing.

L. C. J. Where is Keeling?

Keeling. Here, my Lord.

L. C. J. What was the meaning of that Word that was uſed by you, that the Party would be angry if you did not arreſt my Lord Mayor; for that is it which makes me ſo inquiſitive into this Matter, how theſe People came to be imployed?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, pray conſider with your ſelf, and recollect, Mr. Keeling; when you were firſt mentioned to be a ſpecial Bayliff to arreſt my Lord Mayor, you ſay you oppoſed it: How then came you to be drawn in, and engaged to do it?

Keeling. I will tell you, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, and tell us what number of People were there.

Keeling. There were about thirty or forty.

L. C. J. Was Brome among them?

Keeling. He was there some part of the time.

L. C. J. Well, what was the reason that you should be engaged about this Thing?

Keeling. I went away a while, and came again: Mr. Brome came in, and I was away an Hour and half, as I remember, or some considerable time. Mr. Brome cannot forget, that when I came again, I found my Name inserted in the Warrant, as a Bayliff to the Coroner, to arrest Sir William Pritchard, then Lord Mayor. I disputed it, as being never concerned in any such thing before, and was very unwilling to be imployed in the Affair. Says Mr. Goodenough to me thereupon, you will disoblige the Party in case you do not do it.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Brome in the Company when Goodenough said so to you?

Keeling. I know not that truly, but he was before in the Company.

L. C. J. How many were then in the Room?

Keeling. About Twenty, or more, as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. You Brome, did you ever, when you received a Writ to arrest a Man, and were to give a Warrant upon it, call a Consult of Twenty or Thirty, how to do it, before this time?

Mr. Brome. I did not do it now.

L. C. J. No, no, a-lack-a-day, thou wert as innocent in all this Matter as a sucking Child.

Mr. Williams. Was Mr. Papillon in the Company, Mr. Keeling?

Keeling. No, he was not.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Brome, pray answer me; When you had my Lord Mayor in your Custody, how came you to discharge him out of Custody?

Mr. Brome. I was taken into Custody myself.

Mr. Ward. Did my Lord Mayor give an Appearance?

Mr. Brome. I was Committed to the Compter my self.

Mr. Williams. Were you by when it was agreed that my Lord would give an Appearance?

Mr. Brome. I believe not; it was afterwards as I have heard.

L. C. J. A-lack-a-day, it went strangely against Mr. Brome's Stomach, all this did. I know it very well, he had no mind to it at all.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Keeling, did you hear any Discourse between the Twenty or Thirty that were in that Company about this Business?

Keeling. I cannot say who in particular discoursed of it, or what was said.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it discoursed of in the whole Company?

Keeling. There was some Discourse about it in the Company.

L. C. J. You Brome, were you ever acquainted with Keeling before?

Mr. Brome. I had the Misfortune, my Lord, to be concerned with him about some Coal Works.

L. C. J. Did you know that Mr. Burleigh before, that was the other Bayliff.

Mr. Brome. I knew him by sight, I had no great Acquaintance with him.

L. C. J. Pray where lived Keeling?

Mr. Brome. At East-Smith Field.

L. C. J. And where lived Burleigh?

Mr. Brome. Truly, my Lord, I know not, I think at the other end of the Town.

L. C. J. But prithee, how came you to join these two People together in this Business; the one from Wapping, the other from Westminster?

Mr. Brome. Where the Sheriffs were concerned, as they were in this Matter, and therefore it came to me, I thought it not so proper to pitch upon the Sheriffs-Officers, nor would they do it, as he told me; and especially it being to arrest my Lord Mayor, I did not think proper to imploy any one that lived in the City.

L. C. J. But there were abundance of People that were not Citizens, that were nearer at hand, and nearer together, and fitter for such a Purpose than a Tradesman fetched out of the East, and I know not who out of the West, to arrest a Man: There must be some other meaning in it.

Mr. Brome. I gave them the Nomination, as I used to do in like Cases.

L. C. J. Upon your Oath, Sir, was it you or the Attorney that named these Persons?

Mr. Brome. He told me he could get none of the Sheriffs-Officers to do it, and I did not think it indeed proper for any of them.

L. C. J. And why, good Sir?

Mr. Brome. I did think so, truly, my Lord.

L. C. J. Why? Why? What reason had you for it?

Mr. Brome. It was reasonable, as I apprehend, my Lord, for me to think so, it being in a Matter wherein the Sheriffs were so much concerned.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But did you propose it, or any one else in the Company, upon your Oath? And who was it?

Mr. Brome. The Attorney named them.

Mr. Com. Serj. It seems here were a great many Persons met at Russel's about this Business, I desire, my Lord, that Mr. Brome may name as many of them as he can that were there.

L. C. J. Ay, as near as you can, name the twenty or thirty Persons that were there; for you living in the City, and having an Acquaintance among that Sort of People, must needs know most of them.

Mr. Brome. Why, my Lord, there were both the Goodenoughs, and Mr. Nelthorp, and who in particular else, I cannot well remember.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, I am sure you can tell more of them.

Mr. Brome. My Lord, I cannot swear that I remember any other in particular.

Mr. Com. Serj. It seems he has named some of those that are in the Proclamation; pray, Sir, do you remember any others were there that were in the Proclamation?

Mr. Brome. I do not remember any other of those in the Proclamation were there.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember any that were not in the Proclamation?

Mr. Brome. There were several People that I knew by sight, but I cannot remember their Names.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, pray open your Eyes a little, and recollect your Memory, and tell us who were there, I know you can do it.

Mr. Brome. My Lord, there were many Citizens that I knew by sight, but had no particular Acquaintance with them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know any of the Company beſides the Goodenoughs, and Keeling, and Nelthorp?

Mr. Brome. I had a little Acquaintance with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How come you to remember him ſo particularly?

Mr. Brome. I verily believe he was there.

Mr. Recorder. Was Mr. Weſt there?

Mr. Brome. I cannot poſitively ſay whether he was or not.

Mr. Williams. Swear Mr. Corniſh then.

[Which was done.

L. C. J. You Brome, was Mr. Corniſh there?

Mr. Brome. Not that I know of.

Mr. At. Gen. It is ſtrange we cannot learn who thoſe Perſons were that met there.

L. C. J. Oh theſe Fellows have ſtrange Memories for their Purpoſes. Well, what do you call him for?

Mr. Ward. My Lord, we call Mr. Corniſh to give an Account what he knows of this Matter, what Directions were given by the Plaintiff to his Attorney, how he ſhould carry on this Matter.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, That which I particularly remember, I ſhall fully and very faithfully declare. I was with Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois at my Houſe. The Occaſion of their coming thither I knew not, nor did expect either of them there; I my ſelf came from Guild-Hall, either from a Court of Aldermen, or from a Committee, and when I came Home, I found them there. We had not been many Minutes together, but in comes Mr. Goodenough the Attorney, and he applied himſelf particularly to Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois, to receive their Orders what he ſhould do, for he ſaid the Time was almoſt ſpent, and he had addreſſed himſelf from time to time to my Lord Mayor, and ſome of the Aldermen to get them to appear, but they would not. They told him then, they had given him what Orders they had to give him already; that it was fit the Matter ſhould be brought to ſome Tryal or Iſſue, that there might be an end of it. He preſſed them then earneſtly to know what he ſhould do: Said they, you are to deſire an Appearance to the Action, and if he will give it, take it, and remember my Lord Mayor is the chief Magiſtrate of the City, and pray, carry it with all reſpect and regard imaginable to him.

Mr. Williams. You ſay, Sir, they bid him to take an Appearance, if he could get it.

Mr. Corniſh. Yes, and they declared, That their Deſign was only to bring it to an Iſſue to be Tried, and they would not inſiſt upon any thing but an Appearance, if it might be had.

L. C. J. Wonderful careful and civil they were, no doubt of it.

Mr. Corniſh. This is the Truth, and the whole of the Truth, that I know of, relating to this Matter.

L. C. J. Mr. Corniſh, you ſpeak of ſome of the Aldermen, that he ſaid he had been with, What Aldermen were thoſe?

Mr. Corniſh. There were ſeveral of them, that he ſaid he had Writs againſt.

L. C. J. You were an Alderman then, pray had he any Writ againſt you?

Mr. Corniſh. I know not whether he had or no.

L. C. J. But he did not require an Appearance of you, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Corniſh. If he had, I muſt have taken notice of it to defend to my ſelf as well as I could.

L. C. J. Ay, no queſtion but you would, but were you asked for an Appearance or no?

Mr. Corniſh. I was told I ſhould be ſued among the reſt.

L. C. J. But was there any Writ ſhewn to you?

Mr. Corniſh. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then pray let me ask you a Queſtion or two. Did you ever know any Man before bring an Action, or ſue to be Sheriff of London? You have been Sheriff your ſelf we know.

Mr. Corniſh. This was a Matter that had been much diſputed in the City, and a Queſtion had been depending upon it, whether the Right was to my Lord Mayor, or in the Sheriffs.

L. C. J. But the Queſtion of Right between my Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, what was that to Mr. Papillon? Did you ever know a Man bring an Action, or ſue to be Sheriff?

Mr. Corniſh. Truly he that experienceth the Trouble of it, will, I believe, never be deſirous of it.

L. C. J. But that is no Anſwer to my Queſtion, anſwer me directly: Did you ever know any ſuch thing before?

Mr. Corniſh. I never did hear of any ſuch, that I know of.

L. C. J. How then came Mr. Papillon ſo officiouſly to deſire it?

Mr. Corniſh. I cannot anſwer; what his Reaſons were I know not.

Mr. Williams. It was an Action to determine the Queſtion that was at that time ſo much litigated in the City of London.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Corniſh, Pray, will you anſwer me one thing; Were you never in no Company, wherein it was agreed this Suit ſhould be brought and carried on in their Names?

Mr. Corniſh. Mr. At. Gen. I never meddled nor managed it.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you never hear it was ſo agreed?

Mr. Corniſh. It is known to Thouſands, as much as I know of it; the Matter was diſputed of in all Companies in the City.

Mr. At. Gen. But you do not anſwer to my Queſtion, were you ever in any Company when it was agreed that ſo it ſhould be?

Mr. Corniſh. Sir, I tell you as well as I can, the Matter that was to be diſputed by that Action, was the general Diſcourſe of all Societies of Men whatever, in the City at that time.

L. C. J. It is a ſtrange thing, that one cannot get a direct Anſwer from theſe People, to any thing one asks them; I deſire to know one thing of you, Mr. Corniſh; You have known Mr. Papillon the Defendant before this time.

Mr. Corniſh. Yes, my Lord, I have known him ſeveral Years.

L. C. J. Was he ever choſen Sheriff of London before?

Mr. Corniſh. Yes, my Lord, I ſuppoſe he was.

L. C. J. How chance he did not hold then?

Mr. Corniſh. I have heard he Fined, as was common and uſual, when Perſons Occaſions would not permit them to attend the Service of the Place.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. He did ſo, it is known to Thouſands, as you ſay, that he did. Now, pray let me ask you another Queſtion; was Mr. Bethel ever choſen Sheriff before that time you and he were Sheriffs together?

Mr. Corniſh. I do not know that he was choſen before.

L. C. J. How is that?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I do not underſtand what the Queſtion is, or elſe I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. How, did you never hear of that before? For, Mr. Corniſh, I do not ſpeak of a thing that no body knows; alas thouſands, and ten thouſands of People know that too.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, upon my Oath, I do not know that ever he was.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear it?

Mr. Corniſh. I do not know that ever I did.

L. C. J. Did you never hear that Mr. Bethel ſwore himſelf off, as they call it; you know what I mean.

Mr. Corniſh. I do not remember any thing of it.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, it is to the matter, I aſſure you, Mr. Corniſh, whatever you think of it. I ask you then another Queſtion that lies ſomething nearer your memory: Upon your Oath, when you two were elected upon Midſummer-day, was not that Election vacated, and you choſen again within a Week, or ſome little time after? And was it not becauſe you had not taken the Sacrament, and the Corporation-Oath?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I do remember there was a ſecond Election.

L. C. J. And we remember it too well enough.

Mr. Corniſh. That was ſo lately, that any Citizen of London, or any one that lived here, may remember the Paſſages of thoſe Times.

L. C. J. And you have as much Cauſe to remember it as any Man, I aſſure you, for ſeveral Reaſons that I know.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I think I have reaſon to remember it.

L. C. J. Leaſt you ſhould forget it, I will enlighten you, and refreſh your Memory a little, I ask you again, upon your Oath, Was not your firſt Election ſet aſide, becauſe you had not taken the Oaths and the Sacrament?

Mr. Corniſh. There were two Elections, my Lord, I ſay I do remember.

L. C. J. Sir, do not prevaricate with me; I expect a poſitive Anſwer: Was not that the reaſon, upon your Oath?

Mr. Corniſh. I cannot ſay that was the poſitive reaſon.

L. C. J. Then I ask you upon your Oath, had you taken the Oaths and the Sacrament as the Law requires?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, Mr. Bethel was a Stranger to me, I did not know him before that time.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, Men muſt not think to dance in a Net, and blind all the World. As to my own ſelf, I know theſe Things very well, without any of their Aſſiſtance, and I only ask theſe things by the by, to let the World be ſatisfied what ſort of Men theſe are, that pretend to Saintſhip, and yet, you ſee, one can hardly get one Word of Truth out of them: Let the Law, in God's Name, take place, and let every Man proſecute his legal Actions; but when, under the Umbrage and Countenance of Law, Men ſhall deſire to put themſelves into Offices, and Places of Truſt, on purpoſe to diſturb the Government: Do you think the Government will ever ſuffer it ſelf to be ſnivelled at, and overthrown by a Company of ſuch whining Fellows? Let them hiſs and hum, and make a Noiſe and a-do as they will; Thanks be to God, 'tis not that time of day now: Such things have paſs'd too much uncontroul'd in the Body of this City heretofore. What, Gentlemen, are you baffling the Law with ſuch pretences as theſe now-a-days, and do you think to ſham People into Offices? No, I tell you, Villany was the Foundation of it, and Knavery the Superſtructure; and it is high time it ſhould be told out, ſince I hear People begin to doubt of it as a queſtion.

Mr. Ward. Where is Mr. Serjeant? Swear him. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Do not I know, as ſure as I ſit in this Place, that Bethel did once before ſwear himſelf off; and that there were two Elections of theſe two very Men that Year, and that one of the Reaſons was, becauſe they had not taken the Oaths and the Sacrament according to Law; nor would they ever have done it, we know them, neither Bethel, nor that very Fellow that ſtands there, Corniſh, neither, till they found it would contribute to the Deſign of Subverting the Government; then theſe Raſcals could qualify themſelves for an Office, only to put the Kingdom into a Flame.

Mr. Corniſh. When the City choſe me, I had good reaſon for what I did.

L. C. J. Reaſon; I tell you, the City was in great happineſs and quiet, ever ſince the late Times of Rebellion and Confuſion; every one knew his Duty to his Superiors, and did it chearfully and conſcientiouſly, till ſuch time as a couple of buſie Fellows came to get into the publick Offices. Let the whole Party go away with that in their Teeth, and chew upon it if they will.

Mr. Williams. Mr. Serjeant, will you pleaſe to tell my Lord and the Jury, what Directions you heard the Defendant, Mr. Papillon, give about the Plaintiff, how they ſhould treat him.

Mr. Serjeant. My Lord, I was in the Counting houſe at Mr. Alderman Corniſh's Houſe, when Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois were there; I went into the Parlour to them, and Goodenough coming in, they fell into a Diſcourſe about this Action, that was brought by them againſt Sir William Pritchard, then Lord Mayor, and ſome of the Aldermen; and Goodenough gave them an Account how far he had proceeded in it; he ſaid, he could not get any of them to give an Appearance, and the Time was near ſpent, and he deſired to know of them what he ſhould do. Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois both, did declare to him over and over again, that it was their mind only to have the matter brought to a fair Tryal; and they charged him to look to it, to do nothing but what was Legal, and carry it with all reſpect imaginable to my Lord Mayor, as the chief Magiſtrate of the City; that he ſhould by all means get an Appearance from him if he could, and get the Coroner, who was an Officer of the City, to go with him, and carry all Things fairly and decently.

Mr. At. Gen.

Mr. At. Gen. Who gave theſe Directions, Sir, do you ſay?

Mr. Serjeant. Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, both of them did.

Mr. Ward. Now, my Lord, we ſhall ſhew that we proceeded ſo far in the Action, as to declare, but afterwards apprehending our ſelves to be under a Miſtake, we diſcontinued our Action.

Mr. Williams. And the Coſts upon the Diſcontinuance were received by my Lord Mayor's Attorney. Here is the Declaration as it was filed.

L. C. J. Ay, it may be there was a Declaration filed, but not regularly.

Mr. Williams. My Lord Mayor after appeared.

L. C. J. How doth that appear in Evidence? For the Coroner ſays he himſelf was in Cuſtody, and knows no more of the matter afterwards.

Mr. Williams. I believe your Lordſhip doth remember there were many Motions made in Court about this matter, on the one ſide and the other, and at length in Court it was compromiſed, and my Lord Mayor promiſed to give an Appearance.

L. C. J. Prove what you can; prove the Appearance enter'd, and Declaration received.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I only offer this as an Evidence of an Appearance.

L. C. J. A Record, I know, is a good and fair Evidence, ſhew that if you can.

Mr. Ward. It is not uſual to declare till the Defendant appears.

L. C. J. A Declaration may well be upon an Appearance, but becauſe it cannot be good without an Appearance, therefore it cannot be a ſufficient Evidence of it.

Mr. Ward. We will prove the Coſts of the Diſcontinuance paid and accepted. Swear Mr. Baker. (Which was done.) What do you know, Sir, of any Coſts that were taxed and paid for a Diſcontinuance in this Caſe?

Mr. Baker. My Lord, Mr. Aſton told me he appeared for Sir William Pritchard, then Lord Mayor, and had a Declaration from the now Defendant's Attorney: So I enter'd up a Diſcontinuance, and paid the Coſts, and have Mr. Aſton's Receipt for them.

L. C. J. He ſays well. Go on then.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, It is a thing that hath frequently happened, that after a Man has brought an Action againſt another, he finds he was miſtaken, and hath no Cauſe of Action, and thereupon relinquiſheth his Suit: But ſure that will not make him liable to a Suit.

L. C. J. Well, pray go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, We are not now offering to try the Right of Election, tho' that really was the Foundation of the Action that we brought, but we apprehended that Queſtion to be determined, and we acquieſced in it when that Tryal was over. Now, my Lord, we ſhall ſhew that apprehending our ſelves really choſen, we did in a due Courſe of Law ſue forth our Mandamus, directed to the Plaintiff and the Aldermen; and there is a Return made. I pray theſe may be read.

The Mandamus and Return were read.

Mr. Williams. Then that which we ſhall next ſhew, is the Grounds and Reaſons why we thought this Return was falſe, and thereupon brought our Action. We ſhall ſhew that at a Common Hall, held for the Election of Sheriffs, the Defendant was in Nomination, and had a great number of Hands and Voices for him. Pray call Mr. Gilbert Nelſon, Mr. William Wightman, and Mr. Leonard Robinſon.

Who all appeared, and were ſworn.

Mr. Ward. Mr. Nelſon, Pray, were you at the Common Hall for Election of Sheriffs, in the Year 1682.

Mr. Nelſon. I was at the Common Hall in June 1682. on Midſummer-day.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, will you tell us who were then in Nomination, and how they did proceed.

Mr. Nelſon. There were in Nomination for Sheriffs, he that is now Sir Dudley North, then Mr. North, Mr. Box, Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois.

Mr. Ward. Pray, Sir, who had the Majority of Hands?

Mr. Nelſon. I did ſee the Poll-Books after they were caſt up.

Mr. Williams. But did you obſerve the holding up of the Hands?

Mr. Nelſon. Upon the holding up of the Hands, the Election was by the Sheriffs given to Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois.

Mr. Williams. Put pray, Sir, upon your View, and in your Judgment, were there many Hands for Mr. Papillon?

Mr. Nelſon. I gueſs there were the moſt Hands for him and Mr. Dubois.

Mr. Ward. What ſay you then to the ſumming up of the Poll-Book that you ſpoke of.

Mr. Nelſon. I did ſee the Books after they were caſt up.

Mr. Ward. Was there a great Number for Mr. Papillon?

Mr. Nelſon. Yes, there was the greateſt.

Mr. Com. Serj. What Books do you mean, Mr. Nelſon?

Mr. Nelſon. The Books in the Sheriffs Cuſtody, Sir.

Mr. Com. Serj. But did you ſee my Books?

Mr. Nelſon. That was upon the ſecond Poll.

Mr. Ward. Then which is Mr. Wightman?

Mr. Wightman. Here I am, Sir.

Mr. Ward. Were you preſent at this Common Hall? Did you ſee this Election?

Mr. Wightman. I can ſay nothing to the Election.

Mr. Williams. Were you at the Common Hall on Midſummer-day, 1682?

Mr. Wightman. I cannot ſay that, Sir.

Mr. Ward. Then what is it you can ſay to this Matter in queſtion? Did you take any Poll?

Mr. Wightman. I did take the Poll in one of the Books.

Mr. Williams. Was there any Number for Mr. Papillon?

Mr. Wightman. There were 2400 and odd for Papillon and Dubois.

Mr. Thompſon. Who were in Nomination, Sir? Who were the Perſons poll'd for?

Mr. Wightman. Sir Dudley North, Mr. Papillon, Mr. Dubois, and Mr. Box.

Mr. Ward.

Mr. Ward. What ſay you, Mr. Robinſon, Were you at this Common Hall in 1682?

Mr. Robinſon. Yes, I was.

Mr. Williams. Who were named to be Sheriffs then?

Mr. Robinſon. Mr. North, now Sir Dudley North, Mr. Ralph Box, Mr. Thomas Papillon, and Mr. John Dubois, they four.

Mr. Williams. What Number had Mr. Papillon for him?

Mr. Robinſon. I never ſaw the Poll.

Mr. Ward. But upon the View in the Hall, in your Opinion, did you look upon it as a doubtful Caſe which was Elected?

Mr. Robinſon. By the Hands, I judged the majority was much more for Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, than for the other two.

Mr. Williams. So you think in your Judgment?

Mr. Robinſon. Upon my Oath, that was my Opinion.

Mr. Williams. Well, my Lord, we muſt reſt it here unleſs they give us further Occaſion.

Mr. At. Gen. You ſay, the majority was for Papillon and Dubois: Pray, was the Election declared at that time by the Mayor and Aldermen, or was there a Poll demanded?

Mr. Robinſon. Mr. Attorney, Firſt the Queſtion was put for the Perſons; then the Sheriffs declared their Opinion, and a Poll was demanded, and a Poll was granted, and the Sheriffs went with the Common Serjeant up to the Court of Aldermen, and acquainted them with it, and then they all came down again, and declared that there ſhould be a Poll.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who were Sheriffs then, pray, Sir?

Mr. Robinſon. Mr. Alderman Pilkington, and Mr. Samuel Shute; and in the Evening, after the Poll was cloſed, the Books were number'd up, the Sheriffs came down upon the Huſtings and declared the Numbers, and then, as I remember, the Number declared for Mr. Papillon, and Dubois, was above 2000, and the Number declared for the other two, was ſome Hundreds under 2000.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, We leave it here.

L. C. J. Will you that are for the Plaintiff, ſay any thing more to it?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, We have more Evidence to bring in anſwer to what they have brought here. My Lord, that which they would excuſe themſelves by, is, that there was a probable Cauſe; but that will fail them, if it be but obſerved what doth appear upon their own Evidence. It is true, where a Man hath a probable right he may ſue. But this matter here contended for, was never ſuch a right as a Man may ſue for. No Man can ever ſhew that for the Shrievalty, an Office of Burthen, an Office of Hazard, and an Office of Charge and Expence, any Man did ever ſue; ſo little ground of Reaſon had they to bring this Action for this Office. And then for their Title to the Office, that will appear but very weak. They pretend that my Lord Mayor and Aldermen could not try the right who was Elected truly and rightfully; and they bring this Action to try it; and then they produce ſome of the Men that held up their Hands, and in their Opinions, Gentlemen, they ſay, the Election fell upon Papillon and Dubois. But, Gentlemen, that my Lord will tell you is nothing at all of Title, but a Poll was demanded, and by that it muſt be decided. Then one of their Witneſſes tells you a Story of what the Sheriffs did upon the Poll: But all that is nothing too. For we tell you, and ſhall prove it, That thoſe Sheriffs did in a riotous manner, aſſume, and take upon themſelves the Supreme Government of the City, and would have excluded my Lord Mayor from it. But all their Proceedings, and all that they call a Poll, was void, and can make no Title to any thing at all. It was a bare Diſpute of a factious Party, to ſubvert the orderly Government of the City. There was no probability of Title or Right could be gained by it. For the Chief Magiſtrate of the City, for the time being, ever did direct the Poll, and all the Proceedings upon Election of Officers. And when he did ſo in this Caſe, we ſhall prove to you there was not any conſiderable Number (that is, not twenty Men) to give any pretence of Title to this Gentleman that thus ſued for this Office. But indeed in that moſt riotous Aſſembly one of them that ever was, they do pretend to be Elected: But we ſhall ſhew that for that riotous Aſſembly they were Convicted here as Rioters upon an Information, and fined to the King for it. And I could tell them of a like Caſe of an illegal Title, a Man goeth by a falſe Oath to get a Poſſeſſion of Goods, takes out a Capias, and with others, getting into a Houſe to arreſt the Party, he then carries away all the Goods, and upon this Poſſeſſion would ſet up a pretence of Title. But upon an Information for a Riot, he was ſeverely puniſhed for it. Mr. Papillon, if he had thought he had had a good Title or Cauſe to bring this Action, he would have employed better Inſtruments to have proceeded in it. The Attorney he makes uſe of, who is it but Mr. Goodenough? One who did not live within the City, nor had any thing to do in it, till brought into Office as the great Inſtrument of Mr. Bethel in his Actions, and a great Plotter in the late horrid and dreadful Conſpiracy. And this Cauſe, how is it managed? Not by any Counſel of worthy Men of the Robe, or grave Citizens; but by a Cabal of thirty or forty Rioters, moſt of them in the Proclamation, proſcribed as Traitors, and run away from Juſtice upon the Diſcovery of the Plot. All this ſpeaks Malice, and the worſt of Malice; the thing it ſelf ſpeaks it, to pretend a Title with ſo little or no ground. For you plainly obſerve, there is no Title but this riotous Aſſembly to ground their pretences upon. In the Proſecution of this Action, there was no Order, whatſoever they pretend, for to take an Appearance; I mean by thoſe that really were at the bottom of the Deſign. For the forty Men at the Conſult at Ruſſel's, did not meet to be ſure to give Order for an Appearance. No, they had other Work to do. An Appearance would not do their Work: For, as Mr. Keeling at large could explain it, they took all Opportunities to riſe and make a Mutiny, and take Advantage of the Mobile and Diſturbances to bring about their main Plot. They did not care five pence for the Appearance: But when the Soldiers were up, then the Plot was ſpoiled, and then my Lord Mayor may go home if he will. Gentlemen, We ſhall prove what I have opened to you, tho' I am perſwaded not one of you but know it as well as I.

Mr. Sol. Gen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew the Records of the Conviction of the Riot.

L. C. J. Hold Mr. Sollicitor, I tell you before hand, that as I ſtopped them from urging the Tryal for the Riot, as any Determination of the Right of Election, or as any ways tending to the Queſtion now before us; So I muſt not let you neither enter into that matter. The Buſineſs of the Indictment, Conviction and Sentence upon the Rioters makes nothing, either to the Right of Election, or this Right of Action. And therefore, as I ſaid to Mr. Ward, it was nothing to the Purpoſe to mention it on that ſide: So it is to no Purpoſe, I muſt tell you, to mention it on the other ſide. For it was no Determination of the Point of Right one way or other. And he could not give it in Evidence, that that was a Litigation of the Matter in Diſpute, and upon the Deciſion of that Indictment (till which he apprehended he had a Right) he found it was againſt him, and ſo deſiſted. No, the Right I ſay was not at all affected by that Tryal one way or other. For admitting they had a Right, or you had a Right; yet the gaining your Right muſt not be attempted in a wrongful manner; but they had a lawful Way to come by their Right; and if they purſued that, well and good; if not, then they muſt take what comes of it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, that Right was inſiſted on by them as the probable ground of their Action, and that we ſay was no Right.

L. C. J. Therefore it is to no Purpoſe to urge it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But, my Lord, with Submiſſion, our Anſwer to their Title is, That there was no Colour of Pretence, and this Conviction proves it.

L. C. J. No, Mr. Sollicitor, that is not any Evidence one way or other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe, it deſtroys their very Title, which is the Number of the Poll.

L. C. J. Lord! the thing is as plain, Gentlemen, as any thing can be. You or they may have a good Title, and yet do a thing that is unlawful to bring the Title into Poſſeſſion. But then the puniſhing you for that unlawful Act, is not an Evidence, either againſt or for the Title, nor doth determine it for you, or againſt you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Directions in it. But then this we ſay to it; the Queſtion now is reduced to this Point: Whether there were any probable Cauſe for the Defendant's Suit againſt the Plaintiff? They have inſiſted upon it that there was, from two grounds. They call Witneſſes, who declare they were of Opinion, that the Defendant had the Right of Election by the holding up of the Hands. That is one of the probable Cauſes of their Suit. Now that is clearly gone by this ſingle Point, whether the Election was determined upon that holding up of the Hands, or they went to a Poll to decide it? If they went to a Poll, then it is clear the Right of Election was not determined; and he could have no Right to be Sheriff upon the holding up of the Hands. Then they went a little further, and offered in Evidence the Sheriff's Poll-books, or the Numbers taken out of them; wherein they ſay, the Majority was for Mr. Papillon; and ſo thereupon, ſay they, we brought our Action. Now, to that Objection it is proper for us, with Submiſſion, my Lord, to anſwer it, that that can be no manner of Cauſe of Action in the World; becauſe, ſay we, that was no Part of the Election at all, nor was it at all to govern the Queſtion of Right one way nor other; 'twas a Number of Names taken out of the regular Courſe upon Elections by Perſons that had no legal Authority; nor was it ſuch a Method, as was a Foundation to ground any Opinion upon one way or other; much leſs, ſuch a one, as would be a Cauſe of Action. Theſe are all the grounds they went upon. The firſt, by their own ſhewing, was no ground at all; for there was no Determination of the Right upon the View, but a Poll was agreed upon: The other, we ſhall call Witneſſes to prove was irregular, and ſo not legal. Swear Mr. Town-Clerk.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account, who is to govern the Poll upon the Election of Sheriffs, or other Officers at the Common-Hall?

Mr. Town Clerk. My Lord, I never knew a Poll about Sheriffs till about five or ſix Years ago, and that was the firſt Poll that ever I knew, and it was between Mr. Jenks and Sir Simon Lewis; and indeed, it was the firſt that ever I did read of in any time within the City of London. I think, I have ſeen the Entry of all the Elections of Sheriffs, that are extant in our Books in all times; and I think, I did never ſee in any of thoſe Entries one Poll that was ever taken for Sheriffs; it is only mentioned, Such an one elected by the Mayor, by Prerogative; and ſuch an one, by the Commonalty. Among other Books of the City's, there is an old Book, that is called by the Name of Liber Albus, which, ſpeaking of the Conſtitution of the Common-Hall for Election of Sheriffs, ſays, Firſt of all the Mayor ſhall chuſe one of the Sheriffs for London and Middleſex, for whom he will anſwer; and then the Commonalty ſhall chuſe another to join with him, for whom they will anſwer. And if there ariſe any Difference between them, who is elected, or not elected, it ſhall be determined in the ſame manner, as it is in Common-Council. This is all the Notice, that I find in any of the City-Books, that looks like a deciding the Election, when diſputed, by a Poll: Now in another Chapter of that Book where the Common-Council is mentioned; it is ſaid, If there be any Diviſion of Opinions in the Common-Council, the Common-Serjeant and the Town-Clerk, ſhall examine every Man ſeverally, what their Opinion is, which is by way of Poll at this Day when we had a Common-Council. But till that time that the Poll was between Mr. Jenks and Sir Simon Lewis, I never knew any Poll for Sheriffs, and that Poll was taken immediately by telling one and the other. For my Lord Mayor and Aldermen as ſoon as ever they come upon the Huſtings, make Proclamation to have the Liveries attend for ſuch Elections; and then withdraw and leave the Sheriffs and the Common Serjeant.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir, the Courſe is very well known, I ſuppoſe, to the Gentlemen of the Jury. But pray, did any Perſons poll at my Lord Mayor's Books for Dubois and Papillon?

Mr. Town-Clerk. Not that I know. As to this Poll, my Lord Mayor cauſed the Common-Hall to be adjourned to ſuch a Time; and after that ſent for the Common Serjeant, and my ſelf, and required us to go get Books, to take the Poll for Mr. Box, Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois; as for Sir Dudley North, he was not to be Polled for, he being choſen before, by the Prerogative of the Lord Mayor, and my Lord Mayor and Aldermen declared him fully Elected, and upon that he was called out by publick Proclamation upon the Huſtings, to come and take the Office upon him, as is uſual in ſuch Caſes. But we had Directions to provide Books to take the Poll for Mr. Box, Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois; and we did ſo, and took the Poll for theſe three Gentlemen, and upon cloſing of the Poll, we all of us ſealed up our Books, and delivered them to my Lord Mayor; and at a Common-Hall afterwards, he did declare Mr. Box to be choſen the other Sheriff, to be joined with Sir Dudley North: The Poll was, as it always ought to be, by the Direction of my Lord Mayor; and the Sheriffs are but Officers, and not the Judges and Managers of the Poll, without my Lord Mayor's Direction.

to

L. C. J. What ſay you to it, Gentlemen? Have you any more Evidence?

Mr. Serj. Maynard. My Lord, and Gentlemen, Here has been much ſaid in this Cauſe that is nothing to the Purpoſe. As particularly, that which the Plaintiff's Counſel did laſt inſiſt upon, who took the Poll, and who had right to take the Poll or not, is not any thing to this Queſtion: This Action is not at all concerned in that matter. For whatſoever the Diſpute was, and which ſoever had the right (and becauſe it was a Diſpute, ſome it may be could not poll at the one, and others would not poll at the other) yet the lifting up of two Thouſand Hands, might make him think that he was choſen Sheriff; and there lies the Cauſe of his Action, his apprehenſion of a Right: Your Lordſhip did object this to us, Who ever before brought ſuch an Action as ours, and did ſue to be Sheriff of London, a Place of Charge and Trouble? ——

L. C. J. No, I did not make it as any Objection. I asked your Witneſs Corniſh, that Queſtion indeed, for ſome Reaſons that I know.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. That may be objected indeed to the Prudence of my Client, Mr. Papillon, to deſire ſuch an Office: But that proves nothing of Malice in him againſt the Plaintiff; for if he were never ſo unwiſe as to deſire it, if he had a Right to it, or thought he had, it is not a malicious thing in the Eye of the Law, for him to take his Legal Courſe for it; and then the Objection that is made of the Inſtruments that were uſed. Our Attorney Goodenough is in a Plot: What is that to us? There is not the leaſt Suſpicion upon us. He is a bad Man: But that doth not make all his Clients bad. But the Queſtion now before you is, Firſt, Whether there were any probability of a Cauſe of Action. Secondly, If there were not a probable Cauſe; yet whether that Action was grounded upon Malice? What Malice I pray is there in this againſt my Lord Mayor, to deſire an Appearance of him, when it is conceived, though upon miſtake, that there is Cauſe of Action againſt him? We did not preſs him to give us Bail to our Action, or threaten elſe to arreſt him: No, it was a decent rather than an irreverent Application to him. If then there be not both concurring, want of Title, or probable Cauſe and Malice too, this Action of the Plaintiff's is without ground. No Man that has any Senſe, if he knows he has a clear Title againſt him, will bring an Action; but though it ſhould be clear againſt him, yet if he do bring an Action, but not vexatiouſly and maliciouſly, that cannot ſubject him to an Action; that would frighten Men from bringing Actions upon doubtful Matters, which certainly is lawful for any Man to do. Now what Malice is proved in the Defendant againſt the Plaintiff, the Jury here are Judges of. If we were Criminal in the manner of our Proceedings, they might come before your Lordſhip in another way; but ſure this is not the way; and if it ſhould be actionable, and we likewiſe ſubject to be puniſhed as a Criminal, then we ſhould ſuffer twice for the ſame Fault. Now, Gentlemen, upon this Action we are not to be fined; but they, if they can, are to ſhew what Damages the Plaintiff ſuſtained by our Action; and if what we have ſaid do not ſatisfy you, that we had probable Reaſon for what we did, then you upon your Oaths, are to give him what Damages you in your Conſciences think he has received by it.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I would ask one Queſtion of Mr. Town-Clerk, as to the Right of managing the Election. Sir, You have obſerved many Common Halls for Elections.

Mr. Town-Clerk. Yes, Sir, I have for this twelve Years.

Mr. Williams. Did the Common-Hall ever go to a Poll upon an Election, before this time, that you know of?

Mr. Town-Clerk. Never but once for the Election of Sheriffs, I ſay.

Mr. Williams. I ſpeak, Sir, of any ſort of Poll; for I ſuppoſe you do not call the holding up of Hands a Poll.

Mr. Town-Clerk. Mr. Jenks's Poll was the firſt that ever I knew for Sheriffs.

Mr. Williams. Well, Sir, Was that managed by the Sheriffs, or by my Lord Mayor, or by you, and the Common Serjeant; or who was it by?

Mr. Town Clerk. Sir, The Mayor and Aldermen withdraw, and leave the Sheriffs to view the Election by the Hands; and the Common Serjeant propounds the Queſtion, So many of you as will have, &c. ——

Mr. Williams. By whoſe Direction doth he propound the Queſtion, pray?

Mr. Town-Clerk. By the Direction of the Common-Hall, I take it.

Mr. Williams. But if a Queſtion do ariſe upon an Election, ſo that it cannot be decided by the view, but they go to a Poll, Who is to manage that Poll?

Mr. Town Clerk. The Officers of the City, by Direction of the Lord Mayor.

Mr. Williams. That Poll you ſpeak of, for Lewis and Jenks, Was that managed by any body but by the Sheriffs?

Mr. Town Clerk. It was managed by the Sheriffs and the Common Serjeant, in the accuſtomed manner.

Mr. Williams. How! in the accuſtomed manner, when you ſay that was the firſt that ever you knew?

Mr. Town Clerk. It was ſo for Sheriffs; but there have been Polls for other Officers.

L. C. J. Why Mr. Williams, every body knows that well enough, that the Sheriffs are concerned in the management of the Election or the Poll, as all the reſt of the Officers of the City are, under my Lord Mayor, and the Common Serjeant conſults with the Sheriffs Officers and People about him, upon the view.

Mr. Williams. Pray, Sir, do you remember the Election of Mr. Bethel, and Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Town Clerk. Yes, Sir, There was a Poll there too, that was the Year after.

Mr. Williams. Who managed that Poll?

Mr. Town-Clerk. The Sheriffs, and the Common Serjeant, and I, did agree to take it thus in two Books, whereof one was with the one Sheriff, and the other with the other Sheriff, at the two ends of the Hall.

Mr. Williams. That was taken in Writing, Sir, Was it not?

Mr. Town-Clerk. Yes, Sir, That other of Jenks was only by telling.

Mr. Williams. Were you concerned in taking that Poll?

Mr. Town-Clerk. I did aſſiſt at it one Day.

Mr. Williams. Who ordered you to take the Poll that Day?

Mr. Town-Clerk. Truly, I did concern my ſelf as little as I could in thoſe Things: What Report was made to the Court of Aldermen, I cannot tell; but one Day coming into the Hall, I had no mind to concern my ſelf in it; but ſome Gentlemen, did pray me to go up to the Poll; and I did go up.

Mr. Williams. Sir, upon your Oath, Did the Sheriffs direct you to take it?

Mr. Town-Clerk. I really think they did not.

Mr. Williams. Did my Lord Mayor direct you?

Mr. Town-Clerk. No, Sir.

Mr. Williams. Did the Sheriffs manage it?

Mr. Common-Serj. I did it by Sir Robert Clayton's Order, who was then Lord Mayor.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, all that we ſay to it is this, We are not now proving our Right upon which we brought our Action, that we ſubmit unto, it is againſt us, we muſt agree it: But be the Right one way, or other; yet we might from a ſuppoſed Right, have a probable Cauſe of Action. It ſeems to be a doubtful Buſineſs, by all that Mr. Town-Clerk has ſaid, who has the Right, for all he knows of the Conſtitution, is from Liber Albus, and that is ſomewhat dark. You, Gentlemen, hear what is ſaid; the Thing was a Queſtion of five or ſix Days, and a puzzling one it ſeems, and therefore we might be miſled into an apprehenſion, that what the Sheriffs did was right, and ſo not at all concern our ſelves with what my Lord Mayor did. ——

L. C. J. Mr. Williams, you talk of that you do not underſtand; for my Lord Mayor was not there at that time of Jenks's Poll: I was Common Serjeant my ſelf, and I know the Sheriffs have nothing to do with it.

Mr. Williams. It ſhould ſeem by Mr. Town-Clerk to be doubtful, ſometimes one, and ſometimes another did direct the taking of the Poll.

L. C. J. But you are out ſtill: But for all that, this is nothing to your Right of Action, one way or other.

Mr. Williams. My Lord, I muſt lay it here, it was a doubtful Thing, and we brought our Action to try the Right; but afterwards conceiving we were out, and had no Right, we diſcontinued and deſiſted.

L. C. J. It was ſo far from being their Right, that I deſire you to call me any one Witneſs, that can ſay, before Jenks's time, there was ever a Poll for Sheriffs, or ſuch a thing thought of.

Mr. Williams. We were under an apprehenſion of a Right in them.

L. C. J. There could be no Colour for any ſuch apprehenſion in the World.

Mr. Williams. We muſt ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's Directions.

Mr. At. Gen. So do we.

Mr. Serj Maynard. Whether this Action brought by us, was malicious.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, Mr. Attorney doth challenge the Defendant, to ſhew that his Action was brought by advice of Counſel; we ſhall ſhew it was with good Authority of Counſel. Mr. Baker, can you tell whether it was by any Advice, and whoſe?

Mr. Baker. It was by the Advice of Mr. Thompſon, Mr. Pollexfen and Mr. Wallop, as I have heard.

Mr. At. Gen. But you hear what Keeling ſays, there was a Party that were at a Conſult about it, and that were concerned in it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We have done on both Sides, I think, and ſubmit to your Lordſhip's Direction in it.

L. C. J. Will any of you ſay any thing more?

Mr. Williams. No, my Lord, we have done, we leave it upon this Evidence to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We have no more to ſay for the Plaintiff.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, as my Brother Maynard ſaid in the beginning of his Defence in this Cauſe; ſo I ſay now to you, to ſet all Things ſtrait and right; God forbid, that any heat or tranſport of the Times, ſhould bring us into that Condition, but that every Subject of the King's that hath a right of bringing an Action at Law againſt another, ſhould have free Liberty ſo to do. And the Courts of Juſtice are now, and I hope always will be ſo open, that every one that would take a Remedy preſcribed by the Law for a Wrong done him, may be received to bring his Action, which is a legal Remedy.

And I am to tell you, Gentlemen, that much has been ſaid in this Caſe (which I perceive is by the Concourſe of People a Cauſe of great Expectation as my Brother likewiſe ſaid) which is not at all to the Caſe. I am ſorry truly at this time of Day, that we ſhould ſtand in need of ſuch Cauſes as theſe, to ſettle and keep People in their due Bounds and Limits. But though many Things have been ſaid in the Caſe that are quite beſides the natural Queſtion; yet, they having been made Dependancies upon that Queſtion, and becauſe it ſeems to be a Caſe of ſuch Expectation, I think it will become me in the Place wherein I am, to ſay ſomething to you, and according to the beſt of my Underſtanding, tell you what I apprehend to be the legal Part of it, ſtripped of what hath no Relation at all to it. And if I ſhall omit any thing that is material on the one Side or the other, here are Gentlemen that are learned in the Law, who who are of Counsel both for the Plaintiff and the Defendant; and I shall not think my self under any sort of Prejudice in the World, if they take the liberty, as they may freely do, to interrupt me and enmind me of what I forget, or wherein I may mistake.

For, Gentlemen, I assure you for my own part, I would not have the Law made subservient to any Purpose, but the exact Rule of Justice. I would to the best of my understanding in all Cases servare jus illæsum, preserve the Law and the Right of every Man inviolable. I would have the Law of the Land to be the Measure of my own and all other Men's Actions. And I hope no Man can justly (I am sure I do not know they can) complain of any Breach or Invasion that is made in the Courts of Justice, either upon Law or Right. But all those that have the Administration of Justice committed to them by the Government, do behave themselves with all Equity and Impartiality towards all the King's Subjects; And the Law has as full and free a Course, and Justice doth every where take place as much as can be desired by any honest and good Man.

Gentlemen, In this Case that you now are to try, I must first of all tell you, that this Business of the Right of Election one way and the other, hath been too much insisted on on both sides. And I speak it, because tho' I my self in my own mind know what of it is true, and what not; yet I conceive it not so proper to be mentioned in this Case, it being no legal Evidence to the Point in question. Now it is a Duty incumbent upon you to observe; and upon the Court to suffer nothing to be urged so as to have any weight with you, but what is legal Evidence. That you are only to mind, Gentlemen. So that if I mention to you any Point of Fact that hath not been given in Evidence, as having a true Relation to this Issue, you are not to mind what I say to you about it. On the other side, I must likewise acquaint you, if there be any Difficulty in Point of Law in the Case; you are to observe the Directions of the Court, who will be always ready to assist and direct you in it. Or the Gentlemen that are of Counsel on the one side, or the other may have the Matter found; specially, if they think there is Fact enough to be found to ground a Question upon.

Therefore, Gentlemen, for the Customs of the City of London; As to the manner of Elections, or who hath the Right to manage them, they are not at all material to this Business; and if they were, there is never a one of you but know it as well as we or any body doth. I my self had the Honour to serve the City of London in the Places of Common-Serjeant and Recorder several Years: So long ago, that not above one or two that sit upon the Bench in the Court of Aldermen have been longer conversant in Guild-hall, or know the Customs of London in those matters better than I do.

It is notoriously known to all that have had any Dealing in London, or been acquainted with any thing there, that till within these six or seven Years last past, the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen, and the Common Hall used to go a birding for Sheriffs, (you very well know what the Phrase means) and perhaps it was not once in ten times, that those that were chosen Sheriffs, held; but generally every Year there were I know not how many Elections upon fining off, or swearing, or some reason or other; so that now and then there was but one Sheriff chosen for a great while together; and now and then never a one from Midsummer-day till near Michaelmas. And the way was, to consider, such a one hath most Money in his Pocket; Oh, then put him up for Sheriff: And then, if he went off, then another would be found out. And there was one old Deputy Savage, that used to keep a black Book that would furnish Names for I know not how many Elections. And who should be Sheriff, so as to divide into Parties, and Poll, was never a Question before such time as Mr. Jenks that they speak of came to be put up, and there the Dispute began; then the Faction began to appear.

Now, if any Man offers to tell me, I apprehended always it was the Sheriff's Right to manage the Poll; I would ask him how that can be a Right that never was done before? Let them shew me any one Instance of a Poll for Sheriffs before that time. No, it was notoriously known when the Polls began, Persons did not think the Shrievalty such an Office, that it was so earnestly to be coveted and desired. Polls indeed used to be heretofore for the Bridgemasters Places, that are Places of Profit and Advantage; and so for Aleconners and the like, those have been often in your Time and mine, Gentlemen, we may very well remember them. But this Office of Sheriff, People were not heretofore so ambitious of as to poll for it; but the City was glad if they could get any worthy and fit Person to accept of it.

And for the Management of the Election, we all can tell the manner of it as well as any thing in the World. After my Lord Mayor and the Aldermen were gone off the Hustings and retired to this Place, the Common-Serjeant staying there with the Sheriffs, used to make a Speech to the Common Hall, a Rehearsal of what had been before said by the Recorder; and then received the Nomination of such Persons as were to be put to the Question for Election from the Common Hall. And upon the putting of the Question, every Man held up his Hand for those that he desired should be chosen; and if it could be decided by view of the Hands, well and good; and the Common Serjeant consulting with the Sheriffs and those about him, declared their Opinion, that the Election fell so and so, on the one side or on the other; but if doubtful, or a Poll demanded by any one; then they used to acquaint my Lord Mayor what was done in the Common Hall; and thereupon they gave Order for declaring the Election, or granting the Poll, and used to come down to the Hustings for that purpose; and no one ever thought that either the Common-Serjeant or the Sheriffs, or any body else but my Lord Mayor had the Power of those Courts. For the Common Hall was always summoned by Precept from the Lord Mayor, and when the Business was done, or was to be put off to another Day, the Common Cryer by Command from the Lord Mayor makes Proclamation, You good Men of the Livery, &c. may depart for this time, and give your Attendance here again such a Day, or upon further Summons. No body ever talked of summoning a Common Hall by any body but my Lord Mayor. He did it by virtue of his Office, and he diſſolved it, or adjourned it by virtue of his Office. All this is as notoriouſly known to all Men that know any thing of London, as the Faces of you of the Jury are to the People here, or to one another. And this never came to be a Queſtion, till the Buſineſs of the Poll between Sir Simon Lewis and Jenks came about, which you have heard of. Mr. Papillon himſelf, when he was choſen Sheriff before, and fined for it, was choſen in this manner and no other.

Mr. Corniſh, he comes and gives Evidence that the Common Serjeant was reckoned to be the Man that managed the Choice by Command and Direction of the Sheriffs. And ſome of thoſe Gentlemen, that have been produced on the Defendant's ſide, they ſay, they have looked upon it as the Sheriff's Buſineſs. But alas-a day it belongs to neither of them, they are but Officers to the Lord Mayor. The Common Serjeant's Buſineſs is but to put the Queſtion into the Mouth of the Common Cryer. In ſo much, that when I my ſelf was Common Serjeant, as I uſed to paſs by the Shops in London, they uſed to cry, There goes So many of you as would have. It was as plain a Road of things, that every body knew it before theſe things untowardly have come to be imbrangled by our Factions and Diviſions, and the Heat of ſome buſy Fellows. Here are a great many ancient Citizens, that I ſee that know, and ſo you do all, Gentlemen, that this is true. So that all the Diſcourſe of this Matter is but Flouriſh and Garniture, and doth not affect this Caſe at all one way or other.

Another thing, Gentlemen, hath been mightily talked of, and urged and inſiſted upon both by Plaintiff and Defendant; and that is the Defendant's Right, or not Right of Election to the Office of Sheriff, and that the majority was on his ſide, ſay his Counſel: On the other ſide, ſay the Plaintiff's Counſel. And for the ſetling that Right, he brought his Action againſt the Plaintiff; but it being determined upon the Conviction for the Riot. There is no ſuch thing, Gentlemen, as that it was therein determined: That cannot be a Determination of any Right at all. For tho' I may have a Right to an Office, or any ſuch thing; yet I muſt purſue a legal Method to attain to that Right, and not go irregular Ways to work.

As if I have a Right to come into your Houſe, becauſe you have not paid me your Rent, (to make my Thoughts and Meaning intelligible to you by a familiar Inſtance, which will ſhew what I intend) I muſt not make a Riot, and turn you by Violence out of Poſſeſſion. For I have a legal Courſe to come by my Right; to wit, by bringing an Action and evicting you. But if any Man attempt to get a Right in an unjuſt manner, and he be puniſhed for it by an Indictment or Information, that, I ſay, doth not determine the Queſtion of Right one way or other.

To come then to the Iſſue that here you are to try, the Point of this Action before us reſolves it ſelf into a narrow Compaſs, and is only this in ſhort, which you are to enquire of, Whether or no the Plaintiff was arreſted by the Defendant without probable Cauſe, and maliciouſly?

Now matters of Malice are things that remain in a Man's Heart, and it is impoſſible for me to diſcover whether another Man hath a Malice againſt me, if I do not ſee it in his Actions. Malice being a thing that is internal, is not elſe diſcernible.

Therefore you muſt conſider the Circumſtances that do attend this Action of the Defendant, and if ſo be they are malicious, then you are to find for the Plaintiff: But if they for the Defendant have offered to you any Circumſtances that can prove or convince you, that he had any Probability of a Cauſe of Action, and that not attended with a malicious Proſecution of that probable Cauſe, then the Iſſue is with the Defendant.

This is the right Queſtion, and the Law of this Action; and the Fact to make it out one way or other is now in Judgment before you, upon the Evidence that hath been given on both ſides.

Now, in point of Law, I am to tell you, and that you muſt obſerve, That tho' I have a probable conjectural Cauſe of Action againſt another Man; yet if, to obtain my End in that, I proſecute him maliciouſly, with a Deſign to ruin him, or to put an Indignity upon him, or the Character he bears in the Publick, or put a Hardſhip or Difficulty upon him (I mean Hardſhip and Difficulty in point of time) when it is probable the Remedy may be had at another time, and the ſame thing done with leſs Injury and leſs Trouble; then an Action will lie againſt me, for bringing my Action in ſuch a manner; tho' it be true, that I had a conjectural Cauſe of Action againſt him.

As in the Caſe that was here in this Court the other Day, of Mr. Swinnock againſt the Serjeant, that came to him and told him in his Ear, that he had an Action againſt him, and this was upon the Exchange; thereupon Mr. Swinnock brings his Action for this againſt this Man, for whiſpering this in his Ear: If he had proved any malicious Intention to diſgrace him, no doubt the Action would have lien. For tho' there might be a Cauſe of Action againſt Swinnock; yet if that be maliciouſly purſued to get him arreſted, and held to Bail, where no Bail is required by Law; or with an intent to diſgrace him upon the Exchange, when it might have been done elſewhere, or at another time, this irregular malicious Proceeding will bear an Action. The purſuing malicious ways to obtain a Right, makes a Man obnoxious to the Action of the Party ſo proſecuted. I deſire to expreſs my ſelf by Words, that may declare my Meaning as plainly as can be: And I hope I do ſo.

Then, Gentlemen, taking it thus as the Counſel for the Plaintiff ſay, to ſhew that the Defendant had no probable Cauſe of Action againſt the Plaintiff; they endeavour to anſwer what is alledged on the other ſide, as their probable Cauſe. And therefore that we muſt conſider firſt what is ſaid by the Defendant.

They tell you, here was an Election for Sheriffs of London at Guild-hall, where thoſe Perſons that they have nominated, were Candidates, and put in Nomination for that Office. And upon that Nomination, as ſay thoſe three Witneſſes; we were the Perſons that had the majority of Voices, and thereupon we apprehended our ſelves choſen, which gave us the Right of Action: So the Defendant, ſay they, ſheweth ſome Probability of a Cauſe of Action; and if he have not purſued it with Malice, but in a regular way, the Probability of the Cauſe doth take off from the Malice, that elſe the very bringing of an Action without Cauſe would imply in it ſelf. And they ſay true, for I muſt repeat it again; if I have prima facie, a probable Cauſe, and purſue it legally, no Action will lye againſt me for it.

But then ſay they on the other ſide for the Plaintiff, That is no probable Cauſe; for you could from thoſe Tranſactions have no ſuch Apprehenſions of a Right; for that is not the meaſure of a Right of Election, or a Rule to gueſs who is elected by: For there being no Deciſion of the Election upon the holding up of the Hands, and a Poll being demanded, whereas the uſual method is to have by the Lord Mayor's Order and Direction, the Poll taken by ſuch as he ſhall appoint; you went another way to work, you go your ways and take Books to your ſelves, and come not to the fair Determination of the Queſtion: And they bring Mr. Town-Clerk to prove. You have heard what the Evidence is, and you are Judges of it.

Now take it, that this were in the Caſe of an Office of Profit; as ſuppoſe it were a Queſtion between me and John a Styles, for the Place of Bridgemaſter, for the purpoſe, and a Poll is demanded, and granted; if they that have no Authority ſhall go after the Court is adjourned by him that has Power, and take a Number of Names in the way of a Poll by themſelves, and upon that come and ſay, J. S. has four and twenty hundred, and I have but ſo many; that ſure is not any probable Cauſe, nor a Right; for you have gone here out of the known and uſual method of ſuch Matters, and depend upon that which can give no Foundation of Right at all. This is the Anſwer that is given to that by the Counſel for the Plaintiff.

You may have fifty thouſand Names for you after that rate, and yet not to be Elected, nor have probable Cauſe of any ſuch Apprehenſion. We all remember Sir Samuel Sterling's Caſe, which was upon the Denial of a Poll for a Place of Profit, that is to ſay, the Bridgemaſter's Place: But this is upon a wrong Poll.

Suppoſe there had been a Poll granted (as there was) in this Caſe, and upon that Poll thus managed, Sir Dudley North and Mr. Box had had the majority but by a very few, and there had been an Action brought in ſuch a Caſe; here was a probable Cauſe as good as in this Caſe, as it now ſtands, becauſe ſome of them might happen not to have legal Suffrages; yet the taking the Poll by Perſons of their own Heads, after the Court was adjourned, avoids all: ſo that that would have ſignified nothing. You are to conſider of this Anſwer of theirs.

Then the great thing, Gentlemen, that you are to obſerve, is this: To bring an Action alone, will ſcarce amount to a Proof of Malice; therefore Malice being in this Iſſue a great Point of Fact, you muſt weigh the Evidence whether the Circumſtances do ſhew it, that there was Malice in Mr. Papillon. If the Circumſtances are enough to amount to a Proof of Malice, you then are to find for the Plaintiff; and you are the Judges what Damages it is fit to give him for that Injury: He has laid Ten Thouſand Pounds; but you muſt do what you that are Judges of it think fit in it.

Come, Gentlemen, it is beſt to be plain; and no Man needs to be thought wanting of an Apprehenſion, what is the meaning of all theſe things. It is commonly and univerſally known to all Mankind:

Firſt, That no Man ever did purſue ſuch an Action as this is, to be Sheriff, till theſe unhappy Times wherein we are, and wherein we have loſt that Quiet and Felicity, which I pray God we may be reſtored unto. And tho' it is true, a Man may lawfully ſue for ſuch an Office, and it is no Offence; yet it looks ſomewhat extraordinary, and that a Man has a mind to do ſomething unuſual in the Place; 'tis for ſome ſtrange purpoſe or other, eſpecially when a Man has fined for the Office once before, as we all know Mr. Papillon did.

Again, It is notoriouſly known, That for ſeveral Years laſt paſt, the Government hath been beſet: And that which is a baſer Thing than ever was thought of, or acted in the higheſt times of Villany in theſe Kingdoms (I mean thoſe of the late Rebellion) the very Methods of Juſtice have been corrupted, and all to ſerve the main Deſign of ſubverting the Government.

Gentlemen, This is ſo black a Wickedneſs, that no honeſt Man that has any Senſe of Loyalty, Religion, or common Juſtice, but muſt tremble at the very thoughts of it: When we ſee ſuch Fellows as are obnoxious to the Government, known Diſſenters from the Eſtabliſhed Worſhip, and that never thought of conforming to the Government, or the Laws Civil or Eccleſiaſtical, or complying with the Church, but only to capacitate them to deſtroy it; nay, when Men that are taken notice of to be common Reproaches to the Government under which they live, ſhall get into Office to make Ignoramus Juries, and to enable People to commit and be guilty of all the Falſities and Baſeneſſes that Human Nature is capable of; no Man living, that has any Ingenuity or Goodneſs in him, but muſt cry out againſt it.

When Men begin to take Oaths to ſanctify Villany, and enter into Clans and Clubs, and Cabals, to deſtroy the moſt Merciful of Kings, and to diſturb, diſtract, and overthrow the beſt of Governments, What ſhall we ſay? And all this you, All of you, Gentlemen, know to be true. Was it not more ſafe to commit Treaſon in the City, than to ſit upon a Bench of Juſtice to bring the Traitors to Judgment? Was it not more ſafe to Conſpire the Death of the King and his Brother, than to give the leaſt Frown or Look of Diſpleaſure againſt one of theſe ſnivelling Saints? Did not we know that Men were ſanctified to be Jury-men, to enquire of Conſpiracies againſt the King's Life and Government, that before that time were never thought fit to be truſted with the common Diſcourſes or Society of honeſt Men?

When Men were thought fitteſt for Offices of ſuch high Truſt, according to their being thought capable of, and well-intended to the overthrow of the Government: Do not we all know this to be as true, as that the Sun ſhines at Noon day? When Traitors at the Bar were in leſs danger of being convicted of their Treaſons, than the Judges were of their Lives?

Mr. Pa-

Mr. Papillon knows all this to be true eminently. When pack'd Juries were grown to that heighth, that though ſeven or eight Witneſſes came and ſwore poſitive down-right Treaſon, the Traitor could not be by theſe Men ſo much as thought fit to be accuſed by an Indictment; to that Stupidity in Villany were Things brought by theſe Fellows: Nay, ſo far were the Proceedings in Courts of Juſtice tainted, that in no common Action whatſoever that came here to be Tried, but cropp'd Hair, and a demure Look were the beſt Signs of a good Evidence; and the Buſineſs of an Oath ſignified nothing, provided the Party were to be prop'd up, and the Faction to receive an Advantage by it.

For God's ſake, Gentlemen, let any Man but ſeriouſly conſider and believe that there is a God in Heaven, and a dreadful Day of Judgment, when every one of us muſt anſwer for every Thought of our Hearts, every Word of our Mouths, and every Action of our Lives; and then tell me what horrid Impieties theſe are, ſuch as any ordinary ingenuous Perſon would bluſh and tremble at.

And I would have Mr. Corniſh to conſider, whether ever till that Time of famous, or rather infamous Memory, that he and his Fellow-Sheriff Mr. Bethel came into that Office, there were ever in London ſuch Things as Tavern-Returns of Juries, or Clans and Cabals how to pack Fellows together, for ſuch wicked Purpoſes as theſe?

Do not moſt of you here know this? And doth not every one of your Hearts and Conſciences agree with me in it? How far unlike the Proceedings of thoſe Times, in reference to Juries, were from what they anciently were? I have had the Honour to practice in this Place among you in my Profeſſion, when without any diſturbance or mixture of Faction and Sedition, we were all quiet, and every one knew his Duty; and Juſtice was done in this Place ſo regularly, that it was grown to a common Proverb, if there were any Cauſe of any Difficulty, they would uſe to ſay to one another, Come, we will be ſo fair with you, as to try it by a London Jury. So far was it then from being thought, that in the City of London, Juſtice ſhould be corrupted, that the Ordinary Juries of London were thought the beſt Judges, and moſt impartial of any in the Kingdom. I appeal to all the Practicers of thoſe Times that hear me, if what I ſay be not true.

But when once they had begun to pick and cull the Men that ſhould be returned for a Purpoſe, and got this Factious Fellow out of one Corner, and that pragmatical, prick'd ear'd, ſnivelling, whining Raſcal, out of another Corner, to prop up the Cauſe, and ſerve a Turn; then truly Peoples Cauſes were Tried according to the Demureneſs of the Looks on the one Side or the other, not the Juſtice of the Cauſe.

Gentlemen, I take my ſelf bound to tell you of theſe Things, and I wiſh I had no reaſon for it; and eſpecially in this Caſe I ſhould not do it, it being a private Action between Man and Man, were it not for the Ingredients that are in the Caſe, and that any Man that has any Senſe may perceive.

Now then for this Caſe before you, Gentlemen, I deſire if poſſible to be ſatisfied in one Thing or two: My Lord Mayor of London, it is true, is not, nor no Perſon whatſoever, be he of never ſo great Quality, is exempt from the Law: If he owe any Man any thing, he is bound to anſwer it to him, as much as any the meaneſt Citizen of London, or pooreſt Subject the King has: But is he to be arreſted juſt at ſuch a Time, becauſe he is chief Governor of the City, and the Action will ſound the greater? And the Court of Aldermen, are they to be arreſted, becauſe they are his Miniſters, and neceſſary ſubſervient Aſſiſtants to him in his Government, in a ſuch time as this was, when the Government both in the City and elſewhere, was ſurrounded with Difficulties, and in great Danger on all Sides? What occaſion was there for ſuch haſt and ſpeed in this Action to be done juſt then? Would Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois have ſtarved, if this Action had been ſuſpended for a while? Sir William Pritchard would have been as anſwerable to this, or any Man's Action, when the Year of his Office had been out: But it carrieth Vengeance and Malice in the very face of it; it ſpeaks, that therefore they would do it, becauſe he was then Lord Mayor, the chief Perſon in the City for the Time; and thereby they ſhould affront the Government, in arreſting and impriſoning the King's Lieutenant, in one of the higheſt Places both of Truſt and Honour. And this would be ſure to make a great noiſe, and the Triumph of the Action would make their Party then to be uppermoſt, having got the chief Governour of the City in their own Clutches.

Nay, and becauſe they would be ſure their Malice and Revenge ſhould take place, they take the very Scoundrels of the Party to be employed in this great Work. For before that time, the Coroner (as he tells you himſelf) uſed to make his Warrants to the Officers that uſually are verſed in that Buſineſs; but here he muſt have the Direction of the Attorney, and who is that but Goodenough, a Man we have all heard enough of; and then Burleigh and Keeling muſt be employed; and by whoſe Advice, but by Goodenough's and Nelthorp's? And all theſe Raſcals, who now ſtand attainted of Treaſon, muſt be fetched in to conſult about a fit Man to make an Arreſt. And there they pitch upon this Man Keeling for one, who was one of the principal Conſpirators in that damnable, helliſh Plot againſt the King's Life, and that of his Royal Brother; but by the Bleſſing and Providence of Almighty God, was made uſe of as a great Inſtrument of preſerving thoſe precious Lives, and with them our Government and Religion, and all that is dear to us, which by that Conſpiracy was undermined; and I wiſh we had not Reaſon to ſay, and think the Conſpiracy ſtill to be going on. But I hope in God, the Government, as eſtabliſhed both in Church and State, will always be able to prevail, maugre all Deſigns, and thoſe that are engaged in them for its Deſtruction.

Now Keeling tells you he ſcrupled the Imployment; No, ſaid he, I deſired not to have my Name put in, becauſe I was never concerned in any ſuch Thing before, and my Buſineſs was of another Sort. But then, Mr. Goodenough (and Mr. Brome the Coroner no doubt had a Hand in it, though now he has a very treacherous Memory, and has forgot all that was done) comes and tells him, you muſt concern your ſelf, and do this thing; for you have a Trade with the Party, and it will be ill taken if you do not do it. And being asked whom he meant by the Party? He tells you, the discontented Party, and he explains their Discontent to be such, that they would have killed the King and the Duke. Now how far he was engaged with that Party is pretty well known; and therefore if he boggled at such a thing as this, which that Party it seems was engaged in, they would suspect him; and so, for the Parties sake he was drawn in.

But then, when this Thing is done; Pray, Gentlemen, do but consider what the Consequences might have been, and which perhaps (nay upon what has happened to be discovered since, doubtless) they did design it. But God be thanked, those Consequences were prevented, and they themselves have Cause to be thankful to God Almighty for it. For here all the Magistrates of the City, that had any Care for the good Government of it, were to be taken up; and then, here was a Body without a Head, a Town full of Faction without any Government; and if the heady Rabble had been once up, without those that had Authority to restrain them, where then had been your Liberties or Properties, Gentlemen, or any Man's; Nay, theirs that were engaged in this Design, if they had any, for those were Things much talked of by them? In what Danger had you, and all you had, for Life, Estate, Relations, and every thing been? But it pleased God in his infinite Mercy to showre down upon us, and upon this City, and the Government, in a mighty Preservation, putting it into the Hearts of some in Power, to bring the City-Militia some of them together, and prevent this Mischief; or else God knows, this whole City might have been by this time once more in Ashes, and most of the King's Subjects wallowing in their own and one another's Blood. And their Party too would have felt the sad Effects of it, no doubt, as well as others. So that the Consequence of it was to destroy the Government, and that appears by the Parties being engaged in it; it could not be to gain a Right, to make this Hubbub, and Ado to arrest the Magistrates of the City; and then take Advantage for some other wicked Purpose.

Another Point of Circumstance, that is considerable in this Case, is the particular Persons that were to be sued. The Mandamus, that was directed to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; and there is a Return made, not by this, or that, or the other Man, but in the Name of them all, the whole Court. How comes it then to pass, that my Lord Mayor, Sir Henry Tulse, and those other Gentlemen, must be sued and arrested; but I warrant you, Mr. Cornish, or his Party, were not to be meddled with? No, he had so much Zeal for Justice, and to do the Defendant Right, that if he should have been called upon to appear, he would not have stood out an Arrest; so just a Man he is, and such a lover of Right without all doubt; but he was in no danger I dare say, they loved one another too well to sue one another. That, I say, Gentlemen, is another Circumstance, that carrieth Malice in it. For I must tell you, these Things cannot be smothered, they are as apparent as the Light: And though it falls to my Turn in this Cause, to enmind you of them; yet, they are as well known to you all, as the Passages in your own Families.

No, Gentlemen, there was not a Pursuit of Right in the Case; it was a designed Piece of Villany, on purpose to affront the Government; nay, to destroy it, and set us all together by the Ears. And if he were ten thousand times Mr. Papillon, I would and must tell him so; and if it were not for some such deviliſh End and Purpose, he would never have been so greedy of an Office, he had before declined and fined for; and which he was only called to by a turbulent, seditious, factious Party, that had further Aims in it. Otherwise, I know Mr. Papillon's Humour so well, that I am confident, he would much rather have been contented to sit in his Counting house, than in Guild Hall in a Scarlet Gown. Alack a day, I know Mr. Papillon knows how to spend his Time to better Advantage to himself.

Ay, but say the Counsel for the Defendant, We did go on very tenderly and civilly, and respectfully; for there met at Mr. Cornish's House, Who, I pray? Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois, and Goodenough, the prime Attorney in this Cause: And there, forsooth, they tell Goodenough, be sure you do nothing, but what is exactly according to Law; and be sure you carry it very civilly and respectfully to my Lord Mayor, good Mr. Goodenough. Alack-a-day, how wonderful pious and considerate these People are! If Mr. Cornish had gone to my Lord Mayor, as it was his Duty to do, being then an Alderman, (we know it full well) and said to my Lord Mayor, there were such Persons at my House talking of such a matter, and I come to advertise you of it, and desire you would consider of it, he had shewn his Piety and Zeal, and Love for Justice, much more in that than in admitting such Cabals in his House. But we know very well, as well as if we were in them, that they must go hand in hand in all these seditious and factious Businesses.

It is plain, Gentlemen, what the Design was from the Beginning to the End, nothing but to cause a Tumult and Confusion in the City, in Order to put that damned hellish Conspiracy for the Destruction of the King and his Brother, and every Man that was honest and loyal in Execution. This is certainly known to you all; and that there should be such a Parcel of People untowardly linked together in this Matter, not one Man of which that they can pretend to be in any wise a Well-wisher to the Government, or to any that have any share in it: No, they are all Persons that are obnoxious to the Government that had any Hand in it; but none of them Church of England-men, or Friends to her Established Worship; notorious Dissenters, or profligate Atheistical Villains that herd together.

This, Gentlemen, is plain English, and necessary to be used upon all these Occasions: So that it remains now upon your Consciences, whether upon all these Circumstances that have been mentioned, you think, the bare obtaining of a Right in a Legal Course, or some worse Thing was designed.

We all know Mr. Papillon to be a wealthy Man, an able Merchant; one that had rather have minded his Affairs Abroad, or at the Exchange, than than the expenſive, troubleſome Office of Sheriff of London; but, that ſomething was to be done to wreak a damned Malice and Revenge upon the Government. And ſure, he muſt think, as his Party it ſeems did, that they would not be ſufficient to ſubvert the Government, unleſs he could get into that Office.

This I tell him openly, and let him or his Party make their Remarks upon it as they pleaſe. But you are to Judge whether theſe Things be a ſufficient Evidence of Malice, to ſupport the Plaintiff's Action.

There was queſtionleſs a Deviliſh Malice fixed in his Heart and Mind, and he wanted an Opportunity to effect it; and he thought it for his own Security to be beſt to take this Courſe, and nothing elſe was in it. For abundance of People have a mind to do Miſchief, but want Opportunity and ſafe Ways to do it in: And, Oh, they rejoyce, if they hit upon a Project, that ſhall carry a ſpecious Pretence and Colour of Law, for then they think they are ſafe enough.

As in Caſe, I have a mind to do any particular Man an Injury in his Reputation and Buſineſs; the Buſineſs muſt not be done down-right, by going to every body, and ſaying, Such an one is Poor, or a Beggar, and do not truſt him; but I muſt cunningly and ſlyly inſinuate it, I am ſorry for ſuch a Man, I believe he is an honeſt Man, but however he oweth Money; and under this Sort of Sniveling, Canting, Whining, ſly rate, do a Man an Injury whatſoever: And yet forſooth he ſhall have no Advantage againſt me for it: I ſhall ſtrike a Dart into the very Heart of that Man's Credit, and yet he have no Remedy.

So if I have a mind to talk againſt the Government, I will not do it aloud, and ſpeak what I mean openly; but I will Whine, and Sniveel, and Cant, and make People believe I have dreadful Apprehenſions of what is deſigning, and yet not bring my ſelf in any Danger; for I will keep within Bounds all the while, though I do more Miſchief than if I dealt fairly and above-board. Alack-a-day (as Mr. Pilkington ſaid) I am for the Preſervation of the Liberty and Properties of the Subject, and I am for the Law; but I find the City is ſtrangely run down in their Rights and Privileges, and there are very Arbitrary Proceedings. And I am a Citizen, and have taken my Oath to preſerve the Privileges of the City, and I will rather ſubmit to the Inconvenience of a troubleſome Office, than let all run thus: And immediately he ſets himſelf Cock-a-hoop, as if there were no one that took care of the City beſides himſelf, and he were ſuch a Patriot that there were none like him: And he and Mr. Bethel and Mr. Cornish forſooth, are the only Men of the Times, the only good Men; Men that are for the Liberties and Properties of the Subject, and the Rights of the City: Whereas theſe are the only Men that have made an Invaſion upon them, and done what they could to deſtroy them; and God knows we might all of us have enjoyed very quietly every Man his own, if theſe conteſting Riotors, and buſy Factious Fellows had not come among us. Every honeſt Man, I tell you, knows this to be true.

Gentlemen, As to the Buſineſs concerning the Damages, that, if you find for the Plaintiff, is left to your Judgments to conſider of, and give what you ſhall think fit upon ſuch an Occaſion. It is very true, it is not ſo eaſie a matter to aſcertain particular Damages in ſuch a Caſe; nor is it in an ordinary way ſo eaſie to prove, that becauſe Sir William Pritchard was in Priſon but five or ſix Hours there, he could ſuffer ſo much Damage as comes to ten thouſand Pounds. As in the Caſe of a Perſon of great Quality and Honour, it is not eaſy to prove his particular Damage; nor in the Caſe of any of you, that are wealthy, able, ſufficient Citizens, to ſay you are a Bankrupt, when we all know it is impoſſible to be true, and ſo no particular Damage doth enſue that can be proved; yet however, if the thing for which the Action is brought were deſigned with Malice, tho' the ill Deſign be not effected, that is no thanks to the Party, nor is to weigh with you, but the malicious Deſign muſt govern you.

Now, here I have taken notice to you, that the Malice of this Deſign here, was not againſt Sir William Pritchard as ſuch a particular Man, but againſt my Lord Mayor, that this Clan that met at Ruſſel's was an Overflowing of that Gall or Malice that was in his Heart.

If Mr. Papillon had brought an Action upon a Bond only, certainly it had been nothing but what he might very well do; or if he had pretended to ſue for a bad Debt, that if he had ſtaid would have been loſt, it had been ſomething: But you ſee what it was, and it is as apparent why it was, in that Mr. Goodenough ſaid to Keeling, threatening him with the Diſpleaſure of the Party, if he did not do it; and Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Brome were ſuch Strangers to one another, that he muſt threaten Brome to complain of him, if he did not execute his Writs preſently. Do they think all Mankind are ſo dull or blind, as not to ſee through ſuch thin artificial Stuff as this?

Gentlemen, this is the Matter, The Government is a Thing that is infinitely concerned in the Caſe, that makes it ſo popular a Cauſe: The Government of the City, the Honour of your Chief Magiſtrate, and indeed the Honour of the King, whoſe Subſtitute he was, is concerned, and that puts a Weight upon your Inquiry into the Damages of this Caſe. You are to conſider you give Damages to the Plaintiff, not as Sir William Pritchard, but as Lord Mayor: And your Severity in this Caſe, will deter all People from entering into Clans and Cabals, to make Diſturbances, and affront the Government.

It is a thouſand times better to keep within their own Bounds, mind their Callings and Imployments, and concern themſelves with their own Affairs, and leave the Adminiſtration of the Publick to them to whom it belongs, and is intruſted with. And according as we ſay in the Law, Maxime; ſo ſay I to Mr. Papillon and all the Party, Ad Conſilium ne accedas antequam voceris. And do not be ſcared with imaginary Dangers, and groundleſs Jealouſies, into tumultuous and diſorderly Courſes. You had much better keep in your Counting-Houſe, I tell you again, and mind your Merchandize. Nay, and I do not doubt but you would much rather have done ſo, if there had not been ſome further fetch in it. It was not, I dare ſay, out of a frank, generous Humour to oblige the City, that Mr. Papillon would would have ſpent his Time and Money in the Office of Sheriff; no, I know he had better ways to employ both.

It was not the generous Mind of Mr. Bethel, that called him on to be Sheriff of London, to entitle him to ſpend his Money; but on purpoſe to be one of the firſt that ſhould turn all things upſide down in the City, and diſturb the Government: And they that ſucceeded him, carried on the Project, and they that would have been in, but could not, had a mind no doubt to follow ſo Worſhipful an Example as he laid before them.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and after half an hour's Stay, returned, and found for the Plaintiff, and aſſeſſed Damages to Ten Thouſand Pounds, and Coſts to Four Marks.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, You ſeem to be Perſons that have ſome Senſe upon you, and Conſideration for the Government, and I think have given a good Verdict, and are to be greatly commended for it.

Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviſwood Priſoner,

INdited and accuſed, that where notwithſtanding by the Common Law of this, and all other well-governed Nations, the Conſpiring to overturn the Government of the Monarchy, or of the Eſtabliſhed Government of this Kingdom, or the concealing, and not revealing of any Treaſonable Deſign, Project, or Diſcourſe tending thereto; or the aſſiſting, aiding, or abaiting ſuch as have any ſuch Deſigns, does infer the Pains and Puniſhment of Treaſon. And by the third Act of the firſt Parliament of King James I, The Rebelling openly againſt the King's Perſon; and by the thretty ſeventh Act of His ſecond Parliament, The Reſetting, Maintaining, or doing Favours to open, or notour Rebellers againſt the King's Majeſty, is declared Treaſon, and puniſhable by Forfaulture. And by the hundred fourty and fourth Act of the twelfth Parliament of King James VI, It is declared Treaſon to Reſet, Supply, or Intercommune with Traitors. And by the firſt Act of the firſt Seſſion of His Majeſty's firſt Parliament, It is declared, That it ſhall be High Treaſon for the Subjects of this Realm, or any number of them, leſs or more, upon any ground or pretext whatſomever, to riſe, or continue in Arms, to make Peace or War, without His Majeſty's ſpecial Approbation. And by the ſecond Act of the ſecond Seſſion of His Majeſty's ſaid firſt Parliament, To Plot, Contrive, or Intend Death, or Deſtruction, or to put any Reſtraint upon His Majeſty's Royal Perſon, or to Deprive, Depoſe, or Suſpend Him from the Exerciſe of His Royal Government, or to levy War, or take up Arms againſt His Majeſty, or any Commiſſionated by Him, or to intice any Strangers or others, to Invade any of His Majeſty's Dominions, or to Write, Print, or Speak any thing that may expreſs or declare ſuch their Treaſonable Intentions, is declared Treaſon, and puniſhable as ſuch. Likeas, by the ſecond Act of His Majeſty's third Parliament, It is declared High Treaſon in any of the Subjects of this Realm, by Writing, Speaking, or any other manner of way to endeavour the Alteration, Suſpenſion, or Diverſion of the Right of Succeſſion, or debarring the next lawful Succeſſour. Nevertheleſs, it is of verity that the ſaid Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviſwood, ſhaking off all Fear of God, Reſpect and Regard to His Majeſty's Authority and Laws; and having conceived moſt unjuſtly, a great and extraordinary Malice and Hatred againſt His Majeſty's Perſon and and Government, and having deſigned moſt Traiterouſly to debar His Royal Highneſs, His Majeſty's only Brother, from His due Right of Succeſſion, did amongſt many other Traiterous Acts, tending to promove that wicked Deſign, endeavour to get himſelf Elected one of the Commiſſioners for negotiating the Settlement of a Colony of this Nation in Carolina, in one or other of the Days of the Moneths of January, February, March, April, or May, One thouſand ſix hundred and eighty three Years; and that he might thereby have the freer and better Acceſs to treat with the Earls of Shaftsbury and Eſſex, the Lord Ruſſel and others, who had entered into a Conſpiracy in England againſt His Majeſty's Perſon and Government, and with Colonel Rumſay, Walcot, Weſt, and Ferguſon, and others who had likewiſe Conſpired the Murder of his Majeſty's Sacred Perſon, and of the Perſon of His Royal Highneſs; and finding that he could not get himſelf Elected one of the ſaid Commiſſioners, he reſolved to go to London upon his own Expences, and declared to ſeverals (whom he took great pains to draw in to be his Accomplices) that his Deſign was to puſh foreward the People of England who did nothing but talk, that they might go on effectually; and after he had ſettled a Correſpondency here, he did go up to London in one or other of the ſaids Moneths, with Sir John Cockran and Commiſſar Monro, and did then, and there, tranſact with the ſaids Conſpirators, or one or other of them, to get a Sum of Money to the late Earl of Argyle, a Declared Traitor, for bringing home of Men and Arms, for raiſing a Rebellion againſt His Majeſty, and Invading this his Native Countrey; and ſo earneſt was he in the ſaid Deſign, that he did chide thoſe Engliſh Conſpirators, for not ſending the ſame timeouſly, and lamented the Delayes uſed in it; and perſwaded the late Earl of Argyle and others in his Name to accept of any Sum, rather than not to engage; and amongſt the many Meetings that he had at London, for carrying on the ſaid Traiterous Deſign, there was one at his own Chamber, where he did meet with the Lord Melvil, Sir John Cockran, and the Ceſſnocks Elder and Younger, and amongſt others, with Mr. William Veitch a Declared Traitor, and there he did treat of the carying on of the ſaid Rebellion, and of the Money to be furniſhed by the Engliſh for Argyle, for buying of Arms. And that if the Scots would attempt any thing for their own Relief, they would get Aſſiſtance of Horſe from England; and from that Meeting, he or ane or other of them did ſend down Mr. Robert Martin to prevent any riſing, till it ſhould be ſeaſonable for carying on of their Deſigns which Mr. Robert, after he came to Scotland, did treat with Polwart and others, for carving on of the ſaid Rebellion, by ſecuring His Majeſties Officers of State, his Caſtles and Forces, and by putting his Correſpondents here, and their Aſſociates, in readineſs to aſſiſt the late Earl of Argyle; and after the ſaid Mr. Baillie had engaged many of his Countrey-men in England, and had aſſured his Correſpondents here, that the Engliſh were reſolved to ſeclud His Royal Higneſs from his due Right of Succeſſion, thereby to encourage them to concur in the ſaid Rebellion, and Excluſion, he flew to that hight, that he did particularly and cloſly correſpond with Mr. Robert Ferguſon, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Colonel Rumſay, and Walcot, who were acceſſory to that horrid Part of the Conſpiracy, which was deſigned againſt the ſacred Life of His Majeſty, and the Life of His Royal Highneſs, and did ſit up ſeveral Nights with them, concerting that bloody Maſſacer; at leaſt the ſaid Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviſwood was, and is guilty of having Correſpondence with the late Earl of Argyle, and Mr. William Veitch declared Traytors, and of being art and part of an Conſpiracy, for aſſiſting of theſe who were to riſe in Arms againſt His Sacred Majeſty, and for Excluſion of His Royal Brother, and of concealing and not revealing the Acceſſion and Propoſals of others for that effect. Wherethrow he has committed, and is guilty of the Crymes of High Treaſon, Rebellion, and others above ſpecified, and is art and part of the ſamine, which being found by ane Aſſize, he ought to be puniſhed with Forfaulture of Life, Land and Goods to the Terror of others to commit the like hereafter.

His Majeſty's Advocat produced an Act, and Warrand from the Lords of His Majeſty's moſt Honourable Privy Council, for purſuing, and inſiſting againſt the ſaid Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviſwood, whereof the Tenor follows: Edinburgh, the twenty two Day of December, one thouſand ſix hundred and eighty four Years. The Lords of His Majeſty's Privy Council, do hereby give Order and Warrand to His Majeſty's Advocat, to purſue a Proceſs of Treaſon and Forfaulture, before the Lords of His Majeſty's Juſticiary, againſt Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviſwood, to morrow at two a Clock in the Afternoon preceiſly, and the ſaid Lords do hereby Require and Command Sir George Lockhart of Carnwath, and Sir John Lauder Advocats, to concur, and aſſiſt in the ſaid Proceſs with His Majeſty's Advocat, from the intenting until the End thereof, as they will be anſwerable upon their Alledgance. The Pannal's Procurators produced ane Act of His Majeſty's Privy Council, in their favours, whereof the Tenor follows: Edinburgh, the twenty third of December, one thouſand ſix hundred eighty four Years, The Lords of His Majeſty's Privy Council having conſidered ane Addreſs made to them, by Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviſwood, now indited at the Inſtance of His Majeſty's Advocat, before the Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, of Treaſon, do hereby Require and Command Sir Patrick Hume, Mr. Walter Pringle, Mr. James Graham, Mr. William Fletcher, Mr. James Falconer, Mr. William Baillie Advocats, to Conſult, Compear, and Debate for the Petitioner, in the Proceſs of Treaſon, mentioned in his Addreſs, without any hazard, as they will be anſwerable at their Peril; Extract by me, ſic ſubſcribitur.

William Paterſon, Cls. Sti. Concilii.

After

After reading of the Inditement, the Lord Juſtice General required the Pannal to make anſwer thereto.

The ſaid Mr. Robert Baillie Pannal pleaded Not Guilty.

Mr. Walter Pringle Advocat, as Procurator for the ſaid Mr. Robert Bailie of Jerviſwood Pannal, alleadges that he ought not to paſs to the knowledge of an Aſſize; becauſe he had not got a Citation upon fyfteen Days, or at leaſt on a competent time, which is uſual, and abſolutely neceſſary in all Actions, and much more in Criminal Purſuits, eſpecially, ſeeing, if a competent time be not allowed to the Pannal, he is precludit of the Benefit of ane Exculpation, without which he cannot prove his Objections againſt Witneſſes, or Aſſyzers, or any other legal or competent Defences; And by the late Act of Parliament concerning the Juſtice Court, all Pannals are allowed to raiſe Precepts of Exculpation, and thereupon to cite Witneſſes for proving the Objections againſt Witneſſes, and Aſſyzers, which neceſſarily preſuppoſeth, that a competent time muſt be allowed to the Pannal to execut his Diligence, or otherwiſe, how is it poſſible he can prove a Defence of alibi, or any other juſt Defence; and as this is moſt conſonant to that clear Act of Parliament, and to material Juſtice, and to the Rules of Humanity, ſo this Point has been already fully and often decided, and lately in the Caſe of one Robertſon in July 1673. the Inſtance whereof is given by His Majeſty's Advocat in his Book of Criminals, and Title of Libels, where the Lords found, that albeit Robertſon got his Inditement in Priſon, yet he behoved to get it upon fyfteen Days.

His Majeſty's Advocat oppons the conſtant Tract of Deciſions, whereby it is found, that a Perſon incarcerated may be Tryed upon twenty four Hours; and the late Act of Parliament is only in the Caſe where a Summons or Libel is to be raiſed; but here there is no Libel or Summons, but only an Inditement; nor was any Exculpation ſought in this Caſe, before the Tryal, which is the Caſe provided for by Act of Parliament.

The Lords, Juſtice General, Juſtice Clerk, and Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, repel the Defence, in reſpect the Pannal is a Priſoner, and that it has been the conſtant Cuſtom of the Court, and that the Pannal made no former application for an Exculpation.

Sir Patrick Hume for the Pannal alleadges (always denying the Libel, and whole Members, and Qualifications thereof) that in ſo far as the Libel is founded upon harbouring, maintaining, and intercommuning with the Perſons mentioned in the Dittay, the Pannal ought to be aſſoylzied, becauſe it is res hactenus judicata, he having been formerly purſued before the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy Council for the ſame Crimes, and fined in a conſiderable Sum; and therefore that Crime cannot now be made uſe of as a ground of Treaſon againſt the Pannal.

His Majeſty's Advocat anſwers, That he reſtricts his Libel to the Pannal's entering in a Conſpiracy, for raiſing Rebellion, and for procuring Money to be ſent to the late Earl of Argyle, for carrying on the ſaid Rebellion; and for concealing, and not revealing; neither of which is referred to his Oath; and conſequently was not res judicata, there being nothing referred to his Oath; but his Converſe and Correſpondence with ſome Miniſters, and others within the Kingdom, and his own Gardiner, and his writing Letters to my Lord Argyle; and oppons the Decreet of Council it ſelf, and reſtricts the Libel to all the Crimes not inſiſted on in the Decreet.

Sir Patrick Hume replies, That as to the Correſponding with the late Earl of Argyle at any time ſince his Forfaulture, was expreſly propoſed as an Interrogator to the Pannal in that Purſuit, at His Majeſty's Advocat's Inſtance againſt him, before the Lords of His Majeſty's Privy Council, and that not only his own Correſpondence by himſelf; but alſo by Major Holms, Mr. Carſtares, Robert Weſt, Thomas Shepherd, Richard Rumbold, and Colonel Rumſey, as the Interrogator bears, as appears by a double of the Act of Council, written by the Clerk of Council's Servant, and is offered to be proven by my Lord Advocat's Oath: And as to any Correſpondency with Mr. Veitch, it is not relevant, ſince he was not declared Rebel.

Sir John Lauder for His Majeſty's Intereſt, anſwers, That he oppons the Decreet of Privy Council, where no ſuch Interrogator was put to the Pannal, and the Decreet muſt make more Faith than any pretended Scroll, and cannot be taken away by His Majeſty's Advocat's Oath, to His Majeſty's Prejudice; and for Mr. William Veitch, he ſtands expreſly Forfault in anno 1667. and the Doom of Forfaulture, is ratified in the Parliament 1669.

Sir Patrick Hume oppons the Reply, That as to the Correſponding with Mr. Veitch, it does not appear that he is the Perſon mentioned in the Act of Parliament; and albeit he were, as he is not, he having thereafter come home to Scotland, all the Puniſhment inflicted upon him was Baniſhment, not to return under the Pain of Death, which did take off any former Puniſhment; and it was no Crime in any Perſon to intercommune with him, eſpecially in another Kingdom; and by the late Act of Council in anno 1683. even the Converſing and Intercommuning with declared Traitors, is reſtricted to an Arbitrary Puniſhment.

His Majeſty's Advocat oppons the ſtanding Doom of Forfaulture againſt Veitch, and the Proclamation, or Act of Council it ſelf.

The Lords, Juſtice General, Juſtice Clerk, and Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, having conſidered the Libel purſued by His Majeſty's Advocat, againſt Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviſwood, with my Lord Advocat's Declaration, whereby he reſtricts the ſame to the Crimes not inſiſted on in the Decreet of Council formerly pronounced againſt the Pannal: They find the ſame Relevant as it is reſtricted, to infer the Pain of Treaſon, and remits the ſame to the knowledge of the Aſſize, and repels the remnant Defences proproponed for the Pannal, in reſpect of the Decreet of Council produced, bearing no ſuch thing as is alleadged, and of the Anſwers made by His Majeſties Advocat thereto.

THE Aſſize lawfully Sworn, no Objection of the Law in the contrary.

His Majeſty's Advocat for Probation adduced the Witneſſes and Writs aftermentioned; and firſt, Walter Earl of Tarras.

Sir Patrick Hume Procurator for the Pannal, objects againſt the Earl of Tarras, that he cannot be a Witneſs, becauſe he is ſocius & particeps criminis; and it is clear by the 34. Chap. Stat. 2. Rob. 1. Concerning theſe that are excluded from bearing of Teſtimony, that Socij & participes ejuſdem criminis, vel incarcerati & vinculati, cannot bear Teſtimony: As alſo, the Earl of Tarras being preſently under an Inditement of High Treaſon, and under the Impreſſions of Fear, and Death, no Perſon in his Circumſtances can be admitted a Witneſs, as is not only clear from the foreſaid Statute, but from the Common Law.

His Majeſties Advocat anſwers, That it is an exception from that Rule, both by the Common Law, and ours, that in the Crime of leſe Majeſtie, and eſpecially that Branch thereof, which we call a Conſpiracy, ſocius criminis may be a Witneſs, and which is introduced very reaſonably by Lawyers, to ſecure the common Intereſt of Mankind, which is the chief of all Intereſts; and becauſe Conſpiracies cannot be otherwayes proved, and not to allow this manner of Probation, were to allow Treaſon, ſince no Man can prove a Plot, but he that is upon it, and how can a Man object againſt him as a Witneſs, whom himſelf truſted with his Life, his Fortune, and their common Plot, nor is the intenting of the Lybel any ſtronger Qualification, ſince every Man that is ſocius criminis, is under the ſame Impreſſion, and it would rather ſeem the greater and nearer apprehenſions a Man has of Death, he will be the more ſincere and faithful; nor has the Earl of Tarras, nor did he ever ſeek any Security, in order to his deponing. And this has been conſtantly, and latlie, conform to the Common Law, as may be ſeen in the hundreds of Citations ſet down by Maſcard, de probationibus, Vol. 4. concluſ. 1318. Num. 21. and the contrary Citations prove only, that regularly ſocius criminis cannot be a Witneſs.

Sir Patrick Hume replies, That the Statutes of Robert the firſt is opponed, and non eſt diſtinguendum ubi lex non diſtinguit, and not only was he ſocius criminis, which is acknowledged, but he is incarceratus, and lying under an Indytment of High Treaſon, and has thrown himſelf on the King's Mercy, and it is not proper he ſhould be a Witneſs, ſeeing he is in the King's Mercy, who may give him his Life or not, and there was never a Perſon in theſe Circumſtances, that ever was admitted a Witneſs.

Mr. Walter Pringle adds, That the Earl of Tarras, is not only in the Caſe of a Perſon who ſtands Indyted for High Treaſon; but muſt be looked upon, as a Perſon condemned for the ſaid Crime, ſeeing he fully, and amply confeſt the Crime; & confeſſus habetur pro convicto, and never any Lawyer aſſerted, That damnatus criminis læſæ Majeſtatis could be admitted as a Witneſs, and there is nothing more clear, then that by the Common Law, and the Law of all Nations, this Objection ought to be ſuſtained, for the Civil Law is clear, leg. 11. cod. de teſtibus and Matheus in his Title, de probationibus, cap. de teſtibus, doth aſſert poſitivlie, that the Cryme of leſe Majeſtie, Hereſie, and generally all theſe Crymes quæ ſine ſociis non poſſunt facile admitti, are not accepted. And he aſſerts, that the Lawyers, viz. Gomeſius, & Decianus, who are of another Opinion, do acknowledge, nominatum à reo damnandum non eſſe, and that they contravert only, An nominatio rei ſit indicium ſufficiens ad torquendum nominatum.

Sir George Lockhart repeats, and oppons the Anſwer, and the Cryme lybelled, being a Conſpiration of Treaſon, which of it's own nature is managed, and carried on by Secreſie and Contrivance; and which is only known to the Complices of the Treaſon, and which cannot be committed ſine ſociis, the Law of this Kingdom, and of all Nations, do allow ſocios criminis to be teſtes habiles, and not only are they admitted in the Caſe of ſuch Conjurations, but generally in omnibus criminibus exceptis, amongſt which the Crime of Perduellion, and leſe Majeſtie is the chief, and it is abſolutely impoſſible, that Plots, and Conſpirations of Treaſon can be otherways proven, then per ſocios, and ſuch as are participes criminis, and which is the common Opinion of all Lawyers, as may appear by Farin. Queſt. 45. And the Authorities cited by him, and which is the inviolable practique of this Kingdom: And as to that Pretence, That the Earl of Tarras is under a Proceſs of Treaſon, and has ſubmitted to His Majeſties Mercy, and that confeſſus habetur pro convicto, it imports nothing, and infers no more then that he is ſocius criminis, and is ſtill a habil Witneſs, as to Conjuration of Treaſon ſocius criminis hoc ipſo, that it is acknowledged, or proven, being ſtill under the hazard of Proceſs, or Condemnation, which Law regards not in regard of the Secrecie involved in the nature of the Crime, that either Witneſſes neque actu neque habitu, can be preſent, ſo that the Objection amounts to no leſs then that Conjurations of Treason cannot at all be proven: And as to the Law cited from the Majestie, it imports no more than that the Objection regulariter procedit, in Crimes, which of their own nature are not perdifficilis probationis, and are not inter crimina excepta, such as the Cryme of Conspiracy and Treason is.

Mr. William Fletcher oppons the Objection, and Reply, and further adds, that albeit crimen læsæ Majestatis be reckoned inter crimina excepta, and so have some Priviledge, as to the qualification of Witnesses; yet it cannot be denied, but there are some Objections competent against Witness adduced for proving Conspiracies, and Treason, verbi causa, that a Witness is a Capital Enemy, or that he is sub potestate accusatoris, and the Objection now pleaded, being taken complexlie, viz. That the Earl of Tarras is not only socius criminis, but also, that he is publico judicio reus, upon the same Crime, and that as means to procure His Majesties Favour, he has submitted himself, and come in His Majesties Mercy, by an acknowledgment of the Cryme, before the Dyet of Citation, he is obnoxious to a most just Objection, viz. That he is sub potestate, and by the Submission and Confession, his Life and Estate is now in His Majesties Hands, so that he is not only in the Case of a reus confessus, but in the Case of a Witness, who does absolutely depend upon His Majesties Advocate the Pursuer; and as a private accuser could not adduce his own Servants to be Witnesses, because they are testes domestici, and depend upon him, so far less ought a Witness to be adduced, who not only depends, as to his Estate, but as to his Life, and the Law gives a very good reason, and which is mentioned by Paulus, Lib. I. receptarum sententiarum, cap. 12. parag. ult. in these Words, De se confessus non est audiendus ut testis, ne alienam salutem in dubium deducat qui de sua desperavit; and as to the Pretence that a Conjuration is a Crime so occult, that it must either be proven by such Witnesses, or otherways the guilty Person will escape: It is answered, That in this Case, His Majesties Advocate had an easie Remedy, for he might have pursued the Pannal, before he pursued the Witness, and the Terror and Apprehension of the event of a Process for Treason cannot be constructed otherways, then to have influence upon the Deposition of the Witness; and as to the Citation out of Farinacius, it is only in the Case of socius criminis, but when he comes to treat de teste accusato vel carcerato, Quæst. 56. articulo quarto, he says, Regula sit in accusato quod is pendente accusatione à testimonio repellitur. And by the second Rule of the same Article, he says, it is a Principle quod carceratus testimonium ferre prohibetur, and he gives this reason, quia præsumitur, quod falsum testimonium diceret pro aliquo qui ei promiserit se liberare à vinculo, and limits this Rule, that he must be carceratus propter crimen.

Sir Patrick Hume adds, That it is a certain Principle, that any Person that is guilty infamia juris, cannot be a Witness, no more than a Person that is Convict, and Condemned of Treason; and if he were Convict, and Condemned of Treason, he could not be a Witness, even in the Case of Treason: So neither can the Earl of Tarras in this Case be received a Witness, for he being adduced a Witness after he received his Inditment, and confessed the Crime, is equivalent as if he had been actually Convict; and whatever may be pretended, that testes infames may be admitted; yet it was never asserted by any Lawyer, that a Person Convict of Treason can be admitted a Witness.

Nota, That the Earl of Tarras deponed nothing against Jervisswood, but what the other two Witnesses deponed against himself before the Tryal, and upon which thereafter they being renewed, the Earl was forefaulted, so that there could be no ground of Suspicion from his Circumstances.

The Lords Repelled the Objection against the Earl of Tarras, and ordains him to be received a Witness.

Walter Earl of Tarras, aged forty Years, married, purged, and sworn; being Interrogat, if about the Time that Sir John Cockram, and Commissar Monro got their Commission from the Carolina Company for London, the Pannal Mr. Robert Baillie of Jervisswood did not desire the Deponent to speak to Commissar Monro, to try if he could get him the said Pannal added to that Commission, Depones affirmative. Being Interrogat, if the said Jervisswood, the Pannal, did not tell the Deponent that he was resolved to go to London however upon his own Expenses, and that his and their going about the Carolina Business, was but a Pretence, and a blind; but that the true Design was, to push forward the People of England, who could do nothing but talk, to go more effectually about their Business, Depones affirmative. Depones that the Pannal did settle a Correspondence with the Deponent whereby he was to give an Account to the Deponent of what should pass betwixt the Countrey Party in England, and the Scotsmen there: And on the other Hand, the Deponent was to write to him what occurred here; Depones that the Pannal did say to the Deponent, if the King would suffer the Parliament of England to sit, and pass the Bill of Seclusion, that that was the only way to secure the Protestant Religion. Depones that the Pannal said to him, that the King might be induced to do so, if the Parliament would take sharp, or brisk Measures with him, or the like. Depones these Words were spoke to him by the Pannal, since the holding of the last Session of this current Parliament; and before the Pannal and Commissar Monro went for London. Depones that after the Pannal went to London, he did give the Deponent an Account by Letters, that Things were in great Disorder there, and that he hoped there would be effectual Courses taken to remeid them. Depones that Mr. Robert Martin did come to Mr. Pringle of Torwoodlies House in May 1683. or thereby, and brought a Letter to the Deponent's Lady unsubscribed, but the Deponent knows it was Jervisswood's Hand-writing, who was then at London, and that Mr. Martin told the Deponent, that Things in England were in great Disorder, and like to come to an hight, and that the Countrey Party were considering on Methods for securing the Protestant Religion.

And

And that Archibald, ſometime Earl of Argyle, was to get Ten thouſand Pounds Sterling, whereas Thirty thouſand Pounds Stirl. was ſought by the Scotſmen at London, which was to be ſent over to Holland to provide Arms; and that the late Earl of Argyle was to Land with theſe Arms in the Weſt-Highlands of Scotland, and that the Deponent's Friend Jerviſwood the Pannal, was to be ſent over with the Money. Depones that Philiphaugh and he went to Gallowſhiels Houſe, where they met with Polwort and Gallowſhiels, and that it was talked amongſt them there, that in caſe thoſe in England ſhould riſe in Arms, that it was neceſſary in that Caſe, that ſo many as could be got on the Borders, ſhould be in a readineſs to deal with Straglers and ſeize upon Horſes, and that thereafter they ſhould joyn with thoſe that were in Arms on the Borders of England. Depons, That in the Caſe foreſaid, it was ſaid, it was convenient the Caſtle of Stirling, Berwick, and ſome other Strengths ſhould be ſeized upon; and it was likewiſe ſpoke amongſt them, That ſome Perſons ſhould be employed, to inquire what Arms was in that Countrey. Depons, That it was ſpoke then, that the beſt time for Argyle was to land in the Weſt, when there was a Stur in England or Scotland, or Words to that purpoſe. Depons, That every one deſired another to ſpeak to ſuch particular Perſons as they could truſt, by letting a Word fall indirectly upon ſuppoſition, in caſe of the Riſing in England, concerning the Affair for preparing of them: And that he was told by Philiphaugh thereafter, that there was a Word and Sign to be uſed amongſt them, viz. the Sign was by looſing a Button on the Breaſt, and that the Word was Harmony. Depons, the Pannal ſpoke to the Deponent, to advertiſe Torwoodlie, that he might acquaint Mr. William Veitch a forfault Traytor, who was in Northumberland, that he might keep himſelf cloſe, and be on his Guard, leſt he ſhould be catched; which was ſince the Pannal was Priſoner in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to GOD.

Sic ſubſcribitur,

Tarras.

Linlithgow. I. P. D.

Alexander Monro of Bear-crofts, aged forty five Years, or thereby; ſolutus, ſolemnly ſworn and purged. Depons, That the Earl of Tarras propoſed to the Deponent, that Jerviſwood might be made one of the Commiſſioners for the Affair of Carolina, for that he could not ſafely ſtay at Home; and that the Deponent's anſwer was, that he had no Intereſt in the Affair, and ſo could not be a Commiſſioner. Depons, That the Pannal did wait for the Deponent at Wooller, and did go alongſt with him to London, and that by the way he heard him regrate his own hazard and others, becauſe of Blackwood's Sentence; and that he heard him regrate the hazard our Laws, and Liberties, and the Proteſtant Religion were in. Depons, That the Pannal ſpoke to the Deponent and others, more than once at London for getting of Money from the Engliſh, to be ſent to the late Earl of Argyle, for bringing home Arms for the ſaid Earl's Uſe, as he underſtood, for carrying on an Inſurrection and Rebellion in Scotland. Depons, That at the time libelled, in Jerviſwood's Chamber in London, Mr. William Veitch, a forfault Traytor was preſent; and that Sir John Cochran did at that Meeting, expreſsly ſpeak of Money to be ſent to Argyle, for bringing home Arms for invading the Kingdom of Scotland; and that at another Occaſion he heard ſome of them ſay, That there would be twenty Thouſand Men in Scotland who would aſſiſt the Rebellion, and that he heard Sir John Cochran and Jerviſwood ſpeaking of it, but cannot be poſitive which of the two ſaid it. Depons, That at the Meeting he heard Jerviſwood ſpeak, but did not hear him oppoſe that Treaſonable Propoſal, or contradict the Overture propoſed by Sir John Cochran. Depons, That Mr. Robert Martin was ſent down from that Meeting which was at Jerviſwood's Chamber, to Scotland, to try what the People of Scotland would do for their own Safety: And that it was underſtood that the People of Scotland ſhould not riſe till there ſhould be a riſing in England, and that the Commiſſion was granted to Mr. Robert Martin, by all the Perſons preſent, whereof Jerviſwood was one, and that there were preſent the Lord Melvill, Sir John Cochran, Ceſſnocks elder and younger, Mr. William Caſtares, Mr. William Veitch, Jerviſwood, and the Deponent; and Depons they did contribute Money for Mr. Martin's Journey. Depons, That at his return, he meeting with the Deponent, told him, that Matters were in that Condition in Scotland, and that the Countrey was in ſuch a Condition, as little would kindle the Fire in order to the Rebellion. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to GOD.

Sic ſubſcribitur,

Alexander Monro,

Linlithgow, I. P. D.

James Murray of Philiphaugh, aged 30 Years, married, purged and ſworn, produces four Leaves of Depoſitions, emitted by him before the Lords of the Secret Committie, and all written and ſubſcribed with his own Hand, which being publickly read, in Preſence of the Juſtices, and Aſſize, he adheres thereto, in all Points, whereof the Tenor follows. Upon the Day of May, 1683. Upon a Letter from Mr. Pringle of Torwoodlie, I came to his Houſe in the Morning, and he preſently led me to a Chamber, where I found Mr. Robert Martin, who was lately come from London, with whom we ſtayed a little, and diſcourſed of the News, and about the preſent Condition, and Temper of England, and in particular of London, which Mr. Martin ſaid, was much irritated through ſome Attempts upon their Priviledges, either as to the Concern of the Sheriffs, or their Charter, but that all honeſt Men were of good Heart and very briſk, and after ſome general Diſcourſes to this purpoſe, Torwoodlie and I left him and walked out a little, and he told me, he was expecting the Earl of Tarras preſently, for he had ſent to him; and Mr. Martin had a Letter to him from Jerviſwood, then he told me that there were great Matters in agitation at London, and that Mr. Martin had come down with a Commiſſion from our Friends there (I do remember he named any) but but that I behoved not to expect he would impart his Instructions to me, for he was to communicat them only to Polwart and himself, (at least for these Shyres) and they were to pitch on such as they thought fit to intrust with the Affair, whereupon he assured me, that he had great Confidence in me, and his Kindness to me oblidged him to send for me, to acquaint me that Matters were now come to a crisis, and that he had reason to think England would shortly draw to Arms, and stand by them, till they were satisfied anent the Bill of Exclusion, and what other Security they could propose for the Protestant Religion, and their Liberties, and that it was no Project of any inconsiderable Party but a Design through the Kingdom, and that many of the finest Men, and of the greatest Interest and Credit there, had adjusted almost every thing necessar for the purpose, and had concerted Matters with our Friends there, in order to Concurrens from this, and had agreed to advance Money for furnishing Arms here, (I do not remember he told me more Particulars at this time) but said, Polwart would be at Gallow-sheils that Night, and it would be necessar that the Earl of Tarras and I should confer with him fully on the Business, about this time the Earl of Tarras lighted, and Torwoodlie having left us for a little time, being gone to bring Mr. Martin, the Earl of Tarras asked me, what News, I told him of Mr. Martin's being there, but that he had given me no account of the Design of his down-coming, which perhaps he would acquaint him with, but by what I had heard from Torwoodlie, I understood it to be, to engadge us to rise in Arms shortly, whereat the Earl of Tarras hummed, and said, he would look ere he leapt such a Leap, or some such Expressions, presently Mr. Martin came, and the Earl of Tarras and he retired a little, after the reading an Letter he gave him, the Contents whereof was (as the Earl of Tarras informed me) only an Order from Jervis-wood, to deliver some Money to the Bearer, which he had left with him, and the Earl of Tarras called for his Servant, and bad him bring up the Money; in the mean time, Torwoodlie asked me, if I had acquainted the Earl of Tarras with what he spoke to me, and I told him, I had let something of it fall to him, but it was not to be thought, that Persons of Sense and Quality would engadge in such Designs at random; so Torwoodlie said, that (tho' Mr. Martin would not commune with us upon his Commission directly) yet he thought it would be fit we conferred, and without taking notice of his Commission, discoursed of things upon Suppositions, and as our own privat Notions, abstract from any Prospect of a present Design, so after Dinner we four went to a Chamber, and after some general Discourses of the Discontents of both Kingdoms, these Suppositions following were discoursed, (and as I remember Mr. Martin started them all, or the most part) viz. What if the Countrey-Party in England should have Thoughts of going to Arms (whereof he knew nothing but only supposed such a thing, for discoursing a little freely, and to know our Sentiments, what we thought could be expected here in such a Case) would it not be expedient to have a settled Correspondence betwixt that Party there and here, and might not Matters be so adjusted, that both Kingdoms should draw out in one day, and might not as many be expected to undertake in these Shires, and about Edinburgh, as would serve to surprize, and seize our Rulers (I do not remember any named, but the then Chancellor and Treasurer) and some to joyn with these on the English Borders, to assist them to surprize Berwick; and if for that effect, any Horse, or Dragoons, that should be in the Bounds might not be surprized, that their Horse and Arms might be gotten to furnish the Country People, and Stirling Castle; and if Argyle should at the same time land in the West, and raise that Countrey, would not these Measures contribute much to the Advancement and Security of the Interest of that Party here, since thereby the Government would be disordered, and such Steps would encourage all that had an Inclination to the Countrey-Party, to draw to them frankly, and scar many of the other side to act against them, and so they might have leasure to joyn from all Places; and might it not be expected, there would be as many in this Kingdom, as would be able to deal with the Forces here, at least divert them from troubling England. This is the Sum, as I remember, of what was proposed, and discours'd of, tho' I cannot distinctly say, it was in this Method and Expression, nor was all moved at once, but droped now and then, as the Discourse seemed to give Rise to it; and tho' I cannot fully recount all that was spoke on these Heads, and tell distinctly what this and that Man said; yet I remember these following Answers were giving, and (as I judged) acquiesced to by the whole Company; and they were certainly the Earl of Tarras his Sentiments and mine, and every one that spoke, used this or some such Precaution, that if they were concerned, or to give Counsel in any such Case, (as they were not, &c.) 1. As to the settling a Correspondence, it was confess'd to be very convenient for those of a common Interest; but the present Circumstances of Affairs were such (as we thought) that none could be found here who was fit to mannage it, and would undertake it. 2. As to the trysting at the same time it could not be done without the devulging the Design to all Ranks of People, which none would undertake, except these already in desperat Circumstances, and they could not have generally much Influence. 3. The thing was not at all adviseable for this Kingdom, since if any of England's own Measures miscarried, they would not stur for any such Trust; and the spring of their Motions being always at London, there might happen an Interruption near the Appointment, whereof these here could have no timous Notice, and so might keep Tryst, whereby they would be exposed a Prey; and if they should subsist any time, or prevail (which was hardly possible) the multitude that must be employed, are tainted with such wild and unruly Principles, that if once they got the Sword in their Hands, they would never be brought to Order without a greater Force to over-awe them; neither would any Expectation of Argyle's landing, be a just ground for such a Tryst, considering the Uncertainty of Sea-Voyages; and if Argyle were to be the Head, undoubtedly many People would conclude that he were to be suspected of private Designs, and that re-

ſtoring him might lay him aſide: As alſo, that Deſpair might blind his uſual Prudence, and prompt him to unſolid, and undigeſted Methods; and ſo it was to be expected, that few of the Gentry (except ſuch as he had ſpecial Influence on, or ſuch as were under hard Circumſtances) could embarque with him. 4. As to the ſurprizing Rulers, &c. It was inveigh'd againſt, as an Action not to be thought of amongſt Proteſtants (eſpecially when the very Deſign of it was pretended to ſecure that Religion, which taught its Profeſſors to abhor and deteſt ſuch Principles as Popiſh, yea Unchriſtian) ſince it could not be effectuat without Bloodſhed of People, ſecure in Peace, which being by all approven Divines and Caſuiſts condemned as unlawful, and meer Aſſaſſination; it was not to be doubted, that as ſuch a Practice would caſt a blot upon the whole Affair, and quite take off any pretence of Defenſive Arms, ſo it would ſcar many from joyning. Theſe things were reaſoned again and again; but I do not remember there was any formal Concluſion made, but the Diſcourſe was let fall; and Mr. Martin told us, if any of us had a mind for a Suit of Armour, he could provide as many as we pleaſed, from one who had made a great many lately to honeſt Men at London, of a new faſhion, very light, and at an eaſy rate; ſo Torwoodlie and I gave him our Meaſures, Earl of Tarras told he had a Suit already; then Torwoodlie ſaid to the Earl of Tarras and me, we would meet Polwort at Gallowſheils, and deſired we might commun with him, anent what we had been diſcourſing, ſo we haſted away, that if poſſible we might both get home that Night, it being Saturnday, and we unfurniſhed for ſtaying abroad, and Torwoodlie whiſpered me juſt as I was mounting (as I think) that he was not clear we ſhould commune before Gallowſheils, for he was ſometimes too much Good-fellow, or the like; ſo the Earl of Tarras and I rod away together, and upon the way we were both of Opinion, that the Suppoſitions we had diſcourſed of, were in effect Propoſitions, and reſolved if they were inſiſted on by Polwort as we ſuſpected, we would adhere to the former Anſwer, and would undertake nothing in theſe Methods. When we came to Gallowſheils, the Laird was abroad, and Polwort was not come, ſo we had Thoughts to go away, being both damped with what had paſſed, and inclining to be free of farder medling; but the Lady would by no means hear of our going till her Husband came, who, ſhe aſſured us, was about the Doors, and ſhe having ſent to call him, he would be in preſently; yet it was ſo late ere he came, that the Earl of Tarras could hardly have day enough to go home with; ſo Gallowſheils would not let him go, and he would not ſtay, unleſs I ſtayed, ſo we both ſtayed; and not being reſolv'd to diſcourſe with Gallowſheils on what paſſed, we went to the Tavern, on pretence I might call the Baillie, and ſeek Horſes or Lime, and ſtayed there till Polwort came (which ſeemed unknown to Gallowſheils) then we returned to Gallowſheils Houſe, and after Supper Polwort whiſpered the Earl of Tarras and me, and enquired if we had ſeen Mr. Martin; and we having told him we had, he enquired if we were free to commun on the Affair before Gallowſheils, we told, as he thought fit, for we could truſt him; Then he whiſpered Gallowſheils, and (as I underſtood afterwards) asked if he was free to commune on Matters of great Secrecy and Importance with that Company, to which he aſſented, then we ſat down cloſs together, and as I remember, Polwort began the Diſcourſe; but ſince I am not able to follow exactly the Method of our Conference, or keep the very Expreſſions uſed, or repeat all that was ſpoke, or to tell diſtinctly what was every Man's part of the Diſcourſe; I ſhall ſet down the Heads, and moſt remarkable Paſſages thereof, that I remember in ſome Articles following; 1. Polwort ſignified that he was credibly informed (but I do not remember he named his Informer) that the Countrey Party in England would draw to the Fields ſhortly, as he heard before Lambaſs, wherewith Gallowſheils ſeem'd viſibly ſurprized; and being asked, if his Heart fail'd him already, he ſaid he did love it better truly to be walking in his own Parks in Peace and Quiet, than to be meddling in ſuch Matters; however he aſſured the Company, that if there came any troubleſome World, he would joyn with them firmly; and the Earl of Tarras ſaid, he wondered to hear of any ſuch Reſolution in England, for he took it for a Principle amongſt that Party there, that they ſhould make no Stir in the King's Life (which the whole Company owned to be their Opinion and Deſire) becauſe that might ſtrengthen the Duke's Intereſt; and he ſuſpected it was the Project of the Commonwealth's Men, with whom he believed few Scots Gentlemen would joyn; and he was almoſt perſwaded the Duke of Monmouth would not concur in any Riſing during the King's Life, to which it was anſwered by Polwort, That he had indeed heard that Principle had been generally agreed to, but it ſeem'd they found they behoved either to do their Buſineſs now, or lay aſide Hopes of doing it hereafter, which might be, that if the Charter of London were let fall, they would not only loſe all ſafe opportunity of digeſting Matters; but a great part of their Strength, and he heard all things were concerted mutually, betwixt Monmouth's Friends and the Heads of the Commonwealth Party; and tho' he heard Monmouth was ſhy on that account, yet it was hop'd he would engage, for otherways he would be deſerted by that Party. 2. Polwort told us the Suppoſitions above-written as Overtures concerted betwixt our Friends at London, and the principal Men of that Party there; ſo the Earl of Tarras and I renewed our former Anſwers alſo above-written, and maintained them with all our Vigour, wherein Gallowſheils joyned forwardly with us; and Polwort aſſerted, we went on very good grounds, and he was fully of our Opinion, if things were entire, but referr'd it to be conſidered, whether it were better to comply with ſome of theſe Methods, tho' not ſo proper and juſtifiable as were to be wiſh'd, than to diſappoint the Buſineſs totally, which might be of the beſt conſequence to all the Party, yet we did not condeſcend as I remember to undertake any of theſe Methods. And there was a further Argument adduced againſt the tryſting above-written, viz. That it was talked there was a Day appointed in England lately in Shaftsbury's Time, which did not hold, ſo they were not to be relyed upon. 3. It was propoſed to be be conſidered what Methods were moſt proper in the Company's Opinion for Scotland to follow in caſe of England's Riſing, whereanent it was ſaid, that all that could be expected or deſired from Scotland, was, that upon the certain News of England's being in the Fields, thoſe in the Southern Shyres who would own that Party, ſhould preſently riſe, and (how ſoon they could get as many conven'd as would be able to deal with ſtragling Parties, or any ſudden Riſing in the Countrey) march to joyn them, and that it would be fit theſe in the Northern Shyres of England waited near the Borders for ſuch, and that they had Officers tryſted there to command, and that then it would be ſeaſonable for Argyle to land in the Weſt, and theſe Parties on the Borders might divert the Forces till he had time to put himſelf in a Poſture. Theſe things ſeem'd to be the Sentiments of the whole Company, but were not finally determined till the Opinion of others who were to be communed with by Polwort were known: And it was repreſented, there behoved not to be any wilful and obſtinate adhering to our own Thoughts of things, (but an mutual Condeſcendance to others concerned) otherwiſe it were not poſſible to bring a publick Deſign to any good Iſſue. 4. All the Company ſeem'd to agree, that they ſhould undertake nothing or move in that Affair, till they had a full and certain account what England propoſed, what Methods they reſolved to follow there, who were to be their Heads, and that if they deſign'd any Attempt on the King's Perſon, or overturning Monarchy, they would not be forward or clear to joyn: And it being here inſinuated, that the moſt they could do (at leaſt for which there could be any plauſible pretence to juſtify) was to draw together, and without any Act of Hoſtility, ſend Addreſſes to His Majeſty for Redreſs of the preſent Abuſes of the Government, and for obtaining ſufficient Security againſt the Hazard they apprehended to their Religion and Liberties. It was ſaid by Polwort, that he was apt to think, that was their very Deſign, for he had heard it was generally believed by that Party in England, that if once they were in a Body, the King would be prevailed with to quite the Duke, to be tryed for Popery, Correſpondence with France, and Acceſſion to the Popiſh Plot, and then if the King were once free from the Influence of the Duke's Counſels, they were confident he might be moved to reform their Abuſes, and ſecure their Religions and Liberties for the future to their Contentment. 5. It was reſolved, that till we got the foreſaid Account from England, and were ſatisfied thereanent, and knew others here (who were to be communed with) their Sentiments of what Methods were moſt proper for us, in caſe we ſhould undertake, we ſhould not meddle further; only it was left to the Earl of Tarras and me, if we thought fit to acquaint Sir William Scot younger with ſome of the Matter of this Conference overly, without taking notice of our Informers, or ſuch an Conference; and it was recommended to all to be enquiring (at ſuch as they had ſome Truſt in) indirectly about the Affection of our Neighbours, and what Arms there was amongſt them; that if we ſhould get an ſatisfying account, and reſolve to joyn, we might know where to ſeek Men and Arms ſuddenly; here it was ſaid by Polwort, as I think, that if the Earl of Tarras, Torwoodlie, Gallowſheils, and I once took Horſe, he thought the moſt part of the Weſt end of Tiviotdale and Selkirkſhyre would ſoon come to us, eſpecially, when they heard England was riſen, then we tryſted to meet there againſt Midſummer Fair, betwixt and which the forſaid Account was expected, but in caſe it came to any of our Hands ſooner, we promiſed to advertiſe the reſt, that we might meet preſently, if the Caſe required; this is the Subſtance and Sum of what paſſed at the forſaid Conference, that I can now remember; but I remember, I was likewiſe told theſe following Particulars in privat, by Polwort or Torwoodlie, (which of them, I cannot diſtinctly tell) the Day of the forſaid Conference, or within a ſhort time after. 1. That Polwort keeped the Correſpondence with our Friends at London, I remember not poſitively of any of them that was named, to be on the Entrigue there, except my Lord Melvil, Sir John Cochran, Jerviſwood, and Commiſſar Monro (for I hardly knew any of the reſt) and, as I think, Commiſſar Monro was call'd his Correſpondent there. 2. That the Money to be advanced by the Engliſh Partie to Scotland was ready when Mr. Martin came from London, and it was expected, that within few Days after, it would be diſpatched with ſome Confident to Holland (whether by Bills, or in Caſh, I cannot ſay) it was call'd Ten Thouſand Pound Sterlin, and was to be employed (as I was told) by that Confident, at Argyle's Sight, for buying Arms, providing Ships to tranſport them with Argyle, to the Weſt here, and ſuch other Charges. 3. That how ſoon our Friends at London got notice of the ſafe Arrival of the Confident forſaid, and all other things were finally concluded there (which was expected would be about the middle of June, as I remember) they would come home, and, as they paſſed, would give them, or one of them, an particular Account of all Reſolutions taken to be communicat to the reſt, that it was not to be expected by Letters, that behoved to be under Figures and dark Expreſſions, and, as I remember, they were written as it were about the Carolina Buſineſs, or ſome Houſhold Furniture, as I was told, for I never remember I ſaw any Letter, either direct to London, or ſent from it on that Head. 4. I was told there was a Sign and a Word agreed on by that Party, ſo that Men might know with whom they might uſe Freedom, the Word, as I remember, was Harmony, and the Sign, the opening two Buttons in the Breaſt-coat and ſhutting them preſently; this I communicat to the Earl of Tarras, but does not mind I ever ſaw it uſed, except when I viſited Park-Hay here in Town, about the End of June; we diſcourſing a little freely, he asked if I had the Word and Sign of the Carolina Men, and I having given them, he ſaid ſomething to this purpoſe, that he was afraid that the Carolina Buſineſs did not go well, for there had been ſome of the Managers expected here (as I think he named Jerviſwood or Commiſſar Monro) theſe eight Days paſt, but there was none come, nor could he learn that any of their Friends had heard from them for ſeveral Poſts. Polwort, Torwoodlie, and I met at Gallowſheils, on Midſummer Fair, but I mind nothing paſſed but private Whiſperings. The ſaid James Murray further Depons, That at their meeting at Gallowſheils, it was reſolved, that they ſhould keep up their Ceſs unpayed till their next meeting at Midſummer, which was to be at Gallowſheils, and ſhould deal with all theſe they had influence upon to do the like, and that upon the Suppoſition mentioned in his Oath given in. It was ſpoke amongſt them, that the Troopers Horſes ſhould be ſeized upon when they were graſing. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to GOD.

Hugh Scot of Gallowſheils, aged 36 Years, married, purged, &c. and ſworn. Depons, That the Earl of Tarras and Philiphaugh did come to the Deponent's Houſe, in May, 1683. and Polwart came likewiſe there, where there were Diſcourſes and Propoſals, that if the Engliſh would riſe in Arms, their Friends in the South Shires ſhould riſe with them; and that they ſhould ſeize the Horſes belonging to the King's Troops where they grazed; and the Town of Berwick, and the Caſtle of Stirling: And likewiſe it was there diſcourſed anent the late Earl of Argyle's coming to invade Scotland, but becauſe of the uncertainty of Sea Voyages, there was not much ſtreſs laid upon it. Depons, It was alſo propoſed, that ſome of the South Countrey whom they truſted in ſhould be acquainted with it, and that Endeavours ſhould be uſed to learn what Arms was in the Countrey. Depons, There was ſome ſuch Diſcourſe there, as that the Earl of Tarras, Philiphaugh, Torwoodlie, Polwart, and ſome others ſhould draw to Horſe with the firſt when the riſing ſhould be in readineſs, that it might be expected that the South Parts of Teviotdale and Selkirk Shire would joyn with them. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to GOD.

His Majeſties Advocat produced other Depoſitions, emitted by Gallowſheils, before the Lords of the Secret Committee, whereof the Tenor follows.

Edinburgh, the [illegible] ember, 1684.

Gallowſheils D[illegible]e Earl of Tarras and Philiphaugh, being in his Houſe in May, 1683. Diſcourſed of an intended riſing in England, and of Propoſals made to Scotſmen, to riſe with them, and of London in particular, and that Polwort was preſent at that Meeting, and told he was ſure the Engliſhmen intended ſo, and that it was Diſcourſed at that Meeting amongſt them, that it were fit to ſeize Berwick and Stirling; and that it was talked amongſt them of bringing the Duke of York to Tryal, and that the King would abandon him.

The Laird of Gallowſheils, Priſoner in the Tolbuith of Edinburgh, being called and examined upon Oath, Depons, That in the Moneth of May, 1683. The Earl of Tarras, Hume of Polwort Elder, and Laird of Philiphaugh, came to the Deponent's Houſe, himſelf being abſent, at his coming Home, they were ſpeaking of the Security of the Proteſtant Religion; and of a Party in England, who would ſecure, or ſeize the King or Duke, and that if any ſhould riſe in Arms to defend them, or to reſcue the King and Duke: There was another Party who would riſe in Arms againſt them, it was propoſed, that ſome Countrey-men ſhould be ſpoken to, to try their Reſolutions, and that the Reſolutions of England ſhould be told them, to ſee if they would concur. But the Deponent does not remember that this Propoſition was approven, or undertaken to be done by any preſent; nor does he remember who managed the Diſcourſe. It was likewiſe propoſed, to ſeize the Officers of State, eſpecially the Chancellor and Theſaurer, and the ſaid Sir John Cochran was to come to the Weſt from England, for advancement of the Deſign; and that the Earl of Argyle was to land in the Weſt-Highlands, and to raiſe that Countrey. Of theſe Matters, all theſe who were preſent diſcourſed, as of an Affair that they were agitating, and wherein themſelves were particularly concerned, though at that time they did not conclude what their Carriage ſhould be; The reaſon why the Deponent cannot be more particular is, becauſe he was ſometimes going out, and ſometimes walking up and down the Room; and though the Deponent cannot be poſitive of the very Words; yet he is poſitive they were either theſe Words, or Words to that purpoſe.

The Depoſition of Mr. William Carſtares, when he was examined before the Lords of Secret Committee, given in by him, and renewed upon Oath; upon the 22*d. of* December, 1684. in preſence of the Lords of His Majeſties Privy Council.

Edinburgh Caſtle, September 8. 1684.

Mr. William Carſtares being examined upon Oath, conform to the Condeſcention given in by him, and on the Terms therein mentioned; Depons, That about November, or December, 1682. James Steuart, Brother to the Laird of Cultneſs, wrote a Letter to him from Holland, importing, That if any conſiderable Sum of Money could be procured from England, that ſomething of Importance might be done in Scotland: The which Letter, the Deponent had an inclination to inform Shepherd in Ab-Church-Lane, Merchant in London of; but before he could do it, he wrote to Mr. Steuart above-named, to know from him, if he might do it; and Mr. Steuart having conſented, he communicat the ſaid Letter to Mr. Shepherd, who told the Deponent that he would communicat the Contents of it to ſome Perſons in England; but did at that time name no body, as the Deponent thinks: Sometime thereafter, Mr. Shepherd told the Deponent, that he had communicat the Contents of the Letter above-named, to Colonel Sidney, and that Colonel Danvers was preſent, and told the Deponent, that Colonel Sidney was averſe from imploying the late Earl of Argyle, or medling with him, judging him a Man too much affected to the Royal Family, and inclined to the preſent Church-Government; yet Mr. Shepherd being put upon it by the Deponent, ſtill urged, that one might be ſent to the Earl of Argyle; but as Mr. Shepherd told him, he was ſuſpected upon the account of his urging ſo much; yet afterwards he preſſed, without the Deponent's knowledge, that the Deponent being to go to Holland however might have ſome Commiſſion to the Earl of Argyle, which he having informed the Deponent of, the Deponent told him, that he himſelf would not be concerned, but if they would ſend another, he would introduce him; but nothing of this was done: Upon which the Deponent went over, without any Commiſſion from any body to Holland, never meeting with James Steuart above-named: He was introduced to the Earl of Argyle, with whom he had never before converſed, and did there diſcourſe what had paſt betwixt Mr. Shepherd and him; and particularly about remitting of Money to the ſaid Earl from England; of which the ſaid Mr. Steuart had written to the Deponent, namely of 30000 Pounds Sterling; and of the raiſing of 1000 Horſe and Dragoons; and the ſecuring the Caſtle of Edinburgh, as a matter of the greateſt Importance: The Method of doing this was propoſed by the Deponent, to be one Hour, or thereby, after the relieving of the Guards: But the Earl did not reliſh this Propoſition, as dangerous; and that the Caſtles would fall of conſequence, after the Work Abroad was done. James Steuart was of the Deponent's Opinion for ſeizing the Caſtle, becauſe it would ſecure Edinburgh, the Magazines and Arms; as to the 1000 Horſe and Dragoons, my Lord Argyle was of Opinion, that without them nothing was to be done; and that if that number were raiſed in England to the ſaid Earl, he would come into Scotland with them; and that there being ſo few Horſe and Dragoons to meet them, he judged he might get the Country without trouble, having ſuch a ſtanding Body for their Friends to Rendezvous to; and the ſaid Earl ſaid he could ſhow the Deponent the convenient Places for landing, if he underſtood; and as the Deponent remembers, where the Ships could attend. The Deponent remembers not the Names of the Places. The Deponent ſpoke to the Lord Stairs; but cannot be poſitive that he named the Affair to him, but found him ſhy: But the Earl of Argyle told him, he thought Stairs might be gained to them: And that the Earl of Lowdoun being a Man of good Reaſon, and diſobliged, would have great influence upon the Countrey, and recommended the Deponent to Major Holms, with whom the Deponent had ſome Acquaintance before, and had brought over a Letter from him to the Earl of Argyle; but the Deponent had not then communicate any Thing to the ſaid Holms, James Steuart laid down a way of Correſpondence by Cyphers and falſe Names, and ſent them over to Holms; and the Deponent, for their uſe (which Cyphers and Names, are now in the Hands of his Majeſties Officers, as the Deponent ſuppoſes) and did deſire the Deponent earneſtly to propoſe the 30000 Pound Sterling abovenamed to the Party in England, and did not propoſe any leſs; for as the Earl told the Deponent, he had particularly calculate the Expence for Arms, Ammunition, &c. But James Steuart ſaid, that if ſome leſs could be had, the Earl would content himſelf, if better might not be; but the Earl always ſaid, that there was nothing to be done without the body of Horſe and Dragoons above-mentioned. During the time of the Deponent his abode in Holland, tho' he had ſeveral Letters from Shephard, yet there was no ſatisfactory Account, till ſome time after the Deponent parted from the Earl of Argyle, and was making for a Ship at Rotterdam, to tranſport himſelf to England. James Steuart wrot to him that there was hopes of the Money. The next Day after the Deponent came to England, he met with Sir John Cochran, who, with Commiſſar Monro, and Jerviſwood, was at London before he came over; and Depons, That he knows not the account of their coming, more then for the perfecting the Tranſaction about Carolina: And having acquainted Sir John Cochran with the Earl's Demands of the 30000 Pound Sterling, and the 1000 Horſe and Dragoons, Sir John carried him to the Lord Ruſſel, to whom the Deponent propoſed the Affair, but being an abſolute Stranger to the Deponent, had no return from him at that time; but afterwards having met him accidentally at Mr. Shephard's Houſe, where he the Lord Ruſſel had come to ſpeak to Shephard about the Money above-named, as Mr. Shephard told the Deponent. The Deponent (when they were done ſpeaking) deſired to ſpeak to the Lord Ruſſel, which the Lord Ruſſel did, and having reiterate the former Propoſition for 30000 Pound Sterling, and the 1000 Horſe and Dragoons, he the Lord Ruſſel told the Deponent, they could not get ſo much raiſed at the time, but if they had 10000 Pound to begin, that would draw People in, and when they were once in, they would ſoon be brought to more; but as for the 1000 Horſe and Dragoons, he could ſay nothing at the preſent, for that behoved to be concerted upon the Borders. The Deponent made the ſame Propoſal to Mr. Ferguſon, who was much concerned in the Affair, and zealous for the promoving of it. This Mr. Ferguſon had in October or November before, as the Deponent remembers in a Converſation with the Deponent in Cheap ſide, or the Street ſomewhere thereabout, ſaid, That for the ſaving of innocent Blood, it would be neceſſary to cut off a few, inſinuating the King and Duke, but cannot be poſitive whether he named them or not, to which the Deponent ſaid, that's Work for our wild People in Scotland, my Conſcience does not ſerve me for ſuch Things; after which the Deponent had never any particular Diſcourſe with Ferguſon, as to that Matter; but as to the other Affair, Ferguſon told the Deponent that he was doing what he could to get it effectuate, as particularly that he ſpoke to one Major Wildman who is not of the Deponent his acquaintance. Ferguſon blamed always Sidney, as driving Deſigns of his own. The Deponent met twice or thrice with the Lord Melvil, Sir John Cochran, Jerviſwood, Commiſſar Monro, the two Ceſſnocks, Mongomery of Landſhaw, and one Mr. Veitch, where they diſcourſed of Money to be ſent to Argyle, in order to the carrying on the Affair, and though he cannot be poſitive the Affair was named; yet it was underſtood by himſelf, and as he conceives by all preſent, to be for riſing in Arms, for rectifying the Government. Commiſſary Monro, Lord Melvil, and the two Ceſſnocks were againſt medling with the Engliſh, becauſe they judged them Men that would talk, and would not do, but were more inclined to do ſomething by themſelves, if it could be done. The Lord Melvil thought every thing hazardous, and therefore the Deponent cannot ſay he was poſitive in any thing, but was moſt inclined to have the Duke of Monmouth to head them in Scotland, of which no particular Method was laid down. Jerviſwood, the Deponent, and Mr. Veitch, were for taking Money at one of theſe Meetings. It was reſolved, that Mr. Martin, late Clerk to the Juſtice-Court ſhould be ſent to Scotland, to deſire their Friends to hinder the Countrey from riſing, or taking raſh Reſolutions upon the account of the Council, till they ſhould ſee how Matters went in England. The ſaid Martin did go at the Charges of the Gentlemen of the Meeting, and was directed to the Laird of Polwart and Torwoodlie, who ſent back Word that it would not be found ſo eaſie a matter to get the Gentry of Scotland to concur: But afterwards in a Letter to Commiſſar Monro, Polwart wrote that the Countrey was readier to concur than they had imagined, or ſomething to that purpoſe. The Deponent, as above-ſaid, having brought over a Key from Holland, to ſerve himſelf and Major Holms: He remembers not that ever he had an exact Copy of it, but that ſometimes the one, ſometimes the other keeped it, and ſo it chanced to be in his Cuſtody, when a Letter from the Earl of Argyle came to Major Holms, intimating, that he would joyn with the Duke of Monmouth, and follow his Meaſures, or obey his Directions. This Mr. Veitch thought fit to communicate to the Duke of Monmouth, and for the underſtanding of it was brought to the Deponent, and he gave the Key to Mr. Veitch, who as the Deponent was informed, was to give it and the Letter to Mr. Ferguſon, and he to ſhew it to the Duke of Monmouth; but what was done in it, the Deponent knows not. The Deponent heard the Deſign of killing the King and Duke, from Mr. Shephard, who told the Deponent ſome were full upon it. The Deponent heard that Aaron Smith was ſent by thoſe in England to call Sir John Cochran, on the account of Carolina, but that he does not know Aaron Smith, nor any more of that Matter, not being concerned in it. Shephard named young Hambden frequently as concerned in theſe Matters.

Signed at Edinburgh Caſtle, the 8*th* of September, 1684. and renewed the 18*th* of the ſame Month.

Edinburgh-Caſtle, 18*th September*, 1684.

Mr. William Carſtares being again examined, adheres to his former Depoſition, in all the Parts of it, and Depones he knows of no Correſpondence between Scotland and England, except by Martin before named; for thoſe Gentlemen to whom he was ſent, were left to follow their own Methods. Veitch ſometimes, as the Deponent remembers, ſtayed ſometimes at Nicolſon, Stabler's Houſe at London-wall; ſometimes with one Widow Hardcaſtle in Moor-fields. The Deponent did communicate the Deſign on foot to Doctor Owen, Mr. Griffil, and Mr. Mede, at Stepney, who all concurred in the promoting of it, and were deſirous it ſhould take effect; and to one Mr. Freth in the Temple, Councellor at Law, who ſaid that he would ſee what he could do in reference to the Money, but there having gone a Report, that there was no Money to be raiſed, he did nothing in it; nor does the Deponent think him any more concerned in the Affair. Neltbrop frequently ſpoke to the Deponent of the Money to be ſent to Argyle, whether it was got or not, but the Deponent uſed no freedom with him in the Affair. Goodenough did inſinuate once, that the Lords were not inclined to the Thing, and that before, they would ſee what they could do in the City. The Deponent ſaw Mr. Ferguſon, and Mr. Rumſay, lurking after the Plot broke out, before the Proclamation, having gone to Ferguſon, in the back of Biſhopsgate-ſtreet, at ſome new Building, whether he was directed by Jerviſwood, who was deſirous to know how Things went. Rumſay was not of the Deponent his Acquaintance before, but they knew as little of the Matter as the Deponent. This is what the Deponent remembers, and if any thing come to his Memory, he is to deliver it in betwixt the firſt of October. And this is the Truth, as he ſhall anſwer to GOD.

His Majeſties Advocat for further Probation, adduces the Examinations of Mr. Shepbard, taken before Sir Leolin Jenkins, Secretary of State for England, with the Information or Depoſition of Mr. Zachary Bourn, relating to the Plot, ſigned by him and Secretary Jenkins, of which Depoſitions the Tenors follow.

The Examination of Thomas Shephard of London, Merchant, taken upon Oath, before the Right Honourable Sir Leolin Jenkins Knight, His Majeſties Principal Secretary of State, the 23*d. Day of* December, 1683.

The Deponent ſaith, That Ferguſon told him, on, or about the Moneth of April laſt, that an Inſurrection was intended both in England and in Scotland, and that for the ſettling that Affair betwixt the two Nations, Mr. Baillie, Mr. Monro, Sir John Cochran, Sir Hugh and Sir George Campbels, with ſome others (whoſe Names this Deponent heard not) were come to London.

That the Deponent had ſome acquaintance with Mr. Baillie, Mr. Monro, and Sir John Cochran, and none at all with Sir Hugh and Sir George Campbels; that Mr. Baillie told the Deponent, that the Earl of Argyle demanded thirty Thouſand Pounds of the Engliſh to capacitat him to begin the Buſineſs effectually in Scotland, and that he the ſaid Baillie likewiſe told the Deponent, that having concerted Things with the Lord Ruſſel and others, he the ſaid Baillie found an impoſſibility of raiſing that Sum; after which the ſaid Baillie had acquainted the Deponent, that they were certainly promiſed ten Thouſand Pounds, which Sum was agreed to be payed into the Deponent's Hands, in order to be remitted into Holland, for the providing of Arms; and that the ſaid Baillie told the Deponent at divers times, that the ſaid Sum, or at leaſt one half of it would be payed ſuch a Day, and ſuch a Day; and ſometimes asked the Deponent, if he had received any Part of the ſaid Money, to which the Deponent replied that he had not, and that he the Deponent ſcarce thought any would be payed.

And the Deponent alſo ſaith, that having had ſome little Converſation with Sir John Cochran, he remembers well, that both of them did ſometimes lament the Delays in not paying in the Money, and ſaid, that although the ſaid ten Thouſand Pounds were payed in, they, the ſaid Sir John Cochran and Mr. Monro, feared it would be too little; and this Deponent further ſayeth not as to any new Matter. But the Deponent being asked to explain what he thought was meant by the Words above-written, viz. to capacitat him (the Earl of Argyle to begin the Buſineſs) he, this Deponent ſayeth, that he did underſtand by the Word Buſineſs, an Inſurrection in Scotland.

The Information of Zachary Bourn, of London, Brewer, taken upon Oath, the tenth Day of December, 1683. before the Right Honourable Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

The Informant Depoſeth, and ſayeth, That Mr. Baillie ſet up one Night, if not two, with Mr. Ferguſon, and went ſeveral times in the Evening with him to the Duke of Monmouth, and the chief Managers of the Conſpiracy; That Ferguſon told the Deponent, that he the ſaid Baillie was the chief Man for the Scots, next to the Lord Argyle; that the ſaid Baillie did ſit up the greateſt part of one Night with the ſaid Ferguſon; at which time this Deponent believeth they were buſie in preparing the intended Declaration, which the Deponent has the more reaſon to believe, in as much as the ſaid Ferguſon did go about to ſhow him the Deponent ſuch a Paper, wherein the ſaid Ferguſon was hindered by the coming up ſtairs of ſome Perſon, to ſpeak with the ſaid Ferguſon, that the ſaid Ferguſon told the Deponent, that the main Buſineſs of the ſaid Baillie, in meeting the ſaids Conſpirators, was in order to get from them the ten thouſand Pounds, promiſed for the buying of Arms, for the Inſurrection intended in Scotland.

That the Deponent ſaw Mr. William Carſtares come often to the Lodgings of the ſaid Ferguſon; but that the ſaid Ferguſon never told the Deponent of any Diſcourſe held by him with the ſaid Carſtares; and further this Deponent ſaith not.

His Majeſty's Advocat likewiſe produced ſeveral Warrands, and Papers to prove, that thoſe Depoſitions are ſign'd by Sir Leolin Jenkins.

His Majeſty's Advocat alſo produced the Books of Adjournal, bearing Mr. William Veitch to be a Forfault Traitor, and the Act of Parliament whereby the Forfaulture is ratified.

His Majeſty's Advocat's Speech to the Inqueſt.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

YOU have now a Conſpiracy againſt His Majeſty's Sacred Perſon and Royal Government, ſo fully diſcover'd, that they muſt want Reaſon as well as Loyalty, who do not believe the Diſcovery; and they muſt be Enemies to Sincerity, as well as to the King, who do not acknowledge it. Beſide, That the Councils of all the three Nations thought the Proof ſufficient for Indicting a General Thankſgiving through all theſe Nations; and that the Judges of England thought the ſame ſtrong enough to infer Forfaulture of Life and Eſtate againſt ſome of all Ranks there; you have a Diſcovery made here from the late Earl of Argyle's own Letters, and the Confeſſion of his own Emiſſaries, the two ſureſt Proofs that Law ever invented, or the Nature of Humane Affairs can allow; and I am this Day to add to all this, a new Sett of Proofs in the Proceſs that I now lead againſt this Pannal, from the Confeſſions of Noblemen and Gentlemen, who have been engaged in this wicked Conſpiracy; and who, from a Senſe of their Guilt, are content freely to depoſe againſt their neareſt Relation, and their moſt intimate Friend, in which having thus cleared to you, that there was really ſuch a Conſpiracy, I ſhall, in the next place, proceed to prove this Pannal's Acceſſion to it.

It cannot be imagined, that we would willingly involve our Countrey-men in it, without a Conviction ſtronger than our Kindneſs to Scotland; nor did His Majeſty's Servants accuſe this Pannal, without the Opinion of the ableſt Lawyers of the Kingdom, who did with them concur to think that there was not the leaſt occaſion of doubting left to the moſt indifferent Inqueiſt of his Guilt, after they had ſeriouſly, and with Reflection read over and pondered the Probation now laid before you.

The Perſon accuſed of Acceſſion to this Cryme, is the Ringleader of all thoſe who in this Kingdom concur'd with the Engliſh Conſpirators, as you may ſee by the Teſtimonies of all who have depoſed; and it was indeed fit and juſt to begin with the moſt guilty, ſo that if he be not convicted, there ſhould no Man be puniſhed for this Conſpiracy; all the Noiſe we have heard of it, is but a Cheat, the King's Judges have been Murderers, all the Witneſſes have been Knaves, and ſuch as dyed for it have been Martyrs.

The Acceſſion charged on the Pannal, is not an accidental Eſcape, nor is it proved by Witneſſes who can be ſuſpected of Unkindneſs to his Perſon, or his Cauſe, for it is a long Tract of a continued Deſign, gone about with the greateſt Deliberation and Concern imaginable, and proved by his neareſt Relations, and Perſons ſo deeply engadged in that Cauſe, (for which he ſuffers,) that they were content with him to venture their Lives and Fortunes in that Quarrel. He is not accuſed of a Crime that can amount only to a ſingle Murder, tho' that be a dreadful Cryme, but a Rebellion, which was to draw upon us a Civil War, that Murder of Murders, in which hundreths of thouſands were to fall; and to crown all, he was to begin, and to be the chief Promoter of a Rebellion, in which one of the firſt Steps was to kill His Sacred Majeſty, and His Royal Brother; and one of the chief Witneſſes which I have led againſt him, is Bourn, which Bourn confeſſed that he was to kill the King, and who confeſſes the Pannal ſat up ſeveral Nights with Ferguſon, the other Contriver of the King's Murder, and ſo familiar was he with him, that Bourn depons, that the ſaid Pannal had been with Ferguſon at the drawing of the Manifeſto, whereby he was not only to be an Actor, but to be the Juſtifier of that horrid Villany; and therefore Bourn depons, that Ferguſon (the beſt Judge in that Caſe) looked upon him as the chief Man, next to Argyle; but becauſe no Man is preſumed to go to ſuch a hight, without previous Inclination and Motives, I ſhall, to convince you that this Gentleman was very capable of all that was lybelled againſt him, remember you, that he is Nephew and Son in Law to the late Wariſtoun, bred up in his Family, and under his Tutory; about the time of this Plot it was undenyably known, and is now ſufficiently proved proved by two preſent Witneſſes, the Earl of Tarras and Commiſſar Monro, that he thought himſelf deſperat, knowing himſelf to be guilty of Treaſon by Blackwood's Caſe; and as it's preſumable, that a Man that's guilty of one Point of Treaſon, will commit another; ſo when a Man is deſperat as to his Life and Fortune, he is capable of any thing; he was likewiſe animated to commit this Cryme, by the Intelligence he had that there was a Plot in England, carryed on by Men of ſo great Parts, Fortune and Influence, and by the too probable Hopes, that they would get all the Weſtern Shyres to joyn with them here, becauſe of the common Guilt in which they had engadged themſelves, by their late Extravagances, they made an account of an Aſſiſtance of twenty thouſand Men; and by Philiphaugh's Depoſition, that theſe Gentlemen expected the Concurſe of the Southern Shyres; and thus I am to prove to you a Cryme, which is in it ſelf ſo probable and liklie, that it ſhould need little Probation, tho' I have adduced for your Conviction ſufficient Evidences, albeit the Cryme were in it ſelf very unliklie.

The Crymes which I hope I have proved, are, That Ferviſwood the Pannal tranſacted for Money to the late Earl of Argyle, a declared Traitor. 2. That he deſigned to raiſe a Rebellion. 3. That he intercommuned with the Earl of Argyle and Mr. Veitch declared Traitors. 4. That he was preſent, where it was treated, either that Argyle ſhould have Money from the Engliſh, and Aſſiſtance from Scotland, or that a Rebellion ſhould be raiſed, and that he did not reveal the ſamine; and all theſe being found relevant ſeparatim, it is ſufficient for me to have proved any one of them. And if a Gentleman was lately found guilty of High Treaſon by the Opinion of all the Lords of Seſſion, for not revealing, that Sir John Cockran ſought fifty Pounds Sterling from him, tho' he refuſed the ſame, and tho' he believed it was ſought for a charitable Subſiſtance to preſerve him from ſtarving; what deſerves this Pannal, who ſought thirty thouſand Pounds Sterling, to buy him Arms, to invade his Native Countrey?

That Ferviſwood was deſigning to carry on a Rebellion, or at leaſt was acceſſory, or (as our Law terms it) was Art and Part thereof, is clearly prov'd; but that in this occult and hidden Crime, which uſes not to be prov'd by clear Witneſſes, I may lead you thorow all the Steps of the Probation, which like the Links of a Chain, hang upon one another: You will be pleaſed to conſider, that 1. It is proved that he deſired a blind Commiſſion to go to England, not to manage the Affairs of the Carolina Company, as he confeſs'd, but to puſh the People of England to do ſomething for themſelves, becauſe they did only talk and not do; and what he would have them to do, appears too clearly, becauſe he tells the Earl of Tarras it was probable, that if the King were briskly put to it by the Parliament of England, he would conſent to exclude the Duke from the Succeſſion; here is not only a Treaſonable Deſign, (tho' a Deſign be ſufficient in Treaſon) but here are expreſs Acts of Treaſon proved, viz. The treating with the Earl of Tarras upon this Deſign, the ſettling a Correſpondence with him for the Proſecution of it, and the writing Letters from London to him concerning it, and the ſending down Mr. Martin to compleat it by a general Riſing; As he deſign'd to puſh on the Engliſh, ſo he proſecutes cloſely this Deſign upon all occaſions. On the Road he complains cunningly and bitterly, that our Lives, Laws and Liberties, and the Proteſtant Religion were in Danger, the Style and Method of all ſuch as deſign to rebel; after he arrives at London, he engages the Conſpirators there to aſſiſt the late Earl of Argyle, a declared Traitor, with Money to buy Arms; this was indeed to puſh the Engliſh to do the moſt dangerous things by the moſt dangerous Man, and in the moſt dangerous methods. He enters alſo in a ſtrict Correſpondence with Ferguſon the Contriver, with Shephard the Theſaurer, and Carſtares the Chaplain of the Conſpiracy.

Alexander Monro another preſent Witneſs, proves that he argued with him that it was neceſſary to give Argyle Money expreſsly for carrying on the Rebellion, and that they did meet at Ferviſwood's Chamber where this was ſpoke of, and from which Mr. Robert Martin was ſent to their Friends in Scotland to know what they would do; and tho' the ſilly Caution was, that they ſent him to prevent their Riſing, yet a Man muſt renounce Common Senſe, not to ſee that the Deſign was to incite them to Rebellion, and to prevent only their doing any thing in this rebellious Deſign, by which they might loſe themſelves in a too early and abortive Inſurrection here, till things were ready in England. For, 1. This Commiſſion was given him in a place, and by a Company who had been themſelves treating immediatly before of ſending Money to the late Earl of Argyle to buy Arms, and certainly thoſe Arms were to be bought for Men, and not for a Magazine. 2. They were treating how many Men could be raiſed in Scotland. 3. Carſtares Depoſition bears, that Martin was ſent to hinder raſh Reſolutions, till they ſaw how Matters went in England, and the Return to their Embaſſy bore, that it would not be an eaſie matter to get the Gentry of Scotland to concur; but afterwards better Hopes of their Riſing was given, which could not have been, if the true Commiſſion had not been to raiſe Scotland. 4. That Sir John Cochran made a Speech to that purpoſe, is expreſsly prov'd, and that Ferviſwood ſpoke to the ſame purpoſe, is prov'd by a neceſſary conſequence; for ſince it's prov'd that he ſpoke, and that he did not ſpeak againſt it, it muſt neceſſarily follow that he ſpoke for it, tho' the Witneſs is ſo cautious, that he cannot condeſcend upon the Words now after ſo long a time; and it is againſt Senſe to think, that Ferviſwood who in privat preſs'd the ſame ſo much upon Commiſſar Monro, and who was the Deacon-Conveener here, and who, as Mr. Martin their Envoy declared, was the Perſon who was to be ſent for the Arms, ſhould not himſelf have been the moſt forward Man in that Deſign, but above all exitus acta probat, this Commiſſioner, (who being a meer Servant, durſt not have propoſed any thing from himſelf, being a mean Perſon, and being one, who, as the Earl of Tarras depoſes, would ſay nothing, but what was in his Paper:) does expreſsly declare, that he came from Ferviſwood and others; and in the meeting with him, a Rebellion is actually formed, and it is reſolved, they ſhould ſeize the King's Officers of State, Garriſons, and Forces, and that they ſhould joyn with the late Earl of Argyle, and put their own Forces in a Condition to joyn with theſe Forces that were to come from England, and they gave a Sign, and a Word, which uſes only to be done in actual War? ſo here is Treaſon clearly prov'd, by two preſent Witneſſes, from the firſt Deſign to its laſt Perfection.

Nor can it be objected, that they are not concurring Witneſſes, but teſtes ſingulares upon ſeparat Acts, for in reiterable Crimes, Witneſſes depoſing upon different Acts, do prove if the Deeds tend to the ſame end; as for inſtance, if one Witneſs ſhould depoſe, that they ſaw a Traitor ſit in a Council of War, in one place, and in another place, they ſaw him in Arms, or that one ſaw him aſſiſt at a Proclamation in one place, and ſaw him in Arms in another; or that one ſaw him writ a Treaſonable Paper, and another ſaw him uſe it; Theſe Witneſſes are ſtill conſidered as Conteſtes, or concurring Witneſſes, and ten or twelve Inqueiſts have ſo found, and upon their Verdict, Rebels have been lately hang'd. The learn'd Judges of England being all met together did expreſly find, that one Witneſs proving, that A. B. ſaid, that he was going to buy a Knife to kill the King, and another depoſing, that he ſaw him buy a Knife, without telling for what, that theſe two Witneſſes were Conteſtes, and prov'd ſufficiently the Cryme of Treaſon, yet there the one Witneſs prov'd only a remote Deſign, and the other an Act, which was indifferent of its own nature, and became only Treaſonable by the Connexion; but no Witneſſes ever depoſed upon things ſo coherent, and ſo connected together, as theſe do, for they depoſe ſtill upon the ſame Perſon, carrying on the ſame Deſign of a Rebellion; as to which, in one place, he is exciting his own Nephew, and telling him his Reſolutions, and ſettling a Correſpondence with him, at another time, he preſſes Commiſſar Monro to the ſame Rebellion. At a third, He holds a Meeting at his own Chamber, and ſpeaks concerning it, and from that Meeting he ſends a Truſty, who forms the Rebellion. Beſides all this, tho' two Witneſſes be ſufficient, I have adduced Mr. William Carſtares Chief Conſpirator, and who choos'd rather to ſuffer violent Torture, than to diſcloſe it, he likewiſe depoſes upon all theſe Steps, and connects them together, and this his Depoſition is twice reiterated, upon Oath, after much Premeditation. And I likewiſe adduce two Depoſitions taken upon Oath, by Sir Leolin Jenkins, who was impower'd by the Law of England, and at the Command of the King, and the Council of England, upon a Letter from His Majeſty's Officers of State here, in which Depoſition, Shepard, one of the Witneſſes, depoſes, that Baillie came frequently to him, and deſired him to advance the Money, and lamented the Delays, and that there was ſo little to be advanced; and who ſhould be better believed than one who was his own Truſty, and a Perſon who was able to advance ſo great a Sum? Bourn, another of the Witneſſes, depoſes, that Ferguſon told him, that the Pannal ſpoke frequently to him concerning the ſame Money, and that he ſat up ſeveral Nights with Ferguſon upon the ſaid Conſpiracy; and who ſhould be better believed than Ferguſon's Confident, and one who was ſo far truſted in the whole Affair, that he was to take away that Sacred Life, which Heaven has preſerved by ſo many Miracles?

Againſt theſe three Depoſitions, you have heard it objected, that non teſtimonia ſed teſtes probant, eſpecially by our Law, in which, by an expreſs Act of Parliament, no Probation is to be led, but in preſence of the Aſſiſe and Pannal. To which it is anſwered, that theſe Depoſitions are not meer Teſtimonies; for I call a Teſtimony a voluntar Declaration, emitted without an Oath, and a Judge; but theſe Depoſitions are taken under the awe of an Oath, and by the Direction of a Judge. 2. Shepard was confronted with the Pannal himſelf, and he had nothing to ſay againſt him; whereas the great thing that can be objected againſt Teſtimonies (and by our Statute eſpecially) is, that if the Party who emits the Teſtimony had been confronted with the Pannal; the Impreſſion of ſeeing a Perſon that was to die, by his Depoſition, would have made him afraid to depoſe laxly; and the Pannal likewiſe might, by propoſing Interrogators and Queſtions, have cleared himſelf and ſatisfied the Judges in many things depos'd againſt him: But ſo it is that Mr. Shepard having been confronted with the Pannal, before the King Himſelf, who is as far above other Judges, in His Reaſon and Juſtice, as He is in His Power and Authority; He depoſes that the Pannal was the chief Mannager of this Conſpiracy, next to Argyle, and that he was ſo paſſionate to have this Money to buy Arms, that he lamented the Delays; and can it be imagined that Mr. Shepard whom he truſted with his Life and his Fortune, and whom all their Party truſted with their Caſh, would have depos'd any thing againſt him that was not true, eſpecially when he knew that what he was to depoſe, was to take away his Life and his Fortune; or that if the Pannal had been innocent, he would not, when he was confronted with Mr. Shepard before the King Himſelf, have roar'd againſt Mr. Shepard, if he had not been conſcious to his own Guilt? There is a Surprize in Innocence, which makes the Innocent exclaim, and it inſpires Men with a Courage which enables them to confound thoſe who depoſe falſly againſt them; and in what occaſion could either of theſe have appeared, more than in this, wherein this Gentleman was charg'd to have Conſpir'd with the greateſt of Raſcals, againſt the beſt of Princes; and that too in Preſence of the Prince himſelf, againſt whom he had Conſpir'd? But Guilt ſtupifies indeed, and it did never more than in this Gentleman's Caſe, whoſe Silence was a more convincing Witneſs than Mr. Shepard could be. Mr. Carſtares likewiſe knew when he was to depone, that his Depoſition was to be uſed againſt Jerviſwood, and he ſtood more in awe of his Love to his Friend, than of the Fear of the Torture, and hazarded rather to die for Jerviſwood, than that Jerviſwood ſhould die by him: How can it then be imagin'd, that if this Man had ſeen Jerviſwood in his Tryal, it would have altered his Depoſition; or that this Kindneſs, which we all admir'd in him, would have ſuffer'd him to forget any thing in his Depoſition, which might have been advantageous in the leaſt to his Friend: And they underſtand ill this hight of Friendſhip, who think that it would not have been more nice and careful, than any Advocate could have been: And if Carſtares had forgot at one time, would he not have ſupplied it at another; but eſpecially at this laſt time, when he knew his Friend was already brought upon his Tryal? And that this renewed Teſtimony was yet a further Confirmation of what was ſaid againſt him; and albeit the King's Servants were forced to engage, that Carſtares himſelf ſhould not be made uſe of as a Witneſs againſt Jerviſwood; yet I think this kind ſcrupuloſity in Carſtares for Jerviſwood, ſhould convince you more than twenty ſuſpect, nay than even indifferent Witneſſes; nor can it be imagined, that the one of theſe Witneſſes, would not have been as much afraid of GOD, and his Oath at London, as at Edinburgh; and the other in the Council-Chamber in the Forenoon, as in the Juſtice-Court in the Afternoon.

3. The Statute founded on, does not diſcharge the producing of Teſtimonies, otherways than after the Jury is incloſed; for then indeed they might be dangerous, becauſe the Party could not object againſt them: But ſince the Statute only diſcharges to produce Writ, or Witneſſes, after the Jury is incloſed; it ſeems clearly to inſinuat, that they ought to prove when they are produced in Preſence of the Party himſelf, as now they are. And though the Civil Law did not allow their Judges to believe Teſtimonies, becauſe they were confined to obſerve ſtrict Law; yet it does not from that follow, that our Juries, whom the Law allows to be a Law to themſelves, and to be confined by no Rule, but their Conſcience, may not truſt intirely to the Depoſitions of Witneſſes, though not taken before themſelves, when they know that the Witneſſes, by whom, and the Judges, before whom theſe Depoſitions were emitted, are Perſons beyond all Suſpicion, as in our Caſe. But yet for all this, I produce theſe Teſtimonies, as Adminicles here only to connect the Depoſitions of the preſent Witneſſes, and not to be equivalent to Witneſſes in this legal Proceſs; albeit, as to the Conviction of Mankind, they are ſtronger than any ordinary Witneſſes.

When you, my Lords, and Gentlemen, remember, that it is not the revenge of a privat Party, that accuſes in this Caſe; and that even in privat Crimes, ſuch as Forgery, or the murder of Children, &c. many Juries here have proceeded upon meer Preſumptions, and that even Solomon himſelf, founded his illuſtrious Deciſion, approved by God Almighty, upon the preſumed Aſſertion of a Mother; I hope ye will think two Friends Depoſing, as preſent Witneſſes, adminiculated and connected by the Depoſitions of others, though abſent; ſhould beget in you an intire belief, eſpecially againſt a Pannal, who has been always known to incline this way, and who, though he was deſired in the Tolbooth to vindicate himſelf from thoſe Crimes, would not ſay any thing in his own Defence, and though he offers to clear himſelf of his acceſſion to the King's Murder; yet ſays nothing to clear himſelf from the Conſpiracy entered into with the late Earl of Argyle, for invading his Native Countrey, which is all that I here Charge upon him, and which he inclines to juſtifie, as a neceſſary mean for redreſſing Grievances; I muſt therefore remember you, that an Inqueſt of very worthy Gentlemen did find Rathillet guilty, though there was but one Witneſs led againſt him, becauſe when he was put to it, he did not deny his Acceſſion: And two Rogues were found guilty in the late Circuit at Glaſcow, for having murdered a Gentleman of the Guard, though no Man ſaw them kill him; but the Murderers having been purſued, they run to the Place, out of which the Pannals then accuſed were taken, none having ſeen the Face of the Runaways; and the Pannals being accuſed, and preſſed to deny the Acceſſion, ſhuned to diſown the Guilt, but deſired it might be proved againſt them. This may convince you that there are Proofs which are ſtronger then Witneſſes; and I am ſure that there were never more proving Witneſſes then in this Caſe, nor were the Depoſitions of Witneſſes ever more ſtrongly adminiculated. Remember the Danger likewiſe of emboldening Conſpiracies againſt the King's Sacred Life, and of encouraging a Civil War, wherein your ſelves and your Poſterity may bleed, by making the leaſt Difficulty to find a Man Guilty, by the ſtrongeſt Proofs that ever were adduced in ſo latent a Crime as a Conſpiracy is. And I do juſtly conclude, that whoever denys that a Conſpiracy can be thus proved, does let all the World ſee, that he inclines that Conſpiracies ſhould be encouraged and allowed. Our Age is ſo far from needing ſuch Encouragements, that on the other hand in this, as in all other Crimes, becauſe the Guilt grows frequent and dangerous, the Probation ſhould therefore be made the more eaſie, though in this Caſe, the King needs as little deſire your Favour, as fear your Juſtice. And I have inſiſted ſo much upon this Probation, rather to convince the World of the Conſpiracy, than you that this Conſpirator is Guilty.

Thereafter the Lords Ordained the Aſſize to incloſe, and return their Verdict to Morrow, by Nine-a-Clock in the Morning.

Edinburgh, December 24. 1684.

The ſaid Day, the Perſons who paſt upon the Aſſize of Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviſwood, returned their Verdict in Preſence of the ſaids Lords; whereof the Tenor follows. The Aſſize, all in one Voice, finds the Crimes of Art and Part in the Conſpiracy, and Plot Libelled; and of concealing, and not revealing the ſame, clearly proven againſt Mr. Robert Baillie the Pannal, in reſpect of the Depoſitions of Witneſſes and Adminicles adduced.

Sic ſubſcribitur,

Strathmore, Chancellor.

After opening and reading of the which Verdict of Aſſize, The Lords, Juſtice General, Juſtice Clerk, and Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, therefore by the Mouth of James Johnſtoun Deimpſter of Court, Decerned and Adjudged the ſaid Mr. Robert Baillie of Jerviſwood to be taken to the Mercat-Croſs of Edinburgh, this twenty fourth Day of December inſtant, betwixt Two and Four a Clock in the Afternoon, and there to be hanged on a Gibbet till he be dead, and his Head to be cut off, and his Body to be Quartered in four, and his Head to be affixed on the Nether-bow of Edinburgh, and one of his Quarters to be affixed on the Tolbooth of Jedburgh, another on the Tolbooth of Lanerk, a third on the Tolbooth of Air, and a fourth on the Tolbooth of Glaſgow; and ordains his Name, Fame, Memory, and Honours to be extinct, his Blood to be Tainted, and his Arms to be riven forth, and delate out of the Books of Arms, ſo that his Poſterity may never have Place, nor be able hereafter to bruik, or joyſe any Honours, Offices, Titles or Dignities, within this Realm in time coming; and to have Forfaulted, Ammitted and Tint, all and ſundry his Lands, Heritages Tacks, Steadings, Rooms, Poſſeſſions, Goods and Gear whatſoever, pertaining to him, to our Sovereign Lord's Uſe, to remain perpetually with His Highneſs in Property, which was pronounced for Doom.

Extracted forth of the Books of Adjournal, by me Mr. Thomas Gordon, Clerk to the Juſtice Court,

Sic ſubſcribitur,

THO. GORDON.

In purſuance of which Sentence, His Majeſties Heraulds, and Purſevants, with their Coats diſplay'd (after ſound of Trumpets) did publickly, in face of the Court (conform to the Cuſtom, in the Sentences of Treaſon) in His Majeſties Name and Authority, Cancel, Tear and Deſtroy the ſaid Mr. Robert Baillie his Arms, threw them in his Face, trampled them under foot; and ordained his Arms to be expunged out of the Books of Herauldry, his Poſterity to be ignoble, and never to injoy Honour and Dignity in time coming: And thereafter went to the Mercat-Croſs of Edinburgh, and ſolemnly Tore and Cancelled the ſaid Mr. Robert Baillie his Arms, and affixed the ſamine on the ſaid Mercat-Croſs Reverſed, with this Inſcription; The Arms of Mr. Robert Baillie late of Jerviſwood Traytor.

The Tryal of TITUS OTES.

Die Veneris oct' Maii 1685. in Banco Regis.

De Term. Paſch. Anni Regni Regis Jacobi Primi.

Dominus Rex verſus Titus Otes.

THIS Day being appointed for the Tryal of one of the Cauſes between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Titus Otes for Perjury; the ſame began between eight and nine in the Morning, and proceeded in the manner following.

Firſt, Proclamation was made for Silence, then the Defendant was called, who appeared in Perſon, being brought up by Rule from the King's-Bench Priſon, where he was in Cuſtody, and was adviſed to look to his Challenge to the Jury that were impannelled to try the Cauſe.

Otes. My Lord, I am to manage my own Defence, and have a great many Papers and Things which I have brought in order to it, I pray I may have ſome Conveniency for the managing my own Tryal.

Sir George Jefferies. L. C. J. Ay, ay, let him ſit down there, within the Bar, and let him have Conveniency for his Papers.

Clerk of Cr. Cryer, Swear Sir William Dodſon.

Otes. My Lord, I except againſt Sir William Dodſon.

Mr. At. Gen. What is the Cauſe of Exception, Mr. Otes? Sir Robert Sawyer.

L. C. J. Why do you challenge him?

Otes. My Lord, I humbly conceive in theſe Caſes of Criminal Matters, the Defendant has liberty of excepting againſt any of the Jurors, without ſhewing Cauſe, provided there be a full Jury beſides.

L. C. J. No, no, that is not ſo, you are miſtaken in that Mr. Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I am adviſed ſo, I do not underſtand the Law my ſelf.

L. C. J. But we tell you then, it cannot be allowed; if Mr. Attorney will conſent to wave him, well and good.

Mr. At. Gen.

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, I know no reaſon for it, I cannot conſent to any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Then, if you will not have him ſworn, you muſt ſhew your Cauſe preſently.

Otes. My Lord, I cannot aſſign any Cauſe.

L. C. J. Then he muſt be ſworn.

Cl. of Cr. Swear him.

Cryer. Sir William Dodſon take the Book, You ſhall well and truly try this Iſſue between our Sovereign Lord the King, and Titus Otes, and a true Verdict give according to the Evidence; ſo help you God.

Cl. of Cr. Swear Sir Edmund Wiſeman. [Which was done.

Richard Aley, Eſq; [Who was ſworn.

Benjamin Scutt.

Otes. My Lord, I challenge him.

L. C. J. For what Cauſe?

Otes. My Lord, he was one of the Grand Jury that found the Bill.

L. C. J. Was he ſo, that is an Exception indeed; what ſay you, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I believe he was upon one of the Indictments, but I think it was not this.

L. C. J. But if he were in either of them, he cannot be ſo impartial.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we will not ſtand upon it, we'll wave him.

Cl. of Cr. Thomas Fowlis.

Otes. Pray let me ſee that Gentleman. [Who was ſhown to him.

Are you not a Goldſmith in Fleet-ſtreet, between the two Temples?

Fowlis. Yes, I am.

Otes. Very well, Sir, I do not except againſt you, only I deſire to know, whether it were you or not.

Cl. of Cr. Swear him. [Which was done.

Thomas Blackmore,
Peter Pickering,
Robert Beddinfield,
Thomas Rawlinſon,
Roger Reeves, } Sworn.

Edward Kempe, Sworn.

Otes. My Lord, I challenge him.

L. C. J. You ſpeak too late, he is ſworn already.

Otes. My Lord, they are ſo quick, I could not ſpeak, but he was one of the Grand Jury too.

L. C. J. We cannot help it now.

Mr. At. Gen. I did not know that he was ſo, but to ſhew that we mean nothing but fair, we are content to wave him.

L. C. J. You do very well, Mr. Attorney General; let him be withdrawn.

Cl. of Cr. Mr. Kempe, you may take your eaſe; ſwear Ambroſe Iſted. [Which was done.

Henry Collier,
Richard Howard, } Sworn.

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, count theſe.

Cryer. One, &c. Sir William Dodſon.

Cl. of Cr. Richard Howard.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, hearken to the Record, and ſtand together, and hear the Evidence.

The NAMES of the Twelve ſworn, were theſe.

Sir William Dodſon, Sir Edmund Wiſeman, Richard Aley, Thomas Fowlis, Thomas Blackmore, Peter Pickering. } Jur' { Robert Beddingfield, Thomas Rawlinſon, Roger Reeves, Ambroſe Iſted, Henry Collier, and Richard Howard.

Otes. Before the Counſel opens the Cauſe, I deſire to move one Thing to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. What is it you would have?

Otes. My Lord, I have three Witneſſes that are very material ones to my Defence, who are now Priſoners in the King's-Bench, for whom I moved yeſterday, that I might have a Rule of Court to bring them up to Day, but it was objected, that they were in Execution, and ſo not to be brought; I humbly move your Lordſhip now, that I may have a Habeas Corpus for them, to bring them immediately hither.

L. C. J. We cannot do it.

Otes. Pray, good my Lord, they are very material Witneſſes for me, and I moved yeſterday for them.

L. C. J. You did ſo, but we told your Counſel then, and ſo we tell you now, we cannot do it by Law, it will be an Eſcape.

Otes. My Lord, I ſhall want their Teſtimony.

L. C. J. Truly we cannot help it, the Law will not allow it, and you muſt be ſatisfied.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, you that are ſworn of this Jury, hearken to the Record, by Virtue of an Inquiſition taken at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bailey, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London, upon Wedneſday the 10*th* of December, in the 36*th* of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Before Sir James Smith, Knight, Mayor of the City of London; Sir George Jefferies Knight and Baronet, Lord Chief Juſtice of this Honourable Court; Sir Thomas Jones Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of the Court of Common Pleas; William Montague, Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; Sir James Edwards Knight; Sir John Moore Knight, Aldermen of the ſaid City; Sir Thomas Jenner Knight, one of His Majeſties Serjeants at Law, and Recorder of the ſame City, and others, their Companions, Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, by the Oaths of Twelve Jurors, honeſt and lawful Men of the City of London aforeſaid, who then and there being ſworn and charged to enquire for our ſaid Lord the King, and the Body of the City aforeſaid, upon their Oaths preſent, that at the Seſſion of our Sovereign Lord the King, holden for the County of Middleſex, at Hicks's Hall, in St. John's Street, in the County aforeſaid, on Monday, to wit, 16 December, in the Year of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lord, Charles II. of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the thirtieth before Sir Reginald Forſter, Baronet, Sir Philip Matthews, Baronet, Sir William Bowls, Kt. Sir Charles Pitfield, Knight; Thomas Robinſon, Humphrey Wyrley, Thomas Hariot, and William Hempſon Eſquires, Juſtices of the ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to enquire by the Oath of Honeſt and Lawful Men of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, and by other ways, manners, means, by which they might better know, as well within Liberties, as without, by whom the Truth of the Matter may be better known and enquired, of whatſoever Treaſons, Miſpriſions of Treaſons, Inſurrections, Rebellions, Counterfeitings, Clippings, waſhings and falſe makings of the Money of this Kingdom of England, and of other Kingdoms and Dominions whatſoever; and of whatſoever Murders, Felonies, Manſlaughters, Killings, Burglaries, and other Articles and Offences in the Letters Patents of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to them, or any four, or more of them therefore directed, ſpecified, as alſo the Acceſſaries of the ſame within the County aforeſaid, as well within Liberties as without, by whomſoever, howſoever had, made, done or committed; and the ſaid Treaſons, and other the Premiſſes, to hear and determine, according to the Law and Cuſtom of this Kingdom of England, being aſſigned by the Oath of Ralph Wain, John Vaughan, Richard Foſter, Thomas Paget, Robert Newington, Henry Tompkins, Robert Hays, John Greenwood, Peter Stimpſon, Joſias Croſley, Richard Richman, Auguſtine Bear, John King, Nathaniel Brett, Francis Fiſher, and Samuel Linn, Honeſt and Lawful Men of the County aforeſaid, ſworn, and charged to enquire for our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the Body of the County aforeſaid upon their Oaths. It was preſented, That Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, late of the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex Clerk, William Ireland late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid Clerk, John Fenwick, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk, Thomas Pickering of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk, John Grove of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Gent. as falſe Traytors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, Serene, and moſt excellent Prince, our ſaid late Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Their Supreme and Natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil: The Cordial Love, and True and Natural Obedience, which faithful Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King towards him, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly withdrawing, and contriving, and with all their Might intending the Peace and Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and the true Worſhip of God within this Kingdom of England uſed, and by Law eſtabliſhed, to ſubvert, and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to move, ſtir up, and procure, and the Cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, towards him, the ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly to withdraw, put out, and extinguiſh, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction, to bring and put, the four and twentieth Day of April, in the Year of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the thirtieth, at the Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, malicioufly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, and trayterouſly did purpoſe, compaſs, imagine and intend, Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to move, ſtir up and procure, and a miſerable Slaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King to procure and cauſe, and our ſaid late Lord the King from the Regal State, Title, Power and Government of his Kingdom of England, utterly to deprive, depoſe, caſt down, and diſ-inherit, and him our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring and put, and the Government of the ſaid Kingdom, and the ſincere Religion of God, rightly by the Laws of the ſaid Kingdom eſtabliſhed, at their Will and Pleaſure to change and alter, and the State of this whole Kingdom of England, throughout all its Parts, well inſtituted and ordained, wholly to ſubvert and deſtroy, and War againſt our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to levy, and thoſe their moſt wicked Treaſons, and Traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil and perfect, They the aforeſaid Thomas White, alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, other falſe Traytors to the Jurors not known, the ſaid four and twentieth Day of April, in the Year of the Reign of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, the Thirtieth, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, aforeſaid, falſly, malicioufly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly did aſſemble themſelves, unite and meet together, and then and there falſly, malicioufly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, deviliſhly, and trayterouſly, did conſult and agree our ſaid late Sovereign the Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring and put, and the Religion within this Kingdom of England, rightly, and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſhed, to the Superſtition of the Romiſh Church, to change and alter, and the ſooner to fulfil and perfect their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons, and Traiterous Imaginations, and Purpoſes, they, the ſaid Thomas White, alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering and John Grove, and other falſe Traytors of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the ſame 24*th* Day of April, in the ſaid 30*th* Year of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, at the ſaid aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, deviliſhly, and trayterouſly among themſelves, did conclude and agree, that they the aforeſaid Thomas Pickering, John Grove, him, the ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King ſhould kill and murder, and that they the ſaid Thomas White, alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traytors to the Jurors unknown: A certain number of Maſſes between them, then and there agreed for the Health of the Soul of him the ſaid Thomas Pickering, therefore ſhould ſay, Celebrate and Perform, and therefore ſhould pay unto the ſaid John Grove a certain Sum of Money between them, then and there agreed; and the Jurors aforeſaid, upon their Oath aforeſaid, did further preſent, That the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, upon the Agreement aforeſaid, then and there falſly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, malicioufly, deviliſhly and trayterouſly did take upon them, and did promiſe to the ſaid Thomas White, alias Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other other falſe Traytors of our late ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, then and there, falſly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did promiſe that they the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove would kill and murder our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, and they, the ſaid Thomas White, aliàs Whitehead, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, John Grove, and other falſe Traitors of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King afterwards, to wit, the ſaid four and twentieth Day of April, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, at the ſaid aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, did ſeverally every one of them give their Faith each to the other, and upon the Sacrament then and there traiterouſly did ſwear and promiſe, to conceal, and not to divulge their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons and traiterous Compaſſings, Conſultations and Purpoſes ſo between them had, him, our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, traiterouſly to kill and murder, and the Romiſh Religion in this Kingdom of England to be uſed, to introduce, and the true Reformed Religion in this Kingdom of England rightly, and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſhed, to alter and change; and that the ſaid aforeſaid Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, in Execution of their traiterous Agreement aforeſaid afterwards, to wit, the ſame four and twentieth Day of April, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid; and divers other Days and Times after, at the ſaid aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County aforeſaid, Muskets, Piſtols, Swords, Daggers, and other offenſive and cruel Weapons, him, the our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King to kill and murder, falſly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly did prepare, and obtain for themſelves, had and kept, and that they the aforeſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove afterwards, to wit, the ſaid four and twentieth Day of April, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, and divers Days and Times afterwards, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, and in other Places within the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did lie in wait, and endeavour our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King to murder, and that the ſaid Thomas White, aliàs Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors to the Jurors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the ſame four and twentieth Day of April, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilely, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did prepare, perſwade, excite, abet, comfort and counſel four other Perſons, Men to the Jurors unknown, and Subjects of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, him our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, traiterouſly to kill and murder againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided, and thereupon it was ſo far proceeded, that afterwards, to wit, at the Court of Goal-delivery of our Sovereign Lord the King, of Newgate, at Juſtice-Hall in the Old Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London aforeſaid, the ſeventeenth Day of December, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, before the Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King, then and there being preſent, held by Adjournment for the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, before whom the Indictment aforeſaid was then depending, came the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove under the Cuſtody of Sir Richard How, Kt. Sir John Chapman Knight, Sheriffs of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, into whoſe Cuſtody, for the Cauſe aforeſaid before that were committed, being there brought to the Bar in their proper Perſons, and immediately being ſeverally ſpoken unto concerning the Premiſſes above charged upon them, how they would acquit themſelves thereof; the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove did ſay that they were not thereof guilty, and for the ſame, for good and bad, they ſeverally put themſelves upon the Country, and by a certain Jury of the Country on that behalf, in due manner impannel'd, ſworn and charged, then and there, in the ſame Court before the Juſtices of Goal-delivery aforeſaid were tryed, and that upon that Tryal between our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove at London aforeſaid, to wit, at Juſtice-Hall in the Old Bailey aforeſaid, in the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, the Defendant Titus Otes, by the Name of Titus Otes, late of the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre aforeſaid, in the Ward aforeſaid, Clerk, was a Witneſs produced on the behalf of our late Sovereign Lord the King upon the Tryal aforeſaid, and before the aforeſaid Juſtices of Goal-delivery in the Court aforeſaid, then and there held, upon the Holy Evangeliſts of God, to ſpeak and teſtify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, of, and in the Premiſſes between our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, put in Iſſue, was duely ſworn, and that he, the aforeſaid Titus Otes, then and there, in the Court of Goal-delivery aforeſaid, upon his Oath aforeſaid, upon the Indictment aforeſaid, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, by his own proper Act and Conſent, of his moſt wicked Mind, falſly, voluntarily, and corruptly did ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and to the Jurors of the Jury aforeſaid, then and there ſworn, and impannel'd to try the Iſſue aforeſaid, between our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, and the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, did give in Evidence, that there was a traiterous Conſult of Jeſuits that were aſſembled at a certain Tavern, called the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, (in the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, meaning) upon the four and twentieth Day of April, in the Year of our Lord 1678. At which Conſult, Whitebread, Fenwick, Ireland, (the aforeſaid Thomas White, aliàs Whitebread, John Fenwick, and William Ireland, meaning) and he the ſaid Titus Otes, were preſent, and that the Jeſuits aforeſaid did ſeparate themſelves into ſeveral leſſer Companies, and that the Jeſuits aforeſaid came to a Reſolution to murder the ſaid our late Lord the King, and that he, the ſaid Titus Otes, did carry the Reſolution aforeſaid from Chamber to Chamber, and did ſee that Reſolution ſigned by them (the aforeſaid Jeſuits meaning) whereas in truth and indeed, the aforeſaid Titus Otes was not preſent at any Conſult of the Jeſuits at the White Horſe Tavern aforeſaid in the Strand, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, upon the 24th of April, in the Year of our Lord 1678. nor did carry any Reſolution to murder our ſaid late Lord the King, from Chamber to Chamber by any Perſons to be ſigned; and ſo he, the aforeſaid Titus Otes, on the 17th Day of December, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, at the Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Court aforeſaid, upon the Tryal aforeſaid, upon the Indictment aforeſaid, between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, ſo as aforeſaid, had by his own proper Act and Conſent, and of his moſt wicked Mind, falſly, voluntarily, and corruptly in Manner and Form aforeſaid, did commit voluntary and corrupt Perjury, to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, in manifeſt Contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, to the Evil and Pernicious Example of all others in like caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon this Indictment he has been arraign'd, and thereunto hath pleaded not Guilty, and for his Tryal hath put himſelf upon the Country, and His Majeſty's Attorney General likewiſe, which Country you are, your Charge is to enquire, whether the Defendant be guilty of this Perjury and Offence whereof he is now indicted, or whether not guilty: If you find him guilty, you are to ſay ſo, if you find him not guilty, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Otes. Hold, Sir, I beg one Favour of your Lordſhip, to give me leave to have that part of the Record, wherein I am ſaid to have ſworn ſuch and ſuch things, read diſtinctly in Latin.

L. C. J. Let it be read in Latin.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Now, you have read it, go on, Sir, to make your Proclamation.

Cl. of Cr. Cryer, make an Ho-yes.

Cryer. Ho-yes, If any one can inform our Sovereign Lord the King, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, or this Inqueſt now taken concerning the Perjury and Offence, whereof the Defendant Titus Otes ſtands indicted; let them come forth, and they ſhall be heard, for now he ſtands upon his Diſcharge.

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury———

Otes. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip and the Court would be of Counſel for me in one thing, which I take to be a Fault and Error in my Indictment.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Otes, Whatever you have to ſay of that nature, you muſt not ſpeak to it now, you will have your time as to that hereafter, in caſe you be Convicted.

Otes. My Lord, I have but one ſmall Exception to open to you.

L. C. J. We are now upon the Fact only.

Otes. My Lord, I beg you would give me leave only to tell you of a Miſtake in the Indictment, which I hope, when I have opened, will ſatisfy your Lordſhip, that it ought not to be put upon me or the Court to try this Cauſe; or to be ſure, if there ſhould be a Conviction, I hope I may move an Arreſt of the Judgment.

L. C. J. So I tell you you may, but not now.

Otes. Good my Lord, hear me but a few Words, the Indictment charges me to have given ſuch and ſuch Evidence, that there was ſuch a Conſult of the Jeſuits at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, the 24th of April 1678. that the Jeſuits did afterwards divide themſelves in ſeveral leſſer Companies, that they came there to a Reſolution to murder the late King, and that I ſwore that I carried that Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, and ſaw the Reſolution ſigned by them, ſo the Word is, Signat'; now the Perjury aſſigned is, that I was not preſent at that Conſult, nor did carry the Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber to be ſigned, and there the Word is Signand'; now I conceive if Signat' be the Word, that is uſed in ſetting forth the Oath that I made, The Aſſignment of the Perjury ought to follow that Form, and the Word there ought to be Signat' too, being Signand', I take that to be an Error.

L. C. J. Look, that is not proper at this time, as I told you at firſt, but withal I do not think there is any great Matter in what you ſay.

Mr. At. Gen. Either I do not underſtand Mr. Otes, what he means by the Objection, or he will find himſelf much miſtaken in it.

L. C. J. Well, well, We have nothing to do with that now, go on with the Cauſe.

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment againſt Titus Otes for Perjury, which Indictment ſets forth, that Thomas White, aliàs Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering

Pickering and John Grove, the 16th of December, in the thirtieth Year of the late King, at the Old Bailey, were indicted of High Treaſon for Conſpiring the Death of the King, and that Ireland, Pickering, and Grove were tryed the 17th of December in that Year, and upon that Indictment Titus Otes was produced as a Witneſs on the behalf of the King againſt the ſaid Ireland, Pickering and Grove, being ſworn to give Evidence to the Jury that were impannelled and ſworn to try that Cauſe; he did ſwear and give in Evidence that there was a treaſonable Conſult of the Jeſuits at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, meaning the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, in the County of Middleſex, the 24th of April, 1678. at which Conſult, Whitebread, Fenwick, and Ireland, and the ſaid Titus Otes were preſent, and that they ſeparated themſelves into ſeveral leſſer Clubs, and came to a Reſolution to murder the King, and that he, the ſaid Titus Otes, carried the ſaid Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, to be ſigned by them, meaning the Jeſuits; whereas in truth and in fact, he, the ſaid Titus Otes, was not preſent at any ſuch Conſult, the four and twentieth of April, 1678. nor carried any ſuch Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber to be ſigned, and he, the ſaid Titus Otes, the 17th Day of December, in the thirtieth Year aforeſaid, at the Old Bailey aforeſaid, upon the Tryal aforeſaid, on the Indictment aboveſaid, between the King, and the ſaid Ireland, Pickering, and Grove; ſo as aforeſaid had by his own proper Act and Conſent of his moſt wicked Mind, falſly, voluntarily and corruptly in manner and form aforeſaid, did commit wilful and corrupt Perjury, and this is laid to be to the Diſhonour of God, in Contempt of the Law, to the evil Example of others in the like caſe offending againſt the King's Peace, Crown and Dignity; to this he has pleaded not Guilty, and that is the Iſſue that you are to try; if we prove him Guilty, we queſtion not but you will find him ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, I am of Counſel in this Cauſe for the King, and our Caſe ſtands thus; The Defendant ſtands indicted for corrupt and wilful Perjury, for what he ſwore at the Tryal of Ireland, and that which he ſwore was this, in order to convict the Priſoners then at the Bar of the High Treaſon they were accuſed of; Otes did ſwear, that upon the 24th of April, 1678. there was a Conſult of Jeſuits held at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, where Ireland and ſeveral other Jeſuits were preſent, and their Buſineſs was to conſult how they might murder and deſtroy the King, and ſubvert the Government, and there they came to a Reſolution that Pickering and Grove ſhould kill the King; and he was preſent at the Debate, and he carried the Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, where they had ſeparated themſelves in leſſer Numbers; and there he ſaw the Reſolution ſigned; and this is the Matter that he ſwore, upon which this Indictment is founded. And, Gentlemen, we do charge that this was a falſe Oath, and in a point expreſsly to the Matter then in Controverſy before that Court, for we ſhall prove he was beyond Sea at that time, and on that day, and in order to his Conviction we ſhall make out by clear Evidence to you as full and plain as ever was given, that from Chriſtmas before, which was in December, 1677. till Midſummer after, which was the latter end of June, 1678. Otes, that ſwears this Conſult in April, was at St. Omers, and in all that time was not abſent from the College there above 24 Hours, and that but once only, which was in January when he played Truant, and went to Watton, which is about two Miles from St. Omers, but otherwiſe he was all along in the College. And, my Lord, that we may give ſuch a ſatisfactory Evidence as may make it undeniably plain to the Jury, I deſire your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, would pleaſe to obſerve ſome particular Periods of Time, that I ſhall open for the better clearing our Evidence methodically; and the firſt Period of Time is from Mr. Hilſley's leaving St. Omers; now he left St. Omers the 14th of April Old Stile, which is the 24th of April New Stile, and then when he came away, he left Otes there at St. Omers; Mr. Hilſley, when he came into England, in Kent in his Journey to London, meets one Mr. Burnaby; this was I ſay in Mr. Hilſley's Return into England from St. Omers, which he left ten Days before the time aſſigned by Otes for this Conſult, at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, and the next Period is, Mr. Burnaby was going to St. Omers, and there he arrives in Time the 21ſt of April Old Stile, and there he finds Mr. Otes, who ſwore he was then in London; and by the Evidence you will hear, that Mr. Otes, according to his uſual Cuſtom, and according to that Virtue he is endowed with, very boldly inſinuates himſelf into this Gentleman's Company, as he uſes to do with all new Comers; and you will hear from Mr. Burnaby himſelf, and many others, that from the time of his coming to St. Omers, which was the 21ſt of April, he convers'd with Mr. Otes ſeveral Days, every Day till after the 24th of April Old Stile at St. Omers. Then, my Lord, another Period of Time that I would deſire you to obſerve, is, from Mr. Pool's coming from St. Omers, which was in Time the 25th of April Old Stile, the very Day after the Day that this Conſult was ſworn to be on, and when he came from St. Omers, you will hear from many Witneſſes that he left Otes there, and there he ſtayed. For, my Lord, we ſhall, beſides theſe particular times of theſe Gentlemen's coming over who left him there, prove the very Day when he left St. Omers, and that was the end of Midſummer-day following, which was the 23d of June; then was the time when Otes came firſt from St. Omers to England, and we ſhall prove he took his leave of them then: My Lord, We have many other Circumſtances that will unanſwerably ſtrengthen this Evidence, and ſhew that our Witneſſes teſtify nothing but the Truth; one particularly is this; this Gentleman being a Novice of the Houſe, was Reader in the Sodality, as they call it, we ſhall prove that, for every Sunday and Holiday throughout all April and May, he did officiate in that place, and did read to the Society according as the Cuſtom there is; and we ſhall prove another particular thing, that upon this 24th of April he was in the College, by a particular Circumſtance, and that by ſeveral Witneſſes; ſo that, Gentlemen, n[illegible] any long Opening of the the Matter, if we prove this that I have opened, as we ſhall with a Cloud of Witneſſes, it will make an end of the Queſtion. We ſhall firſt call our Witneſſes to prove that he ſwore at that Tryal, that ſuch a Conſult was, and he was at it, and then if we prove that he was at another Place beyond Sea, at ſuch diſtance that it is impoſſible for him to be here; I do not doubt but the Court and the Jury will conclude, he hath wilfully and corruptly forſwore himſelf; the ſaid effects of which we are all Witneſſes of; it was to take away the Lives of his fellow Subjects wrongfully; and it will appear to the World, he has been one of the greateſt Impoſtors that ever did appear upon the Stage, either in this Kingdom, or in any other Nation.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Sol. Gen. We will now go on with our Evidence, and prove all the Parts of the Indictment, and firſt produce the Record of the Tryal of Ireland, and then by Witneſſes, Viva voce that were preſent at that Tryal, we ſhall prove what he ſwore, and then prove that Oath of his to be falſe; ſwear Mr. Swift. [Which was done.

Where is the Record of Ireland's Tryal?

Mr. Swift. Here it is, my Lord.

Mr. Recorder. Is that a true Copy, Sir?

Mr. Swift. Yes, I examined this from the Record, it is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Read it.

Mr. At. Gen. If Dr. Otes does deſire the whole may be read, let it be ſo; otherwiſe a Word of it may ſerve, it being only an Inducement.

Otes. Yes, I deſire it may be all read.

L. C. J. It muſt be read, if he will have it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well I ſubmit it, I did only offer it to ſave the time of the Court.

Otes. I would ſave the time of the Court too all that I can; but I think it may be material for me to have the whole read.

L. C. J. In God's name let it be read, we will not hinder you in any thing that may be for your Defence.

Cl. of Cr. Memorandum quod———

Mr. At. Gen. Now this long Record in Latin is read, I would fain know whether it be to any great purpoſe, but only to ſpend Time?

L. C. J. Nay, I think it has not been very edifying to a great many; do you think, Mr. Otes, that the Jury, who are Judges of this Fact, do underſtand it?

Otes. I cannot tell, may be they may, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Do you underſtand it your ſelf, Mr. Otes?

Otes. That's not any Queſtion here; but to oblige the Court and the Jury, I deſire it may be read in Engliſh too.

L. C. J. No, the Court underſtands it well enough, and they can tell the Jury what it is, it is only the Copy of a Record, to prove that Ireland was tryed for High Treaſon at the Old-Bailey, the 17*th* of Dec. 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, we will call our Witneſſes, to ſwear what Otes did at that Tryal ſwear: Pray ſwear Mr. Foſter. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Mr. Foſter, will you acquaint the Court and the Jury, whether Dr. Otes was produced as a Witneſs at Ireland's Tryal, and what he did there depoſe about a Conſult in April 78.

Mr. Foſter. My Lord, I was ſo unhappy as to be one of that Jury, by whom Mr. Ireland, Mr. Pickering, and Mr. Groves was try'd.

Jury-men. My Lord, we deſire that Mr. Foſter would lift up his Voice, for we cannot hear him.

Mr. Foſter. Truly my Lord, I have been very ſick of late, and am not now very well, and therefore cannot ſpeak louder than I do.

L. C. J. Go nearer the Jury, and ſpeak as loud as you can.

Mr. Foſter. My Lord, I ſay, I did ſee Mr. Otes produced as an Evidence at the Seſſions in the Old Bailey, where I was ſo unhappy as to be a Jury-man, when Mr. Pickering, Mr. Ireland, Mr. Grove, and Mr. Whitebread were try'd.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Foſter. It was in December 78.

Mr. At. Gen. And what did Otes then ſwear?

Mr. Foſter. I did ſee Mr. Otes ſworn as an Evidence there, in behalf of the King, againſt the Priſoners; and he did then ſwear, that there was a Meeting of ſeveral Jeſuits at the Whitehorſe Tavern in the Strand, upon the 24*th* of April 78. and that Mr. Whitebread, Mr. Ireland and Mr. Fenwick were preſent at the Meeting, and there they did conſult the Death of the King, and the altering of the Religion; and ſome went away and others came; at laſt they reduced themſelves into ſeveral ſmaller Companies or Clubs, and they came to a reſolution, that Pickering and Grove ſhould go on to aſſaſſinate the King, for which the one was to have 1500 Pound, and the other 30000 Maſſes, and that this Reſolution was drawn up by one Mico (if I am not miſtaken in his Name) I have it in my Notes I then took of the Evidence; and he ſwore further, that he himſelf went with this Reſolution to ſeveral of their Chambers, he went to Whitebread's Chamber, and ſaw Whitebread ſign it, he went to Fenwick's Chamber, and ſaw Fenwick ſign it, and went to Ireland's Chamber, and ſaw Ireland ſign it, and this was upon the 24*th* of April 78. My Lord, I am poſitive in this, for I had the good hap to take the Notes at the Tryal, for my own help, being a Jury-man, and I never looked upon thoſe Notes afterwards, till the printed Tryal came out, and then I compared my Notes with the Print, and found them to agree, and I have kept them ever ſince by me, and this is all under my own Hand as I have teſtified.

Otes. My Lord, may I ask this Gentleman a Queſtion?

L. C. J. Ay, if the King's Counſel have done with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord, we have done with him.

Mr. Foſter. Pray my Lord, give me leave to ſit down, for I am not able to ſtand.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire you to ask that Gentleman, whether in the Oath that I took, I called it a Conſult, or I called it a Traiterous Conſult.

Mr. Foſter. Truly I think you called it both, if I am not miſtaken, but if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will look upon my Notes.

L. C. J. You may look upon your Notes to refreſh your Memory, if you will.

Mr. Juſt.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Truly I think if it were a Conſult to murder the King, it muſt be a traiterous one without doubt.

Otes. Sir, that is not to the Purpoſe, my Queſtion is, what I ſwore it was.

L. C. J. He tells you, he believes you did ſwear both ways.

Mr. Foſter. At that Conſult he ſaid ſuch a Reſolution was taken, and I think he called it a Traiterous Conſult.

Otes. If you pleaſe, I'll tell your Lordſhip the Reaſon, why I asked that Queſtion.

L. C. J. No, you may ſave your ſelf the trouble of that, you beſt know the reaſon of your own Queſtions; he has given you a ſatisfactory Anſwer.

Otes. Then if your Lordſhip pleaſe, ask him this Queſtion, whether I ſwore that all theſe three Jeſuits were preſent at one time, or how many of them?

L. C. J. You hear the Queſtion, what ſay you to it?

Mr. Foſter. Sir, you ſwore that Ireland, Fenwick and Whitebread were at that Conſult, but whether they were all three of them there at one time, I cannot tell, or which of them were together; but this you did ſwear, that they were there, and came to ſuch a Reſolution, and you carried it to all their Chambers, and did ſee them ſign it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He gives you a plain Account, what you did ſwear, I think, Mr. Otes.

Otes. Very well, my Lord, I would ask him a third Queſtion, if you pleaſe.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name ask him as many Queſtions as you will.

Otes. Whether did I ſwear that it was reſolved to kill the King at the White Horſe Tavern, or whether that Reſolution was made after they ſeparated themſelves into leſſer Clubs?

L. C. J. Mr. Foſter, this is his Queſtion, whether you did apprehend by what he ſwore, that he affirmed, the Reſolution to kill the King was made at the White Horſe Tavern, or afterwards when they were divided?

Mr. Foſter. They came to a Reſolution, you ſaid, at the White Horſe Tavern, and the Reſolution was there drawn up by one Mico, I think, and it was carried by you, for every one to ſign it from Chamber to Chamber; for I remember you were asked the Queſtion, whether you ſaw them ſign it, and you anſwered that you did carry it, and ſaw them ſign it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He ſpeaks very plain, Mr. Otes.

L. C. J. He anſwers your Queſtion very fully.

Otes. Ay, my Lord, ſo he does, I am glad of it.

L. C. J. Have you any more Queſtions to ask him?

Otes. I would ask him another Queſtion; whether I did ſwear, that I did carry this Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber to be ſigned, or that I carried it from Chamber to Chamber and ſaw them ſign it?

Mr. Foſter. You did ſwear, that you carried the Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, and ſaw them ſign it.

Otes. But did you remember it ſo particularly, as to ſay which you ſwore, whether I did carry it to be ſigned, or carried it, and ſaw them ſign it?

Mr. Foſter. You ſaid, you carried it to be ſigned, and you ſaw it ſigned.

L. C. J. He tells you for a Satisfaction in that Point, that he does remember you did ſwear it both ways.

Otes. He does ſay ſo indeed, but whether it was ſo or no, is a doubt.

L. C. J. That will be a Queſtion by and by it may be, if he be in the wrong, I ſuppoſe you can rectify him.

Otes. We are now my Lord upon my Oath, and therefore it concerns me to enquire whether I ſwore as is laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. You ſay right, it does ſo.

Otes. And I the rather ask theſe Queſtions, my Lord, becauſe it is ſix Years ago ſince that Tryal.

L. C. J. I hope you have not forgot what you ſwore, have you?

Otes. My Lord, I think it is fair for me to ask the Witneſſes what they remember after ſo long a time.

L. C. J. 'Tis very fair, no body ſays any thing to the contrary.

Otes. Then my Lord, I hope I may ask this Gentleman how he comes to remember all this after ſo long a time?

L. C. J. He has told you already, but tell it him again Mr. Foſter.

Mr. Foſter. Truly it is ſo long ago, that had I not taken all theſe Notes at the Tryal, I had not been able to have given ſo good an Account.

L. C. J. 'Tis a very good reaſon.

Otes. 'Tis ſo my Lord, I have ſubpœna'd others of the Jury, and they will, I ſuppoſe, give you as good an Account.

L. C. J. Have you done with him then?

Otes. I have one Queſtion more to ask Mr. Foſter, and that is, whether I ſwore they met all in one Room, at the White Horſe Tavern, or in more than one?

Mr. Foſter. You ſwore they were in ſeveral Rooms.

Otes. Then I would ask him this Queſtion, my Lord, whether he were then ſatisfied that Ireland was guilty of the High Treaſon he was then indicted?

L. C. J. The meaning of the Queſtion is, I ſuppoſe, whether you did believe Mr. Otes at that time.

Mr. Foſter. Yes, my Lord I had no reaſon to the contrary.

L. C. J. But I would ask you a Queſtion then Mr. Foſter. Do you believe him now? Do you think, Mr. Otes, he would have found him guilty, if he had not believed the Evidence againſt him?

Otes. We know how Juries have gone alate.

L. C. J. Ay, very ſtrangely indeed, Mr. Otes, and I hope ſo as we ſhall never ſee them go again.

Mr. Foſter. My Lord, I have lived ſo long in the City of London without any Blemiſh, that I hope it will not be thought I would give corruptly a Verdict againſt my Conſcience.

Otes. My Lord, I ſpeak of later Times than Ireland's Tryal.

L. C. J. He is an honeſt Man, I know him.

Otes. Good my Lord, be pleaſed to hear me.

L. C. J. Nay, you ſhall hear me, as well as I ſhall hear you; I'll aſſure you that, Mr. Otes in plain Engliſh, ask as many Queſtions of the Witneſſes as you will, that are proper to be asked; but I'll have no Deſcants, nor Reflections: I know him, and he is very well known in the City of London, he is a Man of very conſiderable Quality, and very good Repute.

Otes. I beſeech your Lordſhip to forgive me, if I miſtake in my Queſtions, I do aſſure you I deſign no Reflections on Mr. Foſter.

L. C. J. Ask what Queſtions you will, but do not reflect.

Otes. I deſire to ask Mr. Foſter one Queſtion more, and that is, that he would be pleaſed to tell the reaſon why at the beginning of his Evidence he ſaid, it was his unhappineſs to be a Juryman at that time?

Mr. Foſter. Really Sir, I think it not a happineſs for any Man to be of a Jury, where the Life of a Man is in Queſtion. I aſſure you for my ſelf, I never accounted it ſo, and if I could have avoided it, I ſhould have been very glad to have been excuſed.

Otes. I have done with Mr. Foſter.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, thus we prove what Mr. Otes ſwore at the Tryal, which Mr. Otes himſelf will not deny, for the Fact, Mr. Otes has printed in his Narrative, as we have now proved it.

Otes. I intend to produce ſome others of the Jury-men by and by.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we ſhall call our Witneſſes to prove, that what he then ſwore was falſe.

Mr. At. Gen. We call no more to the Point, what he did ſwear; but go on to diſprove what he did then ſwear.

Otes. My Lord, I would put this Queſtion to the Court, whether this be a Proof ſufficient for this Point?

L. C. J. I leave that to the Jury, it is a Point of Fact that they are to try.

Otes. I beſeech your Lordſhip, that the Court would be pleaſed to give me an Anſwer.

L. C. J. If you ask impertinent Queſtions, the Court is not obliged to anſwer them. Go on Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Martin Hilſley, Eſq; and Henry Thornton, Eſq; Swear Mr. Hilſley. [Which was done.

Come Mr. Hilſley, pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury what time you came from St. Omers, in the Year 78.

Mr. Hilſley. My Lord, I came from St. Omers, the 24*th* of April New Stile, where I left the Priſoner, Mr. Otes.

L. C. J. From whence did you come, ſay you?

Mr. Hilſley. From St. Omers the 24*th* of April, New Stile.

L. C. J. What Year?

Hilſley. In the Year 78. that is the fourteenth of April here, and the three and twentieth of April New Stile; I ſaw the Priſoner at St. Omers, and went to School with him, and on the four and twentieth I came from St. Omers, and went to Calais, and from thence into England; but he was never in my Company all the while I was coming for England, though he ſwore he came over with me.

L. C. J. The three and twentieth of April you ſay you ſaw him?

Mr. Hilſley. Yes, I was with him, that was the Day before I came from St. Omers.

L. C. J. You left him there the Day before you came away, you ſay?

Mr. Hilſley. I did not ſee him that Morning that I came away, but here are others that did.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he a Scholar there?

Mr. Hilſley. Yes, my Lord, he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know him very well?

Mr. Hilſley. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he come over into England with you?

Mr. Hilſley. My Lord, I came from St. Omers to Calais, and never ſaw him, from Calais to Dover; I never ſaw him from Dover to London, I never ſaw him all the way, and I am confident, he was not in the ſame Ship I came over in, for I ſhould have ſeen him if he had.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he for ſome time before that conſtantly at St. Omers?

Mr Hilſley. We went perpetually to School together.

L. C. J. What time did you take ſhipping after you went from St. Omers?

Mr. Hilſley. The very next Day; the Day I went from St. Omers was on the Sunday morning: On Monday I took ſhipping from Calais to Dover, and I arrived at England at Ten of the Clock the ſame Night.

Otes. When does he ſay he arrived in England?

L. C. J. He ſays, he went from St. Omers on the Sunday, he came that Night to Calais, and the next Day went on Board from Calais, and came that Night to Dover, that was Monday night.

Mr. Hilſley. Yes, I came that Night to Dover, and I lay there that Monday night, the next Day was the 26*th* of April New Stile.

Mr. At. Gen. Where came you then, from thence?

Mr. Hilſley. I came as far as Bockton-ſtreet, and there I lay 4 or 5 Days, and then I came to Cittenbourn, and by long Sea from thence to London.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you meet Mr. Burnaby?

Mr. Hilſley. I met him hard by there, at a Relations of mine.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember what Day you met him?

Mr. Hilſley. I think it was a Day or two before I came away from thence to London.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Had you any Diſcourſe with Mr. Otes, about your coming into England?

Mr. Hilſley. Nothing at all, Sir Francis, that I remember.

L. C. J. What time did you come to London?

Mr. Hilſley. I came within a few Days to London, I ſtayed 4 or 5 Days there by the way; and I ſaw Mr. Burnaby within 4 Days, I think, after I came into England. It was about Monday ſeven-night after I came from St. Omers, that I came to London.

Mr. At. Gen. That was May New Stile.

Mr. Hilſley. That is their Stile. It was ſo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In our Stile it was the 21. of April.

Mr. Hanſeys. Pray did you give an account to any body, after you came to London, that that you left Otes at St. Omers when you came away.

Mr. Hilsley. What say you, Mr. *Hansey*s, I did not well understand your Question.

L. C. J. Then mind me, Sir, It was asked of you whether you had any Discourse with any body, after you came hither, that you had left Mr. Otes behind you at St. Omers?

Mr. Hilsley. I did tell some Persons I left an English Parson there, at the same time I came away.

L. C. J. Did you not name him, who it was?

Mr. Hilsley. Yes, I named him by the Name he went by there, and that was Sampson Lucy.

Mr. At. Gen. To whom did you tell it?

Mr. Hilsley. To one Mr. Osbourn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he go by that Name of Sampson Lucy in the College?

Mr. Hilsley. Yes, he did sometimes, he had three or four Names, he was called sometimes Titus Ambrosius.

Otes. Now, my Lord, I desire I may ask that Gentleman a Question or two.

L. C. J. Ay, if they have done with him.

Mr. At. Gen. We have, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then ask him what you will.

Otes. I desire, my Lord, that you would be pleased to ask that Gentleman what Religion he is of; for it is a fair Question, and an equitable one, and that which very nearly concerns me; and I desire to know where he lives.

L. C. J. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Hilsley. I am a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J. Where do you live?

Mr. Hilsley. I live in London, I am of the Inner Temple.

L. C. J. He says that he is a Roman Catholick, and Lives in London.

Otes. Pray be pleased, my Lord, to ask him when he went to St. Omers first, and how long he stayed there?

Mr. Hilsley. My Lord, I was there about six Years, I presume it was about the Year 1672. when I went there first.

Otes. Pray ask him what he did there, what was his Business?

Mr. At. Gen. That is not a pertinent Question at all, with submission, my Lord.

Otes. I beseech you, Mr. Attorney, give me leave to ask my own Questions.

L. C. J. Ay, but you must ask fair and pertinent Questions.

Otes. My Lord, I would know what was his Employment there at St. Omers?

Mr. Hilsley. I know not my self of any particular Employment I had, any more than any of the rest that were there.

L. C. J. But, Mr. Otes, you must not ask any such Questions; what know I, but by asking him the Question, you may make him obnoxious to some Penalty, you must not ask him any Questions to ensnare him.

Otes. My Lord, It tends very much to my Defence to have that Question truly answered.

L. C. J. But if it tends to your Defence never so much, you must not subject him to a Penalty by your Questions.

Otes. The nature of my Defence requires an Answer to that Question.

L. C. J. But shall you make a Man liable to Punishment, by ensnaring Questions? If a Man should ask you what Religion you are of,——

Otes. My Lord, I will tell you by and by my Reason, and I hope a good one, why I ask it.

L. C. J. I do not believe you can have any Reason, but to be sure we must not suffer any such entangling Questions to be asked.

Otes. Pray ask him, my Lord, when I came to St. Omers?

L. C. J. When did Otes come to St. Omers?

Mr. Hilsley. As well as I remember, he came to St. Omers either the latter end of November, or the beginning of December, in the Year 1677. I think it was that Year.

Otes. I desire you would ask him, whether they were not Priests and Jesuits that govern'd that House?

L. C. J. What a Question is that, I tell you 'tis not fit to be asked.

Otes. I demand an Answer to it, upon the Oath he has taken.

L. C. J. And I tell you, upon the Oath you have taken, you are not bound to answer any such Question.

Otes. Good my Lord, let my Questions be answered.

L. C. J. No, Sir, they shall not: How now, do not think to put Irregularities upon us, if you will behave your self as you ought to do, and keep to that which is proper, well and good?

Otes. If your Lordship pleases, I think this very proper for me.

L. C. J. What, to ask such improper Questions as these are?

Otes. Truly, my Lord, I think they are fit Questions to be asked.

L. C. J. But we are all of another Opinion.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, whether they are not set on by their Superiours to do this?

L. C. J. That is not a fair Question neither.

Otes. Give me leave to make my Defence, my Lord, I beseech you.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name; but I pray you then make it in a regular and becoming way; for I know of no Privilege you have more than other People, to use Witnesses as you do.

Otes. My Lord, I look upon my self as hardly used in the Case.

L. C. J. I care not what you look upon your self to be, if you will ask Questions, ask none but fair Questions, and while you keep within Bounds you shall be heard as well as any of the King's Subjects; but if you will break out into Questions that are impertinent, extravagant, or ensnaring, we must correct you, and keep you within proper Limits.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I ask whether he was not a Witness at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, and at Langborn's Tryal?

L. C. J. Ay, that is a proper Question, what say you to't, Sir?

Mr. Hilsley. I was so, Sir.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Credit he received at those Tryals?

L. C. J. What a Question is that to ask any Man!

Otes. My Lord, I think it is a fair Question.

L. C. J. No, indeed, it is not a fair one at all.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know what induces him to come here as a Witness now, since it appears that now he comes to give an Evidence that he gave six Years ago, and was not believed?

Mr. Hilsley. My Lord, I am subpœna'd.

L. C. J. He has given you an Answer to the Question, tho' I think it was an idle Question, and not at all to the purpose.

Otes. It may be he may have some particular reason to induce him to it now.

L. C. J. Well, he tells you he came because he was subpœna'd, and that is sufficient: He is not compellable to be a Witness, unless he be subpœna'd; but if a Man will come without a Subpœna, and give Evidence in a Cause; that is no Objection to his Testimony.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know of him, whether he is to have any Reward for swearing in this Cause?

L. C. J. What say you, Sir, are you to have any Reward for your Evidence?

Mr. Hilsley. None at all as I know of, my Lord, I assure you.

Mr. Just. Withins. He is not paid for his Evidence, Mr. Otes.

Otes. If he be or be not, I cannot tell, nor do I know who ever was paid for it.

L. C. J. Have you any more Questions to ask him?

Otes. Pray my Lord, I desire to know what was the occasion of his coming away from St. Omers?

Mr. Hilsley. I had finished my Studies.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him, if he never heard of any Consult of the Jesuits here in England, in the Month of April 78. and from whom he did hear of it?

Mr. Hilsley. I did hear of it among the rest of the Students of the College.

L. C. J. What did you hear of?

Mr. Hilsley. I did hear of a Consult of the Fathers in April 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, there was, but not such an one as Mr. Otes speaks of, nor was he at it.

Mr. Just. Holloway. For what was that Consult, I pray you?

Mr. Hilsley. It was nothing but a Triennial Congregation about the Affairs of the Society.

L. C. J. What were they to do there?

Mr. Hilsley. My Lord, I was informed among them there, that it was only what they used to have once in three Years for ordinary Affairs.

Otes. My Lord, He pretends to tell when I came thither, I desire to know of him from what time it was he saw me there, and how often?

Mr. Hilsley. Generally every day, as near as I can remember, I think, Mr. Otes; you and I, Mr. Otes, went to School in the same place.

Otes. Pray, how many Days was I absent from thence in that time you were there?

Mr. Hilsley. You were there generally as often as I, I do not know whether ever you miss'd a Day or no.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, will you ask this Gentleman one Question more, whether he can particularly tell that he did see me every Day at St. Omers? For 'tis not enough for him to swear that he saw me there; but he ought to give an account how he comes to know it by some particular Circumstances.

L. C. J. He has given you several Circumstances of his Knowledge, for he says he was there all the while from your coming, till the 23d of April New Stile, that he came for England; he says he was a Scholar in the same Form and Class with you, and because he does not remember himself to have been absent, he does not remember you to be absent neither.

Mr. At. Gen. And he swears particularly to the very time he came over, which was April the 14th Old Stile.

Otes. Well, I have no more Questions to ask this Gentleman.

L. C. J. Then call another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Cryer, Call Mr. John Dorrel.

[Who was sworn.

L. C. J. Look ye, Mr. Attorney, you did open things at the first for Method's sake by Periods of Time; the first was Hilsley's coming over, the next was the meeting with Burnaby, now pray observe that Method, and call that Burnaby next.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We shall call him by and by; but we have not done with this Business about Hilsley, we have some Witnesses that will give an Evidence to strengthen and back his Testimony. Come, Mr. Dorrel, What have you to say to this Matter?

Mr. Dorrel. My Lord, In April 1678. I came from Brussels to England, where presently after I came, I was with one Mr. Osbourn and my Mother, and there was a Discourse between my Mother and him about Religion.

L. C. J. Where was that?

Mr. Dorrel. It was here in England.

Mr. At. Gen. Now tell the time when that was.

Mr. Dorrel. As near as I can guess, it was the 15th or 16th of April Old Stile, in the Year 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, Sir, go on with your Story.

Mr. Dorrel. My Mother was laughing at his Religion, and telling him some ridiculous Stories, and he replied, there are a great many that are so ignorant, that are bred up in the Religion of the Church of England, that they are forced to be sent to the Colleges abroad to be taught, even some of the Clergy of that Church, and particulariz'd in one Sampson Lucy aliàs Otes, that was a Scholar at that time at St. Omers, as he was assured by a Gentleman that was newly come from thence: My Mother is now sick, or else she would have been here, and would have testified the same I now do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This Gentleman is a Protestant, Mr. Otes.

Otes. What is your Name, Sir, I pray?

Mr. Dorrel. My Name is John Dorrel, Sir.

Otes. Were you never at St. Omers a Student there?

Mr. Dorrel. I was there, but before your time, Doctor; I had not the Happiness to be there, while you were there.

Otes. I pray, Sir, what Religion are you of?

Mr. Dorrel. I am a Papist now.

Otes.

Otes. I desire, my Lord, the Court would be pleased to take notice of it, he owns he was reconciled to the Church of Rome.

Mr. Dorrel. Mr. Otes, To satisfy you, I went over when I was a Child of 12 or 13 Years old, and so was bred in that Perswasion.

L. C. J. Well, well, We all observe what he says.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray swear Mr. Osbourn.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We call'd this Person only to this Matter. Pray, Sir, will you give the Court and the Jury an account what Discourse you had with Mr. Hilsley about Otes, and pray, Sir, tell the time when it was.

Mr. Osbourn. My Lord, I went out of Town the 30th of April, the Year before the pretended Plot was discovered by Mr. Otes, and I met with Mr. Hilsley two or three Days before, and enquiring of him about the Affairs of St. Omers, he told me of a Minister of the Church of England that was come thither to be a Student there, who went under the Name of Sampson Lucy, but his right Name was Otes; I asked him what he pretended to; did he intend to be of that Order? He told me, he did believe that he would not be admitted for his irregular and childish Behaviour, and that he had left him in the College; and this I afterwards in Discourse told to Madam Dorrel, who is a Protestant, and to my Mother, who is since dead?

Mr. At. Gen. Will Mr. Otes ask this Gentleman any Questions?

Otes. I only ask him what Religion he is of?

L. C. J. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Osbourn. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, we come to call Mr. Burnaby. Pray swear him.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Burnaby, Pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, of the time when you came from St. Omers to England; and when you met with Mr. Hilsley?

Mr. Burnaby. I met with Hilsley on the 18th of April Old Stile, in the Year 78. then I pursued my Journey the following Day to St. Omers.

L. C. J. Where did you meet him?

Mr. Burnaby. Between Cittenbourn and Canterbury, and afterwards I pursued my Journey from Canterbury to Dover, from thence to Callis, and from thence to St. Omers. I arrived at St. Omers the 21st of April Old Stile, which was the 1st of May New Stile, upon the 2d of May Mr. Otes was in my Company, I was walking in the Garden, and he came into my Company.

L. C. J. When was it?

Mr. Burnaby. The 2d of May New Stile, and the 3d of May again I went into the Garden, and there he was with me again, and the 5th of May I saw him again.

L. C. J. Where?

Mr. Burnaby. In the Rhetorick Form.

L. C. J. But where, in what place?

Mr. Burnaby. At St. Omers.

L. C. J. You speak of your own Knowledge, you are sure you saw him there at those times?

Mr. Burnaby. Yes, in the Rhetorick School and in the Garden.

Mr. At. Gen. What more do you know of him?

Mr. Burnaby. I saw him again the 8th of May New Stile, that is the 28th of April Old Stile; I mean by New Stile, that Stile which was used in the Place where I was then.

Mr. At. Gen. How long was he there before he went away?

Mr. Burnaby. I know he was there from the 2d of May, the Day after I came thither, to the 20th of June, and then I went away, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. Did you see him daily all that time?

Mr. Burnaby. Yes, from Day to Day he was not out of the House.

L. C. J. Were you a Scholar there with him?

Mr. Burnaby. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. What Year was that?

Mr. Burnaby. In the Year 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Otes may ask him what Questions he will.

Otes. My Lord, He says he went away; I desire to know whither he did go?

Mr. Burnaby. I went away the 20th of June from St. Omers, it is no matter whither I went.

Otes. I desire he may give an account what Religion he is of.

Mr. Burnaby. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know whether he be not of that Order?

L. C. J. That I will not ask him, I'll assure you.

Otes. Truly, my Lord, I think it is a very hard matter for me to have Jesuits admitted as Witnesses in such a Cause against me.

L. C. J. I have told you already, you are not to ask any Questions of any Witnesses that may subject them to any Penalty, or make them accuse themselves of any Crime.

Otes. My Lord, I humbly desire he would give an account, whether he were not admitted into the Society.

L. C. J. I tell you, he is not to be ask'd that Question.

Otes. He has own'd it before.

L. C. J. Do you take your Advantage of it, if you can prove it.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I desire to ask him, whether or no he did appear as a Witness at the Tryal of the five Jesuits?

Mr. Burnaby. No, my Lord, I did not.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him whether he was not summon'd to appear then?

Mr. Burnaby. No, I was not.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Reward he is to have for coming, and giving this Evidence?

L. C. J. Are you to have any Reward for being a Witness in this Cause?

Mr. Burnaby. None, my Lord, that I know of.

L. C. J. That was a proper Question to be asked, and you have a fair Answer to it.

Otes. Pray, Mr. Burnaby, by what Name did you go at St. Omers?

Mr. Burnaby. By the Name of Blunt.

Mr. At. Gen. And what Name did he go by there?

Mr. Burnaby. Who, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Otes.

Mr. Bur-

Mr. Burnaby. By the Name of Sampſon Lucy.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire you to ask him whether he did know of any Conſult that was to be held here in London, in April 78. and by whom he knew it?

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir, did you know of any Conſult?

Mr. Burnaby. No, I neither heard of it, nor knew any thing of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Now my Lord, we ſhall go on to another Period of Time, and that is concerning Pool. Swear Mr. Pool. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, whether you knew Mr. Burnaby at St. Omers.

Mr. Pool. Yes, I did, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the time when he came to St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. No, I do not remember it.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you come over from St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. The 25*th* of April.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile?

Mr. Pool. Old Stile.

Mr. At. Gen. In what Year?

Mr. Pool. In the Year 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know Mr. Otes at St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I did know that Gentleman there.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he at St. Omers that time you were there?

Mr. Pool. Yes, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you leave him there when you came away?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I did leave him there when I came away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell the Court ſome particular Thing why you remember it, and upon what account you came away.

Mr. Pool. Upon the Occaſion of my Brother's Death I came over, and I can tell ſeveral Particulars of my Journey, I came away upon the Thurſday, and I came to London upon the Sunday following.

Mr. At. Gen. You are ſure you left Mr. Otes there then?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I am ſure I did leave Mr. Otes there when I came away, and I came away thence the Fifth of May New Stile, the Twenty Fifth of April Old Stile.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray how long did you know Mr. Otes there?

Mr. Pool. I knew him there from Chriſtmas before that.

L. C. J. You were of the Colledge, were you not?

Mr. Pool. Yes, I was a Student there.

L. C. J. You are ſure he was there all the while?

Mr. Pool. I do not remember he was a Day abſent, and if he had gone away, particular notice would have been taken of it.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him there two or three Days before you came away.

Mr. Pool. I ſaw him that Morning I came away?

L. C. J. And what time before?

Mr. Pool. I ſaw him two or three Days before that.

L. C. J. Can you name any particular Days?

Mr. Pool. I ſaw him the firſt of May, and the ſecond of May, and the fifth of May, which was the 25*th* of April Old Stile; and then I came away.

L. C. J. Are you ſure you left him there, then?

Mr. Pool. I am ſure I left him there, I can ſwear it without any Difficulty at all.

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Mr. Otes?

Otes. I deſire to know what Religion he is of?

L. C. J. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Pool. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. I deſire your Lordſhip would ask him, whether he was a Witneſs at the Tryal of the 5 Jeſuits, or at Langhorn's Tryal?

Mr. Pool. No, I was never an Evidence before in my Life.

Otes. Pray my Lord ask him, whether he was not admitted into the Sodality of the Virgin Mary?

L. C. J. No, indeed, I ſhall ask him no ſuch Queſtion.

Otes. Pray my Lord, let him anſwer it.

L. C. J. Prove what you can when it comes to your Turn, but ask him no entangling Queſtions.

Otes. He has made himſelf liable to a Penalty by being in that Seminary.

L. C. J. I hope a Man may be at St. Omers, and yet not be puniſhed for it, Mr. Otes.

Otes. It is my Defence to diſable the Witneſſes againſt me.

L. C J. But they muſt not be asked what may make them accuſe themſelves.

Otes. My Lord, it is hard that the Witneſſes ſhall not be made to anſwer my Queſtions.

L. C. J. Pray Sir be quiet, we have told you often enough already, you muſt not think to govern us, it muſt not be allowed.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire he may be asked then, what Reward he has to come, and ſwear in this Cauſe?

Mr. Pool. My Lord, I do not know that I am ſo much as to have my Charges born.

L. C. J. Are you to have any Reward?

Mr. Pool. No, my Lord, that I know of.

Otes. Pray my Lord, I deſire he may be ask'd, what was the Occaſion of Mr. Hilſley's coming away from St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. Indeed I did not examine into the Occaſion at all, for I was never a Man that meddled or made on any Side, but lived quietly in the Colledge, and minded my Studies.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip to ask him whether he did know of any Conſult of the Jeſuits in April 78. and from whom he knew it?

Mr. Pool. I know not of any particular Conſult, I heard ſomething in general of a Triennial Congregation, but I cannot ſpeak any thing of my own Knowledge.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know of him, if he can tell when I came to St. Omers?

L. C. J. Do you know when Otes came to St. Omers?

Mr. Pool. About Chriſtmas, as near as I can remember, it was the latter end of November.

Otes. How much before or after Chriſtmas was it?

Mr. Pool. I cannot tell exactly.

Otes. What Year was it in?

Mr.

Mr. Pool. In the Year 77.

Otes. I desire to know of him, my Lord, whether he saw me every Day at St. Omers at Dinner?

Mr. Pool. I cannot say, that ever I knew he was absent any one Day, never three Days I think I may affirm, but only when he was in the Infirmary.

Mr. At. Gen. That's the Place where they go when they are sick?

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him by what Name he went, when he was there in the College.

Mr. Pool. By the Name of Killingbeck.

Mr. Sol. Gen. By what Name did he go by, I pray you?

Mr. Pool. By the Name of Sampson Lucy.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Henry Thornton.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Thornton, Pray where were you in the Year 78?

Mr. Thornton. At St. Omers, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Otes there, do you know him?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I know him very well.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come thither?

Mr. Thornton. He came there about Christmas 77.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Mr. Thornton. He staid there till St. John Baptist's Eve in June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Midsummer you mean?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, the Eve of St. John Baptist.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile?

Mr. Thornton. New Stile.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see him there all the while?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I did see him every Day, I believe, in the Refectory at Dinner time, and at Night in the Dormitory, where all the Collegians have their Beds: I lay over against him every Night, I saw him particularly upon the Day of Hilsley's Departure, which was the 24th of April New Stile, and I saw him the 1st of May New Stile, upon the coming of Mr. Burnaby to the College; and particularly again I remember him there the 2d of May, when my Schoolfellows exhibited an Action or Play.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Mr. Otes there then?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I saw him present at it, and I know it by this particular Circumstance, there was a Scuffle between him and another about a Place to see the Play.

Mr. Jones. Did you see him the 23d of April Old Stile, that is, the 3d of May New Stile, which was the Day after your Play, that you remember?

Mr. Thornton. I do not remember that I did see him that Day, by any particular Circumstance, tho' I believe I did.

Mr. Jones. Do you remember when Mr. Pool came away from St. Omers?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I do.

Mr. Jones. When was that?

Mr. Thornton. The 5th of May New Stile.

Mr. Jones. Was Otes at St. Omers at that time?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, he was there then, I am sure.

Mr. At. Gen. Was not he Reader there in the College?

Mr. Thornton. He was Reader in the Sodality, and to my knowledge, he did not miss once from the 24th of April New Stile, to the 24th of May New Stile, from being there, and reading in the Sodality.

L. C. J. What did he use to read?

Mr. Thornton. Some spiritual Book or piece of Divinity, or the like, as it was usual to have read every Sunday and Holiday.

L. C. J. And that is one reason why you conclude he was there all that while, because every Sunday and Holiday he was to read, and did read.

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask this Gentleman, what Religion he is of?

Mr. Thornton. A Roman Catholick.

Otes. Where does he live?

L. C. J. Where do you live, Mr. Thornton?

Mr. Thornton. I am a Northumberland Man, that's my Country.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know of him, when he did come from St. Omers?

Mr. Thornton. I came from St. Omers, my Lord, about two Years after that Otes went away from thence.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him, who it was that was Rector or Governour of that House or College?

Mr. Thornton. It was one Mr. Richard Ashby.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to ask him, what School he was in there?

Mr. Thornton. I was in Syntax, my Lord.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I would ask him another Question, and that is this, whether he was not a Witness in behalf of the five Jesuits and Mr. Langhorn?

Mr. Thornton. No, I was not, my Lord.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, if he can tell the occasion of Mr. Hilsley's coming away from St. Omers?

Mr. Thornton. It never concerned me at all, and I never enquired into it.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I would ask him this Question, why he is so precise as to his Remembrance of what was done in April and May, when he does not give any account of any other time, nor did the other Witnesses?

L. C. J. Yes, but they do; they give you a particular account from the time of your coming thither, which was about Christmas, some say the latter end of November, or the beginning of December, they are not positive to any particular time, but thereabouts, and so from that time all along till June.

Otes. I beg your Lordship's Pardon, I did not hear that he said any such thing.

L. C. J. If you will, I'll ask him that Question again for your satisfaction.

Otes. If you please, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then mind what is said; Do you remember that Otes was there in March before, and in February before?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, I particularly remember in March before, he did read a ridiculous Book in the Sodality, and he was remarkable in the House by twenty ridiculous Passages.

Otes. I do acknowledge I did in March read a pleasant Book, called, The Contempt of the Clergy.

L. C. J. By whose Order did he read that Book in the Sodality?

Mr. Thorn-

Mr. Thornton. I do not know, whether it was by his own Election that he was Reader there, or by the Command of the Prefect of the Studies, that has the Care of the Students, and appoints them their Buſineſs.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask him how long he was reſident at St. Omers?

Mr. Thornton. I was there ſeven Years.

L. C. J. You ſaid he was there in June till Midſummer Eve.

Mr. Thornton. Yes, he was ſo.

Otes. I own that I was there in June, but that was after I returned from England.

L. C. J. When do you ſay he left the College firſt?

Mr. Thornton. He never left the College from the time of his coming thither firſt till Midſummer Eve, only one time that he was at Watton, and that was but a Day or two at moſt, which is not a League out of Town.

L. C. J. Do you remember him there about Chriſtmas time?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord, very well.

L. C. J. When was it he went to Watton?

Mr. Thornton. About the latter end of January, as I do remember, and in February above Shrovetide I remember him particularly to be there.

L. C. J. Now, Mr. Otes, you ſee he ſpeaks to other times beſides April and May, and he brings, upon my Word, very notable Circumſtances.

Otes. He ſays he went to School with me there, I think, my Lord?

Mr. Thornton. No, I ſay he was in the ſame College.

L. C. J. But not in the ſame Claſſis, for it ſeems you were in the Rhetorick Form, and he in the Syntax.

Mr. Thornton. My Lord, He went there by reaſon of his Age, and upon no other account; he might have gone elſewhere with us who were of a lower Form, for any great Store of Learning he had.

L. C. J. You hear him, I ſuppoſe, Mr. Otes, he gives no great Commendation of your Scholarſhip.

Otes. That is nothing to this Queſtion; but pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask him, whether he did not hear of a Conſult of the Jeſuits held here in England in April 78?

L. C. J. What ſay you, Sir? Did you hear of any ſuch Conſult?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord, I did hear of a Triennial Congregation, ſuch as uſed to be held by them, but that did not belong to me to enquire into it.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know of whom he did hear it?

L. C. J. How do you know there was ſuch a Conſult, who told you of it?

Mr. Thornton. I heard of it in the Houſe, and I had read that it was the Cuſtom of that Society of People, to have ſuch a meeting once in three Years.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray for what purpoſe did they ſo meet?

Mr. Thornton. As I have been told, It was to ſend a Procurator to Rome, and for their managing their other Affairs, which concern'd their Society.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have the Jeſuits uſually ſuch a Conſult once in three Years, Sir?

Mr. Thornton. I was never preſent at any ſuch Congregation, I was not capable of it.

L. C. J. But was it us'd to be ſaid ſo?

Mr. Thornton. Yes, my Lord, I have heard it ſaid ſo, and read of it.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes, Will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Otes. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well then, go on Mr. Attorney, and call another Witneſs.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. William Conway.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Conway, Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an account where you were in the Year 1677, and in the Year 1678.

Mr. Conway. I was then at St. Omers, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Otes there at any time?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lord, I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, at what time was he there, as you remember?

Mr. Conway. He came in December before Chriſtmas 1677, and did not go away till June 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time in June did he go away?

Mr. Conway. About the twentieth of June, I think.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you there all that Year?

Mr. Conway. Yes, I was there a Scholar in the College.

Mr. Jones. Was he all the time you ſpeak of in the College?

Mr. Conway. He lay out one Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time was that?

Mr. Conway. In January, to the beſt of my remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Could he be out of the College any time and not be miſs'd?

Mr. Conway. No, my Lord, he could not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you miſs him at any time?

Mr. Conway. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there in April 1678?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell any particular Paſſages that can make you remember it?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lord, I can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell my Lord and the Jury how you can remember it.

Mr. Conway. I remember Mr. Hilſley's Departure, which was the 24th of April New Stile, and ſoon after Mr. Burnaby came, but I do not know the time exactly, I was deſirous to know of Mr. Burnaby whether he met Mr. Hilſley upon the way, and he told me he did meet him, and the next Day I ſaw Mr. Otes and Mr. Burnaby walking together very familiarly, and I took particular notice of it at that time, Mr. Burnaby being but newly come, ſo that I took him to have known Mr. Burnaby before, or elſe I concluded him to be a little impudent by his intruding into his Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember him in March before?

Mr. Conway. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Particulars do you remember of his being there then?

Mr. Conway. I remember him to be there on the Thurſday in Mid-Lent, the Scholars in the College had a particular Recreation, which they they call, Sawing of the Witch, and Mr. Otes was among them, and I was one of them that broke a Pan about his Head for Recreation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the 1ſt of May, that there was in your College a Play acted?

Mr. Conway. As for the Play, I remember what Part Eſquire Pool acted in it, but I remember not any Particulars that can make me ſo ſure as to ſwear that Otes was there.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember any ſcuffling for a Place there?

Mr. Conway. I do not remember it of my own Knowledge, I heard of it afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay that you ſaw Mr. Burnaby and him walking together the next Day after he came.

Mr. Conway. Yes, I did ſo, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Otes uſe to read in the Sodality?

Mr. Conway. My Lord, There was another choſen according to the Cuſtom to read, but Mr. Otes took the Book, and did read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he read conſtantly?

Mr. Conway. I did never miſs him any Sunday or Holiday all the time.

L. C. J. From what time to what time did he read?

Mr. Conway. From a little after Eaſter till he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. Is it uſually taken notice of in the College when any Perſon who is a Student goes away from the College?

Mr. Conway. There is nothing more diſcourſed of among Scholars, than that when it happens any one goes out of the College.

L. C. J. And pray when did he go away?

Mr. Conway. In June, about the twentieth, as near as I can remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you obſerve him at Dinner there conſtantly?

Mr. Conway. Yes, he ſat by himſelf.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came that to paſs?

Mr. Conway. He ſat at a little Table in the Hall by himſelf, for he pretended, being a Man in Years, he could not diet as the reſt of the young Students did, and therefore obtained leave to ſit alone at a little Table by himſelf, and he ſat next to the Table of the Fathers, to which all the Students were to make their Reverence before they ſat down.

L. C. J. He was a very remarkable Man by his ſitting by himſelf; Did he ſit there always?

Mr. Conway. He changed his Table once, and I took notice that he ſat on the other ſide of the Refectory.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was that I pray, can you remember?

Mr. Conway. That was a little after Eaſter.

Mr. At. Gen. Will Mr. Otes ask him any Queſtions?

Otes. Pray, my Lord, will you ask this Gentleman what Religion he is of?

Mr. Conway. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. Pray, ask him where he lives?

L. C. J. Where do you live, Sir?

Mr. Conway. Where now at preſent, my Lord?

L. C. J. Where do you uſually live?

Mr. Conway. I am a Flintſhire-man, my Lord?

Otes. Pray, ask him what Name he did go by at St. Omers?

Mr. Conway. By the Name of William Parry.

Otes. Pray ask him by what Name he gave his Evidence in at the five Jeſuits Tryal?

L. C. J. Were you a Witneſs at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits?

Mr. Conway. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. By what Name did you give your Evidence there?

Mr. Conway. By the Name of Parry.

Otes. Then I deſire the Court to take notice he repreſented himſelf by a feigned Name in a Court of Record.

Mr. Conway. I went by both Names, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, make what Advantage you can of it by and by.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, if ever he heard of any Conſult of the Jeſuits held here in England in April 1678?

Mr. Conway. Yes, I did.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, who inform'd him of that Conſult?

Mr. Conway. I heard it among the reſt of the Scholars, and ſeeing ſome of the Fathers go over to it, I was told ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Is it an uſual thing for them to have ſuch Meetings?

Mr. Conway. They have a Congregation ordinarily once in three Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Does it go by the Name of a Conſult, or what Name has it?

Mr. Conway. Some call it a Congregation, and ſome a Conſult.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is the end of ſuch Meeting, as you have heard?

Mr. Conway. They ſay it was to chuſe a Procurator to ſend to Rome, and give an account of the Province.

Otes. My Lord, I would ask him another Queſtion, whether he is to have any Reward for giving this Evidence here?

Mr. Conway. No, not that I know of, but what I expect from Almighty God.

Otes. Pray, ask him how long he lived at St. Omers?

Mr. Conway. Five Years.

Otes. My Lord, I have done with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Mr. Haggerſtone, and ſwear him. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Haggerſtone, Pray will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, were you at St. Omers in the Year 1678 with Mr. Otes?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes, I was, my Lord, I had the Honour to be of the ſame Bench with the Doctor of Salamanca.

L. C. J. You mean you were of the ſame Claſs with him.

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes, my Lord, of the ſame Claſs.

L. C. J. In what Year was it?

Mr. Haggerſtone. In the Year 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. In what Form were you?

Mr. Haggerſtone. In the ſame Bench with Dr. Otes in the Rhetorick Form.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Otes in April 1678?

Mr. Haggerſtone. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. What time?

Mr. Haggerſtone. He ſpoke unto me on the 25th of April.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile do you mean?

Mr. Haggerſtone. New Stile, Sir; to avoid Confuſion, I ſpeak of the Stile of the Place where where I was; he asked me concerning our School-fellow Mr. Hilsley, who was then gone from the College, whether I had heard any thing from him since he went away, and he spoke of an Indisposition he had, for which he prescribed him a Medicine of Poppy, and he thought it would do his Business effectually.

L. C. J. Who said so?

Mr. Haggerstone. The Doctor of Salamanca, he was called Sampson Lucy in the College, and likewise he forbid him to chew Tobacco, which he us'd to do very much; he was called Titus Ambrosius, he had twenty Names.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there all April, Sir?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, he was, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know him in March before?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, he was there all March before.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there in February?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, as near as I can remember, he was absent but one Day, and then he went to Watton in February, or else in January.

L. C. J. Do you remember when he came thither first?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, my Lord, he came in December near Christmas, as I remember.

L. C. J. Was it about that time, upon your Oath?

Mr. Haggerstone. I speak it upon my Oath, it was.

L. C. J. When did he go away?

Mr. Haggerstone. About the latter end of June.

L. C. J. Was he absent any time between December and June?

Mr. Haggerstone. I do not remember that he was absent, save only in January or February, and that was not for above a Night, when he went to Watton.

L. C. J. Might not he be absent, and you not mind it, or know it?

Mr. Haggerstone. Sure if he had been absent, we could not but have known it.

L. C. J. How so, pray you?

Mr. Haggerstone. If any goes away, 'tis so publick, that it cannot be without notice being taken of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember by any particular Token he was there in April or May?

Mr. Haggerstone. He spoke to me on the 29th of April New Stile, and told me, that there was a Craving Englishman had been there to beg an Alms, and there was a Collection made for him among the Scholars, but he said he would give him nothing, for he told me he had been cheated by such an one of some Pieces of Eight in Spain; this I remember was the 28th or 29th of April New Stile, I saw him there the 1st of May, upon the 2d of May there was an Action of the Scholars, and he was present at it; the 5th of May I was at School with him, when Mr. Pool went away for England, and I heard him about that time preach a pleasant Sermon, for he would undertake sometimes to preach, and he said in it, That the late King Charles II. halted betwixt two Opinions, and a Stream of Popery went between his Leggs.

L. C. J. Was this in May?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, just after Mr. Pool went away for England, and he had some pretty Reflections in his Sermon about Toby's Dog wagging his Tail.

L. C. J. Well, Do you ask this Witness any Question, Mr. Otes?

Otes. Pray be pleased to ask him, my Lord, what Religion he is of?

Mr. Haggerstone. I am a Papist, my Lord, I am not asham'd of it.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask where he lives?

Mr. Haggerstone. At London.

Otes. Pray ask him what Country-man he is?

Mr. Haggerstone. I am a Northumberland-man, my Father is Sir Thomas Haggerstone, a Man better known than your Father, Dr. Otes.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, do not be in a Passion, Man.

Otes. Pray ask him, how long I was with him at St. Omers?

Mr. Haggerstone. For half a Year at least.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know, how long he stayed there himself?

Mr. Haggerstone. I studied my whole Course of Humanity there.

L. C. J. How long were you there in all?

Mr. Haggerstone. Seven Years.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he knows of any Consult held, or to be held here in England in April, 1678?

Mr. Haggerstone. Yes, my Lord, I saw two of the Fathers go from St. Omers to the Congregation, and was there at their Return, but all that time I frequented Dr. Otes's Company, and he remained in the College.

Otes. Pray, who were these two Fathers?

Mr. Haggerstone. Mr. Williams and Mr. Marsh; and when they return'd, Otes asked me about it, whether they had been at the Consult, and I told him there was such a thing, but he never knew it till afterwards; but this I am sure of, he was never missing all the while, I sat on the same Bench with him.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Haggerstone. I went by the Name of Harry Howard, my Mother was a Howard, Doctor.

Otes. Pray ask him, whether he came into England when he went away from thence?

Mr. Haggerstone. No, I went and studied my Philosophy at Doway.

Otes. I desire to ask him one Question more.

Mr. Haggerstone. Twenty, if you please, Doctor.

Otes. I desire to know of him the occasion of Mr. Hilsley's coming away?

Mr. Haggerstone. I do know it, but truly I cannot tell whether it be fit for me to speak of it, it was upon some unhandsome account, but I must not blemish any Gentleman, I think.

Otes. My Lord, I will ask him one Question more, whether ever he was admitted into the Society?

L. C. J. I will not ask him that Question, how often have I told you no such Questions are to be ask'd? Must I make him liable to Penalty? No, ask Questions that are fair, and you shall have a fair Answer.

Otes. My Lord, I have done then with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear Mr. Robert Beeston.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at St. Omers in the Year 77 and 78?

Mr. Beeston.

Mr. Beeſton. Yes, my Lord, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Otes there then? Do you know him?

Mr. Beeſton. Yes, I know him very well, I did ſee him there.

Mr. At. Gen. What Months did you ſee him there?

Mr. Beeſton. He came there in December, the beginning as I remember, and he ſtayed there to June the latter end.

Mr. At. Gen. What Year was that in?

Mr. Beeſton. He came in 77, and went away in 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve him to be there in April and May 78?

Mr. Beeſton. The latter end of April, and the beginning of May I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Tell the Court particularly how you remember it.

Mr. Beeſton. My Lord, I ſaw him the 1ſt of May at St. Omers, where he played at Nine-pins, and I laid a Wager upon the ſame ſide that he did, and loſt my Money as well as he.

L. C. J. Do you remember any other time?

Mr. Beeſton. I ſaw him the 2d of May, by the ſame token that I met him in the College that Day, when our School exhibited an Action in the Hall, and I met him after Supper; now in this Action I had both acted and ſung, and they came and congratulated me for my ſinging; Mr. Otes ſaid, If I had paid for learning to ſing, I had been baſely cheated; and then in the Morning I was choſen Reader in the Sodality, the 25th of April, or thereabouts, for a Fortnight, and Mr. Otes by his own Submiſſion was admitted to read, only with this Condition, that if ever he were wanting, I was to read again; but this I ſay, I never ſupplied the Place; therefore I am ſure he did continue there all the while, and if he had been out, I muſt have been called upon to read.

L. C. J. Were you in the College all the time he was there?

Mr. Beeſton. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Did you miſs him at any time?

Mr. Beeſton. No, I never miſs'd him.

L. C. J. Are you ſure he was not away all that time?

Mr. Beeſton. I am ſure, as much as a Man can be certain of one that is of the ſame Family with himſelf; nay, I am as ſure of it, as that I was there my ſelf.

L. C. J. Can you ſpeak any thing particularly of his reading?

Mr. Beeſton. My Lord, I was to have read, if he was abſent, but I was never called upon to read, and therefore I may well conclude he was there all the while.

L. C. J. He gives a material Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Mr. Otes ſuch a remarkable Man that he muſt be miſs'd?

Mr. Beeſton. He was very particular, both for Age, and that he had a particular Table to eat at.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you remember any thing elſe?

Mr. Beeſton. I remember too, that when Mr. Burnaby came firſt, he was often with him the 2d, 3d, and 4th of May, I ſaw him there with Mr. Burnaby, and I took particular notice of the Friendſhip between them, which I thought ſtrange between Perſons that I ſuppoſed never ſaw one another before.

L. C. J. Have you any Queſtions to ask this Man, Mr. Otes?

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to ask this Gentleman what Religion he is of?

Mr. Beeſton. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask him, when he went to St. Omers, and when he came away from thence, and how long he was reſident there?

Mr. Beeſton. I know not exactly what Year it was I came, but I ſtayed the greateſt Part of ſeven Years there.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, what Jeſuits went from St. Omers to the Conſult of April 78?

Mr. Beeſton. There was ſome that paſs'd by, I did not take much notice of them.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, who it was informed him of that Conſult?

Mr. Beeſton. I do not know who particularly, I only heard of ſuch a Rumour.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it an extraordinary thing?

Mr. Beeſton. No, it was but an ordinary thing as they uſed to have once in three Years.

Otes. You ſay you ſaw me every Day there?

L. C. J. He ſays he believes he might, becauſe you were Reader in his ſtead, and if you had been abſent, he muſt have been called upon to read, which he was not, he ſays.

Otes. Very well, my Lord, I deſire you would ask him, whether he does not remember ſuch a thing as an Eight-day's Exereiſe, wherein thoſe that perform the Exerciſe, are ſeparated from all Company during that time.

Mr. Beeſton. Yes, my Lord, I do remember that he was once in that Eight-day's Exerciſe, and during the eight Days I ſaw him walk in the Garden ſeveral times.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, if he were an Evidence at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, or Langhorn, and whether he gave this Evidence long ago?

Mr. Beeſton. No, I did not, I was not there.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Reward he is to have?

L. C. J. Are you to have any Reward for your Teſtimony, Mr. Beeſton?

Mr. Beeſton. No, my Lord.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know of him, how he comes to be pick'd out among the reſt of the Students there, to come here, and be an Evidence in this Cauſe?

Mr. Beeſton. My Lord, I was ſubpœna'd by His Majeſty, if I knew any thing of this Matter, that I ſhould come here and teſtify my Knowledge.

Otes. Pray, by what Name did he go by at St. Omers?

Mr. Beeſton. By the Name of Beeſton, as I do now.

Otes. And is that his own Name?

Mr. Beeſton. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray, go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Clement Smith.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at St. Omers in the Year 77 and 78?

Mr. Smith. Yes, I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Otes there at that time?

Mr. Smith. Yes, I was in the ſame Claſs with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray when came he thither, and how long did he ſtay there?

Mr. Smith.

Mr. Smith. He came a little before Chriſtmas, and ſtayed till June.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he not abſent at any time all that while?

Mr. Smith. No, he was not, except one Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Watton's Buſineſs, his going thither in January?

Mr. Smith. He told me of it, and that he deſign'd to ask the Rector leave to go.

L. C. J. Was he abſent any other time till June?

Mr. Smith. No, my Lord, for I will tell you, I every Day dined with him, eat a Collation with him in the Afternoon, and breakfaſt and ſupp'd in the ſame Refectory, during all that time, except when he or I was in the Infirmary.

L. C. J. When ever he was abſent, he was in the Infirmary, was he?

Mr. Smith. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did not he miſs his Breakfaſt at any time all that while?

Mr. Smith. If he did, we us'd to enquire after him.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray when were you in the Infirmary?

Mr. Smith. The 21ſt of April New Stile, I fell ſick, and I remained ſick till May the 7th, and was in the Infirmary, and then he viſited me almoſt daily, or every other Day in the Infirmary; and on the 2d of May I ſaw him and one Mr. Burnaby together, and on the Day Mr. Pool departed, which I take to be the 5th of May, Mr. Otes came to me as ſoon as he was gone out of the Houſe, and told me of it; and he did the ſame too that Day that Mr. Hilſley went away, which was the 24th of April New Stile.

Mr. At. Gen. Was not he in the Infirmary himſelf?

Mr. Smith. Yes, during this time he came into the Infirmary, and was ſick there.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Smith. A Day or two after Mr. Hilſley went away, and continued there two or three Days, and I remember it particularly by this Circumſtance, that he propoſed a Queſtion to the Phyſician about himſelf in Latin, and ſpoke a Solleciſm, which was this, he ſaid, Si placet Dominatio veſtra.

Otes. Who did ſay ſo?

L. C. J. You did, he ſays, ſpeak that falſe Latin to the Doctor.

Otes. That's falſe Latin indeed.

L. C. J. We know that, but it ſeems it was your Latin.

Mr. At. Gen. When came he away from St. Omers?

Mr. Smith. About the 20th of June, ſomething after the 20th of June, as I remember.

L. C. J. Are you ſure he was not out of the College ſo long as to make a Journey to London, and back again?

Mr. Smith. No, I am ſure he could not without being miſs'd; and going to School with him, and eating Dinner and Supper with him conſtantly always at the ſame place, I muſt needs know if he had gone.

Otes. When went I away from St. Omers does he ſay?

Mr. Smith. After the 20th of June 78.

L. C. J. He is your old Acquaintance and School-fellow, Mr. Otes; you viſited him when he was ſick.

Otes. What Religion is this Gentleman of, my Lord, I would know?

Mr. Smith. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. I deſire your Lordſhip to ask him how long he liv'd at St. Omers?

Mr. Smith. Above ſix Years.

Otes. Pray ask him, when he came away?

Mr. Smith. A little after Dr. Otes came away.

Otes. Did he come directly for England?

Mr. Smith. No, I did not.

Otes. Whither did he go then?

Mr. Smith. I went about a little. ——

Otes. Where, my Lord?

Mr. Smith. I went about to take ſome Turns in the Low-Countries; I went to Watton, and up and down.

Otes. He is a Jeſuit, my Lord, and that the World knows, and muſt know.

L. C. J. I know nothing of it, I do aſſure you.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask him, whether he did not hear of a Conſult of Jeſuits in April 78, and what Jeſuits went from St. Omers to it?

Mr. Smith. I heard it as a Rumour in the College, that there was to be a Congregation at that time, but I know not where particularly it was to be kept; but I know that then there paſs'd by St. Omers two Fathers, Mr. Marſh, and Mr. Williams.

Otes. What were they?

Mr. Smith. Jeſuits.

L. C. J. He told you they were Fathers.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, was it an extraordinary, or an ordinary Meeting that?

Mr. Smith. They us'd to ſay in the College, that it was an ordinary thing to have ſuch a Congregation every three Years.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, ſwear Mr. Edward Price.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mr. Price, will you give my Lord and the Gentlemen of the Jury an account, whether you were at St. Omers in the Year 77, and 78.

Mr. Price. I was there both theſe Years.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Otes there?

Mr. Price. Yes, my Lord, I do.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come, and when did he go away?

Mr. Price. He came there about December 77, and he continued there till June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he abſent from St. Omers at any time all that while?

Mr. Price. Never, that I know of, but one Night at Watton, when he came back the following Day, and that was in January.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember particularly that he was there in April and May 78?

Mr. Price. I remember Mr. Hilſley, according to the foreign Stile, left St. Omers upon the 24th of April 78. I was told the following Day that Mr. Otes went into the Infirmary, which was Monday the 25th, and ſtayed there a Day or two, and upon Wedneſday the 27th I ſaw him going to Maſs; then upon the Sunday following, which was the 1ſt of May New Stile, came Mr. Burnaby to St. Omers, and I ſaw him in Otes's Company that Day, and I ſaw him on Monday

Monday again the 2d of May in his Company; I saw him the 3d of May at the Table, which I particularly remember, becauſe it was the Feaſt of the Invention of the Holy Croſs; the 4th of May I have no Circumſtance to remember him by; but the 5th of May I ſaw him take his leave of Mr. Pool, and I likewiſe ſaw him the 10th or 11th of May at another of our Actions, wherein Mr. Watſon had a Quarrel with him, and beat him; I ſhould have miſs'd him above any other Man, becauſe he was ſo noted a Man.

Mr. At. Gen. What was he noted for? For any thing elſe but his diſtinct Place in the Refectory?

Mr. Price. Yes, he was very abſurd, and always quarrelling with the Students there.

L. C. J. Do you remember him read in the Sodality?

Mr. Price. I was not of that Bench that he was of.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know what this Gentleman's Religion is?

L. C. J. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Price. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to know, I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to ask him, when he went firſt to St. Omers, and when he came away?

Mr. Price. I was ſix Years at St. Omers; I was there a twelve-month before Mr. Otes came thither, and came from thence about three Years ago.

Otes. Did you come directly to England when you came away?

Mr. Price. My Lord, I went to Leige to ſtudy Philoſophy, and I live now with my Father at home.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to ask him, whether he did not hear of a Conſult to be held in April 78?

Mr. Price. I did hear there was a Congregation which was their uſual Triennial Meeting, and particularly I remember about that time there came Mr. Williams, and Mr. Marſh, and it was reported that they were going to the Congregation.

Otes. I deſire to ask him, if he was not a Witneſs at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, or at the Tryal of Langhorn?

Mr. Price. No, I was not.

Otes. Pray, what Name did he go by at St. Omers?

Mr. Price. By my own Name, which is Edward Price.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſwear the next, that is, Mr. James Doddington.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, were you at St. Omers in the Year 77, and 78?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know that Gentleman Mr. Otes there?

Mr. Doddington. I know him very well.

Mr. At. Gen. What time did he come to St. Omers, and how long did he ſtay there?

Mr. Doddington. He came about Chriſtmas, and ſtayed about the latter end of June.

Mr. At. Gen. How do you remember he ſtayed there ſo long, what Circumſtances have you to make you remember it?

Mr. Doddington. In general his Converſation and Canting Stories after Dinner and Supper, and times of Recreation, made him ſo remarkable, that no body could miſs him all the time he was there.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve him to be in the Hall, or at the Exerciſes?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, I ſaw him ſeveral times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the time Mr. Hilſley went away?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, it was a little after Eaſter, and I do remember that two or three Days after I went into the Infirmary, and ſaw Mr. Otes there, and had Diſcourſes with him.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Burnaby's coming to St. Omers, and when was it?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, the 1ſt of May Mr. Burnaby came to St. Omers, and the next Day I ſaw Otes with him, and for ten or twelve Days ſucceſſively they were in one another's Company, and then of a ſudden the Correſpondence broke off, but I know not upon what account.

L. C. J. Was he Reader there, as you remember?

Mr. Doddington. I do remember he did read in the Sodality.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Doddington. I remember he read at Shrovetide.

Otes. Did you hear me read there?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, that I did, Sir.

Otes. Were you of the Sodality?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, I was, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember the time he came away from St. Omers?

Mr. Doddington. It was about Midſummer, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you out of the College your ſelf at any time when he was there?

Mr. Doddington. No, I was not.

L. C. J. Come, I will ask you a plain Queſtion; Was he ſo long at any time out of the College as to come to London and ſtay here two or three Days, and come back again?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, He was ſo remarkable by his Stories and ridiculous Actions, and falling out with every one of the College, that if he had been abſent, we muſt needs have miſſed him.

L. C. J. Did you miſs him at any time?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, I never miſs'd him but one Day.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Doddington. They ſaid he was gone to Watton.

L. C. J. What time was that?

Mr. Doddington. In January, about ſix Weeks after he came firſt.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Doddington. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. And a Scholar of St. Omers.

L. C. J. Make your Remarks by and by.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Doddington. By the Name of Hollis, my Lord.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him how long he was reſident there?

Mr. Doddington. Near upon five Years.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him the occaſion of his coming over at firſt?

Mr. Doddington. I had Buſineſs in England, and I had a mind to ſee my Friends.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he did not pretend at the five Jeſuits Tryal, that he came over upon the King's Proclamation, to call home thoſe that were in the Seminaries?

L. C. J. Were you at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits?

Mr. Doddington. Yes, I was; but if I came over upon the King's Proclamation, what Hurt is there in that?

L. C. J. None at all, as I know of.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he did return again to St. Omers, or no?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, I paſs'd by St. Omers once, but I never ſtayed a Day in the College ſince.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask him, whether he ever heard of a Conſult of the Jeſuits in April 78?

Mr. Doddington. I did hear of a Congregation.

Otes. Call it a Conſult or a Congregation, it is all one.

L. C. J. He ſays he did hear of it.

Otes. Ask him by whom he did hear of it?

Mr. Doddington. I ſaw the Provincial when he came back from England.

Otes. Who was that Provincial, what was his Name?

Mr. Doddington. Mr. Whitebread.

Otes. Was not Mr. Whitebread a Reſident ſometimes at St. Omers?

Mr. Doddington. Yes a while he was.

Otes. Pray, was not that Houſe under his Government?

Mr. Doddington. My Lord, I can give no account of that, but it is generally under the Government of the Rector of St. Omers.

Mr. Hanſeys. Pray, Sir, give me leave to ask you one Queſtion; Mr. Otes ſpeaks of Mr. Whitebread; Pray, how did Mr. Whitebread uſe Otes, when he came back from England?

Mr. Doddington. I heard ſay, he did check him very ſeverely for his many Miſcarriages.

L. C. J. He heard it, he ſays, but he does not know it of his own Knowledge; that is no Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. William Gerrard.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at St. Omers, Mr. Gerrard, in the Years 77 and 78?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know Mr. Otes there?

Mr. Gerrard. Where is he, Sir?

Mr. At. Gen. There he is in that Corner, do you know him?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes.

Mr. At. Gen. When came he to St. Omers?

Mr. Gerrard. He came to St. Omers in the Year of our Lord 77, and he went away in June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there all the time?

Mr. Gerrard. I never remember'd to have miſs'd him, but only once when he went to Watton for a Night.

Mr. At. Gen. By what Tokens do you remember him at any time there in April or May?

Mr. Gerrard. The 2d of May we had a Play, and he was there then, and I remember the 26th of May he was confirmed, and ſo was I, it being St. Auguſtin's Day, and in the Refectory he had a Table by himſelf, and I uſed always at Meal-times to paſs by that Table and make a Bow to the Fathers above before I ſat down at Table; and I do not remember that ever he was abſent, and if he had, I ſhould ſurely have miſs'd him.

L. C. J. When was St. Auguſtin's Day, that you ſay you and he were confirm'd?

Mr. Gerrard. It was the 26th of May.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember him in April there?

Mr. Gerrard. I cannot tell any particular Circumſtance in April, but I do not remember to have miſs'd him at all in April.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But you ſaw him there the 2d of May, you ſay?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I did ſo, and the 26th of May.

Otes. The 26th of May Old Stile I was there, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, but he ſays the 26th of May New Stile.

Otes. I was not there then, my Lord.

L. C. J. He ſwears you were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, between the 2d and 27th of May New Stile was he abſent from St. Omers at any time?

Mr. Gerrard. I never remember to have miſs'd him at all in that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Pool's and Mr. Hilſley's going away?

Mr. Gerrard. I do remember Mr. Hilſley's and Mr. Pool's going away, but I cannot ſpeak particularly and exactly what time that was.

L. C. J. Is it uſual to have Scholars go away without being miſs'd?

Mr. Gerrard. No, my Lord, and he had a particular Place by himſelf.

Otes. Pray, ask him, my Lord, how he came to know that I went away in June?

Mr. Gerrard. We miſs'd him in his Place then, and 'twas diſcours'd of all over the Town, that when the Provincial came he was to be diſmiſs'd.

Otes. I deſire to know what Religion this Gentleman is of?

Mr. Gerrard. My Lord, I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Gerrard. By the Name of William Clovell.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, when he went to St. Omers, and how long he was reſident there?

Mr. Gerrard. I came there about two Years before he came, and was there about two Years after he went away.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he came directly for England when he left St. Omers?

Mr. Gerrard. No, my Lord, I was four Years in Low-Germany and France, and came into England the laſt Year.

Otes. Pray, Sir, were you a Witneſs at the five Jeſuits Tryal, or at Langhorn's Tryal?

Mr. Gerrard. No, I was no; I came but laſt Year to England, I tell you.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask this Gentleman, whether he did not know or hear of a Conſult of Jeſuits that was to be in April 78, and from whom he heard it?

Mr. Gerrard. My Lord, I know it is the Cuſtom of the Fathers of that Order to have a Congregagregation once in three Years, about the Affairs of their Society, but then no Perſon is admitted to be one of that Congregation, but them that have been eighteen Years Jeſuits, and he not having been ſo much as a Novice, I know not how, if he had been here, he could have been preſent at it.

L. C. J. He ſays, that there us'd to be a Triennial Congregation for the Buſineſs of the Society, but you could not be preſent at it, becauſe you had not been eighteen Years a Jeſuit.

Mr. Gerrard. An. decimo octavo Currente, is the Word of the Rule.

Otes. Pray my Lord ask him this Queſtion, how he knows that to be the Rule?

Mr. Gerrard. You or any Man may read them in their Books.

L. C. J. It ſeems he has read them, and he ſays, you muſt paſs through eighteen Years before you be admitted of the Congregation, and he believes you were not there, for you were not capable of ſo much as a Noviceſhip.

Otes. I deſire your Lordſhip to ask him, whether or no he heard me Read in the Sodality?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I did.

Otes. Were you of the Sodality?

Mr. Gerrard. Yes, I was.

Otes. Pray my Lord, ask him, what Oaths are there taken before they be admitted into the Sodality?

L. C. J. No, by no means, I will not do it.

Otes. Why my Lord, may not I ask it, to ſhew what kind of Men theſe are?

L. C. J. No, indeed, it is but the ſame Queſtion again, that I told you before is not to be asked, for it may make him liable to a Penalty; if you come to be a Witneſs, no Man ſhould ask you a Queſtion that might make you obnoxious to a Penalty, no more muſt you ask them any ſuch Queſtions.

Otes. I have done with him, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is my Lord Gerrard of Bromley?

Lord Gerrard. Here I am, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray my Lord, do you remember Mr. Otes at St. Omers in the Year 77, and 78?

Lord Gerrard. He was diſguiſed in another Habit, and another colour'd Perriwig, the Hair was blacker than that he has on now, but I remember his Face very well, and know him again by the Tone of his Voice, which was very remarkable, but I never remember that he was abſent from St. Omers after he came thither. I remember his Coming exactly, which was about Chriſtmas; nor did I ever hear that he was abſent till June 78. New Stile, when he went away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember, my Lord, when Mr. Burnaby came?

Lord Gerrard. I do remember Mr. Burnaby's coming, but what time it was I cannot exactly tell.

L. C. J. Is my Lord Gerrard ſworn?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think ſo.

Lord Gerrard. No, my Lord, I am not ſworn.

L. C. J. You muſt be ſworn, my Lord. [Which was done.

Now if you be pleaſed to ask my Lord any Queſtions, do.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we deſire to know of my Lord Gerrard of Bromley, whether he knew Mr. Otes at St. Omers?

Lord Gerrard. My Lord, I remember he came in 77. as I take it, it was the beginning of December, and never heard he was abſent or miſs'd till June 78. I remember particularly upon the 25*th* of March, there was a new Lector to be Reader of the Sodality, and Mr. Otes deſiring it, he was appointed to Read; I was there my ſelf, and I never miſſed him; I heard him Read, that I do remember ſeveral Sundays and Holidays, and never knew him abſent any one; however, for five or ſix Weeks he was conſtant at Reading, and I can the better remember it, becauſe he had a particular Cant in his Tone, which all Men may know which ever converſed with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Otes pleaſe to ask my Lord Gerrard any Queſtions, he may.

Lord Gerrard. Pray my Lord let me ſpeak a Word or two more.

L. C. J. Ay, my Lord, pray go on.

Lord Gerrard. I remember I heard Mr. Otes was at the Confirmation, which was upon St. Auſtin's Day, there was a Confirmation by a Catholick Biſhop about the 26*th* of May New Stile, I remember I heard Mr. Otes was there, and the Biſhop did particularly note him as a Perſon of elder Years than the reſt of the Students.

L. C. J. Do you know this, my Lord, of your own knowledge?

Lord Gerrard. I do, my Lord.

L. C. J. Becauſe you ſay you heard it.

Lord Gerrard. My Lord, further I remember this, when the News of the Plot being diſcovered by Otes, came to St. Omers, where he went by the name of Sampſon Lucy, and ſometimes Titus Ambroſius, it was wondered by all the Scholars that knew him there, how he came to be ſo impudent to pretend that he was at ſuch a Conſult the 24*th* of April 78. when all the Colledge ſaw him every Day in April and May at St. Omers, as much as a Man can be ſeen in a Family, and was never known to be abſent ſo much as one Day; beſides, my Lord, 'tis a thing as generally noted as a thing can be, that no Scholar goes away from, or comes to the College of St. Omers, but it is particularly known to the whole Houſe; it is the common News and Diſcourſe as much as any new Occurrences are here about the Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Otes be pleaſed to ask him any Queſtions, he may.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire this Noble Lord may be asked a Queſtion or two; I do not remember his Lordſhip there.

Lord Gerrard. I do very well remember the Man by particular Remarks.

Otes. Yes, my Lord, you have occaſion to remember me, and ſo have your whole Party. Pray my Lord, let my Lord Gerrard be asked what Name his Lordſhip went by at St. Omers?

Lord Gerrard. Mr. Otes, I am not difficult in telling the Name I went by there. It was Clovel.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, I deſire to know what Religion his Lordſhip is of?

Lord Gerrard. Neither am I aſhamed to own my Religion, Mr. Otes, I am a Catholick.

Otes.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, if you pleaſe, becauſe this Noble Lord pretends he heard me Read, I deſire to know of him whether he was of the Sodality?

Lord Gerrard. I remember you particularly by your Voice, and that is one thing that particularly brings you to my Remembrance now.

Otes. Pray ask this Noble Lord, if he was a Witneſs at the Jeſuits Tryal?

Lord Gerrard. No, I was never a Witneſs in my Life before; By the Oath that I have taken.

L. C. J. 'Tis very well, my Lord.

Otes. Pray my Lord, ask this Nobleman, whether he did not know of a Conſult in April 78. and from whom he knew it.

Lord Gerrard. No, I know of none, nor heard of any but by Rumour, after that you pretended to diſcover ſuch a thing.

Otes. Did his Lordſhip ſee me every Day, does he ſay?

Lord Gerrard. I cannot ſay every Day, but I ſaw him at the Refectory generally, and I remember it particularly, becauſe he ſat at a Table by himſelf; I believe he could not be abſent without being miſs'd, becauſe we knew every Perſon that came in and went out.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then Swear Mr. Samuel Morgan. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Morgan, were you at St. Omers in 77, and 78?

Mr. Morgan. I was my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve Mr. Otes to be there at that time?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray give an account when he came, and when he went away.

Mr. Morgan. He came 14 or 15 Days before Chriſtmas, as I remember, and went away in June.

Mr. At. Gen. What Chriſtmas do you mean, Mr. Morgan?

Mr. Morgan. Chriſtmas 77.

Mr. At. Gen. And when did he go away?

Mr. Morgan. In June 78. he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he abſent any time during that ſpace?

Mr. Morgan. My Lord, I know not that he was ever abſent above one Night in all that time.

Mr. At. Gen. What time was that one Night?

Mr. Morgan. Truly my Lord I cannot tell what Month it was very exactly.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither was he gone that Night?

Mr. Morgan. He went to Watton, three miles off from St. Omers.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember the time when Mr. Hilſley came away, and when Mr. Burnaby came to St. Omers?

Mr. Morgan. Yes I do, my Lord, very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Mr. Otes there when Hilſley went away?

Mr. Morgan. He was there then.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there when Mr. Burnaby came?

Mr. Morgan. He was there when Mr. Burnaby came thither.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there when Mr. Poole came away?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, my Lord, he was ſo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will ask you this ſhort Queſtion, do you believe in your Conſcience that he was abſent any particular time all that while?

Mr. Morgan. No, my Lord, I have no reaſon to believe ſo.

Otes. Pray my Lord, ask him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Morgan. I am of the Church of England.

Otes. When were you reconciled to the Church of England?

Mr. Morgan. Five Years ſince.

Otes. I deſire to know of him, what induced him to be reconciled to the Church of England?

L. C. J. That is not a pertinent Queſtion, nor fit to be asked. Is he to give an account of his Faith here?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It ſeems Mr. Otes is angry when the Witneſſes are Papiſts, and when they are Proteſtants too.

Otes. When was it that I came to St. Omers do you ſay?

Mr. Morgan. You came thither in December, 77.

L. C. J. So he told you before, why do you repeat Things over and over again?

Otes. When was it I went away from thence, ſay you?

Mr. Morgan. In June 78.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember the 24*th* of April Old Stile, that Year?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, my Lord, I do remember it very well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember him to be at St. Omers that Day?

Mr. Morgan. Yes, I do, by this Circumſtance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, pray tell my Lord and the Jury that Circumſtance, how you come to remember it.

Mr. Morgan. We had the Tryal of Ireland brought over to us ſoon after it was printed, and there we found mentioned, that Mr. Otes had depoſed, That the 24*th* of April, 78. there was a Conſult of the Jeſuits, and they met at the White Horſe Tavern, where they reſolved to kill the King, and he carried that Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, and he did nominate the Day, and having it then freſh in my Memory, though he ſwore that he was the 24th of April Old Stile in London at that Conſult; yet I found him to be at St. Omers by a very particular Circumſtance: My Lord, I was playing at Ball that Day, and ſtruck it over into a Court, into which I could not get over my ſelf, but I ſaw Mr. Otes then walking in the Court, and I came and borrowed his Key, and ſo went in, and there paſſed between us Words of Friendſhip.

L. C. J. When was this, do you ſay?

Mr. Morgan. The 24*th* of April 78. Old Stile.

Otes. I deſire to let his Orders be ſeen.

L. C. J. No, he ſhall not be put to ſhew any ſuch thing.

Otes. He is a Miniſter of the Church of England, my Lord.

L. C. J. Sir, we tell you, we will not do it, what ado is here with your impertinent Queſtions, have not I told you, you ſhall not enſnare the Wineſſes?

Otes. He was a going to pull out his Orders himſelf.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Otes may ſee them if he will, he is a Beneficed Miniſter of the Church of England.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Does he mean thoſe Orders?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, he does, and here they are.

L. C. J. Let him ſee them. [Which was done.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know of this Gentleman, what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Morgan. By the Name of Morgan.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Arundel. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir, will you give an account in ſhort, whether you were at St. Omers in 77, and 78. and the Time when Otes came thither, and when he went away.

Mr. Arundel. I was there when Dr. Otes came, and when he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Arundel. Sir, I cannot be poſitive to the Time exactly, but I think it was about January 77. that he came there, and he went away about June 78. I cannot be poſitive to the time exactly.

L. C. J. He does not particularly remember the Time, but he thinks it was about January 77, he came thither.

Mr. Arundel. I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon, he came there about December.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember any particular Circumſtances, that you ſaw him there at any particular time?

Mr. Arundel. Upon St. Auguſtine's Day I ſaw him Confirm'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day is that?

Mr. Arundel. The 26*th* of May according to the foreign Account.

L. C. J. Did you know him there, then?

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, I ſay I ſaw him Confirm'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Hilſley's going away?

Mr. Arundel. I do not remember the time particularly, but I do remember Mr. Otes was actually there then.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when Mr. Burnaby came to St. Omers?

Mr. Arundel. No, I do not remember the time, but he was there then too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember when Mr. Pool went away?

Mr. Arundel. No, I cannot tell what Day it was, but he was there at the time of his going away, upon my Oath.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell any other particular time?

Mr. Arundel. The 11*th* of May New Stile, there was an Action exhibited in the College.

L. C. J. Was Otes there then?

Mr. Arundel. To the beſt of my remembrance he was.

L. C. J. He does not affirm any Particular, but only ſpeaks in general.

Otes. Are you a Proteſtant too, Sir?

Mr. Arundel. No, Doctor, I am not.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, I deſire to know what Religion he is of?

Mr. Arundel. I am a Papiſt, my Lord.

Otes. Pray ask him by what Name he went at St. Omers?

Mr. Arundel. I believe you know that as well as I Doctor Otes.

L. C. J. You muſt anſwer his Queſtion.

Mr. Arundel. I went by the Name of Spencer, my Lord.

Otes. I do remember him, my Lord, to have been there.

Mr. Arundel. Sir, your humble Servant.

Otes. It is almoſt ſeven Years ago, my Lord, and I may not ſo well remember them as they do me, but I deſire to know when he went to St. Omers firſt, and how long he was there?

Mr. Arundel. I was there ſeven Years.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he was of the Sodality?

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. C. J. Was he Reader of the Sodality?

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, in my time he was Reader.

Otes. Then my Lord, I deſire to ask him, whether ever he heard of a Conſult of the Jeſuits, that was to be held in England, in April 78. and from whom he heard it?

Mr. Arundel. Yes, my Lord, I did hear in the College of a Congregation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that an extraordinary one, or of courſe?

Mr. Arundel. It was only of courſe, as they told us, once in three Years they have one.

Otes. Pray my Lord, be pleaſed to ask this Gentleman what Studies he followed at St. Omers?

L. C. J. He was of the Sodality, he ſays.

Mr. Arundel. My Lord, I ſtudied to the end of Rhetorick.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know whether when he came from St. Omers, he did come directly for England?

Mr. Arundel. No, I went from thence to Paris, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Chriſtopher Turbervile. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Mr. Turbervile, will you acquaint my Lord and the Jury, whether you were with Mr. Otes at St. Omers, and when?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, my Lord; he went by the Name of Sampſon Lucy there, and there I ſaw him, and there I was with him all the time; I was there before him, and I remained there after he went away.

Mr. At. Gen. What time did he come to St. Omers, I pray you?

Mr. Turbervile. Before Chriſtmas.

L. C. J. In what Year?

Mr. Turbervile In the Year 77.

Mr. At. Gen. What time was it he went away?

Mr. Turbervile. In June 78.

L. C. J. Were you there all that while at St. Omers?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. And to the beſt of your apprehenſion, you think he was there all that while?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, I do ſo, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you ſpeak of any particular Days you can remember?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, I do remember him upon the 4*th*, 5*th*, and 6*th* of May, for two or three Days together; for my Lord, I do remember this Circumſtance, Mr. Pool about that time went away, and that very Day Mr. Pool went from the College, I changed my Lodging, and went into his Lodging, and that Day I ſaw Doctor Otes in the Chamber, and by the Chamber Door.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he continue in the College from the time he came about Chriſtmas to the time he went away in June?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, he did, all the while except it were one Night in January when he went to Watton.

L. C. J. What time in June did he go away?

Mr. Turbervile. I am not poſitive, but I am morally ſure he went away the 23d of June, as near as I can remember.

Otes. I was there in June that is very well known.

L. C. J. What do you remember of his reading in the College?

Mr. Turbervile. I do remember he was Reader there on Sundays and Holidays for a great while; I cannot ſwear upon what Sunday he began, but he left off the Sunday before he went away.

L. C. J. As near as you can remember, when did he begin to read?

Mr. Turbervile. It was the beginning of April, or latter end of March, I cannot juſtly ſwear which it was.

Mr. Molloy. Did he read on Holidays as well as Sundays?

Mr. Turbervile. Yes, he did.

Otes. I muſt ask this Gentleman one Queſtion, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, and that is this, what Name he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. Turbervile. I went there by the Name of Farmer.

Otes. Pray you, my Lord, ask him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Turbervile. It is a hard Queſtion to anſwer that.

Otes. Nay, my Lord, I deſire to know what is his Religion?

Mr. Turbervile. I am, my Lord, a Roman Catholick.

Otes. Ask him when he went to St. Omers firſt, and how long he ſtayed there?

Mr. Turbervile. I was there ſeven Years very near.

Otes. I deſire to know whether he did come away directly to England when he came from St. Omers?

Mr. Turbervile. No, my Lord, I went into Italy.

Otes. Pray you, my Lord, I deſire to know whether he did go to Rome?

L. C. J. What if he did, what then? That is not at all to the purpoſe, he went into Italy.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask him this Queſtion further, Was he a Witneſs on the behalf of the five Jeſuits, or of Langhorn at their Tryals?

Mr. Turbervile. No, my Lord, I was not.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask him then what Reward he has been promiſed, or is to have for giving this Evidence?

Mr. Turbervile. None at all, my Lord.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether or no he heard of any Conſult of the Jeſuits in April 78, and from whom?

Mr. Turbervile. There was a Congregation, as I heard, but I do not remember that any of the Fathers went from the College to it; ſeveral came by there, and lodged there as they went, and as they came back.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him how he came here to be a Witneſs in this Cauſe?

Mr. Turbervile. I was ſubpœna'd.

Otes. Who ſerv'd the Subpœna upon him?

Mr. Turbervile. The Managers; it was ſent to me by the King's Counſel, I ſuppoſe; a Man brought it to me.

L. C. J. 'Tis no matter who brought it you, you were ſubpœna'd, that's enough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Anthony Turbervile.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at St. Omers in 77 and 78?

Mr. A. Turbervile. Yes, my Lord, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve the Defendant Mr Otes there at that time?

Mr. A. Turbervile. Yes, I obſerv'd him all the while he was there.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come to St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turbervile. In the Year 77, about Chriſtmas.

Mr. At. Gen. When went he away?

Mr. A. Turbervile. A Gentleman who was formerly ſworn, (Mr. Thornton) and I were at Breakfaſt with him the ſelf ſame time when he went away.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. A. Turbervile. I ſuppoſe about the latter end of June 78.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you obſerve him to be there in April or May 78?

Mr. A. Turbervile. He was not abſent above one Night in January that I can remember from his firſt coming thither, for it was impoſſible he ſhould be abſent and not miſs'd, he ſitting at a diſtinct Table by himſelf, and his Converſation being ſo remarkable for a great many ridiculous Actions, and a great many pretty Jeſts that he us'd, ſo that he was like a ſilly Perſon, as I may call him, that us'd to make ſport, and no body could be miſs'd ſo ſoon as he: And I ſaw a little Boy in the College beat him up and down with a Fox's Tail. Indeed, my Lord, all his Actions were very remarkable: I ſee him very much abuſive to Perſons that liv'd with him in the College; and Mr. Otes could not be a Perſon of this Note, but all the World muſt take notice of him, and all that knew him muſt miſs him, if he were away.

L. C. J. You hear him, Mr Otes; he gives you a particular Character; he ſays you were a very notorious Perſon in many Inſtances.

Mr. A. Turbervile. My Lord, I was a Perſon then the youngeſt in the whole Company, and Mr. Otes being very abuſive to me, I did what became me to right my ſelf upon him.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleas'd to ask this Gentleman what the Name was he went by at St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turbervile. By my Grandmother's Name, which was Farmer.

L. C. J. Do you remember the time when Mr. Hilſley went away from St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turbervile. He went away upon a Sunday. Mr. Otes remain'd afterwards there: I am poſitive I ſaw him ſeveral Days after.

L. C. J. Do you remember when Mr. Burnaby came thither?

Mr. A. Turbervile. Yes, my Lord; and Mr. Otes was there then.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Queſtions? If you are not ready, I will ask him ſome for you. Come, what Religion are you of?

Mr.

Mr. A. Turbervile. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, and how long were you at St. Omers?

Mr. A. Turbervile. Six Years and upward, my Lord.

L. C. J. When you came away from thence, did you come directly for England?

Mr. A. Turbervile. I took a Circumference round.

Otes. My Lord, I do find my Defence is under a very great Prejudice.

L. C. J. Why so? Because we won't let you ask impertinent Questions, or such as may render the Witnesses obnoxious to a Penalty.

Otes. No, my Lord, it is not fit they should, for there is a Turn to be serv'd.

L. C. J. What do you mean by that? Ay, and a good Turn too, if these Witnesses swear true: 'Tis to bring Truth to light, and perjur'd Villains to condign Punishment.

Otes. Good my Lord, be pleased to hear me.

L. C. J. If you behave not your self with that Respect to the Court as you ought, pray get you gone. Do you think you shall give such Language as this in a Court of Justice?

Otes. My Lord, I did not design———

L. C. J. If you behave your self as you should, you shall have all due Regard; but if you fly out into such abusive Extravagancies, we'll calm you as you ought to be calm'd.

Otes. I would vindicate my self, I meant it not of the Court.

L. C. J. So you had need. Don't think we sit here to let you asperse the Justice of the Court and of the Nation, as if the Judges sat here to serve a Turn.

Otes. I say, these Men do come to serve a Turn; but I laid no Aspersion upon the Court, nor meant it of them.

L. C. J. Behave your self as you ought, and you shall be heard with all the Fairness can be desir'd.

Otes. I did perceive your Lordship and the Court made your selves pleasant with my Questions.

L. C. J. I did not make my self pleasant with your Questions, but when you ask impertinent ones you must be corrected: You see we do the same thing with them; I find fault with nothing but what is not to the purpose.

Otes. My Lord, I desire it may be observ'd, that these Men that come now, are the same Witnesses that appeared at the Old Bailey, and were not believed there.

L. C. J. Observe what you will by and by.

Mr. At. Gen. No, they are other Men, but they bear the same Testimony indeed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Clavering.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Come, Sir, I'll ask you a short Question: Were you at St. Omers with Mr. Otes, and when?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, I was: I came the 10th of December 77 to St. Omers, he told me he came thither that Day too, and I liv'd there all the time that he was there, which was till towards the middle of Summer: I do not remember that he ever was absent, but once at Watton.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Burnaby's coming thither?

Mr. Clavering. Mr. Otes was there when Mr. Burnaby came there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he there when Pool came away?

Mr. Clavering. He was there when Mr. Pool went away, and likewise I remember his being there at the time of the Congregation.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell the Circumstance how you know he was there then?

Mr. Clavering. There came a Gentleman there that desir'd a Charity of the Students, and I was the Person that made the Collection for him in the House; and I remember he did ask if there was any one that was a Student there that had been in Spain: We told him there was one, and describ'd him, upon which he knew the Gentleman in Spain; upon that I told Mr. Otes, that there was one there that knew him, but he deny'd to come and speak with him. Now I remember that it was the time of the Congregation, for some made Enquiry why he got so little Money at Watton, and it was said it was because the Fathers were gone to the Congregation in England. And he ask'd me particularly, what was done at the Congregation in England?

L. C. J. Did Otes ask that Question?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, my Lord, he did.

L. C. J. Whom did he ask it of?

Mr. Clavering. Of me.

L. C. J. When was that?

Mr. Clavering. I think it was about the time of the Congregation.

L. C. J. How came he to enquire after it?

Mr. Clavering. I was talking with him, and said he to me, Know you nothing what the Business is that they are to do at the Congregation? Said I, Mr. Lucy, I know not what they do; I think not much: For I hear at those Meetings many times they stay an hour or two, and have done when they have chosen their Procurator.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you believe he was there all the time?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, my Lord, I do believe it.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, let me ask him a Question or two.

L. C. J. Ay, what you will.

Otes. What Religion is this Gentleman of?

Mr. Clavering. I am a Catholick.

Otes. A Roman Catholick you mean, I suppose?

Mr. Clavering. Yes, I always understood it so, Mr. Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I desire to know how he came not to be produc'd at the Jesuits Tryal, to give this Evidence he gives now?

Mr. Clavering. I can give a very good Reason perhaps: I was then, my Lord, in Germany.

L. C. J. That's Reason good enough of all Conscience.

Mr. Just. Withins. That was a new Question, and you have a satisfactory Answer, I think.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. John Copley.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you at St. Omers in 77 and 78?

Mr. Copley. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Otes there then?

Mr. Copley. I saw him all the time he was there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did he come thither?

Mr. Copley. He came a little before Christmas, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When went he away?

Mr. Copley. In 78.

Mr. Sol.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Month in 78?

Mr. Copley. In June 78.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he abſent any part of that time?

Mr. Copley. I was there, and he was there too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he abſent any part of the time from Chriſtmas to June?

Mr. Copley. Nay, I am ſure he was there all the time, except that Night that he was abſent at Watton, and that was in January.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him what Religion he is of?

Mr. Copley. Does your Lordſhip ask me that Queſtion?

L. C. J. Yes, I do ask you, Mr. Otes would know it.

Mr. Copley. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Cook.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know Mr. Otes at St. Omers, and when?

Mr. Cook. He came there a little before Chriſtmas 77.

Mr. At. Gen. How came you to know him there?

Mr. Cook. I liv'd in the Houſe then.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he there all April and May?

Mr. Cook. Yes, he was till the latter end of June.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee him every Day?

Mr. Cook. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you tell any particular time?

Mr. Cook. I am poſitive he was the 30th of April.

Mr. At. Gen. What Stile?

Mr. Cook. New Stile.

L. C. J. How do you know he was there then?

Mr. Cook. It is a remarkable time; there is a Proceſſion that they keep there on that Day from the Sodality to the Church, and I ſaw him go among the reſt at the latter end among the Rhetoricians.

L. C. J. What ſay you, was he there on that Day Mr. Hilſley went away?

Mr. Cook. I do not remember that.

L. C. J. Do you remember Burnaby?

Mr. Cook. I was there when Mr. Burnaby went away.

L. C. J. But when he came was Otes there?

Mr. Cook. I cannot ſpeak particularly to that.

Mr. At. Gen. What was your Place in the College?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, He is a Lay-man be ſure.

Mr. Cook. I was a Servant in the Houſe.

Otes. In what Place do you ſerve?

Mr. Cook. I was a Taylor.

Otes. I do not remember him.

Mr. Cook. But I remember you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Jo. Wright, Eſq;

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Otes at St. Omers?

Mr. Wright. Yes, I do.

Mr. At. Gen. When was it?

Mr. Wright. The Winter before the notice of the Plot was.

Mr. At. Gen. What Year was it in?

Mr. Wright. In the Year 77.

Mr. At. Gen. What Month in that Year did he come thither?

Mr. Wright. I cannot tell, it was Winter-time.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he go away?

Mr. Wright. He went away in Summer, I cannot tell juſt the time.

Mr. At. Gen. Was he abſent at any time, from his coming in Winter, to his going away in Summer?

Mr. Wright. The Scholars ſaid he was once at a Place call'd Watton.

L. C. J. Come, this ſays nothing to the purpoſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We leave it here.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it then, Mr. Otes?

Otes. Has Mr. Attorney done?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, we have done for the preſent.

L. C. J. Then are you to make your Defence.

Otes. My Lord, Here is an Indictment brought againſt me for Perjury; and this Indictment ſets forth, That I ſhould upon the 17th of December appear at the Old Bailey, and there ſwear, That there was a Treaſonable Conſult of the Jeſuits met at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, and that this Treaſonable Conſult did divide it ſelf into leſſer Companies and Meetings, and that I carried about a certain Reſolution, which the Jeſuits came to, concerning killing the King, from Chamber to Chamber to be ſign'd. My Lord, I have a great Exception to make to this Indictment, and that is, my Lord, as to the Form. For, by your Lordſhip's Favour, I think the Perjury is not well aſſign'd, and according as I am adviſed I offer this to your Lordſhip's Conſideration. It ſays in the Aſſignment of the Perjury, Ubi revera & in facto prædictus Titus Otes non præſens fuit ad aliquam Conſultationem Jeſuitarum apud le White Horſe Tavern prædict' in le Strand in Com' Midd' prædict' ſuper viceſimum quartum diem April' anno Dom' Milliceſimo.

L. C. J. How Milliceſimo!

Otes. My Lord, It is Law-Latin, I ſuppoſe it may ſerve in a Court.

L. C. J. No, it is true Latin there.

Otes. I cannot tell how to read it better.

L. C. J. I do believe that.

Otes. It is written in ſuch a Hand, I cannot read it; but the Subſtance of it is, it ſays here, That I did not carry any Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber ſignand'. Now, the Evidence charged upon me to be given, is, That I did not ſee it ſignat': So that the Aſſignment of the Perjury does not purſue the Oath as it is ſet forth; for if it be ſignat' in the Evidence that was given, it ought to be ſignat' in the Perjury that is aſſigned; and I humbly crave the Opinion of your Lordſhip and the Court upon this Point.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Otes, That you offer'd before, and I gave this Anſwer, which I muſt now repeat, That now we are upon the Fact, and this Exception will be ſav'd to you for its proper time, if you be convicted. It is not proper now; but ſuppoſe there were that thing which you ſay is an Objection, yet you muſt know, that there are two Perjuries that are aſſign'd; the one is upon the firſt part of your Oath, which was, that you were preſent at a

Conſult

Conſult of the Jeſuits the 24th of April 78, at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, Ubi revera you were not there. Now, Do you admit in the firſt place, that you were forſworn in that particular.

Otes. No, my Lord, I do not.

L. C. J. If the Jury find that you were forſworn in that firſt Point, that you were not there, it will be eaſily believed you ſwore falſe in the other Point, that you did not carry the Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber.

Otes. But, my Lord, it is not well aſſign'd, I think.

L. C. J. That will be ſav'd to you after the Verdict, I tell you, if there be occaſion for it.

Otes. My Lord, I ſuppoſe the Proof ought to be according to the Record, and the Record makes the Perjury differ from the Oath.

L. C. J. I tell you that is to the Form, and that will be ſav'd to you after the Verdict one way or the other.

Otes. Then will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to conſider there was a Record brought in, which is almoſt the ſame with that I am to offer to be read on my behalf, and which is the firſt Proof that I have to offer of the Conſult that was held in London in April 78. And I deſire Mr. Percivile may be called, I forget his Chriſtian Name, and Mr. Vaughan who is my Sollicitor: But pray, my Lord, let me firſt have the Opinion of the Court, whether they did prove the Words that I am ſaid to ſwear as they are laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Yes, very fully, we think ſo; but the Jury are to try that, that is a Point of Fact; but if you will, you ſhall have our Thoughts about it; We think they are fully proved.

Cryer. Here is Mr. Percivile.

Otes. Pray ſwear him. [Which was done.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Otes. Mr. Percivile, You examin'd the Conviction of Mr. Ireland, pray put it in: Is it a true Copy?

Percivile. Yes, it is.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire that the Conviction and Attainder of Mr. Ireland may be read.

Mr. At. Gen. It has been read already.

Otes. My Lord, I will not take up the Court's time any more than is neceſſary for my Defence.

L. C. J. Nay, do as you will, as long as you offer things pertinent and decent, the Court will hear you with all Patience, and you may take what time is neceſſary for you.

Otes. I thank your Lordſhip: I deſign'd nothing at all of Reflection upon the Court, but a Reflection on the Witneſſes that came in againſt me.

Cl. of Cr. This is a Copy of the ſame Record that was before read.

Otes. Well, if that be allowed for Evidence for me, I am contented to ſpare the time of the Court, not to read it again; but, my Lord, I offer this, and deſire to have Counſel aſſign'd me to argue this Point in Law; that is, Whether or no the Convictions and Attainders of Ireland, Whitebread, and the reſt of them, of a Treaſonable Conſult of the 24th of April 78. where it was reſolved to murder the late King, ought not to be taken as a ſufficient Legal Proof of the Fact, ſo long as thoſe Attainders remain of Force? And whether the Averment of that being falſe, is to be received againſt thoſe Records?

L. C. J. There is no difficulty in that at all in the World, Mr. Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I do not know the Law, and therefore I pray I may have Counſel aſſign'd to argue that Point.

L. C. J. There is no queſtion in it. God forbid, if a Verdict be obtain'd by Perjury, that that Verdict ſhould protect the perjur'd Party from being proſecuted for his falſe Oath. There were no Juſtice in that; nor is it an Averment againſt a Record, for this is not a Writ of Error in Fact that will reverſe it, but the Record remains a good Record and unimpeached ſtill: But tho' it be a good Record, yet it is lawful to ſay this Verdict was obtain'd upon the Teſtimony of ſuch an one, that forſwore himſelf in that Teſtimony, and for that particular Perjury he may ſurely be proſecuted.

Otes. Is not that Attainder an uncontroulable Evidence of the Fact, till it be revers'd?

L. C. J. Yes, it is againſt the Party attainted; but if that Attainder was founded upon a Verdict that was obtain'd by Perjury, God forbid, but he ſhould be told ſo that did perjure himſelf.

Otes. Well, my Lord, if your Lordſhip rules that for Law, then I will go on; and I muſt now obſerve to the Jury in the opening the Evidence two things. Firſt, That the Indictment upon which Ireland was try'd, was found the 16th of December 78, and on the 17th of December, the next Day Ireland was try'd at the Old Bailey; and then I find this Indictment brought againſt me for Perjury, is found at the Old Bailey ſix Years after the Fact by ſpecial Commiſſion. Now, I ſubmit it to your Lordſhip's and the Jury's Conſideration, why the Preſentment and the finding of this Bill for Perjury has been ſo long delay'd, ſince it appears by the Evidence, that the Witneſſes that have been produc'd to prove the Perjury, were either at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, or might have been produced then; and tho' they are not all the ſame Perſons, yet they all bear the ſame Teſtimony that was then offered, but were not credited; and I hope when my Evidence is heard, they will have the ſame Reputation with this Jury that they had with thoſe others. My Lord, I muſt acquaint your Lordſhip and this Court, That in this Indictment for which Mr. Ireland was convicted, Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick did undergo part of the Tryal, and did hear the whole Body of the Evidence that the Witneſſes teſtified againſt them; but there being but one Witneſs againſt them two at that time, which was my ſelf, (Mr. Bedloe being then upon an Intrigue, as your Lordſhip may remember) my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, who was then the Mouth of the Court, did diſcharge the Jury of Mr. Whitebread and Mr. Fenwick, and remanded them to Priſon, which Mr. Whitebread ſix Months after did remark to the Court, and urg'd it as a Plea for himſelf to be diſcharged; but that being over-ruled by the Court, he was try'd. Now, he had ſix Months time to provide himſelf with new freſh Evidence to aſperſe me, and to endeavour to falſify that Teſtimony I gave in againſt Whitebread and Fenwick, when Ireland was try'd, and ſo he knew what it was. I muſt further obſerve to you, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, That my Caſe is very hard, that ſince the Subſtance of my Teſtimony was with Credit receiv'd, and the Jury upon convicting them were acquainted, " That they had found an " unexceptionable Verdict; That all the Ob- " jections againſt the Evidence were then fully " anſwer'd; That there was nothing that the " Priſoners had been wanting in to object, " which could be objected; and that the thing " was as clear as the Sun. And yet after ſix Years time, I muſt come to be called to an account for Perjury in my Teſtimony of that part of the Popiſh Plot, with which the King and Kingdom, four ſucceſſive Parliaments, all the Judges of the Land, and three Juries were ſo well ſatisfied. I ſhall therefore offer to your Lordſhip and the Jury's Conſideration the unanimous Votes of three Houſes of Commons; I ſhall offer the Proceedings of the Houſe of Lords, that is the higheſt Judicature in the Kingdom; I ſhall prove what I have open'd by the Teſtimony of ſeveral Noblemen that are here, who will teſtify this for me. My Lord, I ſhall prove, that ſeveral Attempts have been made to baffle this Teſtimony, as that of the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, who took my Depoſitions, the Contrivance of Paine, Farewell, and Thompſon, made in the Year 81 or 82, I forget which; I ſhall then produce Evidence that I was actually here in Town at the time in queſtion; and then upon the whole I ſhall ſubmit it to your Lordſhip and the Jury. But to prepare your Lordſhip and the Jury the better for my Evidence, I would again urge the ſtrangeneſs of this Proſecution, and the Hardſhip that is put upon me, to be tryed for Perjury in an Evidence given ſix Years ago, and formerly very induſtriouſly, tho' not ſucceſsfully, endeavoured to be falſified by ſixteen St. Omers Youths that were produced and examined before all the Judges in the Kingdom, and that not only once at Whitebread's Tryal, but a ſecond time at Langhorn's Tryal, in neither of which would the Jury believe them, becauſe of their Religion and Education, and the Perſons under whom they were educated, who were Men of known Artifice. Then, my Lord, I would argue this: If at that time my Evidence were true, it muſt be true ſtill; for Truth is always the ſame; and if it were then true, and I can prove it to be true, 'twill be thought a hard thing without all doubt, that this ſhould be put upon me. Then, my Lord, I would fain know from my Proſecutors, Why this Indictment of Perjury has been deferred ſo long? Why theſe Witneſſes that come now to teſtify this Matter, and could then have been brought, did not come before, to juſtify at the Tryals of theſe Perſons what they now ſay, which might have ſav'd their Lives, if true, and had been credited. Then I ſhall offer to your Lordſhip what I deſire You and the Jury would pleaſe to obſerve, That tho' the King's Counſel are now againſt me, yet they are alſo againſt themſelves, for they were of Counſel for the King in thoſe Caſes; particularly Mr. Sollicitor at Langhorn's Tryal, Sir Robert Sawyer at Sir George Wakeman's Tryal: They were of Counſel before for the Truth of my Teſtimony; they are now againſt it: I only mention that, and paſs it over. But this is not the firſt Attempt that has been made to diſcredit the Teſtimony of the Popiſh Plot, as I told you before. Now, can it be ſuppoſed that the Love and Deſire of Publick Juſtice can be the Cauſe of this Attempt to falſify my Evidence after ſo many Tryals, in which it has been credited and confirmed? Can any thing, my Lord, more plainly tend to deſtroy and ſubvert the Methods of Juſtice, to frighten all Witneſſes from henceforth from ever appearing to diſcover any Conſpiracies? And does it not tend to expoſe and vilify the known Underſtanding and Juſtice of the late King of ever Bleſſed Memory, to arraign the Wiſdom of His Privy Council, His Great and Noble Peers, His Loyal Commons in three ſucceſſive Parliaments, His Twelve Judges, and all theſe ſeveral Juries that were upon thoſe Tryals? Had not thoſe Juries Senſe? Had they not Honeſty? Had they no Conſciences? And the Judges before whom thoſe Conſpirators were try'd, were they Men of no Juſtice, nor Honour, nor Integrity, nor Conſcience, nor Underſtanding? Shall thoſe Juries be ſaid to have drawn the innocent Blood of theſe Men upon their own Heads and the Nation? As, if I were perjur'd it muſt be innocent Blood that was ſhed upon it.

L. C. J. No, no, that goes a great deal too far, Mr. Otes: The Jury have no ſhare, nor the Judges neither, in that Blood which was ſhed by your Oath.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. No, that is your own moſt certainly, and not theirs.

Otes. But this, I ſay, makes it moſt plain: The Evidence was then true, and I hope I ſhall make it as evidently plain 'tis as true now; and I do not queſtion, but upon the Evidence I ſhall now give, both poſitive and collateral, the Jury will believe me, and acquit me of this foul Accuſation. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to conſider, that when the Jury brought in Ireland guilty of the High Treaſon of which he was accuſed, and convicted him, Pickering and Grove; ſays my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs (that then was) to them, " Gentlemen, you have done like very " good Subjects, and very good Chriſtians, that is, " like very good Proteſtants; and now much good may " do them with their Thirty Thouſand Maſſes; as I ſhall prove he did ſay. Then I inſiſt, in the ſecond place, That Whitebread's Conviction does reinforce the Conviction of Ireland, becauſe of the Attempt by the St. Omers Witneſſes to have overthrown my Evidence: But ſince I am attack'd again in the ſame kind by the Violence of the Popiſh Intereſt, and by the Malice of my Popiſh Adverſaries, I am contented to ſtand the Teſt with all my Heart. And then, to conclude all, I ſhall ſhew the Court, That 'tis in vain for the Popiſh Party to expect and think to wipe their Mouths, with Solomon's Whore, and ſay, they have done no wickedneſs: No, I queſtion not but thouſands of Proteſtants in this Kingdom are fully ſatisfied and convinced of the Truth of the Popiſh Plot, all and every part of it. Now, my Lord, if you pleaſe to give me leave to proceed on in my Evidence, I ſhall beg that theſe Records of Conviction may be read, which are my firſt Proof of the Conſult; and I ſhall then bring Witneſſes, vivâ voce, and ſhall make it appear, that what I did ſwear at thoſe Tryals was true.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Not to interrupt you in your Defence, or the Method you will take for it, I would put you upon that which is proper for you to apply your self to, becauſe the Queſtion now is not, Whether there was a Conſult or Congregation of the Jeſuits here upon the 24th of April 78? But the Queſtion that toucheth you is, Whether you were preſent at any ſuch Conſult here in London the 24th of April 78? Theſe Gentlemen, ſome of them, do ſay, there was a Conſult, and others that they heard of it, and believe there was ſuch an one, becauſe it was uſual to have a Triennial Congregation for ſome particular Purpoſes: But the Queſtion is, Whether you have ſufficient Proof to prove your ſelf to be here on the 24th of April 78, at which time it is agreed of all Hands there was a Conſult?

Otes. But will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to take notice of the drift of the Evidence, how they are conſiſtent one with another? Theſe Gentlemen that have now been ſworn to prove that I was not at this Conſult, do attempt to prove that I was at St. Omers: Now, to anſwer this, I ſhall not go about to prove that I was not then at St. Omers, but that I was actually then, and about that time, here in London; and then all that Proof that Mr. Attorney General has brought, muſt be laid aſide.

L. C. J. You ſay well; prove that.

Otes. Now, my Lord, to introduce and prepare the Jury for this, it will be neceſſary, I humbly conceive, to read the Records of the Conviction of Whitebread and Ireland.

L. C. J. Well, go your own way. We are not to direct you: I only tell you where the Queſtion lies.

Otes. Sir Samuel Aſtrey, Pray be pleaſed to read them in Engliſh, that the Jury may underſtand them. Firſt read Ireland's Record.

[Which was done.

Otes. Now read Whitebread's Record: Read but the Attainder, I will not trouble the Court with the whole Record.

Cl. of Cr. "Thomas White aliàs Whitebread, William Harcourt aliàs Harriſon, John Fenwick, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, were found guilty of High Treaſon, and attainted, and Execution awarded againſt them upon that Attainder.

Otes. Does not the Record ſay, The Jurors ſay upon their Oaths they are guilty.

L. C. J. Yes, I'll warrant you.

Cl. of Cr. It is Dicunt ſuper ſacramentum ſuum.

Otes. Very well. Theſe, my Lord, I do produce as my firſt Evidence, to prove that there was a traiterous Conſult, held upon the 24th of April 78, at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, it having been believed and affirmed by two Verdicts. Now give me leave to offer but this to the Court, That at the Tryal of Mr. Ireland I gave ſo full and ample a Teſtimony againſt Whitebread and Fenwick, accompanied with all the Circumſtances of Time and Place, That my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid, The Evidence might be ſufficient to have ſatisfied a private Conſcience, tho' it was not a legal Proof then to convict him, there being but one Witneſs againſt them: And for this I call Mr. Robert Blayney.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. Blayney.

[Which was done.

L. C. J. What do you ask Mr. Blayney?

Otes. Mr. Blayney, Have you your Notes of Ireland's Tryal here?

Mr. Blayney. Yes, Sir, I have.

Otes. Pray, will you look into what my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid when he diſcharged the Jury of Whitebread and Fenwick.

Mr. Blayney. Whereabouts is it, Sir, in the Printed Tryal?

Otes. It is Page 55.

Mr. Blayney. I have found the Place, what is it you would ask me about it?

Otes. Whether my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs did not uſe theſe Words to the Jury? "I do "acknowledge that Mr. Otes has given a very full "and ample Teſtimony accompanied with all the Cir- "cumſtances of Time and Place, againſt them all; "That may go far with you, all things conſidered, to "believe there is a Plot: Yet I do not think they "have proved it againſt Whitebread and Fenwick "by Two Witneſſes, tho' the Teſtimony be ſo full as "to ſatisfy a private Conſcience, yet we muſt go ac- "cording to Law too. It will be convenient from "what is already proved, to have them ſtay till more "Proof come in; 'Tis a great Evidence that is againſt "them, but it not being ſufficient in Point of Law, "We diſcharge you of them. It is not a legal Proof "to convict them by, whatſoever it may be to ſatisfy "your Conſciences.

Mr. Blayney. I have look'd upon my Notes, and I cannot find exactly thoſe Words.

L. C. J. He ſays he cannot find that Paſſage as it is there.

Mr. Blayney. There is ſomething to that purpoſe, my Lord.

Otes. Pray, Sir, will you look into your Notes in the very ſame place, what my Lord Chief Baron ſaid: "You muſt (ſpeaking to the Jaylor) "underſtand they are no way acquitted: The Evidence "is ſo full againſt them by Mr. Otes's Teſtimony, "that there is no Reaſon to acquit them; it is as flat "as by one Witneſs can be.

Mr. Blayney. There is ſuch a Paſſage, I find, in my Notes.

L. C. J. He ſays there is ſuch a Paſſage.

Otes. Then I deſire Mr. Blayney would look into his Notes, what my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid in his ſumming up the Evidence againſt Ireland? He mentions the Evidence of Sir Dennis Aſhburnham, who was produced to diſcredit me, and then he adds, "When the Matter is ſo ac- "companied with ſo many other Circumſtances which "are material things, and cannot be evaded or deny'd, "it is almoſt impoſſible for any Man either to make "ſuch a Story or not to believe it when it is told.—— It is Ireland's Tryal, page 72.

Mr. Blayney. My Lord, I do find ſuch a Paſſage in my Notes.

L. C. J. He ſays there is ſuch a Paſſage in his Notes.

Otes. Then I would ask Mr. Blayney another Queſtion at the bringing in the Verdict of the Jury againſt Ireland, Pickering and Grove, my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs (that then was) had this Expreſſion: You have done, Gentlemen, like "very good Subjects, and very good Chriſtians, that "is to ſay, like very good Proteſtants; and now "much good may their 30000 Maſſes do them.

Mr. Blayney. Yes, my Lord, there is in my Notes ſuch an Expreſſion of my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs.

Otes. Pray you, Mr. Blayney, have you Whitebread's Tryal? The Tryal of the five Jeſuits, I mean.

Mr. Blayney.

Mr. Blayney. My Lord, When I received a Subpœna from Mr. Otes to be here this Day, and to bring my Notes of Ireland, Whitebread and Langhorn's Tryals, I did (as I did before upon another occaſion, make a Search for all my Notes, but could not find any but thoſe of the Tryal of Ireland and Langhorn, and thoſe I have brought here, but have not Whitebread's.

L. C. J. He ſays he has not the Notes of Whitebread's Tryal; he cannot find them.

Otes. Then I muſt deſire, my Lord, that the Printed Tryals may be read.

L. C. J. No, they are no Evidence: If you can prove what was ſaid at any of them, you may by Witneſſes, but not by the Printed Books.

Otes. Then will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to give me leave to mention what was ſaid by your Lordſhip at that time, when you were Recorder of London, about your Satisfaction with the Evidence?

L. C. J. Ay, with all my heart, and whatever I ſaid, I will own, if I can remember it.

Otes. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to be ſworn then?

L. C. J. No, there will be no need for that; I will acknowledge any thing I ſaid then.

Otes. Then, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I will read thoſe Paſſages out of the Books.

L. C. J. Ay, do ſo.

Otes. Says Mr. Recorder of London, (in particular to that part of the Priſoners Defence, at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, and the full Scope given them of making Objections to the Evidence) when he gave Judgment of Death upon theſe five Jeſuits and Langhorn, (for I now ſpeak of your Lordſhip in the third Perſon) "Your "ſeveral Crimes have been proved againſt you; you "have been fully heard, and ſtand convicted of thoſe "Crimes you have been indicted for.

L. C. J. I believe I might ſay ſomething to the ſame purpoſe as you have read now.

Otes. I thank your Lordſhip for that Acknowledgment.

L. C. J. Ay, I'll own any thing I did ſay.

Otes. My Lord, I have one Paſſage more to urge, and that was, my Lord, after the Jeſuits had been convicted, when the Jury brought in their Verdict, and found Whitebread, Fenwick, Harcourt, Gaven, and Turner guilty, your Lordſhip applying your ſelf to the Jury, ſaid thus to them; "Gentlemen, you of the Jury, there has been "a long Evidence given againſt the Priſoners at the "Bar; they were all indicted, arraigned, and tryed, "for High Treaſon depending upon ſeveral Circum- "ſtances: They cannone of them ſay the Court re- "fuſed to hear any thing they could ſay for themſelves, "but upon a long Evidence, and a patient Hearing "of the Defence they made, they are found guilty, "and for any thing appears to us it is a juſt Verdict "you have given.

L. C. J. I believe I might ſay ſomething to that purpoſe too at that time; and no doubt the Jury did (as the Caſe then ſtood) find an unexceptionable Verdict.

Otes. There is another place, my Lord, that I would inſtance in, for your Lordſhip's Opinion of the Evidence of the Popiſh Plot, and that is this: Now, my Lord, I bring your Lordſhip as you were of Counſel for the King at Mr. Colledge's Tryal at Oxford, the 17th of Auguſt 81. There you, my now Lord Chief Juſtice, directing your ſelf to the Jury, had this Expreſſion; "We come not here to trip up the Heels of the "Popiſh Plot, by ſaying that any of them who ſuf- "fer'd for it did die contrary to Law; for if Mr. "Dugdale was not a Perſon fit to be believed, or "if the reſt of the Judges who try'd Gaven were out "in the Law, then that Man died wrongfully; for "he had as much right to be try'd according to Law "as any other Perſon whatſoever. This was your Lordſhip's Opinion of the Matter then, and your Lordſhip, as Counſel for the King, did there deliver the Law as well as Fact to the Jury. If then they went againſt Law that would go to trip up the Heels of the Popiſh Plot——

Mr. Juſt. Withins. We are got into an endleſs Wood of Sayings of People, I know not where and when; and when all is done, it is to no purpoſe.

Otes. My Lord, it is a part, and a great part of my Defence, to ſhew what credit has been given to the Evidence of the Popiſh Plot.

L. C. J. Ay, but what Counſel ſays at the Bar, or what Judges ſay in the Court of their Opinion, is no Evidence of a Fact, of which the Jury are Judges only.

Otes. My Lord, Every Judge is upon his Oath, and delivers his Judgment according to his Oath.

L. C. J. Not as to the Fact, but only in Points of Law, ſo as to tell the Jury what the the Law is, if the Fact be ſo and ſo.

Otes. My Lord, It goes a great way with the Jury to have the Judge's Opinion.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes, Deceive not your ſelf; all this you have inſiſted on hitherto, has not been to the purpoſe, nor is any ſort of Evidence in this Caſe; and therefore do not run away with an Opinion of this as Evidence; a Judge's Opinion is of Value in Points of Law that ariſe upon Facts found by Juries, but are no Evidence of the Fact; for Judges only do preſume the Fact to be true, as it is found by the Jury; and therefore ſay they, Out of that Fact ſo found, the Point of Law ariſing is thus or thus. Then in caſe, after a Jury has given a Verdict of the Fact, a Judge's Opinion of the Fact, (which may be perhaps contrary to the Verdict) ſhould be an Evidence as to that Fact, that would be to overthrow and nullify the Jury's Verdict: No, that is not the Judge's Province. Surely you would not have a Judge's private Opinion, that Twelve men have found a Verdict againſt the Fact, to be an Evidence as to that Fact: No; but admit the Fact to be ſo or ſo, then the Perſon convicted of the Fact ought to ſuffer ſo or ſo. And by the ſame reaſon as this, a Jury of honeſt Gentlemen here, when I tell them here is a plain Fact either to convict you or to acquit you upon this Indictment, are not bound to go by what I ſay in Point of Fact, but they are to go according to their own Oaths, and according to the Evidence and Teſtimony of the Witneſſes: It is not my Opinion that is to weigh at all with them, whether you are guilty of this Perjury, or are innocent, but the Evidence that is given here in Court. Therefore what my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid at any of thoſe Tryals, or what I ſaid, or any other Perſon, that either was of Counſel, or a Judge on the Bench, ſaid as our Opinions, is but our Opinions on the Fact as it occurred to our preſent Apprehenſions, but is no Evidence nor

nor binding to this Jury. I muſt tell you, there is no doubt but that thoſe Juries did every one of them believe the Evidence you gave, or they would not have convicted the Priſoners. Do you think they would have found a Verdict againſt their own Belief, and being upon their Oaths to make true Deliverance between the King and the Priſoners, have perjured themſelves to hang others? If they had ſo done, they had committed wilful Murther, and the worſt of Murthers too, being under colour of the Proceſs of Law; but yet all this is no Evidence. I do not diſcommend you for inſinuating theſe things as introductive and preparative to what Evidence you have to offer; but it is no Evidence one way or other. Alack-a-day! how many times have we Cauſes here in Weſtminſter-hall, wherein we have Verdict againſt Verdict? And yet no Imputation to either of the Juries, which might give different Verdicts upon different Grounds. There was a notable Caſe lately of my Lady Ivies at this Bar: We all thought upon the firſt Tryal, that ſhe had as good a Title to the Land as could be; all the Judges and the Counſel went away (I believe) ſatisfied with the Jury's Verdict for her: But when the Cauſe came to be heard again, we found all the Witneſſes to prove her Title, were guilty of notorious Perjury, and the ſame Perſons which did believe before that ſhe was in the right, and the Jury had done well, when they heard the ſecond Tryal did believe ſhe was in the wrong, and accordingly the ſecond Jury found it ſo; and we believe that laſt Verdict to be good, without any Reflection on the Credit of the firſt Jury, becauſe the Evidence was as ſtrong on her ſide then, as it was afterwards againſt her. In theſe Caſes we give our Opinions always according to the preſent Teſtimony that is before us.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I offer this to your Conſideration, That thoſe Men that were thus charged by me with High Treaſon, were Prieſts and Jeſuits moſt of them, and particularly Mr. Ireland, in whoſe Tryal I am ſaid to have committed this Perjury, and you ſhall find him to have been by others proved a Prieſt and a Jeſuit, and actually engaged in a Deſign againſt the Life of the King. If I then do prove that Ireland was engaged in a Deſign againſt the late King's Life, and was a Prieſt and a Jeſuit, I deſire to know, Whether this be not a Collateral Evidence to render me of Credit ſufficient, and ſupport my Teſtimony?

L. C. J. By no means upon this Indictment. It's true it may give ſome Credit to your Teſtimony, but is not of it ſelf ſufficient: Nay, I'll go a great way further than that; I will ſuppoſe that there was a Conſult of the Jeſuits upon the 24th of April 78, at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, where thoſe you ſay were preſent, were all preſent, Ireland, and Whitebread, and Pickering, Grove and Fenwick, were all there, and that they did there come to a Reſolution to deſtroy the late King: Suppoſe all this to be true, and yet you all this time are not innocent of the Fact imputed to you, becauſe you ſwore directly, That you were there at that Conſult too, which you were not, if theſe Men ſwear true, for then you were at St. Omers at that time; and therefore give us ſome ſort of Teſtimony to ſatisfy us that you were here, and then you will ſet all right again. If the Jeſuits and Prieſts did plot, that is nothing to make your Evidence true, if you ſwore that which you did not know of your own Knowledge.

Otes. Shall it be allow'd then that Ireland was a Jeſuit and a Papiſt?

L. C. J. If it ſhould, that will be to very little purpoſe for your Turn.

Otes. There is the Evidence of a Record for it, my Lord; but if that be not ſufficient, I can call Witneſſes to prove it. Pray call Mr. Miles Prance.

Which was done, but he did not appear.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. He was ſubpœna'd, my Lord, to come hither.

L. C. J. I can't help it, if he will not come; but I'll tell you, for method's ſake, not to preſcribe to you, but to tell you what I think may be more for your Advantage than any of theſe Inferences that you are making. If you did call two or three Witneſſes to prove that you were in Town the 22d, 23d, or 24th of April, it would be the beſt Defence you can make, and would give the beſt Anſwer to all that is objected againſt you.

Otes. I will do that, my Lord, then, and follow your Directions.

L. C. J. Do ſo, that is the beſt way.

Otes. Cryer, call Cecilia Mayo.

Cryer. Here ſhe is.

Otes. Swear her. [Which was done.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask this Witneſs?

Otes. Pray, Mrs. Mayo, give my Lord and the Jury an account, whether you did ſee me in London the latter part of April or the beginning of May 78? For that is the Queſtion now before the Court.

L. C. J. Ay, what ſay you? When did you ſee him in 78?

Mrs. Mayo. My Lord, I ſaw him the latter end of April: He came to Sir Richard Barker's Houſe, where I did then live, and afterwards he came again thither within a few Days. By this Circumſtance I remember it; Sir Richard Barker my Maſter was ſick all the Month of April, and in the Country, only he came now and then home for a little while, and went again: Now Mr. Otes came there when he was abſent, and a young Man that lived in the Houſe came to me, and told me, There was Mr. Otes in the ſtrangeſt Diſguiſe that ever was. Says he, I think he is turn'd Quaker: No, ſaid I, he is no Quaker, for they were no Perriwigs, and I rebuk'd the young Man for ſaying ſo. As for Mr. Otes, I never ſaw his Face before that time that I know of.

L. C. J. How do you know that to be Mr. Otes then?

Mrs. Mayo. The Family knew him, and they told me it was he: That is the Gentleman there. I ſpeak now nothing but that which I teſtified ſeven Years ago, and it is all Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Ay, no doubt of it, thou ſweareſt nothing but the Truth.

Mrs. Mayo. My Lord, He came three or four Days afterwards again to the Houſe, and then the young Man came to me, and told me, That Parſon Otes was turn'd Jeſuit; and thereupon I ſaid to him, Good Lord! Why doſt thou concern thy ſelf with him? Can'ſt not let him alone? I look'd upon him, and ſaw him at that time: And when he came that time, he went to Sir Richard's Lady's Sister, who is now in Wales, and coming to her, said she, Mr. Otes, I hear you are turn'd Jesuit, and we can have no Society with you now: At last, he stay'd to Dinner with them, and stay'd most of the Day there. Then he comes the latter end of May; Whitsuntide was in May that Year, and I know he came before Whitsuntide by this Token; I speak of the second time of his Coming: Our Custom in the House was to wash and scowre before the time, and I was sending for a Woman to come and help to wash and scowre, and then he was walking in the Garden; and the young Man came and told me Otes was there: He came into the Pantry to me, Look, said he, he is come again, and he is turn'd Jesuit by his Disguise: Why Benjamin, said I, what hast thou to do with the Man? Can'st not let him alone?

L. C. J. What was the Name of that young Man you speak of?

Mrs. Mayo. Truly, my Lord, he is dead, or he would have testified the same thing.

L. C. J. But what was his Name?

Mrs. Mayo. Benjamin; I can't tell his other Name.

L. C. J. Well, go on.

Mrs. Mayo. Said I to him, Why dost thou scorn this Man? Prithee get out of the Room, I am not able to hear it: So he walk'd the space of an Hour in the Garden.

L. C. J. Is Sir Richard Barker living?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, my Lord, he is, but he is not well.

L. C. J. Was he at home when Otes was there?

Mrs. Mayo. No, my Lord, I think not.

L. C. J. Who din'd with him, do you say, when he din'd there?

Mrs. Mayo. My Lady's Sister.

L. C. J. What is her Name?

Mrs. Mayo. Madam Thurrel.

L. C. J. And who else?

Mrs. Mayo. And her Sons.

L. C. J. Where are they?

Mrs. Mayo. They are both dead.

L. C. J. And who else was there?

Mrs. Mayo. One Dr. Cocket.

L. C. J. Where is he?

Mrs. Mayo. He is in Wales too, my Lord.

L. C. J. 'Tis a great Misfortune to have so many dead, or so far remote.

Otes. My Lord, Six Years time makes a great Alteration in a Family.

L. C. J. Was there any body else there?

Mrs. Mayo. There were two of the Daughters, and they could all come and testify the same thing.

L. C. J. Where are they, and what is become of them? Why are they not here?

Mrs. Mayo. They are living in Lincolnshire, my Lord, I think.

L. C. J. What else have you more to say?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Mrs. Mayo, let me ask you a Question: What colour'd Cloaths had he on when you saw him first?

Mrs. Mayo. He had a whitish Hat, and colour'd Cloaths.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time of the Day was it you saw him?

Mrs. Mayo. In the Morning.

L. C. J. Did he go publickly?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, he went publickly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he come often to the House?

Mrs. Mayo. He was there frequently, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then it seems he was so disguis'd that he could walk publickly in the Streets of London at Noon-day, and was frequently in the Family.

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Now tell me who was in the Family?

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Mayo.——

L. C. J. Pray, give me leave to ask her the Question: Who was there at that time?

Mrs. Mayo. Sir Richard Barker's Lady's Sister, Madam Thurrel, and his two Daughters, and two of his Kinsmen, and two of the Servants, one is here a Witness now.

L. C. J. Who is that that is a Witness now?

Mrs. Mayo. One that belongs to Sir Richard Barker, and the other is now dead, and those two Kinsmen are dead.

L. C. J. What is become of the two Daughters, say you?

Mrs. Mayo. They are in Lincolnshire, as I take it, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you hear from them?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, It is half a Year ago almost since Mr. Otes had notice of this Tryal.

L. C. J. Where is Sir Richard Barker himself?

Mrs. Mayo. I was with Sir Richard Barker, and he purposed to have come hither; but being a crazy Man, and ancient, it seems he could not, and desired to be excus'd, for he had a bad Night, and was not well; but he desired that the Court should know, if he were well, he would be there.

Mr. At. Gen. Were you sworn at a former Tryal about this Matter, Mrs. Mayo?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember what you swore then?

Mrs. Mayo. The same I do now.

Mr. At. Gen. Then I ask you this Question, How long before Whitsuntide was it that you saw Mr. Otes at Sir Richard Barker's?

Mrs. Mayo. A pretty while before, twice.

Otes. Mrs. Mayo, I'll put you a fair Question, Whether or no it might not be a Fortnight before Whitsuntide, you think?

Mrs. Mayo. The last time I saw you was a Week before Whitsuntide.

L. C. J. How can you tell it was but a Week?

Mrs. Mayo. 'Twas but a Week, because at that time I had sent the Boy for the Woman to scowre and wash there.

L. C. J. Was that the last time you saw him?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes: I saw him several times before, and it was all before Whitsuntide.

L. C. J. How long before that was the first time that you saw him?

Mrs. Mayo. He would be away for three or four Days, and come again.

L. C. J. But how long before the last time, was the first time you saw him?

Mrs. Mayo. He came still to and again.

L. C. J. When was the time that you saw him next before the Week before Whitsuntide, which, as you say, was the last time you saw him?

Mrs. Mayo.

Mrs. Mayo. I am not able to ſay that.

L. C. J. Did you believe it was within the compaſs of a Week before?

Mrs. Mayo. To the beſt of my remembrance it was.

L. C. J. When was the firſt time you ſaw him?

Mrs. Mayo. 'Twas in the beginning of May.

L. C. J. You ſaid at firſt it was at the latter end of April.

Mrs. Mayo. Pray, my Lord, let me a little think; I am unwilling to be miſtaken, I would ſay nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. No, I would not have thee; but for God's ſake, let us have the Truth, that is that we look for.

Mrs. Mayo. I ſay, the Coach-man ſaw him there as well as I, and he can tell you better than I.

L. C. J. But I ask you this Queſtion poſitively, Was it in May or April?

Mrs. Mayo. To the beſt of my remembrance it was the beginning of May.

L. C. J. Was it within a Week of May?

Mrs. Mayo. I believe it was, I cannot tell exactly to a Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it ſo or not?

Mrs. Mayo. I cannot be poſitive to a Day; it is now ſix Years time ſince I was firſt examined about it.

Mr. At. Gen. But you can remember what you ſwore then, can't you?

Mrs. Mayo. I declare it, I ſpeak not a Syllable, but I will aver to be true, before the great God.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you ſwear it was within the firſt ſeven Days of May?

L. C. J. You ſee, Mr. Sollicitor, ſhe ſays ſhe cannot.

Mr. At. Gen. Did not you ſay at that Tryal, that you did never ſee his Face till a Week before Whitſuntide, or a little after?

Mrs. Mayo. I did ſwear the ſame that I do now, to the beſt of my remembrance, and that is the Truth.

Mr. At. Gen. But did not you ſwear ſo?

Mrs. Mayo. I never ſaw him before that firſt time he came to Sir Richard Barker's, and after the laſt time that he came, I ſaw him not till after the Plot was diſcovered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long was that after he had been at your Maſter's Houſe?

Mrs. Mayo. It was a good while, I cannot tell how long.

L. C. J. Was it within a Month, or two Months?

Mrs. Mayo. It was more, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where was Sir Richard Barker at that time?

Mrs. Mayo. He was at Putney.

L. C. J. Then he did not ſee him?

Mrs. Mayo. Not then he did not.

L. C. J. Did he afterwards?

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, he did ſee him afterwards.

L. C. J. How long afterwards was it?

Mrs. Mayo. I can't tell how long afterwards it was, my Lord.

L. C. J. About what time was it?

Mrs. Mayo. After the Plot was diſcovered he was up and down in the Family.

L. C. J. You never knew Mr. Otes before that time he came in a Diſguiſe, and you did not know him then, but as they told you it was he?

Mrs. Mayo. No, I did not, but as they told me then; and this is the Man, I'll ſwear it.

Otes. Call John Butler.

Cryer. Here is John Butler.

Otes. Swear him. [Which was done.

My Lord, if you pleaſe I will propoſe my Queſtions to your Lordſhip; and my firſt Queſtion is this, I pray your Lordſhip would ask him, Whether he gave in any Evidence at the five Jeſuits Tryal, or Langhorn's Tryal, about my being in Town in April or May, 78?

L. C. J. Did you give any Evidence at the Five Jeſuits Tryal?

Butler. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Did you give any Evidence at Langhorn's Tryal?

Butler. Yes, my Lord, I was a Witneſs there.

Otes. My Lord, it is ſo long ago, that ignorant People that come innocently without deſign, may not be ſo ready in their remembrance, as thoſe that conn'd their Leſſon for ſo long time together.

L. C. J. Well, well; what do you ask him next, Whether he will ſtand by that Evidence he gave then?

Butler. That is all I have to ſay, my Lord: I did teſtifie the Truth then, and will abide by it.

L. C. J. But he muſt give the ſame over again here, or it will ſignifie nothing.

Otes. My Lord, it is now ſix Years ſince, and this Queſtion was not thought to be ſtirr'd ſo long after: Therefore I beg ſo much Favour, that the Evidence he did give at Mr. Langhorn's Tryal may be read to him.

L. C. J. O by no means.

Otes. My Lord, it is ſuch a diſtance of time—

L. C. J. Look ye, if he has any Notes himſelf, he may look on them to refreſh him.

Otes. My Lord, he comes raw hither, without any Inſtruction at all.

L. C. J. So ſhould every Witneſs: God forbid we ſhould countenance the inſtructing of Witneſſes what they ſhould ſwear.

Otes. I beg your Pardon, my Lord, I did hope this Favour might be granted: I will then ask him ſome Queſtions.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, do, Refreſh his Memory by Queſtions as much as you can. Come, I'll ask him ſome Queſtions for you: Do you remember you ſaw Mr. Otes at any time in the Year 78?

Butler. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, as near as I can remember, I ſaw him in May before the Plot was diſcovered.

L. C. J. That was the Year 78.

Butler. I am ſure I did ſee him about that time.

L. C. J. Where did you ſee him?

Butler. I was a Servant to Sir Richard Barker, and Mr. Otes I had been acquainted with before he went to Sea; he uſed to come to my Maſter's Houſe frequently, and divers times he din'd at the Table, and I waited upon my Maſter there.

L. C. J. When was it that he din'd there at the Table?

Butler. A Year before that time in May that I ſpoke of before: It was before he went to Sea.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. When did you ſee him again?

Butler. After he came from Sea, I ſaw him at my Maſter's Houſe.

L. C. J. When was it that he went to Sea?

Butler. It was a Year or two before the May that I ſaw him diſguis'd coming to my Maſter's Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Ay, what Diſguiſe did he come in?

Butler. His Hair was cut off, cloſe cropt to his Ears, and an old white Hat over his Head, and a ſhort gray Coat over like a Horſe-man's Coat.

L. C. J. How came you to take ſuch notice of him at that time, as to be able to ſwear when this was?

Butler. I was call'd preſently after for a Witneſs.

L. C. J. How long after this was it, that you were call'd to be a Witneſs?

Butler. It was when the Tryals were at the Old Bailey.

L. C. J. Was this the firſt time you had recollected theſe Circumſtances?

Butler. Yes, my Lord, that was the firſt time.

L. C. J. Then how came you a Year and an half's time afterwards to remember the preciſe Month of May, when you did not know you ſhould be call'd to queſtion about it, and yet you cannot remember the time particularly when Otes went to Sea, but take the Compaſs of a Year or two?

Butler. I gueſs it was a Year before, I cannot exactly tell.

L. C. J. When you can but gueſs at the time of ſuch a remarkable Paſſage, within the Compaſs of a Year or two, how can you pitch upon the very Month for ſuch a thing as this is, a Year and an half's time after?

Otes. No, my Lord, it was not ſo long as a Year and an half.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, have patience.

Otes. My Lord, The Records ſhew, that Ireland's Tryal was the 17th of December 78, and the five Jeſuits Tryal was the 15th of June 79.

L. C. J. Then it is a full twelve-month's time and more from the May that he ſays he ſaw you at Sir Richard Barker's, to Whitebread's Tryal, in which he was examin'd the firſt time. Now that which I deſire of him is, to give me a reaſon why he remembers it was in the May was twelve-month before?

Butler. My Lord, The Lady whom I did ſerve, died in February before, that Year.

L. C. J. But give me ſome reaſon of your Remembrance ſo long after.

Butler. My Lord, I do as well as I can.

L. C. J. Well, what is it?

Butler. My Lady was buried in February, and he comes into the Yard where I was cleaning my Coach, in May following that February, which was May before the Diſcovery of the Plot. He ask'd me what Alteration was in the Family? I told him my Lady was dead, and the Eſcutcheon was over the Door for her. He ask'd for Dr. Tongue when he came firſt in the Houſe.

L. C. J. Why ſhould he ask for Dr. Tongue?

Butler. My Lord, Dr. Tongue lodged there, and he did ask for him; I come to juſtify the Truth; upon my Salvation what I ſay is true.

L. C. J. Well, when he ask'd whether Dr. Tongue was within, what ſaid you?

Butler. I told him no; but he went into the Room where Dr. Tongue us'd to lie, but found him not there: So he went out again; that was the ſame time Mrs. Mayo ſaw him.

L. C. J. But, Friend, prithee mind what I ask thee, becauſe thou muſt give me ſatisfaction how thou com'ſt to remember this, ſo as to be able to ſwear it; for his going to ask for Tongue, or the Eſcutcheon being over the Door, neither of thoſe can be a Reaſon for you to remember that this was in May, for the Eſcutcheon may be up in June, or in July, or in Auguſt, or in any other Month after the time you ſpeak of: But how came you to take notice of this Buſineſs that it was in May?

Butler. Sir Richard Barker my Maſter was then ſick at Putney, which was in May, tho' I cannot ſpeak to a Day or a Week particularly.

L. C. J. Then prithee let me ask thee this Queſtion, How long had your Maſter been ſick before that?

Butler. He had never been well ſince my Lady died.

L. C. J. When was it that your Lady died?

Butler. In February before.

L. C. J. How long after that did your Maſter Sir Richard Barker continue ſick?

Butler. Half a Year, I believe.

L. C. J. Why then, ſuppoſe your Maſter fell ſick immediately after your Lady died, and he continued ſick half a Year after, yet all this while Otes might come during his Sickneſs even in the Month of June or July, when 'tis acknowledg'd he was in Town, and not be here in February, which is teſtified by a great many Witneſſes.

Butler. My Lord, I tell your Lordſhip the Truth, it was in May.

L. C. J. But how doſt thou come to take notice it was in the Month of May, ſo as to be able to ſwear it?

Butler. My Lord, I tell your Lordſhip my Lady was dead, and the Eſcutcheon was over the Door.

L. C. J. So it might be, tho' he came in June or July, I tell ye.

Butler. My Maſter was ſick at Putney at that time.

L. C. J. How long did he lie ſick at Putney?

Butler. He was ſick there a Fortnight, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then prithee when did thy Maſter go to Putney?

Butler. I cannot tell to a Day.

L. C. J. In what Month was it that he went?

Butler. It was the latter end of April, my Lord, as I remember.

L. C. J. How long continued he ſick at Putney?

Butler. The matter of a Fortnight.

L. C. J. Was not your Maſter ſick, when your Lady died, at Putney?

Butler. No, he was not there then.

L. C. J. When did he go to Putney, ſay ye?

Butler. He went not thither till the latter end of April, my Lord.

L. C. J. And did he continue at Putney but a Fortnight?

Butler.

Butler. Not at a time, but he continued going and coming a quarter of a Year.

L. C. J. But this was the firſt time of his going, was it?

Butler. Yes, as I do remember.

Otes. My Lord, He is my Witneſs, and I deſire I may examine him.

L. C. J. Hold there, Mr. Otes; he is mine too: All the Witneſſes are mine to ſatisfy me in the Truth of the Fact.

Otes. And to ſatisfy the Jury too, my Lord.

L. C. J. Yes, and to ſatisfy the Jury too; but I muſt and will ſift out the Truth, for both our Satisfactions.

Otes. My Lord, It is now, come the next Month, ſix Years ago ſince the Evidence of this Matter was firſt given by theſe Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Then, Mr. Otes, I'll come a little rounder to you, and I'll put you into a certain way of clearing this Buſineſs. I'll tell you what you ſhall do; You had a Lodging in Town, as well as Diet, and as well as you did eat at Dr. Barker's ſometimes, ſo you eat and lay ſometimes elſewhere. You were here in Town a great while together, if your own Aſſertions be true; for you were from April till June in Town. Now come and give us account by ſome Witneſſes, if you can, where did you lodge at that time, and where did you diet? For it ſeems you had but one Meal at Sir Richard Barker's.

Otes. Is that the Queſtion, Sir, here in hand?

L. C. J. Ay indeed is it, and the main one too.

Otes. I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon if I miſtake, but I think that is not now in queſtion; for theſe St. Omers Men do ſwear, That I was all April and May at St. Omers: Then if I do prove that in April and May I was not at St. Omers, but here in London, it is Argument good enough againſt them that their Evidence is falſe. And indeed, can your Lordſhip or the Jury expect that I being then engag'd among and for the Papiſts, and afterwards an Evidence againſt them to diſcover their Treaſons, can bring any of them to teſtify for me now? No, they will as certainly forſwear themſelves, as theſe young Fellows have all done.

L. C. J. Let me ask you a ſhorter Queſtion: Did you always lie in a Papiſt Houſe, all the two Months you ſay you were here?

Otes. My Lord, I lay at ſeveral Houſes.

L. C. J. Tell me the Names of thoſe Houſes, or any of them.

Otes. It is not to the Point in queſtion here, my Lord.

L. C. J. Yes it is very much; but I perceive it is a Secret, and let any body judge why.

Otes. My Lord, They that have by the Principles of their Religion, Liberty to affirm or deny any thing, and can have Diſpenſations for the Violations of Oaths and Sacraments, certainly are not to be admitted as Witneſſes in ſuch a Caſe as this.

L. C. J. Talk not to me of Diſpenſations and I know not what; I ſpeak from a plain demonſtrative Proof: Can it be believed that you ſhould be here in England ſo long, and as they ſay, publickly, and no Perſon living ſee you that we can hear of, but an Old Woman that never ſaw you, nor knew you before, and a Coachman that tells a wild Story without reaſon: If you will not tell me where you lay, can you tell me where you did eat all that time?

Otes. I can tell where I did lie that time.

L. C. J. Do ſo then. Let us hear it, that will be your beſt Defence.

Otes. Is that the Point, my Lord, in queſtion?

L. C. J. Ay upon my Word is it the main Point in this Caſe.

Otes. If it ſhould go upon that Foot, my Lord, it is impoſſible for me now to prove it; for 'tis well known, I lay ſometimes with Mr. Whitebread, and ſometimes with Mr. Mico, neither of which can I have to teſtify for me; and beſides, I muſt inſiſt upon it, theſe things were in queſtion at Whitebread's Tryal, nor do I believe that Mr. Whitebread, if ask'd at his Death, would have juſtified, and ſtood by it, that I was not here then.

L. C. J. Well, This I muſt certainly ſay, I cannot help it, but it will ſtick with me till better anſwered. I can never be ſatisfied, that if you were here ſo long, there ſhould no better Evidence be produced to prove you here.

Otes. My Lord, Nor can I help your Diſſatisfaction, but I am to ſatisfy all that hear me this Day, that it is a very hard Caſe that is put upon me; I have taken the moſt effectual Courſe that I could, to provide for Evidence to make my Defence; and I think, by your Lordſhip's good Leave, thoſe that I have produc'd, do prove me here in Town in April and May 78. And if your Lordſhip has done with this Witneſs, I'll call another.

L. C. J. Well, go on as you will. I tell you what ſticks with me.

Otes. Pray call Mr. Philip Page.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hold, Sir, a little, I would ask theſe Witneſſes a few Queſtions before they go away. You Butler, Let me ask you, pray, the firſt time you ſaw Mr. Otes at the time you ſpeak of, was it in April or May?

L. C. J. He ſwore it was the beginning of May.

Butler. To the beſt of my Knowledge it was the beginning of May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did you tell firſt, that there was Mr. Otes at that time?

Butler. I told it Mrs. Mayo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Conſider, Friend, what you ſay now, you are upon your Oath, and conſider what you ſaid at the former Tryal, when you were upon your Oath too.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, I deſire my Witneſſes may be examined without Threatnings.

L. C. J. It is not a Threatning, it is an Admonition not to go beyond the Truth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Be ſure you be in the right in what you ſay, and now I ask you upon your Oath, when was the firſt time you ſaw Mr. Otes when he came in that Diſguiſe you ſpeak of?

Butler. I told you it was in May, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How far in May, conſider well what you ſay.

Butler. To the beſt of my Remembrance, it was the beginning of May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you think it was within a Week, or the firſt Ten Days of May?

Butler. I cannot tell that, as well as I remember, it was the beginning of May.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When you ſaw him firſt in May, who elſe, as you remember, was by?

Butler. Mrs. Mayo.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And no body elſe?

Butler. Yes, One Benjamin Turbet, who is ſince dead.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But conſider your Oath, Friend, once more, and recollect your ſelf, Do you ſwear poſitively Mrs. Mayo was by, and did ſee him at the ſame time?

Butler. I ſee her look out of the Window into the Yard, and I believe ſhe did ſee him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well then, Let us examine her Evidence and yours together, and ſee how they agree.

Otes. My Lord, Theſe are not Queſtions tending to ſatisfy the Jury at all, as to the Point in queſtion.

L. C. J. Are they not, methinks they are, whatſoever you think.

Otes. After ſix Years time, to ask ſuch poor ignorant People ſuch trifling Queſtions!

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, be contented, and let the King's Counſel examine the Witneſſes.

Otes. My Lord, He ſays I was here in May, that's enough.

L. C. J. Well, Sir, I know what he ſays.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you ſhall hear Mr. Otes, how your Witneſſes agree.

L. C. J. Go on, Mr. Sollicitor, and do you ſit ſtill and be quiet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, I would ask him this Queſtion more, the firſt time you ſaw Otes come to Sir Richard Barker's, what Habit, pray you, was he in?

Butler. He was in a Diſguiſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, what Diſguiſe?

Butler. He had a white Hat flapping over his Ears; his Hair cut ſhort, cloſe to his Ears, and a grey ſhort Coat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he never a Perriwig on?

Butler. No, his Hair was cut ſhort to his Ears.

Mr. Hanſes. Was he in ſuch a Diſguiſe, that a Man might not ordinarily know him, that had known him before?

Butler. Truly, my Lord, I did not know him when he firſt came in, till he ſpoke to me, and asked me, how do you, John? and then I recollected who he was, that it was Mr. Otes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he always in the ſame Habit, when he came thither?

Butler. The next time he came, he had a Cinnamon-coloured Suit, and a long black Perriwig that was curl'd down thus far, and a black Hat with a green Ribbon and green Cuff-ſtrings about his Wriſts.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee Otes dine there?

Butler. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. When was that?

Butler. After my Maſter came home from Putney.

L. C. J. Who was there beſides?

Butler. One Sir William Thurrell and Madam Thurrell.

L. C. J. How often did he dine there?

Butler. Several times.

L. C. J. Who elſe was there?

Butler. My Maſter and his Daughter.

L. C. J. And who elſe?

Butler. Mrs. Mayo.

L. C. J. What is become of your Maſter's Daughter?

Butler. I beg your Pardon for that, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is ſhe, Man?

Butler. She is at home, I ſuppoſe.

L. C. J. What doſt thou beg my Pardon for then?

Butler. My Lord, I call to mind ſhe did not dine with them.

L. C. J. Did ſhe dine at any time with him there?

Butler. Yes, I remember ſeveral times, but not then.

L. C. J. When did you ſee your Maſter's Daughter laſt?

Butler. I have not ſeen her this Quarter of this Year.

L. C. J. Where is ſhe now?

Butler. At home at Putney, my Lord, I believe.

L. C. J. And ſhe was ſeveral times there when he din'd there?

Butler. Yes, ſhe was at home.

L. C. J. Did Mrs. Mayo ſee him at Dinner there?

Butler. Yes, I believe ſhe did.

L. C. J. How often did he dine there about this time you ſpeak of?

Butler. Several times.

L. C. J. Do you think ſeven times?

Butler. I do think he might have din'd there ſeven times.

L. C. J. Did he more than ſeven times do you think?

Butler. I cannot number how many times it was.

L. C. J. Now come in Mrs. Mayo again.

Mrs. Mayo. Here I am, my Lord.

L. C. J. Mrs. Mayo, Give me leave to ask you a Queſtion or two.

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, my Lord, what you pleaſe.

L. C. J. You ſay (if I do not miſ-remember; if I do, I beg your Pardon, and you'll correct me) a Week in May was the firſt time you ſaw Mr. Otes, and that was at Sir Richard Barker's.

Mrs. Mayo. I think it might be about the beginning of May.

L. C. J. Had he been in the Houſe before?

Mrs. Mayo. Not at that time that I know of, but as they told me.

L. C. J. Who told you?

Mrs. Mayo. That Coach-man there John Butler, and one Benjamin who liv'd in the Houſe.

L. C. J. Then you did not ſee him the firſt time he came; what ſay you, Butler?

Butler. She did ſee him out of the Window in the Yard.

L. C. J. Well, let that paſs then, come I'll ask you another Queſtion upon your Oath, How often have you ſeen him dine there?

Mrs. Mayo. I ſaw him dine that time that I ſpoke of.

L. C. J. Did not he dine there above once?

Mrs. Mayo. No, he did not.

L. C. J. What ſay you Butler?

Butler. He did dine there ſeveral times with them.

L. C. J. Then one of you two muſt be miſtaken, I am ſure.

Otes. My Lord, If your Lordſhip would pleaſe to give me leave to ſpeak, I would ſet it right.

L. C. J. Good Sir, Let them ſet themſelves right if they can, we need none of your Inſtructions.

Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I desire——

L. C. J. Why, how now; pray, Sir, be at quiet. Mrs. Mayo, Pray what Habit had Otes when you saw him first?

Mrs. Mayo. He was in a grey Hat and a grey Coat.

L. C. J. Was his Hair short or long?

Mrs. Mayo. He had on a kind of a short Wigg.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are sure it was a Wigg.

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, a kind of a brown Perriwig.

L. C. J. And he says his Hair was cut short to his Ears,

Otes. These things are very lean stuff to perjure a Witness upon.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When he came the second time what Cloaths had he on?

Mrs. Mayo. Afterwards he came in black Cloaths and a long Perriwig.

Mr. Hanses. What coulored Perriwig was that, a black or a white one?

Mrs. Mayo. Not a black, but a brown.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say it was long?

Mrs. Mayo. Longer than his other, yet not very long neither.

L. C. J. Here are I know not how many Contradictions in these Witnesses Testimonies.

Otes. Truly, my Lord, I do not find in the Examination of the St. Omers Witnesses, you were so strict, or bore half so hard upon them, as you do upon my Witnesses; what does it signify, my Lord, whether the Wigg were long or short, black or brown?

L. C. J. We have no other way to detect Perjuries, but by these Circumstances; and 'tis the Duty of a Judge to enquire into all Particulars; as in a Controversy about Words, were they spoken in Latin or in English, and so to all Places and Postures of sitting, riding, or the like; as you know the Perjury of the Elders in the Case of Susanna, was by their different Testimony in particular Circumstances discovered.

Otes. My Lord, I will ask her but one short Question, by the Oath you have taken, Mrs. Mayo, to speak the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, as you expect the Face of God with Comfort in another World; Did you see me at Sir Richard Barker's at any time in May 78. the May before the Plot was discovered? For that is the main Question.

Mrs. Mayo. Yes, I did, and I speak nothing here, but what I speak as in the Presence of the Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee, Woman, dost thou think we ask thee any thing that we think thou dost not speak in the Presence of the Lord; we are all of us in the Presence of the Lord always.

Mrs. Mayo. And shall answer before him for all that we have done and said, all of us, the proudest and the greatest here.

L. C. J. But I would not have so much to answer for as thou hast in this Business for all the World.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, we have done with her now, she may go away.

L. C. J. Where does she live now?

Cryer. Mrs. Mayo, Where do you live now?

Mrs. Mayo. In Leaden-hall-street, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did you see Sir Richard Barker's Daughter?

Mrs. Mayo. About a Fortnight ago.

L. C. J. Where?

Mrs. Mayo. In Barbican in London.

L. C. J. Do you live with Sir Richard Barker now?

Mrs. Mayo. I do not live with him now.

L. C. J. Did his Daughter use to be at the Table at Dinner?

Mrs. Mayo. She was often in the Country, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did she eat at his Table at that time when Otes was there?

Mrs. Mayo. I am not able to say whether she did or not; she used to be in Wales at Sir Thomas Middleton's sometimes, and with Madam Thurrell her Aunt, who was her Mother's Sister, and her two Daughters.

L. C. J. In Wales dost thou say, where?

Mrs. Mayo. My Lord, In your own Country, at one Dr. Cocket's; I know your Lordship, tho' your Lordship does not know me.

L. C. J. I am very glad of it, good Woman; but prithee did ever Sir Richard Barker dine with Mr. Otes?

Mrs. Mayo. I cannot say he did, he went to and fro.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more Witnesses?

Cryer. Here he is, Sir.

Otes. Pray swear him. (Which was done.) Pray be pleased to give my Lord and the Jury the best account you can of my being in Town. But, Mr. Page, the Question that I first ask you, is whether I was here in April or May, and in what Year it was that you did see me at your Master's House?

L. C. J. When did you see Mr. Otes at your Master's House? You mean Sir Richard Barker to be his Master, I suppose?

Otes. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you say to it?

Page. Truly, I cannot be positive to the Year, but to the best of my remembrance it was 78.

Otes. Pray tell my Lord and the Jury some Circumstances in that Year that did happen to you, that makes you believe it was 78.

Page. Sir, I'll give you the best Satisfaction I can to the best of my Knowledge; he came to Sir Richard Barker's one Evening, and there he enquired for Dr. Tongue: He was in a Disguise, in a light-coloured Coat, something like to Frize, but it was not Frize; the Term that they give it, I cannot so readily tell. He had his Hair cut short almost to his Ears, and he had a broad brim'd Hat on, and a small Stick in his Hand, walking melancholly about the Hall: I happening to be the first body he met with, as I suppose, he asked me if Dr. Tongue was within; I told him no, I had not seen him of a considerable time: He then asked me where Sir Richard Barker was? I told him he was ill now at Putney; says he, when will he be here? I told him I could not tell.

L. C. J. Did he see any body there but you?

Page. That I cannot tell, my Lord; not that I know of.

L. C. J. What time of the Year was it?

Mr. At. Gen. And what Month?

Page. What Year and what Month it was, I am not able to say, my Lord.

L. C. J. What became of him after that?

Page.

Page. He went out of our Gates then, Sir; he was walking up and down melancholly, and not finding any one, as I ſuppoſe, to anſwer him, he continued walking in the Patient's Hall, where they uſed to wait on Sir Richard Barker, that came to diſcourſe with him about Phyſick; and upon my Anſwer to his Queſtion he went away.

L. C. J. Did you ever ſee him any other time near to that time?

Page. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you uſe to wait on Table?

Page. No, I did not.

L. C. J. What Service were you then engaged in at Sir Richard Barker's?

Page. I made up the Phyſick, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you not acquaint the Coach man, nor Mrs. Mayo, nor Sir Richard Barker with it?

Page. I think Sir Richard Barker was in Town ſoon after, and I did acquaint him with it.

Otes. But can't you tell what time this is, Sir?

Page. I can ſay no other than I have ſaid; I believe it was in 78.

L. C. J. Was this in June, July, or May, or when?

Page. I cannot ſay punctually what Month it was, my Lord; but to the beſt of my Knowledge and Remembrance, it was in the beginning of May.

Otes. Had not your Maſter a Patient at Iſlington at that time, that was ſick of a Fever?

Page. Yes, he had.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Why, would Mr. Otes have given the Patient Phyſick?

Page. No, my Lord, but 'twas about that time that the Patient was under my Maſter's Cure.

Otes. Indeed the St. Omers Men do ſwear thorough-ſtitch, but my honeſt Witneſſes are cautious, it being ſo long ago; and he that is a Miniſter of the Church of England (as they ſay) ſpeaks to a very day, upon a much ſlighter Circumſtance: Pray call Mr. William Walker.

Cryer. Here he is.

Otes. Swear him. (Which was done.) Be pleaſed, Walker, to give my Lord to underſtand, when 'twas you ſaw me here in London in Diſguiſe, and when it was you ſwore ſix Years agon at the Old Bailey, that you ſaw me here in London: Sir, the time in Controverſy is this: I came here to diſcover a Plot of the Papiſts againſt the King's Life and the Religion, and I ſwore——

L. C. J. You muſt not ask Queſtions in that manner. It is propereſt for you to propoſe your Queſtions to the Court, and they will ask the Witneſſes.

Otes. Then I will not ask him, but propoſe it to your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Ay, propoſe what Queſtions you pleaſe, and if they are fair, I'll ask them.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I would ask Mr. Walker this Queſtion; when 'twas he met me with a Diſguiſe, in what Year and what Month?

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I have been interrogated in former times upon this Point, ſix or ſeven Years ago, and I do confeſs I did ſee the Man, and met him between St. Martin's-lane and Leiceſter-fields; and truly, my Lord, I think I may ſay it was my Unhappineſs to meet with him; for I have had a great deal of Trouble by it ſince, Subpœna upon Subpœna, Trouble after Trouble, that I am even weary of it; for I am an old Man: But I do ſay I did meet him at that end of the Town, between St. Martin's-lane and Leiceſter-fields in a ſtrange Diſguiſe; he was juſt like a Vagrant, a very Raſcal, and that's true, I believe, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you know him before?

Mr. Walker. Yes, or I had not known him then.

L. C. J. When was this?

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I'll tell you; my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, when I was at the Old Bailey, asked me if I knew what time it was I ſaw him thus; ſaid I, my Lord, 'tis almoſt a Year and an half ſince I ſaw him; and I being an old Man, little thought it worth the while to lay up the particular time in my Memory; but I'll caſt about in my Thoughts to make the beſt Conjecture I can; for now I will not be upon my Oath, it being but Conjecture.

L. C. J. But now you are upon your Oath, remember that, Man.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I am ſpeaking what I ſaid to the Court at that time.

L. C. J. Pray do not tell us an old tedious Story of the Queſtions and Anſwers in the Old Bailey, but mind what is ſaid to you here, my Queſtion is now, what time you ſaw Otes diſguiſed between St. Martin's-lane and Leiceſter-fields, as you ſay you did.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I cannot preſcribe the time; but I'll gueſs as near as I can with the beſt probability, and that is, upon this Circumſtance; when I went forward into Leiceſter-fields, in the Court before the Houſe, I ſaw the Elm-Trees budded forth as big as an Hazle Nut; ſo that I did conjecture by that Token, it might be between Lady-day and the latter end of April; that was the time as near as I could gueſs.

L. C. J. In what Year was it?

Mr. Walker. I cannot very well tell what Year it was.

L. C. J. Was it in 77 or 78?

Mr. Walker. Truly, my Lord, I never thought it worth ſo much taking notice of, to fix the particular time in my Memory.

Otes. Whether was it that Year the Plot was diſcovered, or the Michaelmas following?

Mr. Walker. I cannot tell when the Plot was diſcovered, or whether it be found out yet or no?

Otes. But was it the Year before you were examined?

Mr. Walker. To anſwer you, Mr. Otes, when it was exactly, I cannot ſay; truly I would give you the beſt Satisfaction I could, and do you as much Right as I would do my ſelf; I think if that time when I was examined, were in 77 or 78, it was near a Year and a quarter before I did ſee you.

L. C. J. Well, what can you make of this?

Otes. 'Tis not to be ſuppoſed he is a very willing Witneſs, but yet he ſays, 'twas a Year and a quarter before the Tryal in which he was examined, which muſt be in April 78.

L. C. J. I would know this Queſtion of you: Were you preſent at the Old Bailey, when the five Jeſuits were tryed?

Mr. Walker. I was there, my Lord.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Were you at any Tryal but one?

Mr. Walker. I was not Examin'd at any time but one.

L. C. J. Have you any more Queſtions to ask him?

Mr. Walker. My Lord Chief Juſtice that then was, did ask me, if I knew any of the Priſoners at the Bar, and I look'd upon all of them, and I ſaid I knew not either of them.

Otes. Pray my Lord, ask him whether he was not produc'd, when the St. Omers Men were produc'd, and gave his Evidence as to my being in Town at that time?

L. C. J. He hears the Queſtion, let him anſwer it?

Mr. Walker. I am not able to anſwer you, becauſe you put ſeveral Queſtions together; but this I ſay, I was never Examined but once, though I have been Subpœna'd often, to my great torment and trouble.

Otes. Did you give Evidence at that Tryal, that you ſaw me in April 78?

Mr. Walker. I teſtified that I ſaw you, and by ſuch Circumſtances, it muſt be about ſuch a time as well as I could ſuggeſt; but I could not, nor cannot ſpeak poſitively.

Otes. Now my Lord, I ſhall go on to another part of my Evidence, and call ſome other Witneſſes, and firſt of all, I come to Mr. Serjeant Maynard, and I deſire he may be ſworn. [Which was done.

L. C. J. What do you ask my Brother, Maynard?

Otes. I call Mr. Serjeant Maynard to give an Account of the Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons upon my Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot.

L. C. J. We will not admit that to be any Evidence at all; nor can it be by Law.

Otes. My Lord, Mr. Serjeant Maynard was one of the Committee of the Houſe of Commons that managed the Impeachment, and can give an Account of the Evidence and Records that were produced at the Tryal of the late Viſcount Stafford.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. I know nothing truly, nor can remember any thing of it now.

L. C. J. He ſays, he remembers nothing.

Mr. Serj. Maynard. If Mr. Otes had told me before hand, when he Subpœna'd me, what time, and what particular things he would have Examin'd me to, probably if I was there, I have Notes that I then took, but I can never ſwear to my Memory, for any Cauſe ſo long ago.

Otes. My Lord, I am very ſorry Mr. Serjeant Maynard's Age ſhould ſo impair his Memory.

L. C. J. I dare ſay, you are not more ſorry than he is for his Age.

Otes. Well, my Lord, I cannot help it: Then I deſire Mr. Blaney may be ask'd whether he has his Notes of my Lord Stafford's Tryal?

Mr. Blayney. No, my Lord, I have them not here; Mr. Otes by his Ticket of his Subpœna, deſir'd only the Notes of Ireland, Whitebread and Langhorn's Tryal.

L. C. J. But I muſt tell you, Mr. Otes, if thoſe Notes were here, they could be of no uſe to you without the Record of my Lord Stafford's Attainder; if you ask any thing upon another Tryal, you muſt produce firſt the Record of that Tryal, and then you may examine to what was given in Evidence at the Tryal.

Otes. My Lord, it is of Record in the Houſe of Lords.

L. C. J. But that we are not to take notice of, without the Record be brought in Evidence before us: We muſt go according to the courſe of Law in all Caſes.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I muſt betake my ſelf to another Part of my Defence, and that is to prove the frequent Attempts made to baffle the Diſcovery of this Popiſh Plot, and to ſtifle the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, and to fling it upon a Proteſtant Peer.

L. C. J. But that is no Evidence neither.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Surely that is very Collateral Evidence.

L. C. J. Nay, it is no Evidence at all in this Caſe; we muſt not admit of any ſuch Evidence to be given.

Otes. Good my Lord, if this had not been true, which was ſworn by Witneſſes that had diſcovered the Plot, why ſhould theſe Men appear to ſuborn Witneſſes (and they have been Convicted of Subornation, and endeavouring) to baffle the Diſcovery, particularly as to Juſtice Godfrey's Death.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes. I muſt keep you to Evidence that is proper; we are upon our Oaths to go according to Law, and the Jury are upon their Oaths to Try this Cauſe according to their Evidence; and we are bound to give them this Advice in Point of Law, that nothing muſt weigh, or have any Conſideration with them, that you offer, if it be not legal and proper Evidence: If you can ſay and prove that any of the Witneſſes that have been produc'd this Day againſt you, have been tamper'd with; or that they have tamper'd with any of the former Evidence, that is a good Evidence againſt them; but it muſt not be by any means admitted that the time of the Court be taken up, or the Jury enveigled by that which has not a natural tendency to the Buſineſs before us.

Otes. But if your Lordſhip pleaſe, this Conſult in April 78. was diſcovered to the Houſe of Commons, among the other parts of the Diſcovery of the Treaſons of ſeveral Noble Men and Gentlemen: Now upon the Diſcovery of the Plot, I would deſire that I might give in Proof the Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons.

L. C. J. No, no, you cannot.

Otes. Pray my Lord, is not the Journal of the Houſe of Commons Evidence?

L. C. J. No, we ſay it is not at all.

Otes. Is that the Opinion of the whole Court, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, undoubtedly, there is no Queſtion of it.

Otes. Is any Record of the Houſe of Lords Evidence?

L. C. J. Yes, I tell you it is, and that becauſe it is a Record; but there is a vaſt difference between the Records of the Houſe of Lords, and the Journals of the Houſe of Commons.

Otes. The Journals have been delivered in as Evidence before now.

L. C. J. I cannot tell what they have been, but I am ſure they ought not to be, and whatever they have been elſewhere, they cannot be here; and I'll tell you a plain reaſon for it, becauſe they have not ſo much Power in the Houſe of Commons as to give an Oath: But the Houſe of Peers is a Court of Record, and therefore their Proceedings are Evidence as the Proceedings of the Kings Bench here; or any Court of Record are.

Otes. Then my Lord, if that part of my Evidence be over-rul'd; before I come to ſum up my Evidence, I deſire to offer this thing. My Lord, I can produce ſeveral Members of the Houſe of Commons in the ſeveral Parliaments, that can remember how they proceeded againſt the Lords in the Tower, and the Popiſh Traitors upon my Diſcovery, and what Credit I had in the Houſe of Commons; Will that be Evidence, pray my Lord?

L. C. J. No, it will not, if you will produce any one that you told this to before the publick Diſcovery, that may be Evidence ſuch as it is, and is often allow'd; but what the Houſe of Commons did upon the Diſcovery, that's not any Evidence at all.

Otes. Then my Lord, ſuppoſe I can prove, that I gave an early and timely Account to any of the Houſe of Lords of this Conſpiracy, and did acquaint them with the Conſult in April as part of it; I deſire to know whether in producing any of thoſe Lords, I ſhall give that which is Evidence?

L. C. J. Call whom you will that you told any thing to, that is a ſort of Evidence, I tell you?

Otes. Then I call my Lord of Devonſhire.

L. C. J. Here is my Lord of Devonſhire.

Otes. My Lord, I beg your Pardon for the trouble I put your Lordſhip to; but your Lordſhip ſees the neceſſity of it: It is for the juſtification of the Truth, to which I will give my Blood for a Seal if I be call'd to it.

L. C. J. My Lord of Devonſhire, your Lordſhip muſt be ſworn. [Which was done.

Otes. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to acquaint the Court and the Jury (your Lordſhip being at that time a Member of the Commons Houſe) what Account I gave there of this particular Conſult (to keep to that Point that is here in queſtion) before the Court this Day, and with what Credit I was received in all theſe Parliaments; for my Credit and the Credit of the Parliament is now in queſtion.

Earl of Devonſhire. My Lord, all I can ſay to it is this; you Mr. Otes gave a long Account of a Conſult and Conſpiracy among the Jeſuits: But I cannot remember any Particular, it is ſo long ago.

L. C. J. Every body knows this, you gave a long Narrative into the Houſe of Commons and Houſe of Lords too.

Otes. Ay, and it was a true one; but my Lord of Devonſhire, I deſire your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to give the Court and the Jury an Account, with what Credit I was received in thoſe three Parliaments your Lordſhip ſat as Member in.

Earl of Devonſhire. I remember that the two Weſtminſter Parliaments after the long Parliament, were ſo ſatisfied with the Diſcovery, that they paſſed a Vote in the Houſe of Commons——

L. C. J. The Votes of the Houſe of Commons are no Evidence at all.

Otes. They ſhow what Opinion the Parliament was of.

L. C. J. Many Votes that have been made of late, I hope will neither be Evidence for, nor put in practice again.

Earl of Devonſhire. My Lord, it is well known to all the World the Vote I ſpeak of.

L. C. J. Nay, my Lord, I ſpeak not to your Lordſhip; for we all know thoſe Votes that I ſpeak of were not according to your Lordſhip's Mind: But we only ſay thus in general, that becauſe the Houſe of Commons cannot give an Oath, therefore what is done there, is not an Evidence here, or in any Court of Record.

Otes. But my Lord, that I muſt urge, I do perceive that in the time of Parliament, and during the Sitting of the Houſe of Commons, Votes have been brought in as Bars to the Proceedings of Inferior Courts; and this Court does not look upon it ſelf as Superior to the Great Court of Parliament, and then if they may be brought——

L. C. J. Which they cannot be, nor never were, nor I am ſure ought to be; nor I hope never will be as long as there is any Juſtice in the Nation.

Otes. But my Lord, you will allow the Records of the Houſe of Lords to be Evidence?

L. C. J. Yes, I tell you, I will, and for that reaſon, becauſe they are Records out of a Court of Record: An Order of Court Baron is no Evidence, becauſe it is no Court of Record; but a Judgment of a Court Leet is Evidence, becauſe it is a Court of Record; and there's the difference.

Otes. My Lord, I call in the next place my Lord of Angleſey, if he be in Court.

L. C. J. No, he is not here.

Otes. Pray will you give me leave to call my Lord Keeper then?

L. C. J. See in the Court of Chancery, whether my Lord Keeper be there.

Cryer. No, my Lord, he is not; he is gone.

Otes. He was Subpœna'd, my Lord, and I can have Affidavit made of it: He was a material Witneſs for me.

L. C. J. I cannot help it; he is not here.

Otes. Pray call my Lord Chief Baron.

L. C. J. Go one of you into the Exchequer, and ſee if my Lord Chief Baron be there, and tell him, Mr. Otes calls for him as a Witneſs.

Otes. And Mr. Juſtice Levins.

Cryer. The Courts are both up; and they are all gone.

Otes. They were ſubpæna'd I am ſure to be here; well, go and ſee, whether they are or no.

L. C. J. In the mean time do you call ſome other Witneſſes.

Otes. I call my Lord Chief Juſtice Jones.

L. C. J. The Cryer is gone to look for the Judges.

Otes. Then I call my Lord of Clare.

L. C. J. Here is my Lord of Clare.

Earl of Clare. My Lord I can remember nothing, it is ſo long time ago.

L. C. J. My Lord of Clare ſays, he can remember nothing.

Otes. I only call my Lord of Clare to ask him one Queſtion which I hope his Lordſhip will remember.

L. C. J. Swear my Lord of Clare. [Which was done.

Well, what is it you ask my Lord?

Otes. My Lord of Clare, the Queſtion I would ask your Lordſhip is, with what Credit I was received in the Houſe of Lords upon my Diſcovery; and that you will to the beſt of your Memory, give my Lord and the Jury an Account, how the Houſe of Peers proceeded upon my Evidence?

Earl of Clare. Truly, my Lord, I cannot give any Account; it is of ſo long ſtanding.

Otes.

Otes. It is a great while ago, my Lord, and therefore it is hard meaſure that I muſt be brought to this Tryal ſo long after.

L. C. J. If it be a long time, we cannot help it: We cannot force People to proſecute ſooner than they will do.

Otes. I deſire Mr. Baron Gregory may be called.

L. C. J. He is not here, but ſee and call my Brother Gregory; I hear they are altogether in the Treaſury.

Otes. Then I call Mr. Williams that was Speaker in the Houſe of Commons.

L. C J. Here is Mr. Williams. [He was ſworn.

Otes. I deſire, Mr. Williams, becauſe you were then Speaker of the Commons Houſe of Parliament, you would be pleaſed to tell what you remember concerning the Credit I received in that Parliament in which you were Speaker, upon the Diſcovery I made of the Popiſh Plot; and particularly as to the Conſult of Jeſuits to kill the late King in the Month of April 78?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, my Memory is never very good; but eſpecially in a Caſe that is at ſuch a diſtance of time, and which conſiſts of ſo many Particulars as this, I mean Mr. Otes's Diſcovery. But this my Lord I do remember; he was examin'd at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, and gave a long Account: But it is more than any Man can do to tell every Particular that is ſaid in that Houſe.

L. C. J. Was he upon his Oath, Mr. Williams, at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, he was as other Men are that are examin'd in the Houſe of Commons.

L. C. J. We all know it could not be upon Oath, they have not Power to give an Oath.

Mr. Williams. What Reputation he was of, I cannot ſay ſo well as what their Proceedings did teſtifie.

L. C. J. Nor in caſe they did believe him never ſo much, is it any thing to this Queſtion, which is, whether he ſwore true or falſe at Ireland's Tryal?

Mr. Williams. My Lord, when a Perſon is brought to the Bar, there to be a Witneſs in any Cauſe, every body is ſilent, and the Witneſs is heard what he has to ſay; and ſo was Mr. Otes: When he had done he withdrew; but what the Opinion of the Houſe was upon it, I muſt ſubmit to their Votes and Reſolutions.

L. C. J. Which you know, Mr. Williams, are no Evidence.

Mr. Williams. That I muſt ſubmit to the Court.

Otes. I deſire my Lord of Clare would be pleaſed to tell, if he remembers, what Credit the Houſe of Lords gave me upon my Diſcovery?

Earl of Clare. My Lord, I do not well hear Mr. Otes's Queſtion.

Otes. My Lord, my Queſtion is this, when I was brought to the Bar of the Lords Houſe, whether I did not receive the Thanks of the Lords Houſe for my Diſcovery?

Earl of Clare. Truly, Sir, at the beginning of the Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot, I was not in Town, nor in the Houſe.

L. C. J. But now Mr. Otes I hope you are ſatisfied by the Anſwer that is given by your own Witneſs, that what is done in the Houſe of Commons, is no Evidence; and I would have you remember that is the Reaſon of it, becauſe they are no Court of Record, and becauſe they cannot ſo much as give an Oath.

Otes. My Lord, I ſee my Lord of Huntingdon is here; and though I did not Subpœna his Lordſhip, nor deſigned to have troubled him; yet being here, I deſire his Lordſhip would give an Account what Credit I had in the Houſe of Lords upon my Diſcovery.

L. C. J. Swear my Lord of Huntingdon. [Which was done.

Earl of Huntingdon. I do believe my Lord, Mr. Otes's Diſcovery found a good reception in the Houſe of the Lords; but it was grounded upon the Opinion, that what he ſaid was true, and that he was an honeſt Man: For ſo the Houſe then accounted him to be; and upon this it was their Lordſhips gave Credit to his Teſtimony; and indeed had the Matter been true, it was of high Importance to have it thoroughly examined: But ſince that time it being apparent there were ſo many, and great Contradictions, Falſities, and Perjuries in his Evidence; upon which ſo much innocent Blood hath been ſhed, I believe a great many Perſons who were concerned in the Tryals of thoſe unfortunate Men, are heartily afflicted and ſorry for their ſhare in it: And I do believe moſt of the Houſe of Peers have altered their Opinion, as to this Man's Credit; and look upon his Evidence as I do, to be very falſe.

L. C. J. Do you hear him, Mr. Otes?

Otes. No, my Lord, I do not very well.

L. C. J. Then my Lord of Huntingdon turn your Face to the Jury; and ſay what you ſaid to us over again.

Which his Lordſhip did to the ſame Effect.

Otes. Very well, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. There's your Credit with the Houſe of Lords, Mr. Otes.

Otes. My Lord, I call'd you in to anſwer my Queſtion, as to ſomewhat that is paſt, and to give your Judgment how you are inclined to believe now.

L. C. J. Nay, but with your Favour, it was to declare what Opinion the Houſe of Lords had of you; and he ſays very well, and that this is in truth the ſame Anſwer that muſt be given, for the Judges and the Juries that try'd the People upon your Evidence: Says my Lord of Huntingdon at firſt, truly I did believe Mr. Otes did ſwear true, and he had Credit with me, and ſo he had with others; but now upon further Examination into Things, and in proceſs of time Diſcoveries have been made of the Truth, and that what he ſwore is falſe; ſo that now I believe in my Conſcience he is actually forſworn, and has drawn innocent Blood upon the Nation; and no body will believe a Word he ſays.

Otes. Well, my Lord, I have done with my Lord of Huntingdon.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. And he has done with you, as I perceive.

L. C. J. Yes, truly, methinks ye ſhake hands, and part very fairly.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. There's my Lord Chief Baron; what ſay you to him, Mr. Otes?

L. C. J.

L. C J. Is my Lord Chief Baron ſworn?

Cryer. Yes, my Lord, he is.

L. C. J. Then what do you ask him?

Otes. My Lord, I call'd your Lordſhip, becauſe your Lordſhip ſat as a Commiſſioner of Oyer and Terminer in the Old Bailey, at Ireland, Whitebread and Langhorn's Tryals; and that which I call your Lordſhip for, is to give an account to my Lord and the Jury, of the Satisfaction your Lordſhip received concerning the Fulneſs and Fairneſs of the Evidence then deliver'd by me in thoſe Tryals?

L. C. Baron. My Lord, I cannot charge my Memory with it.

L. C. J. He ſays he cannot remember.

L. C. Baron. No, not in particular; but in general I remember there were a great many Perſons that gave Evidence in thoſe Tryals on the one ſide and the other: There were a great many Perſons that came from St. Omers, that gave Evidence there of Mr. Otes being at St. Omers, when he ſaid he was in Town.

Otes. And what Credit were they of at that time, pray, my Lord?

L. C. Baron. I think they were Perſons of very good Credit; they were Gentlemen of good Families many of them.

Otes. Did the Jury believe them at that time?

L. C. Baron. I cannot tell what the Jury did.

L. C. J. Nor is it any matter at all what they did: But I would ask you, my Lord, but one Queſtion: Have you heard this Evidence that has been given here to day?

L. C. Baron. No, my Lord, I have not.

L. C. J. If you had, I would then have ask'd you, whether you believe him now or not?

L. C. Baron. Truly, my Lord, I never had any great Faith in him, I do aſſure you, as to my ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You hear what he ſays, Mr. Otes; you had never any great Credit with him.

Otes. My Lord, I am not at all concern'd at this; I value my ſelf more upon my own Innocency and Integrity, than any Man's good or bad Opinion whatſoever.

L. C. J. Ah! your Innocency is very great!

Otes. Then, my Lord, I will conclude my Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, Before Mr. Otes goes to ſumm up his Evidence, we have ſome other Evidence to give.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Mr. Otes? Will you call any other Witneſſes to this point?

Otes. My Lord, If they bring any other Evidence, I hope I may have my turn to anſwer it.

L. C. J. Ay, truly, if they bring any new Evidence that you have not applied to already, God forbid that you ſhould not be heard; but if it only gives an Anſwer to the Evidence that has been given, then you muſt not retort on them; for they are to have the laſt Word; but it is not fit withal, that you ſhould be denied any thing that is neceſſary or really of advantage to you.

Otes. If they offer any new Evidence to my Diſreputation, the Queſtion is, whether I may have a time allotted me to make my Defence againſt that Evidence?

L. C. J. Ay, ay, in God's Name by all means.

Mr. At. Gen. This is the uſual Method of Proceedings; but I would know if Mr. Otes has any more Witneſſes to examine to this Point, that he has examin'd to already?

Otes. My Lord, I think I have no further Evidence at preſent, till I hear what they further ſay.

Mr. At. Gen. Then may it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury——

Otes. I hope when your Lordſhip ſumms up the Evidence, you'll remember what has been ſaid by the Witneſſes.

L. C. J. You may aſſure your ſelf, I will remember whatſoever has been ſaid on the one ſide and t'other, as near as I can: The Gentlemen of the Jury are Men of Underſtanding, and I ſee they take Notes, and I'll give them all the Aſſiſtance I can.

Otes. Truly, my Lord, I have ſome more Witneſſes to the ſame purpoſe, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſpare time to hear them.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, We ſit here to hear the Witneſſes, call whom you will.

Otes. Is my Lord Lovelace here?

L. C. J. I cannot tell, I do not ſee him here; but you did call my Brother Gregory, there he is, what ſay you to him?

Otes. Mr. Baron Gregory was Speaker of the Houſe of Commons in one of the Weſtminſter Parliaments.

L. C. J. Swear my Brother Gregory.

[Which was done.

Otes. I deſire your Honour would be pleaſed to give this Court and the Jury an account, you being Speaker of the Houſe of Commons, what Credit I received there in that Houſe upon my Diſcovery of the Popiſh Plot?

Mr. Bar. Gregory. My Lord, That is a pretty general Queſtion, it is not poſſible for me to remember the Proceedings in the Houſe of Commons ſo long ago.

L. C. J. But, Brother, I tell you what he means by it: He would have you to anſwer this Queſtion, whether he was of good Credit in the Houſe of Commons or not?

Mr. Bar. Gregory. I know not what Anſwer to make about the Credit he there had; any Member of the Houſe of Commons may give as good and better an account in that Matter than I; and truly I do not remember that Mr. Otes was before the Bar of the Houſe when I was Speaker: I believe it was before I was Speaker, that he was examined at the Commons Bar.

L. C. J. Well, he can remember nothing of it.

Otes. Is my Lord Lovelace there?

Cryer. He has been called, but he is not here.

Otes. Call my Lord of Stamford.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Call Sir Francis Winnington.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Call Silas Titus, Eſq;

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Call Sir George Treby.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Call Sir Francis Pemberton: Theſe have been all ſubpœna'd.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Is my Lord Biſhop of London?

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Here is my Lord Biſhop of London, pray ſwear my Lord Biſhop of London.

[Which was done.

Otes. I beg your Lordſhip, if you can, would give an account of your Remembrance in this Matter: Your Lordſhip was often in Committees of the Houſe of Peers about this Buſineſs, and from firſt to laſt you were in the Committee for further Examination of the Popiſh Plot; and you were not only of the Committee, but you alſo ſat as a Baron in the Houſe. I humbly beg your Lordſhip would pleaſe to tell as far as you can charge your Memory, what Reputation I had in the Houſe of Lords, where I was upon my Oath, and in particular, whether your Lordſhip remembers that I received the Thanks of the Houſe for the Service I had done for the King and Kingdom in the Diſcovery.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. It is a long Queſtion, my Lord.

L. B. of London. It is ſo, my Lord; but my Anſwer will be very ſhort: For it is a very little I can remember after ſo great a diſtance of Time, and the Tranſactions have been publick; nor can I acquaint the Court with any thing, but what is known already; and that is this, I remember that the Plot was diſcovered by him, and his Diſcovery was receiv'd as Evidence at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords, and believ'd, and the Thanks of the Houſe were given him at that time for it.

L. C. J. There's Sir George Treby, What do you ask him? But firſt let him be ſworn.

[Which was done.

Otes. Pray be pleas'd to ask Sir George Treby, who was Chair-man of the Committee of Secrecy, and was Manager in the Tryal of the Lord Viſcount Stafford, that he will be pleas'd to tell what Credit I had in both Houſes upon that Tryal.

L. C. J. I told you before, you muſt urge nothing of that Tryal, unleſs you have the Record here.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I deſire Sir George may give an account what he knows of the Correſpondencies between Mr. Coleman and the See of Rome?

L. C. J. No, that will not be any Evidence at all in this Caſe; for that is not at all here in queſtion.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I deſire Sir George Treby may ſpeak what he knows of my Credit in the Houſe of Commons.

L. C. J. Ay, what ſays he to that?

Sir George Treby. My Lord, I can anſwer for nothing but my own Judgment; I cannot tell what Credit he had with any particular Member of the Houſe of Commons; I do remember indeed, he was there ſeveral times at the Bar, but not upon Oath, but as others uſually are there; and concerning the Diſcovery, there was a Vote all the Kingdom knows of, that they were ſatisfied there was a Plot, but whether that Vote was grounded altogether upon his Evidence, or how far upon his Evidence, I cannot tell, nor what any Man thought of it beſides my ſelf.

Otes. I deſire Mr. Serj. Pemberton might be call'd again.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Then pray call Sir William Dolben.

Cryer. He is not here neither.

Otes. Then I call Sir Edward Atkins.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Call Mr. Richard White.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. My Lord, Theſe were all ſubpœna'd, but they will not come; they are frighted away.

L. C. J. We know nothing of that, they may come if they will.

Cryer. He is not here; but here is Mr. White.

Otes. I pray he may be ſworn. (Which was done.) I deſire to know of him, whether he were not a Jury man upon the Tryals of Ireland and Whitebread?

Mr. White. No, I was not.

Otes. Then I am miſtaken, I beg your Pardon for this Trouble.

L. C. J. Well, there's my Brother Dolben come now. What ſay you to him? Swear my Brother Dolben. [Which was done.

Otes. May it pleaſe you, Sir William Dolben, you ſat as a Judge upon the Tryals of Mr. Ireland, Mr. Whitebread, and Mr. Langhorn; and I call you, Sir William Dolben, to give an account to my Lord and the Jury, what Credit my Evidence had at thoſe Tryals, and how the Jury was ſatisfied with it.

L. C. J. There is the Verdict, Man, that finds the Perſons you ſpeak of guilty.

Otes. If that be Evidence enough, I am ſatisfied, my Lord.

L. C. J. Is not that better than his Opinion to ſhew how the Jury was ſatisfied? Ay, certainly: Better than the Opinion of all the Twelve Judges; for that point they would not have Convicted them, except they had been ſatisfied with the Evidence.

Sir William Dolben. Have you done with me, Sir?

Otes. I have, Sir.

L. C. J. Have you called all your Witneſſes, or will you call any more?

Otes. No, my Lord, I will call no more at preſent.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we'll go on with another Part of our Evidence. Gentlemen, you ſee Dr. Otes, to ſupport his Credit, has given two ſorts of Evidence; the one is, ſome Records of Tryals at the Old Bailey, wherein he had the good hap to be believed; the other is, ſeveral noble Perſons, and other Gentlemen, as to the Credit he has had given to his Evidence before. What they have ſaid I ſhall not meddle with at all at this time, but leave the Obſervations that are to be made thereupon, till we come to ſumm up the Evidence for the King. But as to the firſt part of his Evidence, that is, as to the Records produced, and the Verdicts therein given, and the Opinions of the Judges, we have this to ſay in point of Evidence as an Anſwer. 1. We ſhall produce to you ſeveral Records, wherein he has not been believed; as that of Sir George Wakeman, and my Lord Caſtlemain; and not only ſo, but we ſhall actually prove that he was perjur'd in them; that what he ſwore againſt them was utterly falſe, and you will hear this was not the firſt time that he had ſworn falſe; for in an Accuſation that he gave at a Tryal at Haſtings, we ſhall prove he ſwore Buggery upon a Perſon which was prov'd falſe.

Otes. Can you produce any ſuch Record, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, we ſhall.

L. C. J. Do not interrupt the King's Counſel; let them go on; you ſhall be heard quietly in your time.

Mr. Hanſes. Nay, Mr. Otes need not be ſo haſty as to ask for the Records, by degrees we ſhall produce Records enough againſt him.

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall prove alſo by the Journals of the Lords Houſe, that he did forſwear himſelf; for after he had there made a long Narrative of the Plot, being ask'd whether he had any more to accuſe, than thoſe Perſons that he had nam'd, and this upon his Oath; he did there ſwear that he had no more Perſons to accuſe.

Otes. That were Members of that Houſe, it was.

L. C. J. Sir, You muſt be quiet till they have done.

Mr. At. Gen. But ſoon after he bethought himſelf, and accuſes the Queen and His Royal Highneſs the Duke, our now preſent Sovereign of being in the Plot.

Otes. What Plot did I accuſe them of?

L. C. J. Nay, you muſt ſit down and be quiet; how now, will you not let the King's Counſel ſpeak? You were heard quietly, and ſo ſhall they be too.

Otes. Well, my Lord, I will be quiet.

Mr. At. Gen. Theſe things, my Lord, will ſhew of what Credit he was of at that time: Another thing we ſay to theſe Records, is this; There were two other Witneſſes, Mr. Clay and Mr. Smith, beſides thoſe that were now produced, which were the Home-Witneſſes, that did poſitively ſwear, that in April and May 78. Otes was here in Town; he did then indeed make uſe of thoſe other canting Witneſſes, for I cannot call them any otherwiſe, that beat ſo about the Buſh, and ſpeak of Uncertainties, and contradict one another; but thoſe that I name, Clay and Smith, were Home-Witneſſes, and there lay the Credit of his being in Town, when the Witneſſes which came from St. Omers, ſay he was beyond Sea.

Otes. My Lord, I beg I may ask one thing; whether my Lord Biſhop of London be there ſtill?

L. C. J. No, my Lord of London is gone.

Otes. I am ſorry for it, becauſe he could have given an account of this Smith, for he knows him.

L. C. J. I cannot help it, you ſhould have deſired him to ſtay while he was here; go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. I will, my Lord; and this which I am going to ſay, as an Anſwer to his Evidence, which will give a full Anſwer to that other Objection which he made; which was, what was the Reaſon, when he had given ſuch an Evidence ſo long ago, it ſhould be delayed ſo long e'er it was proſecuted. I'll give your Lordſhip a Reaſon, and a ſatisfactory one, till thoſe Diſcoveries were made that have lately been made: The Evidence theſe Witneſſes gave, carried a Probability of Truth in it; and Sir Richard Barker himſelf added his Teſtimony to it, tho' he does not think fit now to come and confirm it: I ſay hitherto it had ſome ſemblance of Truth, and ſo did ballance the other Teſtimony of them that came from St. Omers: But when we had diſcover'd that it could be teſtified by twenty Perſons, that had not been at any of the former Tryals, that he was certainly all that time at St. Omers; and when we had diſcover'd the Tampering and Practices of Mr. Otes, in ſuborning theſe Witneſſes to ſwear as corruptly as he ſwore at firſt; which we ſhall ſhew you palpably to be true that he did ſo; that gave us Encouragement to go on to make Enquiry into the Matter; but this was not diſcover'd till half a Year ago, or thereabouts. Now as to one of thoſe Witneſſes, that is Mr. Clay, the Caſe ſtands thus; indeed I expected he would have brought the ſame Witneſſes he did then; for I preſume they are all about Town, but he has not thought fit to do that: This Clay was then a Prieſt, and a Priſoner in the Gate-houſe for that very reaſon as being accuſed for being a Romiſh Prieſt; while he was there a Priſoner, Mr. Otes comes and threatens him, and ſollicits him to ſwear that he was here in Town in May 78. that he might be provided with Proof againſt what the Boys of St. Omers (as he call'd them) would come to teſtify; and threaten'd him if he did not, he would hang him, for he could ſwear him to be a Prieſt; and this was about three or four Days before the Tryal of the five Jeſuits: At length they came to a Bargain and Agreement, as you will hear, that he ſhould come and ſwear this; when Mr. Otes cannot pretend that the Evidence of Clay was known at all by any of the Committees that were concern'd in the Management of his Diſcovery; or that he was ſo much as thought of for a Witneſs. But we ſhall prove how it came to paſs; and I believe, if Mr. Otes would call him now (as I do not queſtion he knows where to have him) Clay would not be ſo hardy now, as to affirm his former Teſtimony. Then as for Mr. Smith, his Caſe ſtands thus: Mr. Otes had ſworn him into the Plot, as you will find in his Narrative that he gave in upon Oath, which is upon Record, and enter'd in the Journals of the Lords Houſe. He was a School-maſter in Iſlington, and Otes ſwears High Treaſon againſt him, and thereupon Warrants went out to take this Smith, and Mr. Otes was very violent in the Purſuit of him but two or three Days before the Tryal; and then, when all theſe Witneſſes from St. Omers were come, as he knew very well, he was in ſome Doubt his Deſign would have fail'd, and then does he prevail with Smith to become a Witneſs for him. And 'tis evident he did tamper with him, from that which was done by him at that time: For now he gives him under his Hand, (to ſhew the Impudence, as well as Villany of the Man) as it has been evident enough in all his Carriage) a Paper that ſhould give him Authority to go free from all Proceſs and Arreſts upon any Warrants; and this Protection under Mr. Otes's Hand, is directed to all the King's Officers, thereby commanding them to take notice that this Mr. Smith, whom before he had accus'd of being in the Plot, was an honeſt Man, and employed in great Service for the King at that time. This Paper, when produc'd, will ſhew the time when it was made; and then it will appear, that two Days after Smith comes and ſwears that he din'd with him the firſt Monday in May 78. This was what

Smith

Smith ſwore then; and upon my mentioning of this Practice, if he have any ſhame in him, it muſt put him in ſome Confuſion: For we are prepared to prove by undeniable Teſtimony, that Mr. Otes did not dine with this Mr. Smith that Day: We ſhall prove it by the whole Family; but the firſt time ever Mr. Otes came there, was in July after, when he came into England from St. Omers, which theſe Witneſſes ſay, was the latter end of June. Then it was that he was with Mr. Smith, and came to his Houſe, and not before. And we ſhall prove by ſeveral Witneſſes, that upon the Queſtions being asked of Mr. Smith, how he came to teſtifie ſuch a thing, his Anſwer was, I muſt have died for it, if I had not don't, 'twas only a miſtake in point of Time: But he threatened me, and ſo did ſome others too, that he would have me hang'd for being in the Plot, if I did not comply with him, and ſwear this for him. My Lord, I ſhall offer this Evidence that I have open'd, and then I hope we ſhall ſatisfie the Jury, and all that hear this Tryal, that he is one of the moſt notorious Villains that liv'd upon the Earth; to be ſure that ever was known in this Kingdom.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Firſt, my Lord, we'll produce our Records, where is the Record of Sir George Wakeman?

Mr. Swift. This is the Record of Sir George Wakeman, and this is a true Copy, I examin'd it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Sir Samuel Aſtry, read a Word or two of it.

Cl. of Cr. Here is an Indictment againſt Sir George Wakeman for High Treaſon, he pleaded not Guilty; and here is an Acquittal by the Jury.

Mr. At. Gen. He being acquitted, I deſire he may be ſworn. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray Sir George Wakeman, was Mr. Otes ſworn againſt you at the Tryal?

Sir George Wakeman. Yes, Mr. Sollicitor, he was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember what he ſwore againſt you at that Tryal?

Sir George Wakeman. Yes, I do Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that true that he ſwore, by the Oath you have taken?

Otes. Is that a fair Queſtion? I deſire the Opinion of the Court?

L. C. J. Ah! why not?

Otes. He was legally accus'd; he cannot ſwear himſelf off.

L. C. J. But he is legally acquitted too; we have a Record for that here.

Otes. Ah! My Lord, he was acquitted; it's well known how.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come Sir, was That he ſwore againſt you at your Tryal, true?

Sir George Wakeman.

L. C. J. What do you ſay, Sir?

Sir George Wakeman. 'Twas falſe upon my Oath, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Particulars did he ſwear againſt you?

Mr. Pollexfen. Ah! Pray tell the Particulars as near as you can what he ſwore againſt you.

Sir George Wakeman. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will give a little Account what he ſwore againſt me before the King and Council.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That will not do, Sir George Wakeman, we do not ask you that.

L. C. J. No, it muſt be only the Evidence that was given upon this Acquittal, which is the Record here produc'd before us; what did he ſwear againſt you then?

Sir George Wakeman. He ſwore at that Tryal, as near as I can remember, that I undertook for a certain Sum of Money, 15000 l. as I think it was, to poyſon the King, and I was to do it by the means of the Queen. I was to provide this Poyſon by for her, and ſhe was to give it to the King. This he ſwore at my Tryal, which God forbid it ſhould be true; nothing can be more falſe.

L. C. J. I ask you by the Oath you have taken, you are now quitted, and ſo in no danger; and being upon your Oath, ought to ſpeak the Truth, without Malice or ill Will to him that did accuſe you; was that he ſwore true or falſe?

Sir George Wakeman. Falſe, falſe, upon my Oath; I ſpeak it without any Malice againſt the Man in the World.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear my Lord Caſtlemain. [Which was done.

Sir George Wakeman. My Lord, I'll be bound to make it appear, that all he ſwore againſt me was falſe.

Mr. At. Gen. And ſo was it he ſwore againſt my Lord Caſtlemain and others that were acquitted at the ſame time with Sir George Wakeman.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Firſt read the Record of my Lord Caſtlemain's Acquittal.

Cl. of Cr. Here is the very Record it ſelf: It was in this Court my Lord Caſtlemain was Indicted of High Treaſon, and Tried and Acquitted.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Caſtlemain, pray what did Otes ſwear againſt you at your Tryal? And pray tell the Court whether that was true or falſe.

Earl of Caſtlemain. My Lord, as near as I remember, Mr. Otes did ſwear at my Tryal, that he met me in Lincolns-Inn Fields, and that he went with me ſomewhere to Mr. Fenwick's Chamber in Dukes-ſtreet in Covent-garden, where he ſaid I did talk a great deal of Treaſon, and a great Diſcourſe of that kind he ſaid there was, and he ſwore that I was in ſeveral Cabals in relation to the King's death: I was afterwards acquitted by the Jury that Try'd me, as appears by the Record; and here I do declare, as in the Preſence of God, and with all the Imprecations of divine Vengeance to fall upon me, if I ſpeak any thing but the Truth, that not only that which he ſwore was falſe, but that I never had any thoughts in my Heart, much leſs did ever declare in my Words of any injury or hurt againſt the late King. And beſides, that I never ſaw the Face of Otes in my life, till after I was put in Priſon upon his Accuſation of me.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know what Religion that Noble Lord is of?

Earl of Caſtlemain. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

L. C. J. We all know what Religion my Lord is of, you need not ask that Queſtion.

Otes. That's not the Point, my Lord, I muſt have it declar'd in Evidence.

L. C. J. I wonder to ſee any Man that has the Face of a Man, carry it at this rate, when he he hears ſuch an Evidence brought in againſt him.

Otes. I wonder that Mr. Attorney will offer to bring this Evidence, Men that muſt have Malice againſt me———

L. C. J. Hold your Tongue; you are a ſhame to Mankind.

Otes. No, my Lord, I am neither a ſhame to my ſelf or Mankind: What I have ſworn is true, and I will ſtand by it to my laſt Breath, and ſeal it if occaſion be with my Blood.

L. C. J. 'Twere pity but that it were to be done by thy Blood.

Otes. Ah! Ah! my Lord, I know why all this is, and ſo may the World very eaſily too.

L. C. J. Such Impudence and Impiety was never known in any Chriſtian Nation.

Otes. But this will not do the Work to make the Plot to be disbelieved; Things are not to be done by great Noiſes: I will ſtand by the Truth.

L. C. J Can you think to out-face ſuch Evidence as this with your Impudence?

Otes. But I hope you'll give me leave to make my Defence.

L. C. J. Then carry your ſelf as becomes you in the Court.

Otes. My Lord, I will do ſo.

L. C. J. If you do not, we know how to make you do it, you ſhall not think to Domineer here.

Otes. My Lord, I hope I do behave my ſelf as I ought.

L. C. J. No, you do not.

Otes. Ill Language may provoke any Man's Paſſion, my Lord.

L. C. J. Keep your ſelf within Bounds, and you ſhall be heard; but we'll ſuffer none of your Extravagancies.

Otes. My Lord, if I had been aware of this, I could have produc'd Evidence that would have ſupported my Teſtimony in theſe Matters.

L. C. J. Go on with your Proofs, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Attorney. We will do ſo, my Lord.

Earl of Caſtlemain. Have you done with me, Sir?

L. C. J. Have you any other Queſtions to ask my Lord Caſtlemain?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then your Lordſhip may ſit down again where you were.

Mr. At. Gen. Now my Lord, we ſhall ſhow the Lords Journal where it is Recorded, that he ſwore he could accuſe no body elſe but thoſe that he nam'd, and then we ſhall give an Account, that ſoon after, he accus'd our preſent Sovereign, and the Queen Dowager.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where is the Clerk of the Parliament?

Mr. Swift. Here he is, Mr. Walker.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear him. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Walker, Is that the Journal of the Houſe of Lords?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord, it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Deliver it in to the Clerk, and let him read it.

L. C. J. Then you muſt direct to the time, or elſe it will be to no purpoſe.

Mr. Swift. Sir Samuel Aſtry, pray turn to Friday the 29*th* of November 78.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, Die veneris decimo nono Novembris 1678. Titus Otes being call'd in at the Bar, deſired to be heard a few Words before he was ſworn———

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I doubt this will not be Evidence: It is only a Paper of what he ſaid, taken before the Lords; but now whether that was upon Oath or no, is the Queſtion, nay it appears it was not upon Oath; but ſays, it was before he was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I deſire it may be read all out.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, Titus Otes being called in at the Bar, deſired he might be heard a few Words before he was ſworn to ſpeak to the main Buſineſs, which being granted to him, he complained of the Reſtraint he is under, and being debarr'd of the liberty of his Friends coming to him, and of converſing with any body in private, and that no Engliſhman ought to be reſtrained, unleſs accuſed by one or more Witneſſes; and pray'd that the Reſtraint might be taken off, that he might be enabled to give his Evidence more cheerfully, and that the Houſe would be pleaſed to Addreſs to the King for that purpoſe, and that his Pardon may be renewed, becauſe he is under miſpriſion of Treaſon, to which the Lord Chancellor told him, that the Houſe would take his Condition into Conſideration, and then being ſworn, he was told by the Lord Chancellor, that the Lords have received an Addreſs from the Houſe of Commons in part upon Evidence by him given there, and that the Houſe expects he ſhould give an Account what that is, which has begot ſuch Aſtoniſhment in the Houſe of Commons as is expreſſed in the Addreſs, upon which Titus Otes ſaid, that in July laſt, he ſaw a Letter from Sir George Wakeman———

L. C. J. Is this Evidence, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, the uſe we make of it is to prove that he did accuſe the Queen.

L. C. J. What is the Accuſation of the Queen to this purpoſe?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we ſay he had ſworn ſeveral Days before that he had no other Perſons to accuſe.

L. C. J. You ſhould produce that firſt that he ſwore ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we ſhould ſo, I think, and I thought it had been ſo done.

L. C. J. This is no Evidence, for it is not upon Oath; it does not ſay ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, it does my Lord, but we will go on in order.

L. C. J. Come then, let us ſee what was ſworn about his having no more Perſons to accuſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir Samuel Aſtry, look the 30*th* of October 78.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, Die Mercurii 30. Octobris 1678. Titus Otes, being called in, was ſworn at the Bar, and required to anſwer to what he is now called in for concerning his Diſcourſe with the Lord Anneſley laſt Night, about the Duke of York.

L. C. J. I doubt this will not be Evidence neither; for we are now ſpeaking only about what ſhall be Evidence: We are not now medling with the methods of the Houſe in their Examination of Witneſſes, but what is Evidence here; ſuppoſe an Oath be adminiſtred to me for a particular purpoſe in the Houſe of Lords, that I ſhall anſwer to what is asked me concerning a Diſcourſe that I had with a third Perſon.

Mr. At. Gen.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir Samuel Aſtry look the next Day; for there my Lord, he is examin'd upon the general.

Sir Samuel Aſtry Reads, Die Jovis 31 Octobris 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. But firſt read the latter end of the former Day's Proceedings, beginning at thoſe Words, Upon conſideration.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Upon conſideration of what Titus Otes had ſaid, he was call'd in again, and told by the Lord Chancellor that the Houſe has directed he ſhall be heard again to Morrow at Nine a Clock, and the Lords do expect that by the Oath he hath now taken, he ſhould go thorow with what he hath to ſay, and therefore he ſhould prepare himſelf to deliver the whole Truth of what he knows concerning the Deſign againſt the King's Perſon, and the Government of this Kingdom.

L. C. J. But ſtill Mr. Attorney, we are but where we were; for ſuppoſing upon my Examination upon Oath given me in the Houſe of Lords to a particular purpoſe, That my Lord Chancellor ſhould tell me here; my Lords intend to Morrow, that you by vertue of the Oath now given you, ſhould come and give them Satisfaction as to other Queſtions, I doubt that would not be Evidence in Weſtminſter-Hall: Let us not ſtretch any thing further than it ſhould be upon any Account whatſoever: For ſuppoſe I give you an Oath to make true Anſwer to ſuch Queſtions as I ſhall ask you concerning what was ſaid at the Seſſions houſe at ſuch a Tryal, and then I come after and ask you upon the Oath you have taken, what do you ſay concerning ſuch a Buſineſs 7 Years ago, would that be Evidence?

Mr. At. Gen. With Submiſſion, my Lord, if a Man be told he is upon his Oath, to ſay all he knows of ſuch a Deſign, what he ſays upon that Oath, is Evidence.

L. C. J. You ſay very true, Mr. Attorney, if I give him a general Oath; but what he ſays concerning any other Matter than that particular Thing which he was ſworn to give an Account of, can never be Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think we need not labour in ſuch a thing as this is.

L. C. J. Truly, Mr. Sollicitor, I think it is no Evidence at all, if you can prove he was ſworn to his whole Narrative, and can bring any thing out of that, you ſay ſomething.

Mr. At. Gen. We deſire that my Lord of Berkley may be ſworn. [Which was done.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, will you give the Court and the Jury an Account, whether Mr. Otes was not ſworn to his Narrative, and delivered in his Evidence at your Lordſhip's Bar upon Oath.

L. C. J. My Lord of Berkeley, let me ask you this Queſtion, Was every thing that he gave an Account of at the Bar of the Lords Houſe, given in upon Oath?

Earl of Berkeley. I cannot remember that my Lord.

L. C. J. It is impoſſible that he ſhould.

Earl of Berkeley. All I can teſtifie is but what I anſwered to the Queſtion which was asked me at my Lord Stafford's Tryal.

L. C. J. But that is not material, now my Lord, becauſe the Record of that Tryal is not here.

Earl of Berkeley. The ſame thing is entered here particularly.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we deſire it may be read again.

L. C. J. Read it again with all my Heart.

L. C. J. This is a particular Oath to a particular poſe; and ſhall I help it by intendment, that he was afterwards ſworn to the general Matter? No, I will not: Suppoſe any thing had happened afterwards that it ſhould have been thought fit to proſecute Otes; could the Man have been convicted of Perjury for this? Certainly he never could.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, my Lord, we ſubmit it to you; but we will now go on to prove that which Mr. Attorney opened, that Otes did ſuborn theſe Witneſſes to ſwear what they did ſwear: You have had one part of the Evidence that was then given; now we ſhall prove that Clay was ſworn at Whitebread's Tryal, and what he did there teſtify about Otes being in Town.

Otes. I own it, he was ſworn then.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you own that you ſuborned him?

Otes. No, I think not, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will prove that you did tamper with him, and by threatenings prevail'd with him to ſwear for you.

Mr. At. Gen. Nay, we will prove that he was miſtaken in what he did ſwear a whole Year. Pray call Mr. Charles Howard.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire I may have leave to ask the Court a Queſtion, and I beg the Opinion of the Court in it, whether a Popiſh Recuſant Convicted, may be a good Witneſs?

L. C. J. We are not bound to anſwer your Queſtion; for we ſee no ground why you ſhould ask it: If you have any occaſion to object againſt any Witneſs, and can produce any Record againſt him; then we will tell you more of our Minds.

Otes. Pray then let me ask you another Queſtion, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee do not trouble us with thy Queſtions, let them go on with their Evidence.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know, whether a Man confeſſing himſelf a Popiſh Prieſt——

L. C. J. We do not ſit here to anſwer every idle Queſtion; 'tis nothing at all to the purpoſe: When you ask a proper Queſtion, we will anſwer it.

Otes. Yes, it is my Lord, and you are of my Counſel in Matter of Law.

L. C. J. I am not ſo.

Otes. Yes, my Lord, the Court is always of Counſel for the Priſoner.

L. C. J. That were well, indeed, if we were bound to give Advice in every Caſe, where a Man is Proſecuted at the King's Suit; indeed in thoſe Caſes where a Man can have no Counſel allowed him, the Court is of Counſel for him; but where he may have Counſel, the Judges are not of Counſel for him.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Beſides, We are not here putting of Caſes, but trying of a Cauſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here is Mr. Charles Howard, ſwear him. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we bring this Gentleman Mr. Charles Howard only to this part of our Evidence, to prove that Mr. Clay was miſtaken a whole Year, miſtook 78, for 77.

L. C. J. But, Mr. Sollicitor, if you take this confuſed Method, we ſhall never be at an end, and for my part I cannot make any thing of it; it is impoſſible for me to retain theſe things in Memory, ſo as to give any Direction to the Jury, if there be not a Method uſed; for do you think that it is poſſible for any Man to retain in his Head a hundred things huddled up and down without any Order?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We beg your Lordſhip's Patience but a little while, and we ſhall have it in very good Order. Swear Higgins.

[Which was done.

L. C. J. Pray what do you ask him?

Mr. At. Gen. The Matter we examine him to is this; for I would open to you the Nature of our Evidence. 1. He ſwore Smith into the Plot, and then gave him a Certificate, that he was an honeſt Man.

L. C. J. Is that Otes's Hand?

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall prove it to be ſo.

L. C. J. You muſt firſt prove what he ſwore of Smith.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We deſire that we may read his Narrative.

L. C. J. But firſt prove it, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. It is upon Record in the Houſe of Lords.

L. C. J. Was that delivered in upon Oath to the Houſe of Lords? Or elſe we ſhall be but where we were.

Mr. At. Gen. For Proof of that we call my Lord Bridgwater.

L. C. J. Here he is. Swear my Lord.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord Bridgwater, Do you remember the Narrative that Otes gave in to the Houſe of Lords, and was it upon Oath? But firſt of all, if you pleaſe, I deſire my Lord may ſee the Book, whether any thing be there under his Hand, and then whether it be enter'd to be upon Oath, and whether this be the Journal agreeing with the Paper deliver'd him?

L. C. J. This is a Narrative, my Lord, that he himſelf deliver'd in, and I would ask my Lord Bridgwater this one Queſtion: Was not this Journal compar'd with the Narrative given in upon Oath by Order of the Lords Houſe?

Earl of Bridgwater. Yes, I muſt ſay I was one of the Committee appointed to take care of the Journal, and here is my Hand to it among other Lords, and that is a Copy of what Mr. Otes did deliver in as his Narrative which was inſerted upon a Report of the Committee into the Journal-Book by Order of the Lords, and we did examine the Narrative with the Book.

L. C. J. But what is all this to our purpoſe now? Do not miſtake me, my Lord Bridgwater, I do not ſpeak to you now, but to Mr. Attorney: What does this prove as to the Matter in hand?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord Bridgwater, did you ſee the Narrative brought in by Otes?

Earl of Bridgwater. That Narrative was delivered to us by the Clerk of the Parliament.

L. C. J. But, my Lord, do you know that Narrative was given in upon Oath?

Earl of Bridgwater. I know no other, but that the Clerk of the Parliament brought it to us.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is the Clerk of the Parliament will tell you that Otes was ſworn to it.

L. C. J. Prove it if you can; but hitherto I ſee nothing that looks like Evidence.

Mr. At. Gen. Really, my Lord, I ſhould take it to be as much Evidence as any that ever was offer'd in the World.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Attorney, let us reaſon the Point a little; ſuppoſe you bring an Anſwer in Chancery; except the Man be ſworn to it, can you read his Anſwer; and yet I ever look'd upon an Anſwer in Chancery as Evidence?

Mr. At. Gen. In that Caſe the Record proves it ſelf, and ſo it ſhould here; and therefore we deſire it may be read.

L. C. J. But ſurely you would not allow an Anſwer to be Evidence, unleſs you prove it to be ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I always took it, that we need not come to prove a Man was actually ſworn to his Anſwer; but if it be once enter'd upon Record in Chancery, it proves it ſelf.

L. C. J. It is true, Mr. Attorney, if it appears upon Record that the Anſwer was ſworn.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, If this Journal of the Houſe of Lords is a Record, then that which is enter'd into it, is a Record; 'tis a thing recorded as a Deed inrolled is, and proves it ſelf.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Either we miſtake one another, or we do not differ in Opinion: If you could make it appear that Otes brought this thing in the Houſe of Lords, and deliver'd it upon Oath, that were Evidence; otherwiſe I cannot ſee how you can make Evidence of it.

Mr. At. Gen. I always thought, my Lord, that a Record out of a Court of Record, would have that Credit in another Court of Record, as to be read.

L. C. J. My Lord Bridgwater tells you, it was deliver'd to them by the Clerk of the Parliament.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let the Clerk read what is at the end thereof.

Cl. of Crown. Reads, Hitherto examined the 3d of December, 1678. The Narrative and Examinations of Titus Otes, being firſt inſerted according to the Order of the Houſe, of the 21ſt of November laſt, by us Angleſey, &c.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray read the Order of the 21ſt of November.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, Die Jovis 21ſt of November, 1678. Upon Report made by the Earl of Bridgwater, from the Lords Sub-Committees for the examining the Journal of this Houſe; That upon Examination thereof, their Lordſhips find, that the Narrative made upon Oath by Titus Otes at the Bar on the 31ſt of October laſt, of the horrid Deſign againſt His Majeſty's Perſon and Government; is only mentioned in the Journal, but not enter'd at large in ſuch manner as he then related it; and that therefore their Lordſhips deſire the Direction of the Houſe concerning this Matter: It is thereupon ordered, that the ſaid Narrative made by Titus Otes on the ſaid 31ſt of October, ſhall be enter'd at large, and inſerted in the Journal, as the part of the Buſineſs of that Day.

L. C. J. Now you make it Evidence; for it appears that he was ſworn, and gave his Narrative upon Oath.

Mr. At.

Mr. At. Gen. Then now, my Lord, I hope we may read it.

L. C. J. Ay, read it.

Mr. At. Gen. Read the 54th Article.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, This is the Narrative of Titus Otes, the 54th Article. That one Matthew Medborne, a Player in the Duke's Theatre; one Mr. Penny, Mr. Mannock, Mr. Sharpe, and Mr. Seddon, and one William Smith a School-master at Iſlington, and one Edward Everard and others, meeting in a Club on Thurſday Nights and Sunday Nights, with one Jones a Prieſt, and one Keymaſh within-mentioned; and all theſe Perſons are employed by the Jeſuits, to vilify the Houſe of Commons, and to go about the City to inceniſe the People againſt them, and againſt the Biſhops of the Nation; and they deliver this Treaſonable Poſition, That the Commons aſſembled in Parliament are the Devil's Repreſentatives, and not the Nation's; with treaſonable and deteſtable Words the Deponent did hear at the ſaid Club, which is kept at Fuller's Rents near Grey's-Inn. And in the Month of Auguſt the Deponent was ordered by the Jeſuits in London, to give the ſaid Perſons great Reſpects, and in their Names to thank the Club for their Faithfulneſs to them in that Particular.

Mr. At. Gen. Thus you ſee what he had ſworn againſt him; now we ſhall ſhew how he dealt with him. Is that Mr. Otes's Hand?

Witneſs. It is; yes I believe it is.

Mr. At. Gen. I believe he will hardly deny it himſelf.

Otes. Let me ſee it, I pray you, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Show it him. (Which was done.) Is that your Hand?

Otes. I cannot ſay it is my Hand; nor do I believe it to be ſo.

L. C. J. He does not own it to be his Hand.

Otes. I do not ſay it is not my Hand; but I do not remember any thing of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Read it, Sir, pray you.

L. C. J. What is it you would read?

Mr. At. Gen. A Certificate under Otes's Hand of Mr. Smith's Honeſty, not three Days before the Tryal of the five Jeſuits.

L. C. J. Read it, let us hear what it is.

Theſe are to certify that William Smith is no Papiſt; and that he is upon good Service at this time for his King and Country; of which, I hope, thoſe that are Inquirers after Recuſants, will take notice.

Witneſs my Hand this 3d Day of June 1679.

Titus Otes.

L. C. J. What Harm is there in all this? I muſt needs ſay, I cannot comprehend what you would make of it.

Mr. At. Gen. This Protection was given Mr. Smith by Mr. Otes three Days before the Tryal; but after he had ſworn him into the Plot in his Narrative.

L. C. J. I ſee not any Plot, for my part, that he ſwore him into, unleſs you mean Treaſon againſt the Houſe of Commons: For that is the Accuſation he made, that he ſpoke ſuch Words of the Houſe of Commons. Pray read it again. (Which was done.)

L. C. J. Well, and what is all this?

Mr. At. Gen. Is not this a ſwearing him into the Plot?

L. C. J. No, not that I ſee: It only gives an ill Character of him.

Mr. At. Gen. But he is accuſed as a Confederate with the Prieſts and Jeſuits.

Otes. Did I charge him, Mr. Attorney, with having any Hand in the Plot againſt the King's Life?

Mr. At. Gen. I only offer this as an Evidence that there was tampering.

L. C. J. You call it a being in the Plot; I ſee no ſuch thing.

Mr. At. Gen. And then he comes and gives him an Acquittal under his Hand, and then produces him as a Witneſs.

L. C. J. There can be no great matter in this, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Then, my Lord, we'll call Mr. Smith himſelf, and he will tell you how Otes drew him in: Swear Mr. Smith. (Which was done.) Pray acquaint my Lord and the Jury, how you came to ſwear at the former Tryal; by whom you were perſwaded, and how you varied from the Truth.

L. C. J. That is very nauſeous and fulſome, Mr. Attorney, methinks in a Court of Juſtice.

Mr. At. Gen. What did you ſwear in the former Tryal? And was that true you did ſwear then?

L. C. J. I tell you truly, Mr. Attorney, it looks rank and fulſome; if he did forſwear himſelf, why ſhould he ever be a Witneſs again?

Mr. At. Gen. 'Tis not the firſt time by twenty that ſuch Evidences have been given.

L. C. J. I hate ſuch Preſidents in all times; let it be done never ſo often. Shall I believe a Villain one Word he ſays, when he owns that he forſwore himſelf?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, give me leave; I muſt purſue my Maſter's Intereſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, It was ever Teſtimony allowed to be given, to detect a Subornation.

L. C. J. I am ſure 'tis not fit to be allow'd at any time: If he did forſwear himſelf in a Court of Record, in my Opinion he is not to be receiv'd as a Witneſs any more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We do only make this uſe of him, to prove that Otes did ſuborn him.

L. C. J. Pray call ſome other Witneſſes, if you have them, to contradict him; but do not offer to bring a Man to ſwear that he did forſwear himſelf before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We give Evidence here of a Man's being produced by Otes, to ſwear he was here in May 78. and he did make ſuch an Oath: Now I hope, with Submiſſion, my Lord, it is Evidence to contradict that Oath, if we can prove that he has confeſſed he was forſworn, and miſtaken in his Oath; ſuch Evidence perhaps will be of little value, yet Evidence it is.

L. C. J. Make it what you will, Mr. Sollicitor; I think it is of no value at all, nor to be admitted for the Man to come and ſwear it himſelf: Prove what you can by others.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Surely, my Lord, this Confeſſion of his to others is of leſs value than when we bring the Man himſelf to confeſs his Fault; that Man himſelf coming and owning the thing, that he was miſtaken, with great Sorrow for it, ſure is a good Evidence.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Argue the Matter as long as you will, Mr. Sollicitor, you will never convince me, but that he that has once forſworn himſelf, ought not to be a Witneſs after that in any Cauſe whatſoever. If any Man tell me otherwiſe till Doomſday, I cannot be convinced of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I go but to ask him this Queſtion, Whether or no what he ſwore were true?

L. C. J. Mr. Sollicitor, We are all of another Opinion, that it is not Evidence fit to be given.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I muſt ſubmit it to you.

L. C. J. I tell you, Mr. Sollicitor, if you ſhould call him to know what it was he ſwore, and it does appear by any Evidence, or by his own Confeſſion, that it was falſe, you ought not to believe what he ſays even in that Matter. And I think truly, for Example's ſake, it ought not by any means to be admitted.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I muſt ſubmit it to you, but then I humbly conceive, it will be in very many Caſes impoſſible to detect a Perjury or Subornation, if the Party ſuborn'd cannot be admitted to be a Witneſs.

L. C. J. What good will the admitting him to be a Witneſs do? For either what he ſwore then, or what he ſwears now, is falſe; and if he once ſwears falſe, can you ſay he is to be believ'd?

Mr. North. My Lord, If a Man come and ſwear——

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir, you have our Opinion; it has been always the Practice heretofore, That when the Court have delivered their Opinion, the Counſel ſhould ſit down, and not diſpute it any further.

Mr. At. Gen. Then we will go about the Buſineſs of Clay, and for that we will call Lawrence Davenport.

L. C. J. 'Tis certainly againſt the Law to admit a Man that has once forſworn himſelf to be a Witneſs again in any Cauſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Lawrence Davenport. (Which was done.) Pray give my Lord and the Jury an account how Clay came to be a Witneſs, and by whom he was wrought upon to be ſo.

Davenport. May it pleaſe you, my Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Otes came to the Priſon, I being then a Priſoner at that time in the Gate-houſe at Weſtminſter my ſelf, and having no other Employment I had the Government and Care of ſome of the Priſoners for a Livelihood, being in Cuſtody; and at that time Mr. Otes, as I ſaid, when old Clay was in Priſon, did come there to viſit this Clay at ſeveral times; and coming there to viſit this Clay, up ſtairs he went to his Chamber, and deſired to ſpeak with him; and I did deſire your Worſhip, Mr. Otes, that you would go in to him, and you did go into his Chamber, and there theſe Words you did ſpeak to him before the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, That if he did not ſwear what you put to him, he ſhould be proſecuted as a Prieſt, which you did believe he would die for.

L. C. J. What is this Man's Name?

Mr. At. Gen. Lawrence Davenport.

L. C. J. Did you hear him ſay ſo?

Davenport. Yes, my Lord, upon my Oath I did hear him ſay ſo, and Sir William Waller was with him; and then he replied and ſaid, with a Proviſo That you would give him his Gold and Silver that was taken from him, being then a Priſoner under my keeping in the Gate-houſe, and wanting his Money; if you would do that, he ſaid, he had been a Rogue before, and he could not ſay what he might do.

L. C. J. Now make it appear that this Clay was ſworn at the Tryal.

Davenport. My Lord, Afterwards I was Keeper to him under the other Keeper, and he had a Keeper to wait on him to Newgate Seſſions at the Old Bailey; wherefore this Gentleman that is ſtanding there, Mr. Otes, comes to us, ſays he, Do not you trouble your ſelf about this Priſoner; let him alone with me, I'll ſee him at home again; and then the Jeſuits there did take their Tryals; how it was I cannot tell: For we could not come into the Court. Afterwards they went to the Fountain Tavern by Newgate to Dinner, and Mr. Otes and he went to Dinner together; we were below in the Houſe waiting there till it was Night, and ſtill thinking that he ſhould come down again; but away went he home, and left us in the lurch; but indeed he did come home to the Priſon very honeſtly and civilly, becauſe he was civilly guarded.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, we'll give you an account, That the next Morning after this Diſcourſe betwixt Otes and Clay at the Gate-houſe, this Witneſs told it to another that was a Priſoner there then too.

Otes. My Lord, I would ask this Man a Queſtion, whether he had the ſole Keeping of Clay without any other Keeper with him?

Davenport. There was no Keeper in the Houſe, but my ſelf, where he lay, which was in Margaret's-lane, not in the Priſon, but in the Houſe.

Otes. Pray ask this Gentleman, why he did not come in and teſtify this Diſcourſe he ſpeaks of, when Clay was a Witneſs?

Davenport. I was not by when he was ſworn.

Otes. Did he not know he was a Witneſs?

L. C. J. No, he ſays he did not go into the Court with you, he was not ſuffered to go in.

Davenport. My Lord, I am a poor Tradeſman, and know nothing what belongs to the Law.

Mr. At. Gen. Come, pray ſwear this Man, Mr. —— [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell what Davenport told you, and when.

Mr. —— He came and told me the next Day in the Priſon, where I was then, what Mr. Otes and Sir William Waller had been tampering with Clay about, to make him ſwear for Mr. Otes.

L. C. J. What were the Words he told you they ſaid to him?

Mr. —— It was, That he muſt ſwear that Mr. Otes dined at Mr. Howard's Houſe ſuch a Day of the Month, and Mr. Clay did ſay he knew nothing of the Matter; but then Sir William Waller and Mr. Otes did reply to him again, here's your Choice; if you will not ſwear this, we will try you for a Prieſt, and hang you, and ſo Clay agreed; if he might have his Money reſtored that was taken from him, he had been a Rogue before, and did not know what he might do.

Otes.

Otes. Is this Evidence, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, doubtleſs, very good Evidence.

Otes. 'Tis only upon Hearſay that he ſpeaks.

L. C. J. But that eſtabliſhes the other Man's Teſtimony, this being told the very next Morning; for he would not conceal it, it ſeems.

Mr. At. Gen. Now that Clay was ſworn at the Tryal, you admit, Mr. Otes.

Otes. Yes, I do, he was ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Then I think here's a plain Proof of a Subornation.

L. C. J. You muſt obſerve how they apply this Evidence: They ſay, you are an ill Man, not only as to ſwearing falſe your ſelf, but as to ſuborning others to ſwear more than they knew; and particularly as to this Clay, that you and Sir William Waller did threaten him, you would hang him up for a Prieſt, if he would not ſwear as you would have him; and by your Threatnings he was prevailed with to ſwear.

Otes. Is Mr. Clay in Court, my Lord?

L. C. J. Nay, I cannot tell where he is.

Mr. At. Gen. He was your Witneſs, Mr. Otes; we expected you would have brought him.

Otes. I cannot tell where to find him, my Lord, now truly.

Mr. At. Gen. Call Mr. Howard.

Cryer. Here he is, Sir, he is ſworn.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, You have not proved what he ſwore.

Mr. At. Gen. We are now about it, my Lord. Mr. Howard, pray were you at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, or at Langhorn's, when Clay was ſworn as a Witneſs for Dr. Otes?

Mr. Howard. Yes, I was at Langhorn's Tryal, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. What was the Effect of his Teſtimony there?

Mr. Howard. He did ſwear, That he was with me and Mr. Otes at Dinner at my Houſe, in May, in the Year 77.

Mr. At. Gen. 77 did he ſay, or 78?

Mr. Howard. Stay, I will look upon my Notes I took at that time.

L. C. J. Ay, do ſo, to refreſh your Memory, Mr. Howard.

Mr. Howard. It was May 78, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray thus, Sir, Was he then at your Houſe with Otes?

Mr. Howard. No, he was not there in May; Mr. Clay was with me and Mr Otes both together in July 78. after the 4th Day of July.

Mr. At. Gen. That is after the time he came to London from St. Omers.

L. C. J. You ſay very well; Have you any more Witneſſes?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We muſt deſire that the 28th Article of Mr. Otes's Narrative may be read.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, That in order to this Command on April 24. 78. Father Warren, Rector of Leidge, Sir Thomas Preſton, Baronet, Father Marſh, Rector of Gaunt, and Father Williams, Rector of Watton, and Maſter of the Novices, Sir John Warner, Baronet, Richard Aſhby, Rector of the Engliſh Seminary at St. Omers, being ſick of the Gout could not go. But out of the ſaid Seminary went Sir Robert Bret, Baronet, Father Pool, Edward Nevile. There were in all with the Deponent nine or ten, who met in London in Conſult with Thomas Whitebread, Father Harcourt Senior, and Father Harcourt Junior, John Fenwick, Baſil Langworth, William Morgan, John Keimes, Father Lovel, Father Ireland, Father Blundel, Richard Strange, Father Mico, Father Grey, and others to the Number of fifty Jeſuits met at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, where they plotted their Deſigns for the Society, and ordered Father John Carey, who was alſo there, to go Procurator for Rome; at which Conſult thus held in the Month of May, the Deponent was preſent to attend the Conſultors and deliver their Concerns from Company to Company; and then a little after they left the White Horſe Tavern, and divided themſelves into ſeveral Clubs and Companies; ſome met at Mr. Saunders's Houſe in Wild-ſtreet; others at Mr. Fenwick's at Aireſes his Houſe in Drury-lane; others at Mr. Ireland's in Ruſſel-ſtreet near Covent garden, and in other places. All which, tho' in ſeveral Companies, five or ſix in a Company, did contrive the Death of the King; and in order to which, there were Papers ſent from Company to Company, which the Deponent did carry containing their Opinions of the timing their Buſineſs, and the manner how it was to be done, and within three or four Days after the Deponent went to St. Omers with the Fathers that came from the other ſide of the Water.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, We produce this to overthrow their Witneſſes, that ſpeak his being here a Week in May. Now Mr. Otes in this Narrative, ſays, that the Conſult ended the 24th of April, and that three or four Days after, he returned back to St. Omers.

L. C. J. Pray read that over again, where the Names are, for the Witneſſes for the King ſwear, That Mr. Williams came over from St. Omers, but he here ſays he did not, I think.

It was read again.

L. C. J. I thought it had been otherwiſe; 'tis darkly penn'd.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I my ſelf heard him declare in many Tryals here, and at the Old Bailey, That all was finiſhed in that Day, and he went in a few Days.

Otes. Mr. Attorney, You are miſtaken: For if you pleaſe, my Lord, the Conſult was not diſſolved in ſix or eight Days, tho' they were not ſitting or acting every Day.

Mr. At Gen. 'Tis not a difference of ſix or eight Days that is contended for, but it is, Either Mr. Otes or his Witneſſes do not ſwear true. If it were as Mr. Otes ſays, That ſix or eight Days were allow'd after the 24th of April, then it muſt be the 5th or 6th of May that he went to St. Omers; and then his Witneſſes, that ſay he was here the latter end of May, cannot ſwear true. And our Witneſſes ſay he was all April and May, until the 23d of June at St. Omers.

Otes. My Lord, Mr. Attorney does not apprehend the Evidence aright.

L. C. J. Well, you may make your Remarks by and by, and ſet him right if you can.

Mr. At. Gen. We have done our Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more Witneſſes, Mr. Otes?

Otes. No, my Lord, I have not.

L. C. J. Then you muſt conclude, and ſay what you have to ſay to the Jury.

Otes. My Lord, I have one thing more, and that is, A Copy of the Record out of the House of Lords. It is in the Journal the twenty fifth of March, seventy nine.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, I have not the Book here, it was not spoke for.

Otes. But do you know this Hand? Shewing him a Copy.

Mr. Walker. Yes, and I believe it is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. Reads, Tuesday the 25th of March, 1679.

Otes. It is the last Clause in the Journal of that Day.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Resolved, Nemine Contradicente, by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal and Commons in Parliament assembled, That they do declare that they are fully satisfied by the Proofs they have heard, That there now is, and for divers Years last past hath been a Horrid and Treasonable Plot and Conspiracy contrived and carried on by those of the Popish Religion, for the Murthering of His Majesty's Sacred Person, and for subverting the Protestant Religion, and the Ancient and Established Government of this Kingdom.

Otes. There is an Order to have that Vote printed and inserted before the Form of Prayer for the Fast. Pray, Sir, read the next Page.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Die Lunæ 25. Oct. 1680.

Upon Report from the Lords Committees for examining Matters relating to the Discovery of the late Horrid Plot and Conspiracy, That Captain Thomas Bickley hath lately vilified Dr. Titus Otes at a publick Meeting at Chichester to the prejudice of His Majesty's Evidence, for the further Discovery of the said Plot: It is thereupon ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the said Thomas Bickley be, and is hereby required to appear before their Lordships, in the Lord Privy-Seal's Lodgings, near the House of Peers, on Wednesday the third Day of November next, at eight of the Clock in the Forenoon. And it is further ordered that Alderman Exon, and Alderman William Bury of Chichester aforesaid, who were then present at the said meeting, do likewise attend their Lordships at the time aforesaid, to give Evidence of what they know concerning this Matter.

L. C. J. What of all this? We know hereupon Bickley was turned out of Commission, and now Bickley is in again. But it seems as you had Credit with some then, so you had not with others. Well, have you now done all?

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Mr. Otes will Sum up his Evidence, then I will do the same for the King, when he has done.

L. C. J. Well, what say you, Mr. Otes?

Otes. Now, my Lord, here is an Indictment preferr'd against me for Perjury, and the Evidence they have given for the King, is this, 1. They have called Mr. Foster, and he tells you, that I was produced at the Sessions-house in the Old Bailey, where he was summoned as a Juryman, upon the Tryal of Ireland; and he says, That when I was produced at the Sessions in the Old Bailey as a Witness, and sworn (if I do remember Mr. Foster aright in what he says) he did hear me swear, That there was a Treasonable Consult of Jesuits upon the twenty fourth of April 78. at the White-Horse Tavern in the Strand; and he does further say, That I said those Jesuits afterwards came to a Resolution to kill the King; and that they separated themselves into lesser Clubs; the Resolution being drawn up by one Mico; and that I carried it from Chamber to Chamber to be signed, and did see it signed. My Lord, I did ask Mr. Foster, Whether I in my Evidence called it a Consult, or a Traiterous Consult. Now, my Lord, 'tis true, I did call it a Traiterous Consult; it is as true that I did swear there was such a Consult; and it is as true that I did swear this Consult did divide it self into lesser Companies; it is as true that I did say I did carry that Resolution about from Chamber to Chamber, and saw them sign that Resolution for murdering the King, I do not mean of this King, but of the late King. My Lord, the Evidence I think I nor no honest Man shall need to be ashamed of; I am not ashamed to own that I repeated this Evidence several times, nor that I gave that Evidence upon Oath; for it is Truth, my Lord, and nothing but Truth, and I resolve by the Grace of God to stand by it and confirm it with my Blood, if there be occasion. My Lord, to Convict me of Perjury, they have brought a parcel of St. Omers Witnesses, and these do swear that which they would have sworn six Years ago; but then the Court thought them not fit to be sworn, not only because the Law will not allow them, but because of their Religion, that can dispense with false Oaths, if it were for a good Cause, and that was the Remark my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs then made of it. I shall not insist much upon what they have sworn, for that I suppose your Lordship and the Jury do very well remember: But I have five Things to object to their Evidence; and I hope the Jury will take notice of my Objections, and make their Remarks upon them; for since you have heard the Evidence that is brought against me, it will be necessary for your Lordship to weigh the nature of these Witnesses, and the Value that the several Juries of London and Middlesex had for them. 'Tis true, there are several brought here now, that never were Witnesses before; there are indeed other Men, but of the same Religion and the same Interest, and therefore their Testimony must be of the same Value; I think your Lordship will allow me that: Therefore I begin with their Religion, and that I take notice to be a great Objection to their Evidence, as I am advis'd by those that are learn'd in the Law. And I must appeal to the Court, whether a Papist in Case of Religion may be believed and received as a good Witness?

L. C. J. We must not hear any of these idle Expressions.

Mr. Just. Withins. Do you think you are come here to preach, Mr. Otes?

L. C. J. I'll tell you, a Papist, except you'll prove any Legal Objection against him, is as good a Witness in a Court of Record as any other Person whatsoever.

Otes. But if 'tis your Lordship's, I'll tell you my Lord Cook's Practice was not to admit them as good Witnesses.

L. C. J. Do not tell me of my Lord Cook's Practice; the Law is otherwise; keep to the Business that you have here in hand; the Question before us, Whether you were forsworn in Ireland's Tryal or not? Answer that if you can; can; but you must not run out into Clamours and idle Extravagancies.

Otes. My Lord, I demand it as my Right to be heard what I have to except against the Witnesses.

L. C. J. I tell you, you shall be heard when you speak properly: But are you to determine what is right, or what is wrong?

Otes. I am to determine my own Right now in this Point, and I insist upon it, and demand it.

L. C. J. It may be presently you'll tell us we have no right to judge of it.

Otes. Yes, my Lord, you have; but I hope I have right to urge it.

L. C. J. Urge what you will that is to the Purpose, but then you must keep to the Matter in hand, and not make such idle Excursions as these are.

Otes. I will keep to the Matter, my Lord, if you will hear me.

L. C. J. So you shall, we'll make you keep to the Matter, or we will not hear you at all: Do not think your Impudence shall storm us out of our Senses.

Otes. My Lord, I do insist upon it, that these Mens Religion is an exception to their Testimony, and a Papist is not a good Witness in a Cause of Religion; and I desire I may have leave to argue that as a Point of Law in my own Defence.

L. C. J. No, Sir, it is no Point of Law at all.

Otes. Then I appeal to all the hearers, whether I have Justice done me.

L. C. J. What's that, why you impudent Fellow, do you know where you are? You are in a Court of Justice, and must appeal to none but the Court and the Jury.

Otes. I do appeal to the hearers.

L. C. J. Take him away there; if you will not behave your self as you ought, I can assure you, the Court will do what they ought to do, and stop your Mouth.

Otes. What you please, my Lord, I must make my own Defence as well as I can.

L. C. J. You are here in Judgment before us, and are to appeal to us; we'll suffer none of your Common-wealth Appeals to your Mobile; keep within the Bounds of Decency, and say what you can for your self.

Otes. My Lord, this I move to the Court as one of my Objections to this Evidence given against me, That their Religion makes them no good Witnesses; especially in this Cause.

L. C. J. I tell you that is nothing to the purpose, what their Religion is.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Mr. Otes, we come not here to dispute Points of Religion, we come to try a bare Matter of Fact, whether you are perjured, or no.

L. C. J. I tell you a Papist is a good Witness without a Legal Exception.

Mr. Just. Withins. Pray, Mr. Otes, is not a Papist as good a Witness as a Dissenter?

Otes. My Lord Cook would not admit a Papist to be a good Witness in any Cause.

Mr. Just. Withins. How, not in a Cause of Meum and Tuum?

Otes. No, my Lord, not in any Cause between Party and Party.

L. C. J. Where is that Opinion?

Otes. I'll cite you the Case, if you please, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pray let us hear it.

Otes. It is in Bulstrode's Reports, the Second Part, 155. A Popish Recusant is not to be admitted a Witness between Party and Party.——

Mr. Just. Withins. May a Presbyterian be a good Witness, Mr. Otes?

Mr. Just. Holloway. Or would Mr. Colledge have been a good Witness, Mr. Otes?

Otes. I tell you this was my Lord Cook's Practice.

L. C. J. You have our Opinion, and be satisfied with it; That Book says it was my Lord Cook's Practice, and we think if that was his Practice, his Practice was against Law.

Otes. Then another thing I object to their Testimony, is their Education.

L. C. J. That's no Objection at all neither.

Otes. My Lord, they are bred up in a Seminary against Law, and for which their Friends are to be punished.

L. C. J. So is every Man living that's bred a Dissenter, bred up against Law.

Otes. My Lord, I have not offered any Dissenter as Evidence for me.

L. C. J. No, they are all no doubt of it very good People. Good-wife Mayo, and her Companions, excellent Protestants without all question.

Otes. My Lord, I humbly offer a Statute to your Lordship: And that is Law sure.

L. C. J. Yes, a Statute is Law. What Statute is it?

Otes. It is 27° of Eliz. Cap. 2. The Law says there——

L. C. J. Come we will see what the Law says. Read the Statute he speaks of.

Cl. of Cr. It is Intituled an Act against Jesuits, Priests, and other such like disobedient Persons.

Otes. My Lord, I desire that the Preamble of the Act may be read.

Cl. of Cr. Whereas divers Persons called and professed Jesuits, Seminary Priests, and other Priests, which have been, and from time to time are made in the Parts beyond the Seas, by or according to the Order and Rites of the Romish Church, have of late come, and have been sent, and daily do come, and are sent into this Realm of England, and others the Queen's Majesty's Dominions——

L. C. J. This is nothing to this Business before us at all.

Mr. Just. Withins. Does this Statute say they are no good Witnesses?

Otes. They own themselves to be Educated at St. Omers, and that is against this Law expresly.

L. C. J. What then, Do they own themselves to be in Orders, Jesuits and Priests, then you might say somewhat to them upon this Law; but do not spend our Time in such Trifles.

Otes. I do not spend your Time in Trifles, my Lord. It is my Defence.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, do you go on; for we will not sit here to spend our Time for nothing.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, let me but shew this, I only purpose one Statute more to your Lordship's Consideration.

L. C. J. You may propose to read the whole Statute-Book.

Otes.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, hear me out.

L. C. J. Speak then to the Buſineſs in hand.

Otes. It is the Statute made in the 3*d* of King Charles I. Chap. 2.

L. C. J. It is nothing to the purpoſe.

Otes. I am adviſed 'tis very material for me.

L. C. J. I tell you it is not, and we'll not let your Importunity prevail upon us to ſpend our time for nothing: There has been a great deal of Time ſpent to no purpoſe already.

Otes. Then if you will over-rule it, my Lord——

L. C. J. We do over-rule it: For it ſignifies nothing to this purpoſe.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to give me leave to offer their Judgments in Caſes of Conſcience, whereby they own they have Diſpenſations to ſwear Lies for the promoting of the Cauſe.

L C. J. That is no Evidence neither.

Otes. This is very hard in ſuch a Caſe as this.

L. C. J. No, it is not hard, that what is no Evidence in Law, ſhould not be ſuffered to be given in Evidence.

Otes. It is Evidence againſt the poor Diſſenters, my Lord.

L. C. J. Indeed, Sir, it is not Evidence againſt any one body in the World; if you will take my Word for it, if you will not, I cannot tell how to help it.

Otes. Then I offer you one thing more, my Lord, and that is what was ſaid and done in the Caſe of the Earl of Shaftsbury, when he was charged with High Treaſon, and committed to the Tower of London, at ſeveral Seſſions in the Old Bailey and at Hicks's Hall; they did move that they might have liberty to bring in an Indictment of Perjury againſt the Witneſſes which did accuſe him of Treaſon, but now the Court there over-rul'd thoſe Motions, and would not ſuffer my Lord of Shaftsbury's Friends to bring Indictments of Perjury againſt him, becauſe they would not have the King's Evidence Indicted of Perjury, nor the Popiſh Plot called in queſtion; This is a Matter of Fact in the Old Bailey.

L. C. J. And this is all idle too.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, will you hear me?

L. C. J. But pray, Sir, will you hear me too? I tell you this is nothing to the purpoſe neither.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to ſpeak but theſe few Words then, as to my own Witneſſes I have produced. And the firſt is Cicely Mayo; and, my Lord, though it be your Lordſhip's Pleaſure, not to have that good Opinion of her, as I think the poor Woman does deſerve, yet I hope her Evidence, will have its due Weight and Conſideration with your Lordſhip and the Jury; ſhe ſays, ſhe ſaw me in Town in the Month of May: Now indeed ſhe could not be poſitive, what May it was, but ſhe ſaid it was the May before the Popiſh plot broke out, that is, before the Rumour of that Plot was ſpread Abroad, and ſhe believes the Plot broke out in 78. But this ſhe ſays poſitively, ſhe ſaw me in the Month of May here; my Lord, ſhe comes to give this Evidence freely and voluntarily; a Man that is a Knave, is a Knave for ſomething, either out of Malice, or for Gain or Intereſt; but ſhe has no Reward given her, nor can hope for any; but in Love to Juſtice, without any By-end or particular Intereſt, ſhe came here to teſtifie the Truth, about her ſeeing me in London, in May 78. The next Witneſs is Mr. Butler, he was then Sir Richard Barker's Coachman. He lived ſome Years with him, as his Servant; but he is now ſet up for himſelf, and he ſays, that when he was about his Maſter's Buſineſs in the Coach yard, and fitting the Coach for to fetch his Maſter home from Putney, I came in, and this was in the beginning of May, in a Diſguiſe; and he ſays, he ſaw me a ſecond time in another Diſguiſe. Then comes a third Witneſs that I called, and that is Page, and he came into the Hall, where the Patients uſe to wait for his Maſter, and there he met me, and ſpoke with me. Then I called Walker, the Miniſter, but it happens his Memory is not ſo good now, as it was heretofore; and indeed I cannot tell how to blame him; for 'tis ſo long ſince, that it is impoſſible for any body to remember the Circumſtances of Times and Places, that in ſome ſhort time after the Fact might have been remembred with far greater Eaſe. I expected Sir Richard Barker might have been here, being Subpœna'd to juſtifie the Evidence of theſe People; and I did expect that Mr. Smith would have been examined; but I perceived the Court tender of that Point, as knowing it would then eaſily have been ſeen upon which Side it was, that he was ſuborned, that is, to make ſuch a Confeſſion as Mr. Attorney would have hinted at.

L. C. J. Have you a mind to examine him, Mr. Otes; with all my Heart. If you conſent to it, he ſhall be examined.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. If you will, he ſhall be examined, it was for your ſake he was not.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. It was to do you Right, that he was refuſed to be ſworn before.

Otes. Good Mr. Juſtice Holloway, are very ſharp upon me.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. No, I am not ſharp upon you; I think the Court did you a great deal of Juſtice, you have no reaſon to complain.

Otes. But, my Lord, this I ſay, The Evidence upon which I am now indicted of Perjury is the ſame which was delivered ſix Years ago at the Old Bailey, at Whitebread's Tryal firſt, and then at Langhorn's Tryal, where were ſixteen Witneſſes then produced and heard againſt me: But then, my Lord, what Credit did they receive at Whitebread and Langhorn's Tryals? Now if this Evidence that I gave was then to be believed, though oppoſed by ſo many Witneſſes, what new Objection does riſe againſt it, which was not then hinted, and received an Anſwer? For as to all the Records that are brought out of the Houſe of Lords, they have not amounted to a Charge ſufficient to diminiſh any Man's Evidence in the World; for as to the Narrative that is entered there in the Journal; I think I and any Man elſe, that were concerned as I was, may very well defend the Truth of it; and I do avow the Truth of the Popiſh Plot, and will ſtand by it as long as I have a Day to live, and I do not queſtion but the Jury, upon Conſideration of thoſe Proteſtant Witneſſes that I have here brought againſt theſe Popiſh Seminaries, will acquit me of this Perjury. I leave it to your Lordſhip and the Jury to judge, and I hope thoſe Paſſages of Heat, that have fallen from me in Court, ſhall not make me fare at all all the worſe in your Judgment. I have called ſome Noble Lords to teſtify for me; but I find, either the diſtance of time has wrought upon their Memories, or the Difference of the Seaſon has chang'd their Opinion, ſo that now they disbelieve that which they did believe before, and perhaps for as little Reaſon as ——

L. C. J. As they believed you at firſt.

Otes. Yes truly, my Lord, for as little reaſon as they believed me at firſt; for I cannot expect that a Man, who believes without a Principal, ſhould not recant that Belief without a Reaſon.

L. C. J. What do you mean by that?

Otes. I name no body.

L. C. J. But the Nobility that are here, and that have been Witneſſes in this Cauſe, are all Perſons of that Honour, that the Court is bound in Juſtice to take notice of, and vindicate them from your ſcandalous Reflections; but only I think that a Slander from your Mouth is very little Scandal.

Otes. Nor from ſome body's elſe neither.

L. C. J. But, Sir, you muſt be taught better Manners.

Otes. I find, my Lord, I am not to be heard in this Cauſe with Patience.

L. C. J. I think you do not deſerve to be heard at all.

Otes. I cannot tell how to help it, if you will not hear me.

L. C. J. Can't you ſay what you have to ſay for your ſelf without Reflections and running out into ſuch Extravagances?

Otes. My Lord, You will ſuffer me to offer nothing that is material for my Defence.

Mr. Juſt. Walcot. Do you think it decent for this Court to ſuffer Perſons of Honour, that by your own Deſire were ſworn to give Teſtimony in this Cauſe, ſhould lie under the Reproach of your Tongue?

Otes. Good Mr. Juſtice Walcot, Was there ever any Man dealt with as I am, or had ſuch Evidence offer'd to be given againſt him? Here they offer to blacken me with the Imputation of that foul, infamous Crime of Perjury; and who are the Witneſſes to prove it, but Youths out of a Seminary? Sir George Wakeman, and my Lord Caſtlemain, known Papiſts, and perhaps Popiſh Recuſants, Convict too; as for my Lord Caſtlemain, the Record of his Acquittal is brought as a Charge againſt me, to prove that I was forſworn, and not believed at his Tryal; when all the World knows, it was becauſe there was but one Witneſs againſt him that he came off, and that was the Reaſon that was urged by my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs at that very time, who would not admit Dangerfield to be a Witneſs, and reflected not at all upon my Teſtimony, but directed the Jury, for want of another Witneſs, to acquit him: Then, my Lord, here is Wakeman brought and his Acquittal too; he ſwears all I ſaid againſt him was falſe; whereas, had it not been for two diſhoneſt Perſons, one I have now in my ſight, I ſhall not name any Names, we could at that time have proved five thouſand Pounds of the Money paid to him, and that he gave a Receipt for it; but, my Lord, this I am ſure of, if I had been brought in as a Witneſs in the Caſe of thoſe that ſuffered lately for the Presbyterian Fanatick Plot (as they call it) I had never been call'd in queſtion, if my Evidence had been falſe; but it is apparent the Papiſts have now a Turn to ſerve, and theſe Papiſts are brought in, the St. Omers Youths, to bear this Teſtimony on purpoſe to falſify my Evidence, and to bring off the Popiſh Lords that now ſtand impeach'd of High Treaſon for the Popiſh Conſpiracy; but, my Lord, I hope as the Court would never admit Indictments of Perjury againſt the Witneſſes in that Caſe of my Lord Shaftsbury, ſo you will not admit it here; and if my Lord Chief Juſtice Jones were in the Right, who did the ſame thing in his Circuit, I hope I ſhall have that Right done me here. My Lord, It is not me they indict, but the whole Proteſtant Intereſt is aim'd at in this Proſecution; and hereby they arraign the whole Proceedings of ſo many Parliaments, all the Courts of Juſtice, and the Verdicts of thoſe Juries that convicted the Traitors that were executed; for my own part, I care not what becomes of me, the Truth will one time or another appear.

L. C. J. I hope in God it will.

Otes. I do not queſtion it, my Lord.

L. C. J. And I hope we are finding it out to day.

Otes. But, my Lord, ſince I have not the liberty to argue thoſe things that were moſt material for my Defence againſt this Indictment, I appeal to the Great God of Heaven and Earth, the Judge of all; and once more in his Preſence, and before all this Auditory, I avow my Evidence of the Popiſh Plot, all and every part of it, to be nothing but true, and will expect from the Almighty God, the Vindication of my Integrity and Innocence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury ——

Otes. My Lord, I have one thing to move to your Lordſhip; I deſire I may be brought up to morrow by Rule of Court to hear my Tryal that is then to be.

L. C. J. Ay, let him be brought up by Rule to his Tryal.

Otes. My Lord, I lie under very great Affliction with the Stone and the Gout, and beſides that, I have lain in Irons theſe twenty-one Weeks; I beſeech your Lordſhip, that this Cruelty may not be inflicted upon me. My Lord, I am but hitherto a Debtor to the King upon a Civil Account; and if I ſhould be convicted upon theſe Indictments, I could then be but in Execution for a Treſpaſs; and I humbly conceive and hope the Court will ſhew me that Favour as to acquaint my Keeper, that I ought not to be ſo handled.

L. C. J. Look you, for that I tell you again what I have often ſaid, I expect from the Marſhal that he keep you as he ought to keep you; I have heard that there have been abundance of Attempts made for your Eſcape, and therefore the Marſhal muſt have the greater Care of you.

Otes. Let any of thoſe Complaints be made out, my Lord, and I'll be contented to be uſed how they will.

L. C. J. I repeat it again, Let the Marſhal have a care to keep you in ſalvâ & arctâ Cuſtodiâ, according to Law.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. If the Marſhal does otherwiſe than his Duty, inform againſt him, and take the Remedy the Law allows.

Marſhal. But the laſt Night, my Lord, Ropes were brought into his Chamber, on purpoſe to give him means to eſcape, and here are the Bundle of Ropes.

Otes. I know nothing at all of them, I aſſure you, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, you have our Rule. Go on, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel for the King in this Cauſe; which is upon an Indictment of Perjury againſt Titus Otes, the Defendant; and the Perjury charg'd upon the Defendant, is laid to be in his Oath at the Tryal of Ireland, at the Old Bailey; and it is thus, That he in his Evidence at that Tryal, did ſwear, that there was a Treaſonable Conſult of the Jeſuits, held at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, the 24th of April 78. and that he was there preſent. ——

Otes. Ay, I was there.

L. C. J. You muſt be quiet, and let the Counſel go on without Interruption.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And that they ſeparated themſelves into leſſer Companies and Clubs, and that the Jeſuits came to a Reſolution to murder the late King, and that he, the Defendant Otes, carried this Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, and ſaw it ſigned by them; now all this is laid in his Indictment to be falſe; for that in truth, he was not preſent at any ſuch Conſult of the Jeſuits at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand upon the 24th of April 78. nor did carry any ſuch Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber to be ſign'd as he had ſworn in the Old Bailey at that Tryal, and ſo has committed Wilful and Corrupt Perjury.

Gentlemen, The Evidence that has been given to prove, that he was not preſent at any ſuch Conſult, nor did carry any ſuch Reſolution, has been by proving where he was at that very time that he ſwears this Conſult was held, that is, that he was really at St. Omers, in Parts beyond the Seas, and not in London; and to make out this, we have produced no leſs than twenty Witneſſes, that ſwear poſitively, and give you very many Circumſtances to induce you to believe, that what they have taken upon them to remember is really and effectually true.

Firſt, You have Mr. Hilſley, and he ſwears that he himſelf came away from St. Omers, the 24th of April, New Stile, which is the 14th of April, Old Stile, which was a Sunday; that Night he came to Calais, the next Day he arriv'd at Dover, and coming up to Town towards London, the next Day he met with Mr. Burnaby, who was then going to St. Omers. And he further ſwears, that at that very time, when he came from St. Omers, he left Otes, the Defendant upon the Place; this I ſay was the 14th of April: And for a Confirmation of this to be true, he left him there at that time, I would mention what two other Witneſſes do teſtify, and therein do verify what he ſwears; for they tell you, that at this very time when he came over, or within a Day or two, but long before ſuch time as there was any occaſion to bring this to be a Queſtion, he told one of them, in a Diſcourſe that was between them, that he had left upon the Place from whence he came, which was the College at St. Omers, an Engliſh Miniſter, whoſe Name was Sampſon Lucy.——

Otes. My Lord, I beg I may have leave to withdraw, for I am very weak, and ill.

L. C. J. Then make Room for him to go away, if he will.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And they give you an account, that the Defendant, Otes, went by that Name there, and it is not denied by him that he did ſo: And this is a Circumſtance greatly verifying Mr. Hilſley's Evidence. Then comes Mr. Burnaby, who ſwears, That he met Mr. Hilſley when he came from St. Omers, about the 16th of April, Old Stile, and the 21ſt of April, Old Stile, he came to St. Omers; and that when he came there he found Otes there upon the Place; this was the firſt of May, New Stile; and he gives you this Circumſtance to ſtrengthen his Teſtimony, That he very well remembers, that upon the 2d of May, New Stile, the Day after he came to St. Omers, Otes intruded into his Company, and got himſelf acquainted with him; he ſays further, that upon the 3d of May, New Stile, he particularly remembers Otes was in his Company there, and they went into the Garden and walk'd together; he alſo ſays, he ſaw him the 5th of May, New Stile, which is the 25th of April, Old Stile, the Day after this Day aſſign'd for the Conſult, with this Circumſtance, That he remembers to have ſeen him in the Rhetorick School, and ſo ſucceſſively afterwards he gives you a particular account down to Midſummer; after that Otes continued in the College at St. Omers, and then went away.

Then the next Witneſs we produce is Mr. Pool, and he gives you an account, That upon the 25th of April 1678. New Stile, which was the 15th of April, our Stile, he came over here, and he left behind him at St. Omers, the Defendant Otes; for he particularly remembers, that he ſaw him there when he came away; ſo Hilſley left him the 14th of April; Mr. Pool came away the 15th of April, which is our 25th, and left him at St. Omers, and does not remember, That he uſed to be abſent out of the College; and Mr. Burnaby finds him there the 21ſt of April; ſo that particularly at the times the other two came away, and Burnaby came thither, there he was, and there they ſaw him.

The next Witneſs is Mr. Thornton, and he gives you an account when Otes came thither firſt, and how long he ſtayed there; he ſays he came about Chriſtmas 77. and there he ſtayed till Midſummer Eve 78; and he tells you ſome particular Days he ſaw him on; he ſays he ſaw him there on the 1ſt of May, New Stile, and he ſaw him the 2d of May, New Stile, in Company with Mr. Burnaby, the next Day after his Arrival there, wondering at their ſudden Acquaintance. And he adds a particular Circumſtance, why he remembers it was the 2d of May; becauſe that Day the Scholars at St. Omers acted a Play, at which Otes had a Scuffle for a Seat; and he ſays he does likewiſe remember him to have been there, when Mr. Pool came away, which was the 25th of April, New Stile.

Then Mr. Conway, that was our next Witneſs, gives you an account likewiſe of Otes's coming to St. Omers about December 77. and how long he ſtayed there, viz. till the latter end of June 78. And he does not remember, that he lay out of the the College above one Night, and that was in January. And he remembers particularly, that he ſaw him with Mr. Burnaby ſuch a Day in May.

Then we brought another Witneſs, and that was Mr. Haggerſtone, and he tells you, he had good reaſon to remember Mr. Otes, for he was in the ſame Claſſis with him; and this Gentleman gives an account particularly, that he remembers him to be there the next Day after Mr. Burnaby came, and agrees in Teſtimony with all the reſt, that from Chriſtmas till Midſummer, he was not abſent out of the College, but one Night.

We have another Witneſs, Mr. Beeſton, and he remembers, that Otes was playing at Nine-pins the 1ſt of May; he remembers the 2d of May to have ſeen him with Mr. Burnaby after the Play was over; and that agrees with the other Witneſſes about his being in Burnaby's Company the 2d of May; and he remembers likewiſe, that he himſelf was choſen Reader to the Sodality; but upon Mr. Otes's Importunity, he ſupplied the Place in Mr. Beeſton's Room, only with this Reſerve and Condition, That Mr. Beeſton was to be Reader at any time, if Otes failed; and he gives you this particular account, that Otes did read, as he believes, every Sunday and Holiday, from the latter end of March when he was choſen Reader, to within a Week of his going away; for that he did never read himſelf, as he ſhould have done if Otes had been abſent or failed to read.

We have another Witneſs, and that is Mr. Smith, and he ſwears his being there from Chriſtmas 77. to Midſummer 78. and he remembers particularly as to April and May, becauſe the 21ſt of April, he himſelf fell ſick in the College, and went into the Infirmary, and remained there till the 7th of May; and he does remember that Otes viſited him very oft in that time in the Infirmary, and told him Mr. Hilſley was gone away, and Mr. Pool was gone away, and two or three other Particulars, which happened in the College at that time; ſo that there is another Evidence, that is very ſtrong with Circumſtances to confirm the Teſtimony of the reſt; and he gives you a very ſatisfactory account of it, by ſhewing the Reaſons how he comes to remember theſe things.

Mr. Price, who was our next Witneſs, has given you a Relation all to the ſame purpoſe of Otes's coming there at Chriſtmas, and of his going away at Midſummer. And he remembers particularly, that Otes was at St. Omers, when the Jeſuits went to the Conſult at London; for that there was a Conſult, and at that time, is acknowledged to be true; but not ſuch as he ſays, nor was he there; but he ſays ſome of the Fathers did call there in the way to England. And at that very time, and after, he ſaw him there. And Mr. Doddington gives you the ſame account.

Then comes Mr. Gerrard, and he tells you a Story to the ſame purpoſe; how long Otes was there, and when he came. And that the 2d of May he remembers Otes was at the Play; and he remembers the 26th of May Otes was there, which was the 16th of May, Old Stile. And he is ſure Otes was there at that time, for this reaſon, that being the Day whereon he himſelf was confirmed, St. Auguſtine's Day; and Otes was confirm'd with him; and therefore he has reaſon to remember Otes was at St. Omers.

My Lord Gerrard of Bromeley was our next Witneſs, and he gives you an account to the ſame purpoſe; and to the General Evidence, in which he confirms the others, he adds this particular, That Otes uſed to read with a ſingular canting Tone; ſo that he muſt needs remember him, and was ſo remarkable for other things that he could not be abſent without being miſs'd, which he never was.

Then comes Mr. Morgan, who was there at that time, a Scholar; but he's now a Miniſter of the Church of England; and therefore not liable to Mr. Otes's great Exception of Religion; he confirms what all the Witneſſes ſaid of the time of Otes's coming, and of the time of his going away: And particularly he ſwears, That when Mr. Hilſley went away, he was there; when Mr. Pool went away, he was there; and when Mr. Burnaby came thither, he was there. And this is not all; for there is ſomewhat more remarkable in his Teſtimony; for he tells you particularly he does remember, That upon the 24th of April, Old Stile, the Day, Gentlemen, when Otes ſays he was at the Conſult in London, Otes was then at St. Omers. And the occaſion of his remembering this he gives you an account of; for, he tells you, upon reading the Tryal of Ireland, where Otes ſwears, That he was here at the Conſult the 24th of April, 1678. Old Stile, all the College reflected upon it, and wondered at the Impudence of the Man, that he ſhould dare to ſwear ſuch a thing, when all the College remember'd him to be there all the while: And upon Recollection of Circumſtances, he himſelf did particularly recollect his own playing at Ball that very Day, and having toſs'd his Ball over the Wall, he borrowed Otes's Key to go into the Garden to fetch it: And this was thought of whilſt things were freſh, and every Man remembered this, or that, or the other thing to be done at ſuch a particular time.

Mr. Arundel, who was another Witneſs, proves the general Teſtimony of the reſt, and agrees in ſome particular things; and all he ſays, is to the ſame purpoſe.

Mr. Chriſtopher Turbervile, he comes and ſwears Otes's being at St. Omers the 4th or 5th of May, which is the 24th and 25th of April, Old Stile. For that upon Mr. Pool's going away, he changed his Chamber in the College, and ſaw Otes divers Days afterwards in his Chamber, and at the Door; and he knew that he conſtantly read in the Sodality, and that he left particularly the Sunday before he went away, which was about Midſummer 1678.

There was another Gentleman, and that was Mr. Anthony Turbervile, who gives Evidence all to the ſame purpoſe; and this Circumſtance goes thorough all the Teſtimony of theſe Perſons, that there's ſcarce any body can come to, or go out of the College, but it is known to all that are there, every Man takes notice of it, 'tis the Common Diſcourſe amongſt them; and therefore they give this as the Reaſon of their Belief, That he was there all this while, becauſe they did not remember any thing that ſhould give them occaſion to believe Mr. Otes was away from the College from Chriſtmas till Midſummer, but only one time; and the remembrance of that does ſhew, That they do really obſerve theſe things; for they could all tell that in January he went to Watton, and ſtayed out one Night.

There is one Witneſs more that is poſitive and particular, and that is Mr. Clavering, and he remembers Otes, by a very remarkable Circumſtance, was at St. Omers at the very time the Congregation is ſaid to be held in London; for he tells you there came a Perſon to beg Money of him, and there was a Collection made in the Houſe; and this Perſon did deſire to ſpeak with Otes, who was then in the College; and whom it ſeems this Perſon had known in Spain; but Otes did refuſe to ſpeak with him, and did not come down to him. Thus he remembers ſuch an one came there, and when he was there, he was ſent to Otes to deſire him to come down to this Man, and he would not. Ay, but now how is this remember'd to be at the time when the Congregation was held here in England? As to that, he gives this plain and full account, That it muſt be at that very time; for the Scholars did diſcourſe among themſelves, and were reckoning up what he had gotten among them, and what he had gotten at Watton; and finding that it was very inconſiderable that he had gotten at Watton, they talk'd among themſelves what ſhould be the Reaſon, and concluded it was, Becauſe the Fathers were gone over to England to the Congregation.

Theſe particular Circumſtances our Witneſſes give you as the Reaſons of their particular Remembrances of the particular times: But, Gentlemen, you muſt take along with you thoſe General Conſiderations too that are offered, which do affect the whole time, from Chriſtmas till Midſummer. Firſt, That none can come or go, without being diſcourſed of in the College: Next, That much more Mr. Otes muſt needs be miſſed, than any other, being ſo remarkable a Perſon, as they tell you, that ſcarce any Week paſs'd without his making it remarkable by ſome ridiculous Action or another. They ſay he ſat ſingly by himſelf, at a particular Table, that no Man could come into the Hall, but they muſt ſee him; and therefore, if abſent, muſt needs miſs him. And yet they ſwear they do not ever remember him abſent, but that one Night; and if he had been abſent, they muſt needs have obſerved it, becauſe of all thoſe Circumſtances that have been reckoned up.

Theſe are the Witneſſes, Gentlemen, that we have produced to prove this Charge upon the Defendant, two of whom are brought only to verify Mr. Hilſley's Teſtimony; having heard it from him at that time that he had left Otes at St. Omers; when there was no Thoughts of this Queſtion.

Now among theſe twenty Witneſſes, there are not above two or three at moſt that were at either of the Tryals before. They were never produced as Evidence, tho' indeed they proved the ſame thing that was teſtified by others then, but with many other Circumſtances and Particularities that were not before ſpoken of; ſome are now produced that were produced before, and the Reaſon is, becauſe they are themſelves concerned in thoſe Particularities which gave occaſion to the others to remember them.

Gentlemen, after the producing of ſo many Witneſſes, and ſo ſtrong a Proof; What is it that Mr. Otes has produced againſt it? His main Objection to their Teſtimony, is, There were ſeveral that came from St. Omers to teſtify at thoſe former Tryals what theſe now ſwear, who were not believed, but I was believed, and the Men were Convicted, Condemned, and Executed upon my Teſtimony: But is that all he has to ſay? No, ſays he, I have likewiſe Witneſſes to offer as a Counter-proof to them, a poſitive Proof that I was here in England, at the time they ſwear me to be at St. Omers; and he ſays well; if that be proved, there is an end of the Caſe. Well, what is the Proof? The Witneſſes that he has, have been theſe four, Cicely Mayo, Servant to Sir Richard Barker, Butler his Coachman, Page another of Sir Richard's Servants, and the Parſon Walker.

The Evidence of Page and Walker, tho' produced laſt by Mr. Otes, yet I crave leave to mention firſt, and ſet them out of the way. Page, he remembers to have ſeen Mr. Otes in a Diſguiſe at Sir Richard Barker's; that is, in grey Cloaths; but he is not certain as to the time, and he cannot take upon him to ſay what time of the Year, or what Year it was, only he believes it was in May; and therefore that can be no ſufficient Evidence to contradict Witneſſes, that with great Particularity ſpeak to certain times. As for Walker, the Parſon, he ſaid he ſaw him between St. Martin's lane and Leiceſter-fields; but he cannot remember the time when neither; nay, the Remembrance he has of it goes rather to another time, than the time in queſtion; for being asked what Circumſtance he knew the time by, he ſaid, it was about a Year and a quarter before the Plot was diſcovered, which muſt be in April or May 1677. and that will do the Doctor no Service at all upon this Queſtion.

Now let us conſider Mrs. Mayo's Teſtimony; and the Oath that ſhe made was this, That when Otes came over into England, ſhe ſaw him at Sir Richard Barker's Houſe the latter end of April, or the beginning of May, and the Week before Whitſuntide; the latter end of April, or the beginning of May, was the firſt time that he came, that ſhe ſaw him; but that he came before, as ſhe heard, but the Coachman only ſaw him, and told her that Otes had been there; but the ſecond time ſhe did ſee him, and he went in and dined there in the Houſe: Sir Richard Barker was not there, but my Lady's Siſter, her Sons and Daughters were there; ſhe ſays, that ſhe ſaw him again a Week before Whitſuntide; that when he came the firſt time he was in grey Cloaths, a white Hat, and a ſhort Perriwig: Afterwards he was in black Cloaths, a pretty long Perriwig, not very long, but the Perriwig was brown; and theſe are the Circumſtances ſhe remembers to have ſeen him by.

Now let us ſee what Butler, the Coachman, ſays, he remembers about the beginning of May he ſaw Otes at his Maſter's Houſe in a Diſguiſe; the other ſaid it was the latter end of April, or the beginning of May; but I ſtand not upon that; but this he does ſwear, That the firſt time he ſaw him, Cicely Mayo ſaw him too, that he was then in grey Cloaths, a white Hat, but his Hair was cut ſhort, and he had no Perriwig on; afterwards he came in a Cinnamon-colour'd Coat, and green Ribbons, and a long black Perriwig: This is Butler's Evidence.

Now

Now these two People's Evidence are utterly impossible to be reconciled, they contradict one another so much: First, they contradict one another in this; she says, The first time he came, she did not see him, but the Coachman told her, he had been there; but he swears, That she did at that time look out of the Window into the Yard, and did see him as well as he: Another Contradiction is this, She remembers the first time he came in grey Cloths, a white Hat, and a short Perriwig; the Coachman he swears he had no Perriwig on, but his Hair was cut short to his Ears: Then again she swears the second time, he was in black Cloths, and an indifferent long Perriwig, and the Perriwig was brown; and the other swears he was in cinnamon colour Cloths, and a long Perriwig, and it was a black one. Now thus you see the Witnesses contradict themselves, and cannot be reconciled to one another.

But take one thing more, which is very considerable, wherein she contradicts Mr. Gerrard; for she swears he was here a Week before Whitsontide, that she is sure of: Now that falls upon the nineteenth Day of May; then upon the sixteenth Day of May, was the Week before Whitsontide; now, that is a most Eminent Day, by the Testimony of Mr. Gerrard; for that happens to be the twenty sixth of May, New Stile, and that was the Day he was confirmed with Mr. Gerrard at St. Omers: And no Man sure can doubt, which of the two Witnesses is to believed; and it cannot but be true, that he was there at that time; because so remarkable a Circumstance cannot be forgotten; and yet this Woman swears that he was here a Week before Whitsontide, and that by Computation must be the time of his Confirmation: But, Gentlemen, another thing that I offer upon the Testimony of these Witnesses, is this; If you will believe it, he himself contradicts his own Witnesses, or they him, and one of them is forsworn: For he has sworn the Consult was the twenty fourth of April, and that three or four Days after that was over, he went back with the Fathers to St. Omers: Now, this contradicts all that his Witnesses have said: But he has given himself, as he thought, some little Latitude; says he, the Consult began the twenty fourth, but it held six or seven Days longer. We will for this time admit it to be so, and give him the six Days he requires; and yet after all, it will not come up to the time that his Witnesses speak to; for to the twenty fourth of April, add six Days, and that brings us just to the last Day of April; and then take four Days in May, to make up the three or four Days after the Consult was over, and we are yet at a great distance from the Whitson Week; for that was the nineteenth of May, and the Week before must be the twelfth or thirteenth, and so it is impossible to be reconciled to Truth what he and his Witnesses swear; either the Evidence that the Doctor now brings, must be a Contradiction to his own former Oath, or his Oath proves they are mistaken; besides the Contradiction that is between the Witnesses themselves; for they vary in a great many material Circumstances, which I have before reckoned up to you.

But, Gentlemen, false Witnesses are very often detected by little Circumstances, though I must needs say these are not small ones; for these are very remarkable things in themselves, and great Contradictions to one another, and therefore 'tis impossible they both can swear true.

There were some other Witnesses that were produced by Mr. Otes formerly upon this Point; one of which was Clay, the Priest, and he you hear is contradicted by Mr. Howard's Testimony, who not only tells you he was not at his House, when he says he was; but shews that Clay was mistaken in Point of Time: It was not in May, but in July: But that's not all, we have another Evidence, Gentlemen, to show how this Mistake comes to pass, and which will give a great light into this sort of Practice that has been used in this Matter; for we have two Witnesses that give you an Account how Otes and Sir William Waller were at the Gate-House with Clay, and there did threaten him, That unless he swore he dined with Otes at Mr. Howard's in May, they knew he was a Priest, and he should be hanged: The Man was somewhat cautious at first, for truly he knew nothing of the Matter, but at last, upon Condition he might have his Money again that was taken from him; he had been a Rogue formerly, and he did not know what he might do: Now, we find presently after, that he was in Fact brought as a Witness; what he swore, Mr. Howard tells you, and you have heard him contradicted in that point of Time. For Mr. Howard says, it was in July; and then it was agreed, that Otes was in England; for our Witnesses tell you, that at Midsummer he came away from St. Omers.

So that, Gentlemen, the Evidence that was formerly produced for him, is not only taken away by positive Counter-proof, but there is fixed upon him, with great Infamy, the additional Crime of Subornation, by forcing People to swear for him under the Threats of being hanged; and we all know how such People lay under great Fears and Terrors at that Time.

There was another Witness that was produced formerly for him; but I shall not take upon me to repeat all the particular Evidence that has been now given about that Matter: In short, our Objection to that Testimony lies thus; That Otes did swear in his Narrative, that Smith was a dangerous Man, and imployed by the Jesuits to stir up the People against the Government; that appears by Otes's own Oath. But it likewise appears, that afterwards they were reconciled, and that he gave Smith a Certificate under his Hand, that he was a good Protestant, and a good Subject, and about Eminent Service for the King: Now, we see no reason hitherto, why Mr. Otes should change his Mind, after having sworn him such an ill Man, all of a suddain to be so kind to give him his Protection, and so advantageous a Character, as that was in that Season. But, Gentlemen, the Mystery is easily unfolded, if we go three or four Days further in time, which brings us to the Tryals of Whitebread and Langhorn; it seems Mr. Otes was then aware of that, which is now an Objection to his Testimony; for it was made an Objection at the first Tryal of Ireland, That he was not at this Consult, for he was then actually at St. Omers; but no Witnesses were there to prove it; but now he was aware that some were a coming over, and it concerned him to make ſome good Proof if he could, that really and in Truth he was here in London at that Time.

And I cannot omit to take notice of what my Lord Chief Juſtice was pleaſed to obſerve and object to him now; It is a wonder a Man ſhould be here in Town ſo long; a Man that had much Acquaintance, as it ſeems he had, a Man that went about freely and publickly, as his own Witneſſes ſay he did, ſhould be ſeen by no body, but theſe few, ſhould not be able to give an Account, by any body, where he lodged, at any one Time in this Interval. Nay, by no Circumſtances that muſt occur to his own Knowledge, to be able to ſhew where he lodged, is very ſtrange; though it ſhould be that he did lodge in the Houſes of thoſe that would not come to give Evidence, as he alledges, yet it is almoſt impoſſible, but there muſt be ſome other Circumſtances to prove his being here, beſides the Evidence of the Landlord of the Houſe where he lodged; but he gives no Account where he was lodged, and whom he converſed withal, but theſe People only; and that they ſhould ſee him, who were not his Intimates, and none elſe in the World, is to me one of the moſt ſtrange Things that can be conceived.

Now, Gentlemen, when he has given no manner of Satisfaction, that he was here, and is by twenty Witneſſes ſworn not to be here; what is it that he ſays to all this? Why, he doth inſiſt upon it, that his Credit muſt not be now Impeached, becauſe that once he had the fortune to be believed, and ſome Men have died and ſuffered for it; as if no Perjury were to be puniſhed, but that which is unſucceſsful; whereas the reaſon why Perjury is taken notice of in the Temporal Courts, is only becauſe of the Miſchief that it may do: Shall it then be no Crime when a Man has done the Miſchief, when the fear of that Miſchief was the ground of making it a Crime? That is a moſt monſtrous way of arguing. And yet this would Mr. Otes have look like an Argument, that becauſe he has been believed in his falſe Oaths, and Men have ſuffered by his Perjury, and he has been ſucceſsful in his Crime, that Succeſs has protected his Wickedneſs from Puniſhment. This I confeſs is a new way of arguing; and ſuch as none but Mr. Otes could certainly have invented.

But, Gentlemen, to contradict this, we have ſhown you, that as he has had the fortune to be believed; ſo he has likewiſe had the fortune to be disbelieved. For there have been produced as many Records of Acquittals, where he was an Evidence, as there have been produced Convictions upon his Teſtimony; ſo that he has been as often disbelieved as believed.

Whither then does he betake himſelf next? He has called a great many Witneſſes to give you, as Evidence for him, an Account what Opinions at that time the Houſes of Parliament, the Courts of Juſtice, and the Juries had of his Evidence; and then inſiſts upon it, that now to call his Credit in queſtion, is to arraign the Juſtice of the Nation, the Wiſdom of both Houſes of Parliament that believed him, the Honeſty of the Juries that convicted thoſe whom he accuſed, and the Integrity and Underſtanding of the Judges who were learned, wiſe and juſt Men; and with great Earneſtneſs he asks the Queſtion, Why now at this time of Day ſhould this be called in queſtion, which received ſo much Credit and Approbation ſo long ago, by the good Opinion that all ſorts of Men had of it at that Time? And, now to queſtion this, he would have thought to be a caſting a Blot upon the Wiſdom of the Nation, and an arraigning the Juſtice of it; when, if the Thing be duly conſidered, the not puniſhing this hainous Offence with the utmoſt Severity that the Law will allow of, now, that theſe Circumſtances appear to make it plain and evident, would be a greater piece of Injuſtice and Reproach, rather to our Nation, than any ways a Reflection on the Juſtice of it.

Gentlemen, when we conſider the Circumſtances of this Caſe now, I do verily think it will appear to be a very ſtrange and wonderful Thing to us, that ever any Man ſhould have believed him. And it is a ſtrange Conſideration to reflect upon, to think what Credit he had at that time. But withal conſider, Gentlemen, could any one imagine, that it were poſſible for any Man on Earth to become ſo impudent, as to dare to expoſe himſelf before the High Court of Parliament, the great Courts of Juſtice, and there tell a moſt Infamous Lye for the taking away the Lives of Men? The greatneſs of the Attempt, was a great inducement to the belief of it, becauſe no Man could be preſumed to dare the doing of ſuch a Thing, if he had not a Foundation of Truth to build upon. And when he had thus made his Diſcovery, and that of ſuch a nature too, a moſt horrid, bloody and traiterous Conſpiracy to murder the King, to overturn the Government, to maſſacre all the Proteſtants in the Kingdom, and to deface the very Name of the Proteſtant Religion. What was more natural than that the Parliament ſhould take all imaginable care to prevent the accompliſhment of ſo great a Miſchief? And conſider too how much eaſier it was for him to relate his Evidence in a continued Story, than afterwards it was to maintain it, when it came to be examined and oppoſed by them that were accuſed, who beſt knew wherein, and by what means to prove him falſe.

Gentlemen, the Care the Parliament took to diſappoint any Deſigns of this nature, and the means they uſed for the Security of the King and Kingdom, and the Preſervation of our Religion and Lives (which I cannot but obſerve was previous to the Tryal of any one Offender, that was tried and convicted upon this Evidence) muſt needs put the whole Nation under great apprehenſions of Danger, and make the way much eaſier for him to be believed, as by ſad Experience we found it did. Under theſe Circumſtances came thoſe Men to be tried, with this further (as we cannot now but think) that there were ill Men at work, that laboured to improve thoſe Fears and Jealouſies, that had already poſſeſt Men's Minds; the Wonder then will be the leſs, if Men under ſuch Diſadvantages, tried by Men under thoſe fears and apprehenſions, had the ill Fortune to be convicted. But when Men had a little overcome their Fears, and began to conſider his Evidence more calmly, the Scene was changed, Otes loſt his Credit, and the Men were all acquitted. Nor is this Proſecution any reflection on the Proteſtant Religion, whoſe cauſe he falſly aſſume,

ſumes to himſelf. No, Gentlemen, the Proteſtant Religion had no ſhare in that Invention. It needs not the ſupport of a Lye, no not the moſt plauſible Lye, much leſs of one ſo Infamous as this does now appear to be. It is rather a Vindication of our Religion, to puniſh ſuch Offenders as they deſerve, and the proper way to maintain the Juſtice of the Nation, and wipe off that Reproach this Man's Perjury has brought upon it.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence has been very long, and it cannot be expected after ſo much Time has been ſpent in this Cauſe, and ſuch a difference of Teſtimony, and eſpecially conſidering that the Teſtimony has met with frequent interruptions, and, I may ſay, ſome Part of it delivered in great Confuſion, it cannot be thought or imagined, I ſay, that I ſhould be able to remind you of the ſeveral Particulars that concern this Caſe, and may be neceſſary to be obſerved about it. But, Gentlemen, I am ſure, by the Knowledge I have of the moſt of you, you are Perſons of great Underſtanding; ſo that what may be omitted by me, I queſtion not, but your own Abilities will ſupply; I confeſs I am much ſhortned in my Labour, by the Pains that Mr. Sollicitor has taken to ſum up the Evidence to you, and without all doubt, has done it with all Faithfulneſs to his Maſter, and with great Right to himſelf. I could not hear much of what he did ſay; but you, who were nearer and did hear all, which I could not do, your Judgments will direct you to lay that Weight upon it, which it deſerves, and which the Law will allow; for, Gentlemen, I am bound to tell you, that you are to lay no weight upon any Allegations on the one Side or on the other, or what is obſerved to you by the Court, further than is ſupported by the Teſtimony that has been offered.

Now, Gentlemen, I think it not amiſs for me (before ſuch time as I enter upon the Conſideration of the Particulars, and reminding you what I take to be Evidence in this Caſe, and what not) to clear one Point, that this Perſon Otes, the Defendant, againſt whom this Indictment of Perjury is brought, has endeavoured to inſinuate, on purpoſe to gain himſelf a Reputation, which if he could acquire this way, would add a greater Reproach to the Juſtice of the Nation, than it has contracted already, by giving too much Credit to ſuch profligate Wretches, as have too lately appeared among us. The Objection he makes and inſiſts ſo much upon; ſays he, I was believed very much before, I can produce you the Opinions of the Judges, that declared themſelves very well ſatisfied with my Evidence, and the Verdicts of Juries, two or three, that convicted Men upon my Teſtimony; and not only that, but here were likewiſe three or four Parliaments that did not only believe that Teſtimony (or rather Narrative; for I cannot call that Teſtimony which was given before the Houſe of Commons) that I gave, but did declare their Satisfaction of the Truth of what I ſaid, which Satisfaction and Belief of theirs did produce Thanks from both Houſes to me for giving this Teſtimony.

But all this while, what Mr. Sollicitor ſaid upon this Point, is a plain and a full Anſwer to it: If in caſe upon a ſudden Information, the King, the Parliament, the Courts of Law, and Juries, were ſurprized into this Belief, as not imagining there could be a pack of ſuch Villains, that could be wound up to that height, as theſe Fellows have been; that there could be ſuch an horrid Impoſtor, as this Fellow, that ſhould make ſuch Attempts, unleſs there had been ſome Truth in it.

Therefore the ſurprize of the Thing, at that Time might obtain a Belief; but, God forbid, that that Belief which was ſo obtained, ſhould protect the Party believed from being called in queſtion for the falſhood of that Teſtimony, which was the ground of that Belief. It was hardly credible that any Perſon could be ſo wicked as to declare ſuch impudent falſities as theſe; but, God forbid, that we ſhould continue longer under the ſame blindneſs and deluſion, the whole Matter is now laid open and detected. Therefore, Gentlemen, if you are ſatisfied in your Conſciences, and do believe upon the Teſtimony and Evidence that has been given here this Day, that thoſe very Things that were ſo much believed before, were credited upon the Surprize of a ſudden Diſcovery, or the boldneſs of the Undertaking, yet now do plainly appear to be falſe; then be it, I ſay, upon your Conſciences, if you let this falſhood go unpuniſhed: It is a Charge upon us who are upon our Oaths as Judges, and who muſt anſwer to the great Judge of all the World for our Judgments; and 'tis likewiſe a Charge upon you that are ſworn to try this Cauſe, and muſt anſwer, as well as we, for what you do in it, not to have regard to any thing that was done before upon that hurry and ſurprize, but ſeriouſly to weigh and conſider what is ſworn now, and from thence make a Concluſion, whether you are not ſatisfied that innocent Blood has been ſpilt by the means of this Fellow: Nay, in this Caſe, 'tis a contracting of much more Guilt than ordinary, as it is Murder done under the Forms of Law, and common Methods of Juſtice; That Men ſhould take away the Lives of their Fellow Creatures, by Perjury and Falſe Accuſations, is of ſuch dreadful Conſequence, that if the Juſtice of the Nation ſhall be afraid to have ſuch Matters detected, there would be an end of all the Security we have of our Lives, Liberties, and whatſoever is dear to us.

Gentlemen, the Juſtice of the Nation lies under a very great Reproach Abroad, for this particular Thing; and we muſt be, all of us, that have any Concern for the Honour and Good of our Country, uneaſie, till this Matter be throughly ſearched into, and impartially determined; and I take it to be a Caſe of the greateſt Importance to the Settlement of the Kingdom, for the Credit of our Laws, for the Honour and Juſtice of our Kingdom, that ever came in Judgment in any of our Courts of Juſtice. And therefore as you reſpect your own Conſciences, and the Obligation of that Oath you are now under, and as you would be thought to bear any regard to the Peace, Honour and Good of your Country, take care to examine ſtrictly and impartially into the Merits of this Cauſe, and weigh the Evidence which has been given on all Sides: Be not at all diſmayed with the Apprehenſion of Clamour mour or Calumny, from any ſort of People whatſoever, for doing your Duty; neither be led away by the Inſinuations of what was believed formerly; for you hear the Reaſon which might make Otes be believed then; but it is incumbent upon you to enquire, whether you have not ſufficient reaſon to be ſatisfied what the Truth now is.

And, Gentlemen, I take my ſelf to be the more obliged to take ſome pains in the preſſing a ſerious and impartial Conſideration of theſe things upon you, becauſe I cannot but ſay, my Blood does curdle, and my Spirits are raiſed, that after the Diſcoveries made, I think, to the ſatisfaction of all that has attended this Day, to ſee a Fellow continue ſo impudent as to brazen it out, as he has done this Day; and that there ſhould appear no more Shame and Confuſion than what was ſeen in the Face of that monſtrous Villain that ſtood but now at the Bar; the pretended Infirmity of his Body made him remove out of Court, but the Infirmity of his depraved Mind, the Blackneſs of his Soul, the Baſeneſs of his Actions ought to be looked upon with ſuch Horror and Deteſtation, as to think him unworthy any longer to tread upon the Face of God's Earth: You'll pardon my Warmth, I hope; for it is impoſſible that ſuch things ſhould come before any honeſt Man, and not have ſome extraordinary Influence upon him.

Gentlemen, As to the Merits of the Cauſe, you have the poſitive Proof of many Witneſſes, whoſe Teſtimony I ſhall by and by, as well as I can, repeat to you; but, pray you, firſt give me leave to obſerve ſomewhat, as to ſome Points that have been ſtarted at the Bar, as, Whether a Papiſt can be a Witneſs? Now, ſuppoſe all theſe Perſons that come here to teſtify this Matter againſt the Defendant, were Papiſts, as they are not, except you can take it upon your Oaths and Conſciences, that all theſe Men are guilty of voluntary and wilful Perjury, you muſt find the Defendant guilty.

As to their Difference in Religion, which Otes ſo much hung upon, I muſt tell you, every Papiſt or Roman Catholick, call them how you will, except the contrary be made appear by a Legal Exception; I mean ſuch as would take off the Teſtimony of one that were not a Papiſt, is as good a Witneſs in a Court of Juſtice, as any Proteſtant whatſoever; we are not come here to controvert Points of Religion, but to try a bare Matter of Fact; ſo that all that ſtuff that you have heard here this Day from the Defendant, and thoſe Inſinuations that he made about their Religion, on purpoſe to caſt Dirt and Filth upon all the Teſtimony that they have brought againſt him, muſt ſignify nothing with you at all. If in caſe ſuch Doctrine happen to prevail as he has this Day preached, then it is in the Power of any Villain, to ſwear any Miſchief whatſoever againſt a Roman Catholick, and that Roman Catholick has no way to vindicate himſelf, nor to make the Truth appear. We have no ſuch Exceptions to Witneſſes in our Law; every Man, till it is made to appear, that his Credit is forfeited, may and ought to be received as a Witneſs to give Teſtimony in any Cauſe; ſo that all that Matter is of no Import at all.

And, Gentlemen, I am the rather minded to hint this unto you, becauſe he has inſinuated ſomething out of the Tryals of Grove and Pickering, and Ireland, which was in December, in the Year 1677. at which Tryal Whitebread and Fenwick, who had pleaded to the ſame Indictment, were brought on to Tryal; but becauſe there was but one Witneſs againſt them, the Court diſcharged them for that time, and they came not again to Tryal till the Month of June or July hereafter, when they were convicted and executed; now between that time of Ireland's Tryal, and the time when Whitebread and the reſt came on to Tryal again, ſays Otes, they had ſufficient time to have brought all their Witneſſes from St. Omers, to teſtify this Buſineſs of my being there, having notice by the former Tryal, what Evidence was againſt them; but all the Witneſſes they did bring, which were about fifteen or ſixteen, were not ſufficient to countervail the Teſtimony that Otes gave of his being here in Town, and thereupon they were convicted, condemned, and afterwards (I am ſorry to ſay it) executed.

This is the Objection he makes, but at the ſame time I muſt repeat what I ſaid before, when ſuch a diſmal Story as this was told, when he had the Confidence to relate it before, in the Houſes of Parliament, and there obtained Credit; no wonder if, in that hurry, all of that Perſwaſion were look'd upon with an evil Eye; and the Conviction of thoſe that were at that time accuſed were too eaſy.

We muſt remember the Apprehenſions ſome were under of our Religion being to be ſubverted, our Government to be deſtroyed, our King to be murdered, our Throats to be cut by the Papiſts, to that height, that this very Fellow, Otes, was ſo much credited, that all other People almoſt were below him, and greater Reſpect ſhewn to him, than to the Branches of the Royal Family. Nay, it was come to that degree of Folly, to give it no worſe Name, that in publick Societies, to the Reproach and Infamy of them be it ſpoken, this profligate Villain was careſſed, was drunk to, and ſaluted, by the Name of the Saviour of the Nation. O prodigious Madneſs! that ſuch a Title, as that was, ſhould ever be given to ſuch a Proſtitute Monſter of Impiety, as this is.

Good God, whither were we running, when many eaſy People were ſo ſtrangely wrought upon by this Impoſtor, and when the villainous and black Deſigns of ſome evil Inſtruments amongſt us, could prevail ſo far, as to deceive almoſt a whole Nation into the Belief of ſo horrid a Falſhood; even at the ſame time that a hidden Treaſon too deeply contriv'd was carried on amongſt us? But, God be thanked, was not too lately diſcovered. The Conſpirators had a fair Game of it, whilſt this Fellow was believed, and they needed no other means to accompliſh their Deſign: But when he was found falſe, and the pretended Plot had loſt its Credit in the World, what is their next Step? Why, then they enter into that black and bloody Conſpiracy, from which it hath pleaſed God lately to deliver us.

I ſpeak this the rather, becauſe I know there are in my Eye ſeveral Perſons, whoſe Fears of Popery made them give Credit to ſuch Villains as theſe before: But when it pleaſed God to open their Eyes, and the falſe Miſt vaniſh'd,

they

they found a real Conſpiracy againſt the Perſons of that Bleſſed King, lately dead, and of our Gracious Sovereign, now living, carried on under the pretence of that falſe, but ſo much credited Diſcovery, and now, God be thanked, all our Eyes are open. And I hope, as we are ſecured from what we ſo vainly dreaded, ſo we ſhall not be afraid to have Villany detected, and the greateſt Mark of Infamy that can be put upon it.

Yes, Gentlemen, there was a Conſult, and there was a Conſpiracy againſt the Life of our King, our Government, and our Religion: Not a Conſult at the White Horſe in the Strand, but a Cabal and Aſſociation of perfidious Rebels and Traitors, who had a mind to embroil us in Blood and Confuſion, but, God be thanked, it had not its deſired Effect; the ſame ſort of Villains were Parties in this Conſpiracy, that had too great a Hand in the late great Rebellion, which we to this Day feel the ſmart of, and they had a mind to make uſe of the like Inſtruments, as they did before, to bring us into the like Miſery, as we were before involv'd in.

And is it not a prodigious thing, to have ſuch Actions as theſe to day defended in a Court of Juſtice, with that Impudence and Unconcernedneſs, as tho' he would challenge even God Almighty to puniſh his Wickedneſs, and blaſphemouſly bleſſes God, that he has liv'd to do ſuch wonderful Service to the Proteſtant Religion; and is ſo obſtinate, in his Villany, as to declare he would venture his Blood for the Confirmation of ſo impious a Falſhood; and indeed, to ſpeak the Truth, he makes no great Venture in it; for when he had pawn'd his immortal Soul, by ſo perjur'd a Teſtimony, he may very eaſily proffer the venturing of his vile Carcaſs to maintain it?

Gentlemen, Having thus ſaid, (and I could not forbear ſaying of it) give me leave to put you in mind of what lies before you now to be tryed. Firſt, this Indictment takes notice, that there was an Indictment, taken before the Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-delivery at Hicks's-hall, of High Treaſon againſt Whitebread, Fenwick, Ireland, Pickering and Grove, and that Indictment, and the whole Record is proved to you by Swift: For I muſt tell you as I go along, what Proofs there are of all the Particulars, and you, upon conſideration of all that is alledged, are to be Judges what is ſufficient Proof to convict the Defendant of the Crime that is laid to him; which is wilful and corrupt Perjury. The Indictment, Gentlemen, ſets forth the Oath that Otes did make at Ireland's Tryal, and then avers it to be falſe: For the Oath that he did take, that ſtands thus, That he did ſwear he was preſent at a Conſult, held at the White Horſe Tavern in the Strand, the 24th of April 1678. That he did ſwear, That it was there reſolved to murder the late King: How that that Reſolution was carried by him from Chamber to Chamber, that is, to Whitebread's and Fenwick's, and Ireland's Chambers, and ſaw them ſign this Reſolution there; and the Aſſignment of the Perjury, is, That he was not preſent at any Conſult, 'tis not that there was not any ſuch Conſult, tho' it appears by the Evidence that there was none ſuch, but that he was not preſent at any Conſult at all held there at that time.

Now, that he did make ſuch an Oath, is proved by a worthy Gentleman, Mr. Foſter; a Gentleman known to you all that live in the City of London; and he did truly make that Remark in the beginning of his Teſtimony, that any honeſt Man in his place would have done, That he was one of thoſe unfortunate Men, that tryed Mr. Ireland; for tho' a Man do go according to his Conſcience, as to be ſure there is no queſtion to be made of it, but all theſe Jury-men did in finding that Verdict; yet when I come to find, that the Evidence, upon which I convicted thoſe Men, is detected to be falſe; and that upon my Verdict the Perſons were executed; tho' no Guilt of their Blood is really contracted by me; yet I cannot but think my ſelf unfortunate, that I was, tho' innocently, an Inſtrument of their Death; and there is never an one of you, but would have thought your ſelves unfortunate, if you had convicted Men upon ſuch a Teſtimony, which tho' you believed then, yet afterwards you ſhould have reaſon to conclude was falſe. And yet Otes would have you think, that becauſe they believed him when he was a Villain, and not known to be ſo, you muſt believe him, notwithſtanding his Villany is now diſcovered; for that is all the Argument this learned Doctor has a mind to impoſe upon you by.

Gentlemen, Mr. Sollicitor has been very particular, in giving an Account of the whole Evidence, and then it comes to this, which is the natural Queſtion in the Caſe, Whether upon the Teſtimonies that have been given to you, there does remain ſo much as a Doubt, what Verdict you ought to give; for I confeſs, were it a thing in the leaſt doubtful, Matters of Perjury are ſo nice and tender, that we and you ought to be cautious how you convict People for Perjury in doubtful Matters; but if it be a thing without doubt, and plainly evident, that there was a Verdict thereupon, adds to the Guilt; becauſe the Juſtice of the Nation is impoſed upon; the God of Heaven deliver every honeſt Man's Soul and Conſcience from ſuch Guilt. For my part, I would not for the Univerſe have the leaſt Guilt of innocent Blood lie upon me.

Then, Gentlemen, to prove what Otes ſwore is not true, you have no leſs than twenty two Witneſſes, that ſwear directly he was not here in London the 24th of April 1678. But it may be that it is not ſuch a poſitive Teſtimony as the Law requires to prove a Perjury; but then to ſwear directly that he was in another place at that time, is a poſitive Contradiction to his Evidence; and this has been teſtified by the Oaths of twenty two Perſons, againſt the Credit of whoſe Teſtimony there is no Objection at all really made, but only Impudence; and that Shadow of an Objection, They are all Papiſts, and I am a Proteſtant, and truly a wonderful Credit is is, I muſt needs ſay, for the Proteſtant Religion for to have ſuch a Learned and Pious Supporter, as Mr. Otes, to be of that Perſwaſion, but it is certain there was a Judas amongſt the twelve Apoſtles, and there are Raſcals of all Perſwaſions. And truly I take it makes never the more for his Advantage, nor the Honour of our Church, that he is pleaſed to call himſelf by that Name, which he, and ſuch as he, have brought into ſome Scandal and Reproach, by ſetting themſelves up, as the great Pillars of it; but we know Dr. Otes has been very liberal to himſelf, he has given himſelf Baptiſm, and given himſelf the Doctor's Degree, and now he gives himſelf the Title of the Reforming Proteſtant, Mr. Otes. We have Proteſtant Shoe-makers, and Proteſtant Joyners, and Proteſtant Atheiſts, and all ſorts of true Proteſtant Raſcals; but it becomes us and you to aſſert the Honour of our Religion by diſowning any Fellowſhip with ſuch Villains, or their Actions.

Gentlemen, The Method that was taken, gives you an exact account in point of time, as to this whole Buſineſs. Firſt, Says Mr. Hilſley, I left him, in time the 23d of April, New Stile, at St. Omers, and I am ſure I ſaw him there then, which is the 13th, Old Stile, the 24th of April, New Stile, which is the 14th, Old Stile, I came from St. Omers, I did not ſee him there that Morning, but I my ſelf came to Calais, it being Sunday, and I ſtayed there till Sunday in the Afternoon, and all Night. I came on Monday in the Afternoon to take Water at Calais, and from thence went to Dover. And from thence the next Day I went towards London; but I ſtayed four or five Days by the way before I came to London; but then there is this Circumſtance that you muſt take along with you, Gentlemen, That at this time, one Mr. Burnaby was coming from London, and going to St. Omers, and met with Mr. Hilſley in his way towards London; ſays Hilſley, I came afterwards to Town, and that was upon the Monday following, which happens to be the 21ſt or 22d of April, our Stile; but this I do remember very particularly, which makes his Teſtimony to be true, and not dreſſed up for this occaſion; ſays he, I told one Osborn at that time that we had a pretty Fellow at St. Omers, that went ſometimes by the Name of Lucy, and ſometimes by the Name of Otes, a Miniſter of the Church of England; and there he comes and gives an account of his ridiculous childiſh Actions, and what a remarkable Fellow he was; and this, ſays he, I told to Osborn.

Now, to make this good, you have one Mr. Dorrel, who tells you there happened a Diſcourſe, where he was preſent, between his Mother and Mr. Osborn, about Religion; and amongſt other things, Osborn did ſay, Mr. Hilſley had told him he left Otes at St. Omers when he came away from thence; and Mr. Osborn, he comes and ſays, I remember I did tell Mr. Dorrel and his Mother, at that time that Mr. Hilſley did tell me this Story; ſo that here are theſe two Witneſſes which ſupport Mr. Hilſley in that Circumſtance of the time of his coming away, and his Relation of Otes being left behind him, and that this was related about the 21ſt or 22d of April.

Burnaby is the next Perſon that was produced, and he ſwears he met Hilſley by Cittinbourn; and he happens to ſet out for St. Omers the 18th of April, our Stile, and to come thither to St. Omers the 21ſt; and he ſwears poſitively, that he was there the 21ſt, 22d, 23d, and was there the 25th Day of April, our Stile; and he does poſitively affirm, that all thoſe Days he ſaw Otes there at St. Omers; that Otes intruded into his Company at his firſt coming; and that he and all the other Scholars wondered at the Confidence of the Man; and he particularly remembers that he was with him at a Publick Entertainment that was there the 25th; and if ſo, then it is impoſſible that what Otes has ſworn of his being at the Conſult the 24th of April, our Stile, can be true; and except you can imagine Mr. Otes to fly from St. Omers the 24th Day in the Morning, and be at the Conſult and back again at Night, which is more than he would have believed, becauſe he ſwears the contrary, you muſt conclude that what he ſwore was falſe.

The next Witneſs is Mr. Pool, and he comes and ſays, he was there at St. Omers, and he came over from thence the 25th of April, and that was the Day after Otes ſwears the Conſult of the Plot to be here; and all the reſt of the Witneſſes do directly ſwear, That at the time that Pool went from thence, Otes was there; ſo that the Teſtimony of Pool is fully and poſitively confirmed; and Pool gives you a reaſon why he came over, which was the Death of a Brother of his, and upon a Proſpect of an Eſtate he came into England, which likewiſe is a reaſonable Circumſtance why he ſhould remember the time, becauſe he had ſuch Inducement to come over hither.

The next, Gentlemen, is one Thornton, and he comes to the Month of May, to the 1ſt and 2d of May, their Stile, which was the 21ſt and 22d of April, our Stile, and particularly he is ſure Otes was there upon the 22d of April, our Stile, that is, the 2d of May, their Stile. For, ſays he, there was an Action or Play of the Scholars; and I can tell you how I remember Otes was there, Otes had a mind to have a place to ſee the Play, which he had no Pretence or Title to; and he had a Scuffle with ſome body about it; and therefore I remember by that Token, that he was there at that time.

Now, Gentlemen, it is not eaſy to be imagined, that ſix or ſeven Men ſhould agree in their Teſtimony in all thoſe Circumſtances, which in themſelves are but minute; yet when offered as Reaſons to induce Men's Remembrance, muſt be allowed as good Reaſons; and yet this is to be thought to be but a made Story. If Sir Richard Barker's Coach-man, and Mrs. Mayo had had any ſuch Circumſtances to ſupport their Teſtimony, they would have had much more Credit.

Then there is one Conway; and it is very obſervable what he ſpeaks of; for he was there all the while that they ſay Otes was there, and he gives you an account that he ſaw him with Burnaby the firſt time he came over, and agrees with Burnaby in this, that he wonder'd much at his Confidence, and did think that he was very well known to him before: He ſwears Otes came in thither about the beginning of December 77, and he was not abſent, ſays he and ſeveral more, any one Night, except in January once at Watton, till he went away in June 78. Nay, they are ſo preciſe in their Memory for very good Reaſons, becauſe they are ſo regular in their Societies, and keep a ſtrict Order, each has his fixed Place in the Refectory, where all the Socii or the Members of the College do meet; and becauſe this Fellow was an old Fellow, older than the reſt, and likewiſe was a Dunce, therefore he was ſet at the Dunce-Table in every body's View, becauſe he was a Block-

Blockhead, and too old to keep Company with the Boys; ſo that though perhaps one of thoſe young Fellows in a mixt Society may eſcape the View, and be abſent without being miſſed, yet Remarkable Mr. Otes is not ſo eaſily forgotten, that us'd to ſit by himſelf. And as that Noble Lord, my Lord Gerrard of Bromley ſays, he has a particular Face, and a particular Tone; and there was more reaſon to remark him than any other, both upon the Account of his Perſon and of his Actions; ſo that I muſt needs ſay indeed, it is not a downright and poſitive Swearing, but their Teſtimony is given with deliberation and recollection of ſuch particular Circumſtances as may reaſonably induce any unprejudic'd Perſon to give Credit to it.

The next Witneſs, Gentlemen, is Haggerſtone, whoſe Evidence is wonderful particular, and very material as to the Circumſtances that accompany it. For you are to obſerve, that in theſe Colleges ſome are of the Sodality, and ſome are not; and ſome are of ſuch and ſuch Claſſes or Forms, and others of other. Now this Gentleman and Mr. Otes were of the ſame Form, and he does particularly remember that he was ſetting up for a Preacher, as he has an excellent knack that way; and he tells you, how ridiculous he made the late King in a Sermon; that he halted between two Opinions, and there ran a Stream of Popery between his Legs; and ſuch like precious Stuff he vented. And to fix it to be about the ſame time that is now in queſtion, he ſays, he particularly remembers it was when he was Reader, when Mr. Otes was, it ſeems, the Buffoon to the Society, or as I may call him, the Jack-pudding to the College, that uſed to make them Sport, and was guilty of ſo many ridiculous Things, that they could not but put particular Remarks upon him.

Next, I take notice, that this Perſon ſays, there were two Perſons, Williams and Marſh, that were qualified to give Suffrages in the Congregation, that is, they were paſs'd eighteen Years ſtanding, and did go over: For that there was a Conſult, is not denied, nor that it was in London, nor that it was upon the 24*th* of April; but they ſay, it was a Triennial Meeting, which they us'd to have once in three Years for the choice of ſome Officers to manage the Affairs of the Society; as for the choice of a Provincial, and other Perſons that they were to ſend upon their Errands, in order to the ſupport of their Society; ſo that under the Colour and Countenance, of what was in it ſelf ordinary and uſual, and that happened to be at that Time, Otes, who had heard ſomewhat of it, and that it was the 24*th* of April, and that ſuch and ſuch were to be there, he upon that Hear-ſay, as ſhould ſeem at St. Omers, does feign and contrive this pretended Conſpiracy.

The next is one Beeſton; and it is very material too that he ſwears: For beſides what he teſtifies, That from the time of his coming, which was in December 77, he was not abſent till the 23d of June, when he went away; and for the Time in queſtion, he very well remembers his being there, by this Circumſtance: Says he, I was choſen to be Reader of the Sodality in the Month of March, but then Otes comes and gets the Office out of my Hands; but ſtill with me there was that Benefit reſerved, that if he ſhould at any time fail of Reading there upon a Sunday, or a Holy-day, I was then to have read, and to have ſupplied his Place. Says he, I was there from March, till the Time Otes went away in June; and Otes read there that very Sunday before the Time in June that he went away. And I am ſure I heard him read every time; and in caſe he had not read every time, I muſt have read in his Abſence: But I did not read at all during that time.

Now, Gentlemen, when a Man is to ſucceed or to ſupply the Abſence of another in an Office that is peculiar as to the Charge incumbent upon the Officer, and conſiderable as to the Profit of it, that muſt needs make an impreſſion upon the Mind, and give a Man a more exact remembrance of the Thing; and therefore I recommend it particularly to your Obſervation.

The next is one Mr. Smith, and he ſays, he ſaw Otes there all the Time: And as to one part of it, when he himſelf was in the Infirmary, Otes went to viſit him every two or three Days; nay, and about ſuch a Time in May, ſays he, which was about the beginning of May, Otes being then in the Infirmary, not well, the Doctor and he had a pretty Dialogue together, and Otes ſpoke falſe Latin to the Doctor, for he ſaid, Si placeat Dominatio veſtra, in the beginning of his Compliment; This he did particularly ſay was the Expreſſion that this excellent Scholar uſed to the Phyſician at his firſt application to him, and all the whole College took notice of that Piece of his Learning.

The next is one Price, and he tells you, he was there all the time that the others ſpeak of; he remembers him very well, and particularly ſays, I am ſure Otes was there the 11*th* of May, N. S. which will be the firſt of May O. S. Becauſe, ſays he, I know he was ſoundly beaten that Day upon a Quarrel that he had there; this particularly he ſpeaks to, beſides his remembrance of the other Circumſtances in concurrence with the former Witneſſes.

Mr. Doddington ſwears the ſame, and Mr. Gerrard alſo ſwears the ſame, with that other particular Circumſtance that Mr. Sollicitor repeated to you, which was of Otes being there upon the Day of Confirmation, the 26*th* of May N. S. the 16*th* of May O. S. and he is ſure of it, becauſe he was Confirmed along with him, and therefore it is impoſſible he ſhould forget it: And my Lord Gerrard, who was next, gives this reaſon upon his remembrance of all the forementioned Particulars, that he always took ſpecial notice of the Man for his Canting Tone, his Phyſiognomy, and remarkable Behaviour.

Then there is Mr. Morgan who is no Papiſt, but a Miniſter of the Church of England; now Mr. Otes was angry with all the reſt, becauſe they were Catholicks; but what has to ſay to Mr. Morgan who is a Proteſtant? Why the truth is, there are none of them to be believed, becauſe they ſwear againſt him, and really he ought to be permitted to give that reaſon, or it is like to go very hard with him; for if in caſe you believe but a third Part of the Teſtimony that has been given, it is enough to do his Work. But what ſays Mr. Morgan? Truly he comes up to the 24*th* of April particularly, and he tells you how he remembers it; and the firſt Occaſion he had to look into it was, they being all ſurprized at St. Omers at what Otes had Sworn, and Mr. Morgan recollecting with himſelf, did remember that very Day he was playing at Ball within the College, and happened to toſs his Ball over the Wall into the Garden, and not being able to recover it any other way, he ſpied Otes walking and looking into his Book, and therefore he deſired him to lend him his Key, and by the help of that, he went in and fetched his Ball; and this was the very Day that Otes ſwore he was here.

Mr. Arundel ſays the ſame: The two Turberviles ſay the ſame; and one of them is poſitive to have ſeen him there, either the 24*th* and 25*th*, or 23d and 24th of April O. S. which is the 3d and 4th, or 4th and 5th of May N. S. and if it were either of theſe Days, it cannot be poſſible he ſhould be here at the Conſult.

The next is Mr. Clavering, and I cannot but particularly take notice of what he has ſworn: He ſays Mr. Otes was there all the time that the reſt ſpeak of; but it ſeems particularly about the time of the Congregation in London: There comes in a Stranger that was poor, and this Gentleman Mr. Clavering made a Collection for him; and it was talked of in the College as the reaſon why he had not Succeſs in his Collection, becauſe the Fathers were gone to the Congregation. Nay, and yet farther ſays he, I do remember particularly that Mr. Williams and Mr. Marſh did go over to the Congregation, but Otes did not; for I do remember when Williams and Marſh came back again, I had ſome Diſcourſe with Mr. Otes about the Congregation: He came to me, and deſired to know of me what Account I was able to give of the Matter of that Meeting after the Conſult was over. Now had Mr. Otes been there, and been a Perſon of that great Truſt that he had ſworn himſelf into, he needed not ſure have asked Mr. Clavering at St. Omers, what the Buſineſs of the Conſult was at London, where he himſelf had been, but the other had not.

There is beſides Mr. Copley, another Witneſs, Mr. Cooke, that ſpeaks particularly of the 30*th* of April, that he was ſure Otes was there then, becauſe of the Proceſſion, and becauſe he walked by himſelf in it; and Wright the laſt Witneſs gives a general Account, but ſpeaks to no particular Time.

And now, Gentlemen, after all this Evidence, Viva voce, you muſt give me leave to hint Teſtimonium Rei, an improbable Oath was that which Otes owns he made, if it be conſidered in all its Parts. Can any Man believe that fifty Perſons ſhould meet together in a Tavern in London, and theſe fifty Perſons ſhould come to a Reſolution to kill the King and ſubvert the Government, and alter the Religion; and that this Conſultation being drawn up in the Tavern (for ſo he ſwears it was) they ſhould ſever themſelves into leſſer Clubs and Companies, and take care that none ſhould ſign when they were altogether and among themſelves, but muſt have it carried up and down from one Man's Chamber to another, and find no body to truſt with this Affair, that if diſcovered, muſt ſubject them to preſent Deſtruction, and ruin their whole Party, but only Mr. Otes, who was none of their own Order, nor does appear to be of ſuch Credit amongſt them? Can you believe any Men ſhould be ſo void of Senſe and Reaſon, that of fifty together, and thoſe reputed as ſubtile as any Sort of Men whatſoever, there ſhould not be one Man of common Underſtanding that ſhould take care for a more rational Management of ſo great and hazardous an Undertaking? When they were met together, and might have diſpatched it in a quarter of an Hour, they ſhould ſeparate themſelves into ſeveral Parts of the Town, and truſt a Reſolution of that nature in Mr. Otes's Pocket, in whom if they had had more Confidence than they ſeem to have, yet it was folly and madneſs to give him that Opportunity of deſtroying all them, and making himſelf; were there no other Evidence but the very Teſtimony of the Thing, it would go a very great way with me I confeſs; but I muſt ſay withal, you are Judges of this Fact, upon a ſuperadded Teſtimony of Twenty two Witneſſes, Viva voce, I think it leaves the Thing without any doubt.

Gentlemen, the Anſwer given by the Defendant to this Charge is very fallacious; and though he puts ſuch a Countenance upon it, as though his Witneſſes were ſuch Perſons of Credit, that nothing could be objected againſt them, yet he is certainly very much miſtaken in that: He has produced but two poſitive Witneſſes, and thoſe two as poſitive as they are in their Proof, are likewiſe poſitive in their Contradictions of one another, and what they have ſaid is left to your Conſideration.

The one is a Coachman, the other was Sir Richard Barker's Houſe-keeper; they indeed do ſay, Sir Richard Barker's Wife's Siſter, and his Nephew, and his Daughter, and his Neeces, and a worſhipful Knight, and I know not who, that the old Woman tells me are gone into my Countrey, were all there at the ſame time, and no body comes to teſtifie it, but only this Coachman and this old Woman: Theſe, Gentlemen, are Things fit to be thought of.

But now let us conſider how they agree in their Evidence. Says the Woman, I ſaw him not till the beginning of May, but I am ſure he was there before once or twice. And how does ſhe know that? Becauſe the Coachman told her ſo; and he came there ſeveral times, but he did dine there but once; and when he came there the firſt time ſhe ſaw him, he came in ſuch a Diſguiſe, and he had a ſhort Perriwig, and a kind of a ſhort white Coat, and a white Hat; but when my Coachman comes to ſwear, he tells you the firſt time he ſaw him, the Woman ſaw him too, that he had his own Hair, and cut cloſe to his Ears, that made him look, as the young Fellow told her, like a Quaker. And when I aſked the Coachman, Are you ſure that Benjamin the young Fellow did ſee him the firſt time you ſaw him there? He told me, No; but he was ſure the old Woman did look out of the Window and ſee him, which ſhe denies. I then asked him how often he dined there? He tells you ſeveral Times, and there were ſuch and ſuch, and the old Woman did ſee him dine there ſeveral times; which ſhe denies that ſhe ever ſaw him dine there above once: And I take notice of one of the Evidence, the Coachman, he gives but an odd ſort of Reaſon for his remembrance: In February, ſays he, my Lady died, and my Maſter was ſick at Putney, and Otes came into the Yard while I was cleaning my Coach; and I am ſure it was where the

Coat

Coat of Arms hung over the Door, becauſe he ask'd me about my Lady's death, and therefore it muſt be in May, when, for ought does appear to the contrary, it might be in any other Month after the Eſcutcheon was up; and in the other Circumſtances there is no certainty at all: So that it is plain, theſe Witneſſes ſwear according as their Humour leads them, and not according to any remembrance they have of the Thing.

And I rather believe it, becauſe the third Witneſs, that is Page the Apothecary, that uſed to make up Sir Richard Barker's Medicines, gives an Evidence contrary to both thoſe, he cannot remember the Year poſitively or particularly; but I'll tell you how he thwarts and contradicts the other Peoples Teſtimony; for he remembers he came in ſuch a Diſguiſe, but he believes no body ſpoke to him but himſelf, becauſe he found him walking in the Place that was for the common reception of the Patients, and he asked for Dr. Tongue, and he not being within, he went away very diſcontented: And ſo now theſe three Witneſſes ſeem to contradict one another; and the laſt Witneſs Walker, who is the Parſon, he ſays nothing to the Matter; for it does plainly appear, the Time which he ſpeaks of, which was about a Year and a half before he was called to teſtifie at the five Jeſuits Tryal, muſt be in the Year 77, and not in the Year 78, which is the Queſtion here, which muſt be before he went firſt to St. Omers.

Gentlemen, the other Part of Mr. Otes's Defence has been upon this Topick: Says he, I have been believed heretofore, the Parliaments have given me Credit; and to prove it, he has called ſeveral Noble Lords and Perſons of Quality. The firſt was my Lord of Devonſhire, who ſays he cannot remember any Particulars of his Evidence, 'tis ſo long ſince; but he remembers the Parliament, upon the Evidence given of the Plot, did make ſuch Votes as we do all know of. And there were a great many People that gave Credit to his Teſtimony, who, God be thanked, are of another Opinion now. And my Lord of Clare ſays, he was not in the Houſe of Lords at the beginning of the Diſcovery, and cannot remember any Thing in particular. But my Lord of Huntingdon was a little more particular; and Mr. Otes began to be angry with him, becauſe he ſpoke ſo much: Says he, I remember Mr. Otes was examin'd in the Houſe of Lords, and was believed there, becauſe they did believe he ſpoke Truth at that time; but now, upon Conſideration of the Contradictions and Falſities of his Evidence, I cannot but ſay, I do believe him, ſays he, to be a great Villain, and that he has been guilty of ſpilling innocent Blood. And this Noble Lord ſpeaks with great Honour and Conſideration: And truly, I believe, if every Man that is here were to ſpeak his Mind, my Lord has delivered the Opinions of us all, and many Thouſands more in the Nation.

Mr. Otes call'd next my Lord Chief Baron, my Brother Gregory, my Lord of London, Sir George Treby, Mr. Williams, and my Brother Dolben. But they all tell you, they are able to give no particular Anſwers to his Queſtions; and this was the Sum of his Evidence.

To this Mr. Attorney General has given a Reply of Evidence, that truly is of very great Moment. Firſt, here is produced Sir George Wakeman, whom Otes accuſed of High Treaſon, and he ſuffered his Tryal and was acquitted; ſo that as well as the Jury had given Credit to him in the former Verdicts, ſo ſays Mr. Attorney, I muſt ſpeak likewiſe for the Credit of that Verdict that did disbelieve him, becauſe though he did ſwear as roundly and briskly up to the Matter as he had done before, yet when he had not the Hurry and Surprize of his Diſcovery to ſupport him, his Villany was detected, and the Innocent acquitted. And beſides the Record of the Acquittal, here is the Perſon himſelf who is now under no dread or danger, having ſtood his Tryal and being acquitted; and he takes it upon his Oath, in the Preſence of the great God, and the Searcher of Hearts, That whatſoever Otes ſwore againſt him at his Tryal, was every Tittle of it falſe: And this Acquittal of his, being after great and mature Conſideration, is an Evidence of another-gets quality, than the Verdicts of the other Convictions.

Next to him, is my Lord Caſtlemain, a Perſon of very great Honour; and he gives an Account he was arraigned of High Treaſon at this Bar, and upon his Tryal Otes was produced as a Witneſs againſt him, and there he ſwore he met with my Lord Caſtlemain in Lincolns-Inn-Fields, and great familiarity there was between them, ſo that my Lord could not truſt him in a leſs Affair than the Plot; and away he goes with him to Fenwick's Chamber, there to talk about a Deſign of killing the late King. Mr. Otes, of all Mankind muſt be the great Repoſitory of this Secret; but the Jury then being Perſons of great Underſtanding and Integrity, did not believe Otes, but acquitted my Lord Caſtlemain: And he does here take it upon his Oath, back'd with all the Imprecations of Evil to himſelf that a Man can uſe, That there was not one Word of Truth in Otes's Teſtimony; nor did he ever ſee Otes in his life, till ſuch time as he was taken up upon his Accuſation. Now are here two Perſons of Honour and Quality, that upon their Oaths do particularly give you an Account, as in the Preſence of Almighty God, that Otes has twice forſworn himſelf againſt them.

Gentlemen, there is notice to be taken of the Journal of the Houſe of Lords; and though it is true for the ſake of the Precedent, and to ſecure the Juſtice of the Nation, we did keep them ſtrictly to their Proof, that it was upon Oath. And as to the Buſineſs of Smith, though we do believe the Thing in our private Judgments, yet we thought it not fit to be permitted, that Perſons ſhould upon their own Oaths confeſs themſelves to be guilty of Perjury, and afterwards give Evidence againſt others; for ſuch are not to have the Countenance of ever being Witneſſes again: Yet by the Records of Parliament, and other Evidence, there is enough to make the Matter aimed at clear.

For it is clear by his Narrative, that Otes did firſt ſwear, as far as he could well ſwear, to bring him into the Diſpleaſure of the People; For that was his way to intimidate all he had to do with, and thereby force them to comply with his Deſigns. And there was no more plauſible Accuſation at that time, than to accuſe a Man for ſaying ſomewhat againſt the Parliament, or being in a Combination to ſubvert the Proteſtant Religion. But you ſee when he comes to have his own Turn ſerved, then this Man upon whom he had fixed ſuch an odious Character, is really no Papiſt at all, but engaged in Service for his King and Country, and has Mr. Otes's Paſsport, a Thing of great advantage to him at that Seaſon. This the King's Counſel made uſe of with great reaſon, as an Evidence of Tampering: For the Man has altered his Opinion of one he had before accuſed, and now brings him as an honeſt Man to give Evidence for him. And this, ſay they, muſt be intended to be done by Practice and by Threats.

And the rather, Gentlemen, for that you have an Account by Witneſſes ſworn, that there was one Clay a Popiſh Prieſt, that lay in Priſon at the Gate-Houſe, and while he was there Otes and Sir William Waller came into the Priſon to him, and tampering with him, ſays Otes, I hear there are ſome St. Omers Boys that intend to teſtifie that I was at St. Omers, when I ſay I was at London; but you muſt ſwear, that you dined with me at Mr. Howard's in May 1678. or if you will not, you know I know you to be a Prieſt, and I'll hang you, Says Clay, Where is my Silver and Gold that was taken away from me? And we all know Sir William Waller was wonderful good at the fingering of Gold; he us'd to take away broad Pieces as Popiſh Reliques, becauſe of the Croſſes upon them. Says Clay, Give me my Gold again, I will ſwear for you; I have been a Rogue before, and I may be a Rogue again. And accordingly a Contract is made for him to ſwear directly that Otes and he were together at Mr. Howard's Houſe in May 78. This very Fellow that tells you now the Story, told it the next Morning to another Man, who has likewiſe ſworn the ſame. Then is Clay conveyed by Otes to the Old Bailey, and there ſwears, being thus threatened and ſuborn'd, That in May 1678. he and Mr. Otes dined together at Mr. Howard's Houſe, and you have Mr. Howard produc'd, who does ſwear that Clay did ſwear ſo; but indeed he was not there with Mr. Otes at Dinner till July after.

This, Gentlemen, is direct Corruption and Subornation; and if a Man will be a corrupt Knave, and endeavour to ſuborn Witneſſes to ſwear that which is falſe, he is the more likely to ſwear falſe himſelf. Beſides, that you are to take notice, here is his own Narrative produced, where you have it ſworn by himſelf, That he went back to St. Omers about the beginning of May, and was there all the Month of May, and in June till the latter end of it. Then all this while, either Mr. Otes, or his Witneſſes, are perjured in the Caſe: He ſays, he ſtay'd but three or four Days in England after the Conſult was over, and then went ſtreight back again to St. Omers. Which muſt be the firſt Week in May; but if you believe his two Witneſſes, he din'd with them ſeveral times after that: And ſo it is apparent, ſome of them are guilty of groſs and foul Perjury.

Now, Gentlemen, I cannot but reſort back to the Objection that I made at firſt. 'Tis ſtrange to me, that a Man that came upon ſuch a Deſign, ſhould go publickly about the Streets at Noon-day, though in a Diſguiſe, yet he was known. But if you take the Perſons Time to be in the Year 1677, then it is eaſily reconciled what they did ſay of their ſeeing him in ſuch a Diſguiſe; and ſo all their Teſtimony may ſtand together, and perhaps they may miſtake in a Point of Time, though not in the Subſtance of their Evidence; and I would out of Charity conclude it to be ſo.

But I will ſay, if they are to be taken ſtrictly to the Year 1678, it is monſtrous to imagine, that we ſhould have no body brought to let us know where he lodged, where he eat, with whom he convers'd for all that time.

Gentlemen, I have detained you the longer in this Matter, becauſe I take it to be of ſo great Weight, wherein the Juſtice and Honour of the Nation are ſo much engag'd, and it was therefore fit this Cauſe ſhould be tryed in the moſt ſolemn and publick manner, in order to vindicate the Nation from the Reproach and Calumny of Injuſtice and Oppreſſion. And ſure I am, if you think theſe Witneſſes ſwear true, as I cannot ſee any colour of Objection, there does not remain the leaſt doubt, but that Otes is the blackeſt, moſt perjur'd Villain that ever appear'd upon the face of the Earth.

Cl. of Cr. Tipſtaff, you muſt take care of the Jury.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, if any of you have a mind to drink at the Bar, before you go, you ſhall have ſome got for you.

Jury. No, my Lord, we do not care for drinking.

L. C. J. Then we will ſtay for you.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider of their Verdict, and after about a quarter of an Hour's ſtay, they returned and delivered in their Verdict: That the Defendant was Guilty of the Perjury whereof he was Indicted. Which being Recorded, the Lord Chief Juſtice ſpoke to the Jury, to this effect.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, that we are not, God be thanked, in thoſe Times of Diſorder and Confuſion that we have been heretofore in, to have Humming or Hiſſings to declare the Auditors Approbation or Diſlike of Juries Verdicts. But becauſe there has been this Day mention made of the Opinions of Judges about Verdicts, I ſhall take the liberty to declare my Mind to you now, That for my Part, I am ſatisfied in my Conſcience, you have given a good and a juſt Verdict; and ſo I believe is every other Judge upon the Bench.

To which the reſt of the Judges aſſented; and then the Court aroſe.

THE

THE TRYAL OF TITUS OTES.

Die Sabbati 9. Maii 1685. in Banco Regis.

Dominus Rex verſus OTES.

THIS Day being appointed for the Tryal of the Other of the Cauſes between Our Sovereign Lord the King, and Titus Otes, for Perjury: The ſame began about nine in the Morning, and proceeded after this manner:

Firſt, Proclamation was made for Silence: Then the Defendant was called; who, appearing in Perſon, was adviſed to look to his Challenges; but he challenged none; only he deſir'd, that they might be all ask'd, Whether they were of the Grand Jury that found the Bill? Which was done: And all denying it, the Twelve ſworn were theſe:

Sir Thomas Vernon, Kt.
Nicholas Charleton, Eſq;
Thomas Langham, Eſq;
Thomas Hartop,
Francis Griffith,
John Kent,
Jur',
George Toriano,
Henry Loades,
John Midgley,
John Pelling,
Thomas Short, and George Peck.

Cl. of Cr. Gentlemen, You that are ſworn, hearken to the Record.

Memorandum, That by a certain Inquiſition for our Sovereign Lord the King, at the Guild hall of the City of London, and within the ſame City, on Tueſday the 28th of October, in the 36th Year of the Reign of our late Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. before Sir Henry Tulſe, Knight, Mayor of the City of London; Sir William Turner, Knight; and Sir James Edwards, Knight, Aldermen of the ſaid City; Sir Thomas Jenner, Knight, one of His Majeſty's Serjeants at Law, and Recorder of the ſame City; Sir Robert Jefferies, Knight; and Sir John Peake, Knight, other Aldermen of the ſaid City; and others their Companions, Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King; by His Majeſty's Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, to enquire of ſeveral Offences in the ſaid Letters Patents contain'd, and to hear and determine the ſame, according to the Laws and Cuſtoms of this Kingdom, by the Oaths of Twelve Jurors, honeſt and lawful Men of the City of London aforeſaid, who then and there being then and there ſworn, and charged to enquire for our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, and the Body of the ſaid City, upon their Oaths, preſent:

That at a certain Seſſion of our ſaid Lord the King, holden for the County of Middleſex, at Hicks's Hall in St. John's-ſtreet, in the County aforeſaid; on Monday (to wit) the 16th Day of December, in the Year of the Reign of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord, Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. the 30th before Sir Reginald Forſter, Baronet; Sir Philip Matthews, Baronet; Sir William Bowles, Knight; Sir Charles Pitfield, Knight; Thomas Robinſon, Humphrey Wyrley, Thomas Harriot, and William Hempſon, Eſquires, Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King; to enquire by the Oaths of Honeſt and Lawful Men, of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; and by other ways, manners, and means, whereby they might, or could better know, as well within Liberties as without; by whom the Truth of the Matter might be better known and enquired of, concerning all Treaſons and Miſpriſions of Treaſons, Inſurrections, Rebellions, Counterfeitings, Clippings, Waſhings, Falſe-making, and other Falſifying of the Moneys of this Kingdom of England; and of any other Kingdoms, and Dominions whatſoever; and of all Murthers, Felonies, Manſlaughters, Killings, Burglaries, and other Articles and Offences in the Letters Patents of our ſaid Lord the King, to them, or any four or more of them, thereupon directed, ſpecified; As alſo, the Acceſſaries of the ſame, within the County aforeſaid, as well within Liberties as without, by whomſoever, howſoever had made done, or committed, and to hear and determine the ſame Treaſons, and other the Premiſſes, according to the Law, and Cuſtom of this Kingdom of England, aſſigned by the Oaths of Ralph Wain, John Vaughan, Richard Foſter, Thomas Paget, Robert Newington, Henry Tompkins, Robert Hayes, John Greenwood,

Peter

Peter Stinyeſon, Joſiah Richard Richman, Auguſtine Bear, John King, Nathanael Brit, Francis Fiſher, Edward Foſter, and Samuel Lynn; Honeſt and Lawful Men of the County aforeſaid, ſworn, and charg'd to enquire for our ſaid Lord the King, and the Body of the County aforeſaid, upon their Oaths; it was preſented, That Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, late of the Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Clerk; William Ireland, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; John Fenwick, late of the ſame Pariſh and County, Clerk; Thomas Pickering, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; and John Grove, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Gentleman: As falſe Traitors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, and moſt Serene, and Excellent Prince, our ſaid late Sovereign Lord Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. their Supreme and Natural Lord; not having the Fear of the Lord in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance; but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and Natural Obedience, which True and Faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, towards him our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly withdrawing and contriving, and, with all their might, intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England, to diſturb; and the true Worſhip of God, within this Kingdom of England, uſed, and by Law Eſtabliſhed, to ſubvert; and Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England, to move, ſtir up, and procure; and the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, towards him the ſaid Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly to withdraw, put out, and extinguiſh; and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, the 24th of April, in the 30th Year of the Reign of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord Charles II. at the Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; falſly, malicioufly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, and traiterouſly, did purpoſe, compaſs, imagine, and intend Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to move, ſtir up, and procure, and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to procure and cauſe; and our ſaid Lord the King, from the Regal State, Title, Power, and Government of his Kingdom of England, wholly to deprive, depoſe, caſt down, and diſinherit; and him our ſaid Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put; and the Government of the ſaid Kingdom, and the ſincere Religion of God, in the ſame Kingdom, rightly, and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom Eſtabliſhed, at their Will and Pleaſure to change and alter; and the State of this whole Kingdom of England, through all its Parts, well inſtituted and ordained, wholly to ſubvert and deſtroy, and War againſt our ſaid Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to levy.

And to compleat and perfect the ſame their moſt wicked Treaſons and traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid; they, the aforeſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, and other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, the aforeſaid 25th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; falſly, malicioufly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did aſſemble themſelves, unite, and congregate; and then and there falſly, malicioufly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did conſult and agree, our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, and the Religion within this Kingdom of England, rightly, and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſh'd, to the Superſtition of the Romiſh Church, to change and alter: And the ſooner to compleat and perfect the ſame their moſt wicked Treaſons and traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid, the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, and other falſe Traitors of our ſaid late Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown; afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, malicioufly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly between themſelves, did conclude and agree, That they, the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, Him our ſaid late Lord the King ſhould kill and murder; and that they, the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick and others, falſe Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, a certain number of Maſſes, between them then and there agreed, for the Health of the Soul of him the ſaid Thomas Pickering, therefore ſhould ſay, celebrate and perform; and therefore ſhould pay unto the ſaid John Grove a certain Sum of Money between them then and there agreed.

And the Jurors aforeſaid, upon their Oaths aforeſaid, did further preſent: That the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, upon the Agreement aforeſaid, then and there falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, malicioufly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly did take upon themſelves, and to the ſame Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid Lord the King, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, then and there falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, malicioufly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did promiſe that they, the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, Him our ſaid late Lord the King would kill and murder: And that they, the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, Thomas Pickering, John Grove, and other falſe Traitors againſt our ſaid Lord the King, unknown; afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, malicioufly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did give their Faith each to other; and upon the Sacrament then and there traiterouſly did ſwear and promiſe to conceal, and not to divulge their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons and traiterous Compaſſings, Conſultations and Purpoſes ſo between them had, Him our ſaid late Lord the King, traiterouſly to kill and murder, and the Romiſh Religion within this Kingdom of England to be

uſed to introduce, and the true Reformed Religion within this Kingdom of England rightly, and by the Laws of the ſaid Kingdom Eſtabliſh'd, to alter and change: And that the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, in Execution of the traiterous Agreement aforeſaid, afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, and divers Days, and Times after, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County aforeſaid; Muskets, Piſtols, Swords, Daggers, and other offenſive and cruel Weapons, Him the ſaid late Lord the King to kill and murder; falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, malicioufly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did prepare and obtain, had and kept for themſelves; and that they, the ſaid Thomas Pickering and John Grove, afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, and divers Days and Times after, with Force and Arms, &c. at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, and in other places within the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, malicioufly, deviliſhly and traiterouſly did lie in wait, and endeavour our ſaid late Lord the King traiterouſly to kill and murder; and that the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, William Ireland, John Fenwick, and other falſe Traitors, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, afterwards (to wit) the ſame 24th Day of April, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, malicioufly and traiterouſly did prepare, perſwade, excite, abate, comfort and counſel four other Perſons to the Jurors unknown, and Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, Him our ſaid late Lord the King traiterouſly to kill and murder, againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in ſuch Caſe made and provided; and thereupon it was ſo far proceeded, that afterwards, at the Court of Goal-delivery of our ſaid Lord the King, at Newgate, at Juſtice-hall in the Old Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London, the 17th Day of December, in the 30th Year aforeſaid; before the Juſtices of the ſaid Lord the King, of the ſame Goal-delivery; then and there held, by Adjournment of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, came the ſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove, under the Cuſtody of Sir Richard How, Knight; and Sir John Chapman, Knight, Sheriff of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid; into whoſe Cuſtody, for the Cauſe aforeſaid, they were before committed: Being brought to the Bar there, in their proper Perſons; and preſently being ſeverally asked concerning the Premiſes above-charged upon them, how they would acquit themſelves; the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove did ſeverally ſay, That they were not thereof guilty; and for the ſame, for good and bad, they did ſeverally put themſelves upon the Country; and by a certain Jury of the Country, in that behalf duly impannel'd; ſworn and charged then and there in the ſame Court, before the Juſtices of Goal-delivery aforeſaid, were tryed; and that upon that Tryal, between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove at London aforeſaid; to wit, at the Juſtice-hall in the Old Bailey aforeſaid; in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre, in the Ward of Faringdon without, London aforeſaid; The Defendant (Titus Otes) late of the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre aforeſaid, in the Ward aforeſaid Clerk, was produced as a Witneſs, on the part of the ſaid late Lord the King, upon the Tryal aforeſaid; and before the ſaid Juſtices of Goal-delivery, in the Court aforeſaid, then and there held, upon the Holy Goſpels of God, was duly ſworn to ſpeak and teſtify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, of, and in the Premiſes between our ſaid Lord the King, and the ſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove: And that the ſaid Titus Otes then and there, in the Court of Goal-delivery aforeſaid, upon his Oath aforeſaid, upon the Indictment aforeſaid, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, by his own proper Act and Conſent of his moſt wicked Mind, falſly, voluntarily and corruptly, did ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the Jury aforeſaid, then and there ſworn and impannel'd to try the Iſſue aforeſaid between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove; That the ſaid William Ireland, in the Indictment aforeſaid, mentioned, was in Town (within the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, or the Places adjacent to the ſaid Cities, meaning) upon the 1ſt or 2d Day of September, in the Year 1678. Whereas in truth and indeed the ſaid William Ireland, in the Indictment aforeſaid, mentioned, was not in Town, nor within the Cities of London or Weſtminſter, or the Places adjacent to the ſame Cities, or either of them, upon the 1ſt or 2d Day of September, in the Year 1678. And ſo the aforeſaid Titus Otes, the aforeſaid 17th Day of December, in the 30th Year aforeſaid, at the Juſtice-hall aforeſaid, in the Court aforeſaid, upon the Tryal aforeſaid, upon the Indictment aforeſaid, between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the aforeſaid William Ireland, Thomas Pickering and John Grove, ſo as aforeſaid had, by his own Act and Conſent, and of his moſt wicked Mind, falſly, voluntarily and corruptly, in Manner and Form aforeſaid, did commit voluntary and corrupt Perjury.

And the Jurors aforeſaid, laſt ſworn to enquire for our ſaid Lord the King; and the Body of the City of London aforeſaid, upon their Oaths aforeſaid, do further preſent, That at another Seſſion of our ſaid late Lord the King, held for the County of Middleſex, at Hicks's-hall in St. John's-ſtreet, in the County aforeſaid, on Thurſday (to wit) the 12th Day of June, in the 31ſt Year of our ſaid late Lord King Charles II. before Sir Philip Matthews, Baronet; Sir Thomas Orby, Knight and Baronet; Sir William Pultney, Knight; Sir William Bowles, Knight; Thomas Robinſon, Thomas Harriot, Eſquires; and others their Companions, by Letters Patents of our ſaid late Lord the King, to the ſame Juſtices aforenamed, and others; and to any four or more of them, under the Great Seal of our ſaid late Lord the King, made to enquire, by the Oaths of good and lawful Men of the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, and by all other ways, manners and means, by which they might or could better know, as well within Liberties as without; by whom the Truth of the Matter might be beſt known and enquired, of all Treaſons, ſons, Miſpriſions of Treaſons, Inſurrections, Rebellions, Counterfeitings, Clippings, Waſhings, Falſe-making, and other Falſifyings of the Money of this Kingdom of England, and of other Kingdoms and Dominions whatſoever; and of all Murders, Felonies, Man-ſlaughters, Killings, Burglaries, Rapes, Meetings and unlawful Conventicles; Speakings of Words, Combinations, Miſpriſions, Confederacies, falſe Allegations, Treſpaſſes, Riots, Routs, Retainers, Eſcapes, Contempts, Oppreſſions; and of other Articles and Offences in the ſame Letters Patents of our ſaid Lord the King, ſpecified; As alſo, the Acceſſaries of the ſame, within the County aforeſaid, as well within Liberties as without, by whomſoever and howſoever had, done, perpetrated or committed; and of other Articles and Circumſtances concerning the Premiſes howſoever; and the ſame Treaſons, and other the Premiſes, to hear and determine according to the Law and Cuſtom of this Kingdom of England; being aſſigned by the Oaths of Henry Aſhurſt, Eſq; Edward Gavell, John Radford, John Warral, William Hanmar, Robert Pritchard, John Tredder, Gilbert Ureweyn, David Collivex, Abraham Harriſon, Charles Morgan, Philip Trehearn, John Collier, Robert Whiterod, William Webb, Thomas Edwards and Abraham Tillent; honeſt and lawful Men of the County aforeſaid, Sworn and Charged to enquire for our ſaid Lord the King, and the Body of the County aforeſaid; upon their Oaths, it was preſented, That Thomas White, late of the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, Clerk, otherwiſe called Thomas Whitebread, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; John Fenwick, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; William Harcourt, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk, otherwiſe called William Harriſon, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; John Gaven, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk; and James Corker, late of the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, Clerk, as falſe Traytors againſt the moſt Illuſtrious, moſt Serene and Excellent Prince, our late Sovereign Lord King Charles II. by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King; Defender of the Faith, &c. Their Supreme and Natural Lord; not having the fear of God in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance; but being moved, and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the Cordial Love, the true, due, and Natural Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, towards him, our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear; wholly withdrawing, and contriving, and with all their might intending the Peace and common Tranquility of this Kingdom of England to diſturb; and the true Worſhip of God within this Kingdom of England uſed, and by Law eſtabliſhed, to overthrow; and the Government of this Kingdom of England, to Subvert, and Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England, to move, ſtir up, and procure; and the Cordial Love, and true, and due Obedience, which true and faithful Subjects of our Lord the King, towards him the ſaid Lord the King, ſhould, and of right ought to bear, utterly to withdraw; put out, and extinguiſh; and our ſaid late Lord the King to death and final Deſtruction to bring, and put, the 24*th* Day of April, in the 30*th* Year of the Reign of our ſaid late Lord King Charles II. &c. at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, with diverſe other falſe Traytors againſt our ſaid late Lord the King, to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, falſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly and trayterouſly did purpoſe, compaſs, imagine, and intend Sedition and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to move, ſtir up and procure, and a miſerable ſlaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King to procure, and cauſe; and our ſaid late Lord the King, from the Regal State, Title, Power and Government of his Kingdom of England, utterly to deprive, depoſe, caſt down, and diſinherit; and him our ſaid late Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring, and put; and the Government of the ſame Kingdom, and the ſincere Religion of God in the ſame Kingdom, rightly and by the Laws of the ſaid Kingdom Eſtabliſhed, at their Will and Pleaſure to change and alter; and the State of this whole Kingdom of England, through all its Parts well inſtituted and ordered, wholly to ſubvert, and deſtroy; and War, againſt our late Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to levy: And to perfect and compleat the ſame, their moſt wicked Treaſons and Trayterous Imaginations, and Purpoſes; They the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, Anthony Turner, and James Corker, and other falſe Traytors to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, the aforeſaid 24*th* Day of April, in the 30*th* Year aforeſaid, with Force and Arms aforeſaid, at the Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields aforeſaid, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and Trayterouſly did aſſemble, unite and gather themſelves together; and then and there falſely, maliciouſly, ſubtilly, adviſedly, deviliſhly and Trayterouſly did conſult, conſent and agree our ſaid late Lord the King, to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, and the Religion within this Kingdom of England, rightly and by the Laws of the ſame Kingdom eſtabliſhed to change and alter, to the Superſtition of the Church of Rome, and the Government of this Kingdom of England to ſubvert; and that one Thomas Pickering, and one John Grove, him our ſaid late Lord the King ſhould kill and murder; and that they the ſaid, Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, Anthony Turner, James Corker, and other falſe Traytors againſt our ſaid late Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, a certain number of Maſſes, between them, then and there agreed upon, for the health of the Soul of him the ſaid Thomas Pickering, therefore ſhould ſay, celebrate and perform; and therefore ſhould pay unto the ſaid John Grove, a certain Sum of Money, between them then and there agreed upon: And that the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, John Gaven, Anthony Turner, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, and other falſe Traytors againſt our ſaid late Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, in the further Proſecution of the Treaſons and Trayterous Conſultations and Agreements aforeſaid, afterwards (to wit) the ſaid 24*th* Day of April, in the the 30*th* Year aforeſaid, at the aforeſaid Pariſh of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and Trayterouſly, did ſeverally give their Faith each to other; and upon the Sacrament, then and there Trayterouſly did ſwear and promiſe to conceal, and not to divulge their ſaid moſt wicked Treaſons and Trayterous Compaſſings, Conſultations and Purpoſes aforeſaid; ſo between them had, him the ſaid late Lord the King Trayterouſly to kill and murder, and to introduce the Romiſh Religion, to be uſed within this Kingdom of England, rightly and by the Laws of this Kingdom Eſtabliſhed to alter and change; and that the ſaid Thomas White otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, Anthony Turner, James Corker, and other falſe Traytors to the Jurors aforeſaid unknown, in further Proſecution of the Treaſons and Trayterous Intentions and Agreements aforeſaid, afterwards (to wit) the ſaid 24*th* Day of April, in the 30*th* Year aforeſaid at the Pariſh aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſely, ſubtilly, adviſedly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly and Trayterouſly, did prepare, perſwade, excite, abet, comfort and Counſel four other Perſons to the Jurors unknown, and Subjects of our ſaid late Lord the King, him our ſaid late Lord the King, Trayterouſly to kill and murder, againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, and againſt the Peace of our ſaid late Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided; whereupon, it was Commanded the Sheriff of the County aforeſaid, that he ſhould not omit, &c. But ſhould take them to anſwer, &c.

Which Indictment the ſaid Juſtices of our Lord the King, afterwards (to wit) at the Goal-delivery of our ſaid Lord the King, of Newgate, holden by Adjournment for the County of Middleſex, at Juſtice-Hall in the Old Bailey, in the Suburbs of the City of London, on Friday (to wit) the 13*th* Day of June, in the 31ſt Year aforeſaid, before Sir James Edwards, Knight, Mayor of the City of London; Sir William Scroggs, Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of His Majeſty's Court of King's-Bench; Sir Francis North, Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of His Majeſty's Court of Common-Pleas; Sir Thomas Allen, Knight and Baronet, one of the Aldermen of the ſaid City of London; Sir George Jefferies, Knight, Recorder of the ſaid City of London; and other their Companions, Juſtices of our ſaid Lord the King, aſſigned to deliver his Goal of Newgate of the Priſoners in the ſame being, by their own proper Hands did deliver there, in the Court of Record, in form of Law to be determined: And thereupon, at the ſaid Goal-delivery of our Lord the King, of Newgate, holden by the Adjournment aforeſaid, for the County aforeſaid, at Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, the ſaid Friday the 13*th* of June, in the 31ſt Year aforeſaid, before the aforeſaid Juſtices of our ſaid late Lord the King laſt named, came the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, under the Cuſtody of Sir Richard How, Kt. and Sir John Chapman, Knight, Sheriff of the County aforeſaid; into whoſe Cuſtody, for the Cauſe aforeſaid, they were before that time Committed; being brought to the Bar there, in their proper Perſons; who were committed to the aforeſaid Sheriff, &c. And immediately being ſeverally demanded concerning the premiſes aforeſaid, in the Indictment aforeſaid ſpecified, charg'd upon them as above, how they would thereof acquit themſelves; the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, did ſeverally ſay, That they were Not thereof Guilty: And thereupon, for Good and Bad, did ſeverally put themſelves upon the Country. And thereupon, upon the Indictment aforeſaid laſt recited, at the Seſſion of our Lord the King, at the Juſtice-Hall in the Old Bailey, it was ſo far proceeded, that the Iſſue aforeſaid between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner; afterwards (to wit) the aforeſaid Friday, the 13*th* Day of June, in the 31ſt Year aforeſaid, at Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, by a certain Jury of the Country in that behalf duly impanell'd, Sworn and Charged, was Tried; and that upon the Tryal of the Iſſue aforeſaid laſt mentioned, between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, at London aforeſaid, (to wit) at the Juſtice-Hall in the Old Bailey aforeſaid, in the Pariſh of St. Sepulchre in the Ward of Faringdon Without, London, aforeſaid, the ſaid Defendant, Titus Otes, was alſo a Witneſs produced on behalf of our ſaid late Lord the King, upon the Tryal aforeſaid, upon the Indictment laſt aforſaid: And he, the aforeſaid Titus Otes, then and there at the Seſſion laſt aforeſaid, at the Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Court of the ſame Seſſion (to wit) at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, was duly ſworn upon the Holy Goſpels of God, to ſpeak and teſtify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, of, and in the Premiſes, in the Iſſue aforeſaid laſt mentioned, ſo as aforeſaid joyned between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner. And that the ſaid Titus Otes then and there, at the Seſſion aforeſaid laſt mentioned, in the Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Court of the ſame Seſſion, upon his Oath aforeſaid, upon the Indictment laſt aforeſaid, by his own proper Act and Conſent, of his moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly did ſay, depoſe, ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jurors of the Jury aforeſaid laſt mentioned, ſo as aforeſaid Sworn and impanell'd to try the Iſſue aforeſaid between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner. That William Ireland (one William Ireland, then before Convicted and Executed for High Treaſon againſt our late Lord the King, meaning) took his Leave of him the ſaid Titus Otes and others, at the Chamber of the ſaid William Ireland, then being in Ruſſel-ſtreet (a certain Street, called Ruſſel ſtreet, lying within the City of Weſtminſter, in the County of Middleſex, meaning) between the 8*th* and 12*th* Day of Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord 1678. Whereas, in truth and in deed, the ſaid William Ireland did not take his Leave of the ſaid Titus Otes, or any other Perſons whatſoever, at the Chamber of the ſaid William Ireland, then being in Ruſſel ſtreet aforeſaid, between the ſaid 8 and 12 Days of Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord 1678. And ſo the ſaid Titus Otes, upon the ſaid Friday the 13*th* Day of June, in the 31ſt Year aforeſaid, at the Seſſion laſt aforeſaid, at the Juſtice-Hall aforeſaid, in the Court of the ſame Seſſion, upon the Indictment laſt aforeſaid, ſo put in Iſſue, and Tryed as aforeſaid, between our ſaid late Lord the King, and the ſaid Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, by his own proper Act and Conſent, and of his moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly, in manner and form aforeſaid, did commit voluntary and corrupt Perjury, to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, in manifeſt contempt of the Laws of this Kingdom of England, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. Upon this Indictment he has been Arraigned; and thereunto hath pleaded, Not Guilty: And for his Tryal, hath put himſelf upon the Country, and His Majeſty's Attorney-General likewiſe; which Country you are. Your Charge is, To enquire, whether the Defendant, Titus Otes, be Guilty of the Perjury he ſtands Indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find him Guilty, you are to ſay ſo: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to ſay ſo, and no more: And hear your Evidence.

Sir George Jefferies. L. C. J. Look ye, Mr. Attorney, my Lord Chief Juſtice Jones has ſent to know, whether you have any thing to do with him to Day, here?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. At. Gen. Not at all, that I know of.

L. C. J. Mr. Otes, Do you intend to make uſe of my Lord Chief Juſtice Jones, or any of the Judges of the Common Pleas, as Witneſſes?

Otes. Yeſterday, my Lord, I did call for them, to have made uſe of them, as Witneſſes.

L. C. J. But have you any thing to ſay to them to Day?

Otes. I cannot tell, as yet.

L. C. J. Then my Lord Chief Juſtice Jones muſt be told, That he does not know, whether he ſhall, or not. Go on, Sir Samuel Aſtry.

Then Proclamation was made for Information, and Evidence was made in uſual manner.

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury; This is an Indictment againſt Titus Otes, Clerk, for Perjury: And this Indictment ſets forth, That William Ireland, Thomas Pickering, and John Grove, in the 30*th* Year of the late King, were Indicted of High Treaſon, and Tryed at the Old Bailey; and at that Tryal, the Defendant, Titus Otes, was produced a Witneſs for the King; and being ſworn to tell the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; did falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly depoſe, and ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jury that did try that Cauſe, That the ſaid William Ireland was in Town (within the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, or the Places adjacent, meaning) upon the Firſt or Second Day of September, in the Year 1678. Whereas, in truth, the ſaid William Ireland was not in Town, nor within the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, or the Places adjacent, upon the Firſt or Second Day of September, in the Year 1678. And ſo the ſaid Titus Otes hath committed wilful and corrupt Perjury. And the Indictment further ſets forth, That upon the 13*th* Day of June, in the 31ſt Year of the late King, Thomas White, otherwiſe Whitebread, John Fenwick, William Harcourt, otherwiſe Harriſon, John Gaven, and Anthony Turner, were Indicted and Tryed at the Old Bailey for Treaſon; and at that Tryal, the ſaid Titus Otes was a Witneſs produced on the part of the King: And being ſworn to teſtify the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; by his own Act and Conſent, of his own moſt wicked Mind, falſely, voluntarily, and corruptly did depoſe, and ſwear, and give in Evidence to the Jury, That William Ireland (one William Ireland, before that time Convicted and Executed for High Treaſon, meaning) did take his Leave of him the ſaid Titus Otes, at his the ſaid William Ireland's Chamber, then being in Ruſſel Street, between the 8*th* and 12*th* Day of Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord 1678. Whereas, in truth, the ſaid William Ireland did not take his Leave of him the ſaid Titus Otes, or of any other Perſons whatſoever, at his the ſaid William Ireland's Chamber, then being in Ruſſel-Street aforeſaid, between the ſaid 8*th* and 12*th* Day of Auguſt, in the Year of our Lord 1678. And ſo the ſaid Titus Otes did then and there commit wilful and corrupt Perjury. And this is laid to be to the great Diſpleaſure of Almighty God, in contempt of the Laws of this Land, to the evil and pernicious Example of all others in the like Caſe offending, and againſt the King's Peace, Crown, and Dignity. To this he has pleaded, Not Guilty. If we prove it, we do not queſtion, but you will find him Guilty.

Mr. At. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; Mr. Otes ſtands Indicted for having perjured himſelf: The Inſtances, Gentlemen, that we charge him with, are theſe: Firſt, What he ſwore at the Tryal of Ireland; and we ſay, that at that Tryal he did ſwear Ireland was in Town the 1ſt or 2d of September, 1678. The ſecond Inſtance is, What he ſwore at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits; and there we ſay, he did ſwear, That Ireland was in Town between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt, and that he took his Leave of him here in Town at his Chamber in Ruſſel-Street; and we do charge him by this Indictment, that he has forſworn himſelf in both Inſtances: And that Ireland, Gentlemen, was neither in Town between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt, nor the 1*ſt* or 2*d* of September. And we ſhall make it out very evidently; For, Gentlemen, as to the Proof in this Caſe, our Caſe ſtands thus; We ſay, That the 3*d* of Auguſt, 1678. Ireland went into Hartfordſhire, to a Houſe of my Lord Aſton's; and from thence went into Staffordſhire. I will not ſtand to open the Particulars, where he was every Day; but we ſhall give you an Account, in a Method very eaſie to be remembered and obſerved, where he was till the 14*th* of September. But one remarkable Inſtance, Gentlemen, I deſire to take particular notice of; and that is the Time of Pancras Fair, which is upon the 2d of September always, a known Day, and a known Place place in that Country. Now we have among the reſt, many Witneſſes to prove, That Mr. Ireland was there that Day, and not in Town. And when we have proved this, as we ſhall by a whole Cloud of Witneſſes, I believe, you Gentlemen of this Jury, will no more doubt, that Mr. Otes is Forſworn in theſe Particulars, than the Jury Yeſterday did in that Particular; nor than, I believe, the whole Kingdom does by this time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall go to our Evidence; and firſt, we produce the Records of the two Tryals of Ireland, and the five Jeſuits. Swear Mr. Swift. [Which was done.

Pray, Sir, put in the Records. Are thoſe true Copies?

Mr. Swift. My Lord, I examined theſe Records with the Originals, and they are true Copies.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Otes, Will you have them read? Or to ſave the time of the Court will you agree them?

Otes. My Lord, I conſent to ſave the time of the Court; if they ſhall be made uſe of for Evidence for me.

L. C. J. No doubt, they are Evidence for you, as well as againſt you, when they are produced here.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Mr. Otes does admit the Records, then ſhall we go on, and prove what he did ſwear at thoſe Tryals; and for the firſt part of the time, which is between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt, we deſire that Mr. Thomas Harriot, and Mr. Rainsford Waterhouſe may be ſworn. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Harriot. Pray do you remember at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, was Mr. Otes produced and ſworn as a Witneſs?

Mr. Harriot. Yes, he was, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember what Teſtimony he gave about Ireland's being in Town, and when it was, he ſaid, he was in Town?

Mr. Harriot. My Lord, he did poſitively ſwear, that Mr. Ireland, the late Jeſuit, did take his leave of him the ſaid Otes and others, at the ſaid Ireland's Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, betwixt the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt, 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you of the Jury that tryed the five Jeſuits, Mr. Harriot?

Mr. Harriot. Yes, I was Foreman of that Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What ſay you, Mr. Waterhouſe? Were you preſent at that Tryal?

Mr. Waterhouſe. Yes, I was of the Jury too.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did Otes ſwear at that Tryal?

Mr. Waterhouſe. He ſaid, That Mr. Ireland took his leave of him the 12*th* of Auguſt. My Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs then asked him, are you ſure it was the 12*th*? And then he ſaid, He would not be poſitive it was the 12*th*, but between the 8*th* and 12*th* it was, I am poſitive upon my Oath.

Mr. At. Gen. It is ſo in the Print too; but we will now go on.

L. C. J. But will the Defendant ask theſe Witneſſes any Queſtions?

Otes. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, I will ask Mr. Harriot a Queſtion.

L. C. J. Ay, do, ask him what you will.

Otes. Mr. Harriot. Did I ſwear, that he took his leave of me, or I took my leave of him?

Mr. Harriot. You ſwore, that Ireland took his leave of you and others, between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt, 1678. between thoſe two Days, and in that Year.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is a nice Queſtion, that of yours, Mr. Otes, upon my Word.

Otes. My Lord, I know what reaſon I have to ask that Queſtion; I am ſure in Perjury, the Court ought to keep up the Witneſſes ſtrictly to what is laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Well, you have his Anſwer according to the Indictment.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask Mr. Harriot this Queſtion, whether he took Notes of the Tryal?

Mr. Harriot. Yes, I did ſo, Sir.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know of Mr. Harriot, whether he has thoſe Notes by him?

Mr. Harriot. No, Sir, I have them not here; but I have had them by me this four or five Years, or more. It was my manner in all the Tryals, wherein I was concern'd as a Jury-man, to read the Tryals ſtrictly over, when they were printed, eſpecially where I happened to have any Notes, that I took at the Tryal; and to compare the printed Tryal with my Notes; and where I found any thing doubtful, I uſed to put a Query upon it. And this and many other things, I found to be in the printed Tryal ſtrictly according to my Notes.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know, what Tryal he was Foreman at?

Mr. Harriot. That of the Five Jeſuits, in June, the 13*th* of June, 1679.

L. C. J. Have you any thing to ask Mr. Waterhouſe?

Otes. Yes, my Lord. Pray, Sir, let me ask you a Queſtion.

Mr. Waterhouſe. Ay, if you pleaſe, Sir.

Otes. Did you take Notes of that Tryal you ſpeak of, Sir?

Mr. Waterhouſe. No, I did not.

Otes. How come you then to remember this, That I was ſo poſitive as to the time betwixt the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt?

Mr. Waterhouſe. Becauſe I was one of the Jury; and becauſe my Lord Chief Juſtice made a ſtop, when you ſaid, 'Twas the 12*th* of Auguſt; and bid you conſider: And you conſider'd, and conſider'd it; and did affirm poſitively, That it was between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt.

L. C. J. He gives you a plain Reaſon for his Remembrance.

Otes. My Lord, I have done with him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we deſire Mr. Foſter may be ſworn. [Which was done.

Mr. Foſter, Pray will you tell what you remember Mr. Otes ſwore at Mr. Ireland's Tryal, about Ireland's being in Town?

Mr. Foſter. I was one of the Jury at the Tryal of Mr. Ireland, Mr. Pickering, and Mr. Grove; and I did ſee Mr. Otes ſworn, as a Witneſs for the King, at that Tryal; and ſo was Mr. Bedloe: And Bedloe there gave Evidence, That there was a Meeting at Harcourt's Chamber; and Ireland, Grove, and Pickering was there: And that this was the latter End of Auguſt. Mr. Ireland did make his Defence, as much as he could, to prove, That he was not in Town from the Beginning of Auguſt, to the Middle of September; and brought divers Witneſſes. But upon his denying to be here the latter End of Auguſt, Mr. Otes did come and ſwear: I am certain (ſays he) that the Firſt or Second of September, he was in Town; for then I had of him Twenty Shillings.

Otes. Was I positive, that he was here in Town the 1st or 2d of September?

Mr. Foster. You were positive, Sir, to the 1st or 2d; I have it in my Notes in Writing.

L. C. J. He tells you, It is in his Notes: And therefore he's sure you said so.

Mr. At. Gen. In the Printed Copy, if it be right, there is mention made of the Word Positive.

L. C. J. I think, that is in August, between the 8th or 12th he was positive.

Otes. Did I say these Words, I was positive?

Mr. Waterhouse. I say, you affirmed that he was in Town the 1st or 2d of September.

L. C. J. It is not necessary, that you should use the Word Positive: The Question is, Whether it was positively affirmed?

Mr. Just. Withins. Was not that true that you said? Did not you affirm a positive Truth?

Otes. My Lord, I'll tell you the Reason why I ask the Question, because I have forgot my self, whether I us'd the Word or no; and therefore I ask for my own Information now.

L. C. J. Well, ask for what Reason you will, you have receiv'd an Answer to your Question; and upon my Word he gives a notable Evidence: Says he, Bedloe had sworn a treasonable Practice by Ireland, in the latter end of August. Then Ireland comes, and makes his Defence: Says he, That cannot be; for I was out of Town at that time: I was not in London all August, nor the beginning of September. Then come you in, to support the Testimony of Bedloe; and swear, that he was in Town the 1st or 2d of September; for then he gave you Twenty Shillings. And so you come to rivet the Matter that was sworn before by Bedloe.

Otes. My Lord, What I swore was Truth.

L. C. J. That is now to be tryed.

Mr. At. Gen. We have another of the Jury here, Mr. John Byfield: Pray, swear him.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, Sir, what did you hear Otes swear at that Tryal?

Mr. Byfield. I heard the same that they have testified before.

L. C. J. But you must tell us what that was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you a Jury-man at that Tryal?

Mr. Byfield. Yes, I had a Summons to the Old Bailey.

L. C. J. But what did Otes swear? That's the Question.

Mr. Byfield. Mr. Otes did positively assert, That Ireland was here in Town the 1st or 2d of September; and to confirm it, he said, He receiv'd of him Twenty Shillings.

Mr. At. Gen. Now, my Lord, we shall go to our Evidence to prove, That all this is absolutely false: For Ireland went out of Town into Staffordshire, and did not return till after the 9th of September. And for this, we call Anne Ireland.

[Who was sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Ireland, Pray, where did you take your Leave of your Brother Mr. Ireland, who was Executed in Summer 1678. and when?

Mrs. A. Ireland. I took my Leave of him the beginning of August.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day in August do you remember?

Mrs. A. Ireland. The 3d of August.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was it?

Mrs. A. Ireland. In my own Lodging.

L. C. J. Where was your Lodging?

Mrs. A. Ireland. In Russel-street, Covent-Garden.

L. C. J. Now tell us again the time when it was?

Mrs. A. Ireland. It was on Saturday Morning, as I remember, the 3d of August, the Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day.

L. C. J. How come you to remember so particularly, that it was then?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Because upon St. Ignatius's Day, we were invited to Mr. Gifford's at Hammersmith; my Brother, my Mother, and I, were invited to stay all Night: But my Brother refused to stay, because——

L. C. J. Which Brother? What was his Name?

Mrs. A. Ireland. William Ireland.

L. C. J. Did they stay there?

Mrs. A. Ireland. No, my Lord; my Brother came home on foot, but we stayed all Night.

Mr. At. Gen. Here is an Almanack of that Year: And the 3d of August was on a Saturday.

Mrs. A. Ireland. He said he could not stay, because he was to go into the Country upon Saturday. I ask'd him, Why he would set out on Saturday? And says he, I'll go to Standen; there I shall meet with my Lord Ashton, and his Family; and have an Opportunity to go with him into Staffordshire.

L. C. J. She says, he went out of Town on Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day; which was Saturday the 3d of August: But there being a Discourse between her and her Brother, why he should make choice of a Saturday; which she thought, it seems was an inconvenient Day to take a Journey on. And upon that, her Brother made Answer again, That that Night he would only go to Standen, to my Lord Ashton's House, where he should meet with Company to go along with him into Staffordshire.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Week was St. Ignatius's Day?

Mrs. A. Ireland. St. Ignatius's Day was on a Wednesday.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month is St. Ignatius's Day?

Mrs. A. Ireland. It is either the last Day of July, or the 1st of August.

L. C. J. Look on your Almanack, if you have any one of that Year, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. We have no such Saint in our Almanack.

Mrs. A. Ireland. It was, as near as I can remember, the 3d of August, that he went out of Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The 3d of August, at that time, was on a Saturday.

Lord Petre. St. Ignatius's Day is always the last Day of July, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. In this Almanack another Saint has justled him out; and that is Bishop German.

L. C. J. And in my Almanack, a third has justled them both out; but my Lord Petre says, it is always the last of July; and that was on a Wednesday that Year.

Mrs. A. Ireland. I remember it was on a Wednesday.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. And you are ſure he went out of Town the Wedneſday after?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Yes, I am ſure he went out of Town then; for I ask'd him, Why he would go on a Saturday? And he told me he would go but to Standen that Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And that does hold, according to the Computation, to be the 3d of Auguſt.

Otes. My Lord, She is not poſitive in this, that he went out of Town the 3d of Auguſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, but ſhe is; for ſhe ſays, that ſhe was the Wedneſday before (which was St. Ignatius's Day) with him a little way out of Town.

L. C. J. And that it was Saturday after he went out of Town; and ſhe gives the Reaſon, that ſhe entred into a Diſcourſe with him, why he would go on Saturday? And he made that Anſwer which you hear.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Otes knows what Day St. Ignatius's Day is upon, I preſume.

Otes. It is the laſt Day of July, I think.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In our Proteſtant Almanacks, it ſeems, we give another Biſhop place.

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Ireland, When did you ſee him again?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Juſt a Fortnight before Michaelmas, and not before.

L. C. J. You were his near Relation, I ſuppoſe?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Yes, my Lord, I was his Siſter.

L. C. J. Pray, when he came to Town again, where did he lodge?

Mrs. A. Ireland. He uſed to lodge at the ſame place where we did always; and in the mean time, while he was abſent, my Mother lent one Mrs. Eagleſton his Lodging.

L. C. J. Is that Perſon, you lent his Chamber to in his Abſence, here?

Mrs. A. Ireland. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. When did ſhe enter upon his Lodging?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell; her Maid fell ſick, and ſo ſhe came down a pair of Stairs lower into his Lodging. It was in a ſhort time after he went out of Town, my Lord, as I remember.

L. C. J. When did he come to Town again, do you ſay?

Mrs. A. Ireland. He came to Town again a Fortnight before Michaelmas; it was that Day Fortnight before Michaelmas, that Michaelmas day fell on——

L. C. J. Have you any Queſtions to ask her, Mr. Otes?

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know, Why ſhe did not give this Evidence before? Or whether ever ſhe did give this Evidence at any of the Tryals?

Mrs. A. Ireland. Yes, I was at my Brother's Tryal; and there I gave the ſame Evidence.

Otes. Were you there at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits? And did you give the ſame Evidence then?

Mrs. A. Ireland. No, I was not call'd.

L. C. J. But were you there?

Mrs. A. Ireland. I was in the Court at the ſame time, but was not Examined.

Otes. What Year is it you ſpeak of, that he went out of Town the 3d of Auguſt?

Mrs. A. Ireland. The Year 78.

Otes. I deſire, my Lord, to ask this Gentlewoman, what Religion ſhe is of?

Mrs. A. Ireland. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Otes. I deſire to know, whether her Name be Ireland or Ironmonger?

Mrs. A. Ireland. My right Name is Ironmonger; but becauſe of his Profeſſion, he went by the Name of Ireland; and for his ſake we go by that Name too.

Otes. By what Name did you give Evidence at Ireland's Tryal?

Mrs. A. Ireland. By that Name of Ireland.

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Otes, that is a good Name enough to be called by; you may remember, you were called Titus Ambroſius, and Sampſon Lucy, at St. Omers.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Elianor Ireland.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. When did your Son go out of Town?

Mrs. El. Ireland. The 3d of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you ſure it was the 3d of Auguſt?

Mrs. El. Ireland. Yes, I am ſure it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Year was it?

Mrs. El. Ireland. My Memory is not good for that; I cannot tell what Year, my Daughter can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it the ſame Year he was tryed afterwards?

Mrs. El. Ireland. Yes, it was the ſame Summer; at Michaelmas after he was taken up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time did he return again out of the Country?

Mrs. El. Ireland. The 14th of September after.

Otes. My Lord, I would ask her, Whether or no ſhe gave this Evidence at her Son's Tryal?

Mrs. El. Ireland. Yes, I was a Witneſs there; but they would not permit me to ſpeak half ſo much; they would hardly let me ſpeak at all.

Otes. I deſire to know, whether ſhe was an Evidence at the five Jeſuits Tryals?

Mrs. El. Ireland. No, I was not there then.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſwear Mrs. Duddle, and Mrs. Quino. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come, Mrs. Duddle; Do you remember when Mr. Ireland went out of Town, in the Year 78?

Mrs. Duddle. To the beſt of my remembrance, it was the 3d of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why do you think it was the 3d of Auguſt?

Mrs. Duddle. He went for a Recreation out of Town three Days before, which was upon an Holiday, St. Ignatius's Day; and he went out of Town one Night then, and he came and ſtayed but two Nights after; and went out of Town upon the Saturday.

L. C. J. Did he ſtay out of Town one Night?

Mrs. Duddle. Yes, he ſtay'd out of Town all Night.

L. C. J. Are you ſure he ſtay'd all Night?

Mrs. Duddle. I am ſure he ſtay'd but one Night.

L. C. J. But what ſay you to that, Mr. Attorney? This Witneſs contradicts the other.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Ay, plainly.

Mrs. Duddle. Mrs. Ireland, and Mrs. Anne Ireland, and he, went out upon a Recreation out of Town, it being Holiday; and I remember well, that was of a Wedneſday: And that Saturday

turday he went away, and never came again till a Fortnight before Michaelmas.

L. C. J. But mind my Queſtion, Woman.

Mrs. Duddle. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did he come home that Night he went on the Recreation?

Mrs. Duddle. I do not know.

L. C. J. But juſt now you ſwore, he ſtay'd out all Night.

Mrs. Duddle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Yes, but you did though; prithee mind what thou art about.

Mrs. Duddle. I do not ſay, He; but I am ſure his Siſter and the Company ſtay'd out that Night. I remember very well, he went the third Day after, which was Saturday. And Mr. Jenniſon came to ask for him three Weeks after: And there was a Perſon of Quality with him in the Coach; I think, it was Sir Miles Wharton. And he asking for him, they gave him an account, that they had not heard from him ſince he went; which was then three Weeks after he was gone. And I remember well, he did not come to Town again till a Fortnight before Michaelmas.

L. C. J. How can you tell that?

Mrs. Duddle. My Lord, I can tell it very well: For I was almoſt every Night in the Room where he uſed to lie; and there lay a Gentlewoman there, that I knew.

L. C. J. What was her Name?

Mrs. Duddle. Mrs. Eagleſton.

L. C. J. How comes ſhe to lie there?

Mrs. Duddle. Her Maid fell ſick, and ſhe chang'd her own Chamber, and lay there all the time he was out of Town.

Otes. My Lord, Is this good Evidence?

L. C. J. Ay, why not?

Otes. My Lord, I think ſhe contradicts the other Witneſs: For ſhe ſays, he lay out two Nights.

L. C. J. No, there you are miſtaken too. But I tell you what I did obſerve before. Mrs. Anne Ireland ſwore, that they did ſtay all Night; but Mr. Iroland refuſed to ſtay there; but would go home, becauſe he was to go his Journey on Saturday. Then this Woman comes; and ſhe ſaid at firſt, that he went out of Town on the Wedneſday, and ſtay'd out all Night; and lay at home but two Nights, and then went away. But now, when I put her in mind to take care what ſhe ſaid, ſhe ſwears, She is ſure the Siſter lay out; but ſhe is not ſure of Ireland's lying out: But ſhe is poſitive he went away on the Saturday the 3d of Auguſt, and return'd not till a Fortnight before Michaelmas.

Otes. My Lord, I humbly conceive, ſhe having once ſworn falſe,——

L. C. J. Ay, but ſhe immediately recollected her ſelf.

Otes. By what Token does ſhe remember it to be the 3d of Auguſt?

L. C. J. She ſaid before, it was the Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day, which was on a Wedneſday, the laſt Day of July; and he went then out of Town. She called it by the Name of Recreation.

Otes. Was it the Saturday after St. Ignatius's Day?

Mrs. Duddle. Yes, it was: And I had not remember'd it, but that it was upon that Holiday.

Otes. This is a Roman Catholick, I ſuppoſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. I cannot tell. What Religion are you of?

Mrs. Duddle. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord. Mr. Jenniſon knows what I ſay to be true.

Otes. Were you a Witneſs in any of the Tryals at the Old-Bailey?

Mrs. Duddle. I was in the Court, but was not called.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What ſay you, Mrs. Quino? When did Mr. Ireland go out of Town?

Mrs. Quino. I muſt ſay the ſame; It was the 3d Day of Auguſt, on a Saturday.

L. C. J. How do you know that it was on a Saturday the 3d of Auguſt?

Mrs. Quino. By the ſame Reaſon that ſhe ſpeaks. I mark'd that other Day he went out of Town; and he came again, and his Mother ſtay'd there that Night: And he went on Saturday Morning out of Town. I know it very well: For my Husband was his Taylor, and he had ſomewhat to alter in his Cloaths; and I brought it immediately after it was done.

L. C. J. Are you ſure he went out of Town that Day?

Mrs. Quino. He went out of the Houſe, and, as I take it, he went out of Town?

L. C. J. Did he ſay, he was to go out of Town?

Mrs. Quino. He had his Boots on; and took Horſe at the Bull-Inn in Drury-lane.

L. C. J. How do you know it?

Mrs. Quino. Becauſe his Servant that was there has teſtified it.

Mr. At. Gen. Now ſwear my Lord Aſton. (Which was done.) We'll bring Ireland now upon the 3d of Auguſt at Night, to my Lord Aſton's Houſe at Standen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will your Lordſhip give my Lord and the Jury an account, when Mr. Ireland came to your Houſe, and how far he travelled with you afterwards?

Lord Aſton. My Lord, Being in Town, I was ſpoke to, and deſired, that Mr. Ireland might have the Opportunity of going in my Company down into Staffordſhire; which I conſented to. I went out of Town, as I remember, the latter end of July 1678. and this ſame Mr. Ireland came to me at my Houſe in Hartfordſhire at Standen, upon the 3d of Auguſt at Night.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was that, my Lord?

Lord Aſton. As I remember, it was Saturday, and in the Evening.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay with your Lordſhip?

Lord Aſton. My Lord, I ſtay'd till Monday at Standen; and upon Monday he went in my Company to St. Albans, which was the 5th of Auguſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither then did you go, my Lord?

Lord Aſton. There I met with my Brother and Siſter Southcoat.

L. C. J. Sir John Southcoat you mean, my Lord.

Lord Aſton. Yes, my Lord. And thence, in four Days, we went to my Houſe at Tixhall.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Ireland travel with you all the Way?

Lord

Lord Aſton. I cannot charge my Memory, my Lord, that he did, ſo as particularly to ſwear it: But there he came into my Company ſometimes at Tixhall; but I cannot tell the particular Days: Nor could I ſpeak poſitively to thoſe things that I have ſpoke to now, but that I find in my Note-Book, that at that time he did come to my Houſe at Standen, and did go with me to St. Albans.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, my Lord, Did he go that Journey to Tixhall along with you?

Lord Aſton. I cannot ſay poſitively that, Mr. Attorney; but I have a general Notion that he did. Nor could I teſtify this ſo poſitively, I ſay, but by Notes that I have of things at that time: Where I have only writ down theſe things concerning Mr. Ireland, that he came the 3d of Auguſt to my Houſe at Standen: That on Monday we went together to St. Albans; and there met us Sir John Southcoat, and my Siſter his Wife; and thence I went to Tixhall; and there I arriv'd the 8th of Auguſt, which was Thurſday.

L. C. J. My Lord, I ask you this Queſtion; you ſay, you have a general Apprehenſion, that he did go with you to Tixhall: Pray, did he come with you to Standen for that purpoſe, to go with you to Tixhall?

Lord Aſton. I had no Buſineſs with him at all; but he deſired the opportunity to go down in my Company into Staffordſhire.

L. C. J. Pray, my Lord, Do you remember you ſaw him within four or five Days after at Tixhall?

Lord Aſton. To name particular Days, I cannot; but that I ſaw him ſeveral Days at Tixhall, I am ſure.

Otes. My Lord, You ſay that Sir John Southcoat went with you to Tixhall.

Lord Aſton. Yes, he did ſo.

Otes. My Lord, I would ask this Nobleman, Whether he was at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits? Or the Tryal of Ireland?

Lord Aſton. No, my Lord, I was not.

Otes. Then I would ask my Lord, If he ſaw Mr. Ireland executed?

Lord Aſton. No, I did not.

Otes. Then I would ask him this Queſtion; Whether the Ireland that was executed be the ſame Ireland he ſpeaks of?

Lord Aſton. Amongſt thoſe that knew him well, I have been told it was the ſame.

Otes. That is but Hear-ſay, my Lord; he does not ſpeak of his own Knowledge.

L. C. J. For that matter, I ſuppoſe, you'll produce ſome other Ireland, Mr. Otes, if it was not the ſame.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it this Mrs. Ireland's Brother, that was here a Witneſs now?

Lord Aſton. He was ſo reputed, and ſo looked upon.

L. C. J. That is all one. If any body ſhould ask me, if you were the ſame Mr. Otes that was at St. Omers; I ſhould ſay, I heard ſo; and it would be very good Evidence, unleſs ſome one elſe were produc'd.

Otes. My Lord, I ſubmit; I will be directed by the Court in any thing that is fair, and not injurious to my Defence.

L. C. J. We will not direct you in any thing that's foul, but pray keep to thoſe Queſtions that are pertinent.

Otes. Are you ſure Ireland went the whole Journey with you, my Lord?

Lord Aſton. I did anſwer that; I have but a general Notion of it, he came to me for that purpoſe.

Otes. Then my Lord is not poſitive he went with him into Staffordſhire.

L. C. J. No, he is not; but I would ask you this Queſtion. My Lord Aſton, Do you believe he went with you to Tixhall?

Lord Aſton. I make no doubt of it, I would pawn all I have in the World upon it; only I cannot ſwear it, becauſe I have it not in my Notes, as I have thoſe two other Days.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Do you like him the worſe, becauſe he is cautious, Mr. Otes?

Otes. No, Sir, I do not. But pray, my Lord, ask him, becauſe it is a Queſtion here about a point of time; Whether he remembers, that within eight or ten Days, he ſaw Ireland at Tixhall?

Lord Aſton. I cannot ſay any thing as to that.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Sir Edward Southcoat.

[Which was done.

L. C. J. I thought you had called him Sir John Southcoat.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir John is ſick, and cannot be here.

Otes. I ſuppoſe my Lord Aſton is a Roman Catholick?

L. C. J. Ay, that all the World knows very well; but I tell you what, Mr. Otes, I obſerve, he is not ſo eaſy in giving his Oath; nay, he is wonderful cautious in ſwearing; I ſpeak it for his Commendation, not as his Fault, he is not very forward at ſwearing.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Well, what do you ask this Gentleman, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. We deſire Sir Edward Southcoat would give an account, whether he met Mr. Ireland at my Lord Aſton's? And when?

Sir E. Southcoat. I was with my Lord Aſton in his Company.

L. C. J. When was that, Sir?

Sir E. Southcoat. The 4th of Auguſt I ſaw Mr. Ireland at my Lord Aſton's.

L. C. J. Was it the ſame Ireland that was afterwards tryed and executed?

Sir E. Southcoat. It was the ſame Ireland that was commonly reported. I did not ſee him executed.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the ſame that was reputed to be this old Gentlewoman's Son?

Sir E. Southcoat. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, go on with your Evidence.

Sir E. Southcoat. Upon Monday we began our Journey to Tixhall, and went that Night to St. Albans, where we met my Father and Mother, and thence we continued on our Journey the next Day.

L. C. J. Was he with you there that Day you went to St. Albans?

Sir E. Southcoat. He was with us, I remember very particularly. It was hot Weather, and my Lord Aſton invited him into the Coach; for before he was riding by the Coach-ſide, and there I remember a particular Diſcourſe that he and my Lord Aſton had; from thence we went on to Northampton, and came the Tueſday Night.

L. C. J. Was Ireland with you there?

Sir E. Southcoat. Ireland was with us there.

Otes. My Lord, I did not well obſerve what this Gentleman ſaid.

L. C. J. Pray mind your Buſineſs your ſelf, he ſpeaks plain enough; go on, Sir.

Sir Edward Southcoat. Mr. Ireland was with us, I ſay my Lord, all the Journey; and I do remember it particularly by a pretty Horſe Mr. Ireland rode upon; and I had a Diſpute with my Couſin, who ſhould buy him; I took particular notice every Day of him, as he rode by the Coach, and Converſed with him every Night in the Inn. We went, I ſay, from St. Albans to Northampton on the Tueſday; from Northampton we went to Coventry on the Wedneſday, and from thence to my Lord Aſton's, at Tixhall, on the Thurſday.

L. C. J. Come, let us go by degrees. Was Mr. Ireland with you, when you went from my Lord Aſton's at Standen to St. Albans?

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. You ſay, it was a hot Day, when you ſet out: And my Lord Aſton did invite him into the Coach.

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, he came into the Coach on Monday, which was the firſt Day we ſet out; and came that Night to St. Albans.

L. C. J. You lay there that Night?

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did you lie there?

Sir Edward Southcoat. At the great Inn, at the Bull.

L. C. J. Ay, That is the great Inn.

Sir Edward Southcoat. The next Night, my Lord, we came to Northampton.

L. C. J. Where did you lie there?

Sir Edward Southcoat. We lay at the Sign of the George; it was Sir William Farmer's Houſe; but made uſe of for an Inn, becauſe the Town was burnt down.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland with you all that Day?

Sir Edward Southcoat. He rode with us all the Day.

L. C. J. And you took notice of it, becauſe of his Horſe, you ſay?

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, he had a very pretty Horſe, my Lord; and my Brother bought the Horſe of him, after we came back again.

L. C. J. Whither went ye the next Day?

Sir Edward Southcoat. The next Night we lay at the Bull in Coventry, and from thence on Thurſday, we arrived at my Lord Aſton's, at Tixhall.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, the Jury deſires to know what he ſays? For they have not heard it.

L. C. J. He ſays, Mr. Ireland went with my Lord Aſton in the Coach, it being a hot Day, on Monday the 5*th* of Auguſt, from Standen, my Lord Aſton's Houſe in Hartfordſhire to St. Albans, and lay there at the Bull Inn that Night; that he went the next Day, which was Tueſday, the 6*th* of Auguſt, with them to Northampton. That he rode upon a pretty Horſe, which makes him remember it particularly; and that there was a Diſpute on the Road, who ſhould buy him; and when they came back, his Brother bought him. He ſays, they lay on Tueſday Night at Northampton, at the George, which was a Gentleman's Houſe, which was turned into an Inn, becauſe of the Fire: That he went with them the next Day to Coventry, which was Wedneſday the 7*th* of Auguſt, and lay with them that Night at the Bull in Coventry; and the next Day, which was Thurſday the 8*th* they came, and Ireland with them, to my Lord Aſton's Houſe at Tixhall in Staffordſhire.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray Sir Edward Southcoat, How long did he ſtay with you at Tixhall, at my Lord Aſton's?

Sir Edward Southcoat. He ſtaid with us there till the Tueſday after; and then we began our Journey from my Lord Aſton's Houſe in Tixhall into Wales, to St. Winifred's Well.

L. C. J. That is Holy-Well, you mean.

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. You ſay, he ſtayed all Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Monday, and till Tueſday after you came to my Lord Aſton's at Tixhall.

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, he did ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. So then, my Lord, we are gotten to Tueſday the 13*th* of Auguſt, which is paſt the time of the Perjury, that is laid ſecond in the Indictment; but in Point of Time, is the firſt that happened; for he ſwore that Ireland took his leave of them, and others here in Town, between the 8*th* and 12*th* of Auguſt?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you go on Tueſday, Sir?

Sir Edward Southcoat. Towards Wales.

Mr. Jones. Was he at Tixhall the 12*th* of Auguſt?

L. C. J. He ſays, he was there till Tueſday the 13th. Pray let us not have the ſame Queſtions repeated over and over again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you go on Tueſday Night?

Sir Edward Southcoat. We went to Nantwich, and lay at the Holy Lamb there.

L. C. J. Where were you the next Night?

Sir Edward Southcoat. The next Day we reached to St. Winifred's Well.

L. C. J. Where did you lie there?

Sir Edward Southcoat. At the Star, which is the great Inn there.

L. C. J. It is ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. Was Mr. Ireland there with you?

Sir Edward Southcoat. Yes, he was.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did ye go then?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. We ſtaid not but one Day at Holy-well; for we arrived there pretty late at Night; and all the Morning we ſpent there, and went away in the Afternoon, and came that Evening to Cheſter, and lay there only one Night, and came the next Day to Tixhall again.

Mr. At. Gen. Which was Friday the 16*th* of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask him, Whether this Gentleman Mr. Ireland was with them all the while, in this Journey to Holy-well?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Every Day particularly; I remember it very perfectly.

Mr. At. Gen. After he came to Tixhall again, How long did he tarry there?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. That I cannot ſo well ſay. I do remember truly, but he was afterwards at my Lord Aſton's at Tixhall. I remember ſome ſcambling Days; but I can fix upon only two.

L. C. J. which are they?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. I cannot tell what Day of the Month it was, or what Day of the Week; but one Day that I remember him there, was Mr. Chetwind's Race with Sir Henry Gough; and one other Day.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. When was that Horſe-Race?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. My Lord, I cannot tell what Day of the Month it was.

Mr. At. Gen. When was the other time you ſpeak of?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. I remember him there one Thurſday, upon the Bowling-green at Tixhall, where there was a particular Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, We deſire to know, when his Brother did buy the Horſe of Mr. Ireland?

Sir Edward Southcoat. When we came back; for he came home with us from my Lord Aſton's, and we began our Journey, the 9*th* or 10*th* of September, from Tixhall to Kingſton; and when we arriv'd at my Father's Houſe, my Brother bought the Horſe of him.

L. C. J. Did you come home back again with Mr. Ireland, do you ſay?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, we did.

L. C. J. When did you ſet out from Tixhall?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. The ninth of September, my Lord, I think it was; I am ſure, it was upon a Monday, the 9*th* or 10*th*.

L. C. J. When did you come home?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. We were four Days on our Journey.

L. C. J. And did you come ſtraight to London?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. No, we went to my Father's Houſe in Surry.

L. C. J. Which way did you come?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. The firſt Night we came to the Bull in Coventry; and from thence, the next Night, we went to the Altar Stone at Banbury; and from Banbury, we came the third Day to Agmondiſham (I think, it is called) a little Town in Buckinghamſhire: And from thence the fourth Day, to my Father's Houſe, by Kingſton in Surry.

Mr. At. Gen. And then Ireland ſold his Brother his Horſe.

L. C. J. How long was he at your Father's Houſe in Surry, Sir Edward?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. My Lord, we came on the Thurſday; and as I take it, he went on the Saturday to London: My Brother, after he had bought his Horſe, lent him the Horſe to Town; and ſent a Man with him, to bring it back again.

Mr. At. Gen. That Saturday, my Lord, makes it come juſt to the Fourteenth of September; and is the very Day Fortnight before Michaelmas-Day.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to ask this Gentleman, Whether he ſaw Ireland all Auguſt, and till the Fourteenth of September in Staffordſhire, and elſewhere? And, how long in Staffordſhire?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. I cannot ſay, as to any particular Days of the Months, after our coming from Holy-Well, till our coming from Tixhall to London.

L. C. J. Marry, if he did, he would contradict what he had ſaid before: For from the time of coming from Holy-Well, to the time of coming back to London, he could tell but of two Days, and thoſe uncertain: For he remembers not by the Times, but by other particular Circumſtances.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask him this Queſtion, When was the firſt Day he ſaw him in September?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Truly, my Lord, I remember not any Day before we began our Journey home?

Mr. At. Gen. But, my Lord, this is his Teſtimony: He was in his Company till the ſixteenth of Auguſt. It is true, there were other times that he ſaw him at Tixhall; but he cannot particularly ſpeak unto them: But by and by, we ſhall go on to every Day, and prove particularly where he was.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know, Was Sir Edw. Southcoat at the Tryal of Ireland a Witneſs, or no?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. No, I was not, my Lord.

Otes. Were you at Whitebread's Tryal, Sir?

Sir Edw. Southcoat. Yes, I was, and gave the ſame Evidence I give now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. John Southcoat. [Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. This is Sir Edward Southcoat's Brother, my Lord.

L. C. J. What, he that bought the Horſe?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, I bought the Horſe of Mr. Ireland.

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask him?

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, Sir, When did you meet Mr. Ireland in Auguſt 1678? And where?

Mr. John Southcoat. My Lord, I met with Mr. Ireland, upon Monday the Fifth of Auguſt, at the Bull-Inn in St. Albans, with my Lord Aſton: I came thither that Day with my Father and Mother. And the next Day we went to Northampton; and there we inn'd at the Sign of the George, Sir William Farmer's Houſe; which is an Houſe in the Road, us'd for an Inn ſince the Town was burnt: And I converſed with him every Day, in our Journey. And from thence, the next Day, we went to Coventry, to the Bull-Inn there; and from thence, to my Lord Aſton's (on Thurſday Night) at Tixhall: There we ſtay'd all Friday, Saturday, Sunday, and Monday. Mr. Ireland was there; I was with him all the while. And then upon Tueſday we ſet out for Holy-Well in Flintſhire; and went that Night to Nantwich, to the Lamb there. And the next Day we went through Cheſter to Holy-Well: We ſtay'd that Night at Holy-Well; and the next Day, came back again towards Noon, to Cheſter; and there lay that Night: And then the next Night, which was Friday, we came back again to Tixhall.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland with you both thoſe Journeys, all the while?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, my Lord, he was; I did ſee him, and rode with him every Day.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, How long were you at Tixhall, after you came from Holy-Well?

Mr. John Southcoat. We ſtay'd there till we came away for good and all.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland with you all that time?

Mr. John Southcoat. No, he was not?

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember, that Mr. Ireland came to Tixhall the Ninth of September; and came along home with you, when you came?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, I do remember it very well.

L. C. J. What Day did you come home, Sir?

Mr. John Southcoat. We came home in Four Days.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did he leave you?

Mr. John Southcoat. We came home upon Thurſday, and he went to London on Saturday.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, Can you recollect when you did first see him again at Tixhall, after you came from Holy-Well?

Mr. John Southcoat. My Lord, I cannot tell particularly any Day, till the Day we came away.

L. C. J. Do you remember the Horse-Match between Mr. Chetwind, and Sir Henry Gough?

Mr. John Southcoat. I was there, my Lord; but I do not remember Mr. Ireland was there.

L. C. J. How long did he stay at your Father's House in Surry, Sir?

Mr. John Southcoat. Two Days, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You lent him your Horse you bought of him, I think, Sir?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, up to London, I did; and I sent my Man with him, to bring him back again.

Mr. At. Gen. Has Mr. Otes any Questions to ask this Gentleman?

Otes. My Lord, I desire to ask Mr. Southcoat, Whether or no he is sure, that Ireland was in his Company from the Fifth of August, to the Sixteenth?

Mr. John Southcoat. Yes, every Day, I am sure of it; I remember it very well.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, Whether or no he testified this that he now swears, at Ireland's Tryal?

Mr. John Southcoat. My Lord, I was not at Ireland's Tryal.

Otes. Then I desire to ask him, Whether or no he did testify this at the Five Jesuits Tryal?

Mr. John Southcoat. No, I was not sent for to any of the Tryals.

L. C. J. I am sorry you were not, Sir: 'Twas pity you were not there. It might have saved some innocent Blood.

Mr. At. Gen. Now swear Harrison. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you give an Account, when you saw Ireland, and where?

Harrison. In the Year of our Lord 1678. my Master, Sir John Southcoat, went with my Lady, on Monday the Fifth of August, to St. Albans; and we came with a Coach and four Horses: For my Master had an old Servant, that had a Pair of Horses, which my Master made use of. And there we met my Lord Aston, in the Company of Mr. Ireland. And the next Morning, my Lord Aston went with my Master and Lady towards Tixhall: And I rode by, in Mr. Ireland's Company; and came acquainted with him that Day. That Night we came to Northampton; and there we Inn'd at a Stone-House, that was used for the Inn, the Town being burnt before. The next Night we went to Coventry; and on Thursday we came to Tixhall: There we stay'd till Tuesday. After we went to Holy-Well; and the Tuesday Night we lay at Nantwich: And thence we went to Holy-Well, and stay'd there on Wednesday Night: And on Thursday we came to West Chester; and I parted with him upon the Friday at West-Chester.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did you know this Ireland? Was it he that was Tryed and Executed?

Harrison. I was at Mr. Ireland's Tryal.

L. C. J. Was it the same Man that was Tryed?

Harrison. My Lord, I saw him at his Tryal, the Hair of his Face was grown, and he was a little disorder'd; he did not look so well, because he was not so well dress'd; but it was the same Man, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before this Man goes, we have more Questions to ask him: When did you see him again, after you left him in Chester you say?

Harrison. I saw him several times at Tixhall; I saw at the Bowling-green upon a Thursday; and I saw him when the Horse-Race was between Mr. Chetwind and Sir Henry Gough; I cannot tell what Day it was; for I had no reason to keep an Account of the particular Days at that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you come up with your Master again the 9*th* of September?

Harrison. My Lord, I did so; I have a Note wherein I set down the Charges at that Time. It is in this bit of Paper, which I have kept in my Almanack ever since. My Lord Aston sent his Coach with us to Banbury, where my Master's Coach was to meet him; but came only to Coventry the first Night. The next Night which was Tuesday, we came to the Altar-Stone at Banbury, and there we lay: From thence on Wednesday, we came to Agmondisham, where we were ill lodged. The next Day we baited at Uxbridge, and came to Kingston, and so to Sir John Southcoat's House, upon the Thursday Night. Upon the Friday Mr. Ireland sold his Horse to Mr. John Southcoat, my Master's Son. Upon the Saturday Morning, I came with him from my Master's House towards London; he did ride upon the Horse he had sold to Mr. Southcoat, and so we came up to Town, and took Water; and I took a little Bagg that belonged to Mr. Ireland upon my Arm, and we landed at Somerset House, and I came with him to his Lodging in Russel-street; and when he came there, he went up Stairs, where were two Women met him, and welcom'd him Home: Said they, We are glad you are come, we thought we had lost you, because we had never heard from you all this while. There I took my leave of him, and did not see him again till his Tryal at the Old-Bailey, and this was Saturday the 14*th* of September.

L. C. J. Pray let me see your Paper you speak of. [Which was delivered in, and the Court look'd upon it.

L. C. J. Did you write this in your Journey?

Harrison. Yes, my Lord, I did it at that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Are the particular Days inserted there, my Lord?

L. C. J. No, they are not, Mr. Attorney.

Harrison. I could not write well, it was only but Memorandums for my self.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was the Saturday he came to Town?

Harrison. It was the 14*th* of September, my Lord.

L. C. J. That agrees with all that the Women said, that he came on Saturday a Fortnight before Michaelmas, being the same Day of the Week as Michaelmas-Day was: Thus far it is as clear as the Sun at Noon-day.

Otes. My Lord, There was a time when this was not believed.

L. C. J. Ay, Mr. Otes, we know there was a time, when there were Ignoramus Juries, and Things were believed, and not believed, as the Humour Humour went. What can you, Mr. Otes, ſay to it? I muſt needs tell you, prima facie, 'tis ſo ſtrong an Evidence, that if you have any Senſe in the World, you muſt be concern'd at it.

Otes. Not at all, my Lord; I know who they are, and what is the end of it all.

L. C. J. Upon my Faith, I have ſo much Charity for you, as my Fellow Creature, as to be concerned for you.

Otes. 'Tis not two ſtraws matter, whether you be or no; I know my own Innocency.

L. C. J. Thou art the moſt obſtinately hardened Wretch that ever I ſaw.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him, whether he did not appear at Mr. Ireland's Tryal? And let it be remember'd what Credit he had then for all this Story he tells now. Theſe People come here to ſerve a Turn only, and care not what they ſwear againſt me.

L. C. J. You muſt hold your Tongue.

Otes. My Lord, I muſt ſpeak the truth, and I will ſpeak the truth.

L. C. J. I think, there is ſcarce a Word of Truth comes out of thy Mouth.

Otes. You may think what you will, my Lord; but theſe Popiſh Traitors, I am ſure, will ſwear any thing, and ſuborn Witneſſes upon Witneſſes againſt me to overthrow the Plot.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. If you cannot behave your ſelf better than you do, we muſt ſend you elſewhere; we muſt not ſuffer this Behaviour: And therefore either be quiet, or get you gone.

L. C. J. Let him keep himſelf in order, and we'll hear him. If he think by boiſterous Impudency to outface Juſtice, we will not ſuffer it. Go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. George Hobſon.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you in the Journey to Tixhall with Mr. Ireland and my Lord Aſton in 78?

Mr. Hobſon. Yes, I was ſo, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell all your Knowledge of that Matter.

Mr. Hobſon. From the 3d of Auguſt till the 16th at Night, I was preſent with him every Day.

L. C. J. How do you know you were?

Mr. Hobſon. That is to ſay, the 3d of Auguſt he came to my Lord's Houſe at Standen in Hartfordſhire in the Evening, and there he remained till Monday the 5th of Auguſt; and that Day in the Morning, he went together with other Company to St. Albans, where we met Sir John Southcoat and his Lady towards the Evening; and we all lodged there, becauſe that was the appointed Place to meet at: We lodged the 6th of Auguſt at Night at Northampton; upon the 7th at Coventry; upon the 8th at Tixhall, my Lord's Houſe, where Mr. Ireland remained till Tueſday the 13th in the Morning. And upon the 13th in the Morning, we ſet forth with my Lady Aſton, my Lord's Mother, and Sir John Southcoat, and Mr. Ireland, and the other Company, towards a Place called Holy Well in Flintſhire: That Night, being Tueſday the 13th of Auguſt, we lodged at Nantwich in Cheſhire; the Wedneſday Night we lodged at Holy Well, where Mr. Ireland was with the reſt of the Company; and on Thurſday Night we returned back again to Cheſter, and lay there. Upon Friday we came back again to my Lord's Houſe at Tixhall. After that I did not ſee Mr. Ireland till Monday the 26th of Auguſt, when he came back again to our Houſe: Where he went in the mean time I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Whoſe Houſe is it that this Man means by our Houſe?

Mr. Hobſon. I mean my Lord Aſton's Houſe at Tixhall.

L. C. J. You knew him very well, did not you?

Mr. Hobſon. Yes, my Lord, I knew him very well.

L. C. J. You ſay, he came back the 26th of Auguſt to Tixhall?

Mr. Hobſon. Yes, as I remember, he did ſo.

Mr. At. Gen. How long after the 26th of Auguſt was it, that you ſaw him at Tixhall?

Mr. Hobſon. When he went away for London.

Mr. At. Gen. When was that?

Mr. Hobſon. The 9th of September.

L. C. J. Did you come along with him to London?

Mr. Hobſon. No, my Lord; I ſee him go; he was not in the Coach, but he was in the Company.

Otes. My Lord, I would fain ask him a Queſtion, When he was firſt acquainted with Mr. Ireland, that he ſpeaks of?

Mr. Hobſon. I never ſaw him till he came to my Lord Aſton's at Standen.

Otes. Were you at the Tryal of Mr. Ireland, Sir?

Mr. Hobſon. No, my Lord, I was not; I was then in Staffordſhire.

Otes. Then it is material, my Lord, for me to ask him this Queſtion, it relating to a particular Perſon; whether Ireland that was executed, was the Ireland he ſays he was with?

L. C. J. I will ask him, if you will. Was that the ſame Man that was afterwards tryed and executed?

Mr. Hobſon. I believe it was, my Lord.

Otes. I inſiſt not ſo much upon the Queſtion, but only in reference to the Witneſs, his Acquaintance being ſo ſhort with him.

L. C. J. Truly, I think it is not ſo very ſhort; for he ſwears he was with him from the 3d of Auguſt till the 16th every Day.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I have no great Acquaintance with you; but I know you, Mr. Otes, becauſe I have ſeen you ſo often.

L. C. J. Is it the ſame Ireland that was at the Tryal? You, Harriſon, you ſaw him then?

Harriſon. The very ſame, and no other.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Certainly no body doubts that.

L. C. J. 'Tis fit he ſhould have his Queſtion anſwer'd, if the Witneſs can. Pray, go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear George North. (Which was done.) Pray, will you give an account where you met Mr. Ireland, and whether you was with him in his Journey?

North. My Lord, I ſaw him the 4th of Auguſt, which was Sunday, at Standen, my Lord Aſton's Houſe in Hartfordſhire: Upon the 5th, he went with my Lord to St. Albans; where my Lord met with Sir John Southcoat and his Lady; and I was with them. And from thence we went on Tueſday to the George at Northampton: And from thence, on Wedneſday the 7th, to the Bull at Coventry. And upon the 8th, we came to Tixhall, which was Thursday. And from Thursday the 8th, to Tuesday the 13th, I did see him every Day at my Lord's House at Tixhall.

L. C. J. Whither went he then?

North. He went with my old Lady, and some other Company to go to Holy-Well.

L. C. J. When did you see him again?

North. I did see him several times after that at Tixhall: But I took no particular notice of him again till he went away for London.

L. C. J. When was that?

North. I did see him the 9th of September. He came to go with Sir John Southcoat to London: Mr. John Southcoat, and he. I took my Leave of him.

Otes. What Religion are you of, Sir?

North. I am a Catholick, my Lord.

Otes. I desire to know, how he comes to remember this so well?

North. I waited at the Table; and he was every Day at Dinner with my Lord.

Otes. Were you at the Tryal of Ireland a Witness?

North. No indeed, my Lord, I was not.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Richard Ingletrap. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you give an account, whether you knew Mr. Ireland, and where you saw him?

Ingletrap. The 1st of August, my Lord, I was ordered to be at Standen in Hartfordshire, to wait upon my Lord Aston, to go with him to Tixhall. And the 3d of August, I saw Mr. Ireland there at Standen Lodge at my Lord's House. The 4th Day he rested there being Sabbath-Day.

Mr. At. Gen. What are you, an Hackney-Coach-man?

Ingletrap. Yes, my Lord, I am so. And upon the 5th, which was Monday, he went with my Lord Aston to St. Albans; upon the 6th, to Northampton; on the 7th, to Coventry; and the 8th Day, to Tixhall Lodge. He was in the Company, and went all the way with him; and I was there too.

L. C. J. How long did he stay there?

Ingletrap. Till Tuesday the 13th.

L. C. J. Did you see him there till Tuesday?

Ingletrap. I do not say, that I did see him every Day.

L. C. J. Did you go with them on Tuesday to Holy-Well?

Ingletrap. No, I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. But, my Lord, you observe, that is past one of the Times that he swore Ireland was here in Town; that is, between the 8th and 12th of August.

L. C. J. It is so.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, what Religion are you of, Mr. Ingletrap?

Ingletrap. I am a Protestant, my Lord?

Otes. Were you at the Tryal of the five Jesuits, or that of Ireland?

Ingletrap. No, I was not.

Otes. My Lord, I desire you would ask him, he being a Protestant, How he came to be acquainted with Ireland, that was a Priest?

L. C. J. Why, Mr. Otes, Is there no Conversation to be between Papists and Protestants?

Otes. Truly very little, my Lord: But that is not to the Point now. I desire to have an Answer to my Question.

Ingletrap. There was no great Acquaintance between us, my Lord; for I never saw him before that time.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Andrew Wetton. (Which was done.) Did you go that Journey with my Lord Aston to Tixhall?

Wetton. No. I went from Tixhall to Holy-Well.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day did you set out from Tixhall?

Wetton. Upon Tuesday the 13th of August.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you lie that Night?

Wetton. At Nantwich at the Holy Lamb. And the next Day we baited at Chester; and from thence we came the next Night to Holy-Well: There we stay'd all Night, and till next Day at Noon. We din'd at Holy-Well, and came that Night back to Chester: And from thence, the next Day, we came home to Tixhall.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Ireland there all the while?

Wetton. Mr. Ireland was there, I look'd after his Horse.

L. C. J. When did he come first to Tixhall?

Wetton. He came upon the 8th, and stay'd till the 13th; and then went to Holy-Well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what Religion are you of?

Wetton. I am a Protestant, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. And the 9th of September he came away from Tixhall for London, you say?

Wetton. Yes. I saw them take Coach, and he did ride on Horseback.

L. C. J. Did you see him often at Tixhall, between the time he came from Holy-Well and the time he went to London?

Wetton. Yes, he was there several times; but I cannot tell the particular Days: But, my Lord, if you please, I can tell you the very Money he gave me, which was a Shilling and two Six-pences, when we came back from Holy-Well.

L. C. J. And the 16th, you say, he came back from Holy-Well?

Wetton. Yes, it was the 16th, upon Friday, that he came from Holy-Well.

L. C. J. And he says, the 9th of September he came back again from Tixhall to London; and that he saw him several times, in the mean time, at my Lord Aston's House.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So, my Lord, we are past one of the Times; and have fix'd him at Tixhall upon the 16th.

Mr. At. Gen. We have a couple of Witnesses more upon this Point, and then we shall go on to the 17th; and so all along to the 9th of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Thomas Sawyer. (Which was done.) When came Mr. Ireland to Tixhall? Can you tell?

Mr. Sawyer. He came the 8th of August to Tixhall, and continued there till the 13th: And then he went away; but whither he went, I cannot tell: But, as I was told, it was to Holy-Well.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come to Tixhall again?

Mr. Sawyer. When my old Lady Aston came home, which was Friday the 16th.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know when he left Tixhall for good and all?

Mr. Sawyer. the 9th of September, my Lord, he went with Sir John Southcoat to go to London.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Can you remember he was there at any time between the 16th of Auguſt, and the 9th of September?

Mr. Sawyer. He was once or twice there; but I cannot tell the particular Days.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Perſwaſion are you of, as to Religion, Sir?

Mr. Sawyer. I am one of the Church of England, my Lord.

L. C. J. Truth is the ſame in all Perſwaſions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But we would obviate Mr. Otes's Objection, That they are all Papiſts.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Frances Allen. (Which was done.) Pray, will you give an account, when you ſaw Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire?

Mrs. Allen. He came the 8th Day of Auguſt to Tixhall, and continued there the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, and to the 13th in the Morning, and then he did go to Holy Well.

Mr. At. Gen. She will tell you one particular Circumſtance, how ſhe remembers him about that time.

Mrs. Allen. The 10th of Auguſt was Saturday; and that which cauſeth me to remember it, is this; There was a Woman, one Sarah Paine, I think her Name was, which teſtified at the Tryal, that he was in Town at that time; but he was not: For he was at Tixhall upon the 10th, which was Saturday; and the 11th, which was Sabbath-day: And I ſaw him in the Chamber thoſe Days.

Mr. At. Gen. How came you to know him ſo well?

Mrs. Allen. I was a Servant to my Lord Aſton, and look'd to Mr. Ireland's Chamber, and waſh'd his Linnen; and thoſe Days I ſaw him in his Chamber.

Mr. At. Gen. When he went from Tixhall to Holy-Well the 13th, when did he come back again?

Mrs. Allen. The 16th Day, which was Friday.

Mr. At. Gen. Did he come afterwards to Tixhall at any time?

Mrs. Allen. He went away the 17th, and I can tell you by a good Token, that he did ſo: For the 17th I carried his Cloaths into his Chamber, that he was to take with him.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come again to Tixhall?

Mrs. Allen. He came ſeveral times, but truly I cannot tell what Days particularly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, when did he go away for good and all?

Mrs. Allen. I remember his going away with Sir John Southcoat, but I cannot tell the time.

Mr. At Gen. Pray what Religion are you of?

Mrs. Allen. I am a Proteſtant of the Church of England; ſo I was Chriſtened, ſo I have lived, and ſo I hope to die before you all.

L. C. J. Upon my Word, ſhe is very kind, ſhe has a mind to die before us: 'Tis a ſign ſhe lives a good Life, ſhe's ſo ready to die.

Mr. At. Gen. So, my Lord, you ſee that the 17th of Auguſt, he departed from my Lord Aſton's. Now we ſhall call Mrs. Harwell to give you an account, whither he went on the 17th. Swear Mrs. Jane Harwell. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where do you live, Mrs. Harwell?

Mrs. Harwell. I live now in Town, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you live in the Year 78?

Mrs. Harwell. At Wolverhampton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Mr. Ireland, he that was executed?

Mrs. Harwell. Very well, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time did he come to your Houſe at Wolverhampton?

Mrs. Harwell. The 17th of Auguſt 1678.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Harwell. Upon Saturday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. From whence did he ſay he came at that time?

Mrs. Harwell. I do verily believe it was from Tixhall that he came; I cannot poſitively ſay.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long ſtayed he there?

Mrs. Harwell. He came to my Houſe the 17th of Auguſt 1678. He ſupped there that Night, and I think he lay in my Houſe every Night till the 26th of the ſame Month. Upon the 19th Day, after Dinner, I went with him a good part of the Town of Wolverhampton; and upon Friday following, which was the 23d, he went a little way out of Town, to a Fair hard by; and return'd the ſame Day; and ſtayed at my Houſe the next Day, being Bartholomew-day. The next Day being the 25th, being Sunday, he was at my Houſe, and he ſtayed, as I ſaid, every Night, and lay at my Houſe; and went away on Monday the 26th of Auguſt. It was, to the beſt of my remembrance, in the Morning.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whither did he ſay he was going, when he went from your Houſe on the 26th?

Mrs. Harwell. I think to Tixhall, he ſaid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you ſee him again after that?

Mrs. Harwell. He returned to me again the 14th of September following. That Night he ſupped at my Houſe, and lay there; and he ſtayed at my Houſe Thurſday the 5th of September, Friday the 6th, and he went away on the 7th from me for good and all.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did he go then?

Mrs. Harwell. To Tixhall I think, I cannot tell.

Mr. At. Gen. Whence did he ſay he came, when he came laſt to your Houſe; which was Wedneſday the 4th of September?

Mrs. Harwell. Then he ſaid, he came from Boſcobel and Black-Ladies, and that way.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell any thing that makes you remember he was at Boſcobel?

Mrs. Harwell. I have ſome Circumſtances that make me believe and remember it.

L. C. J. Ay, tell us what they are.

Mrs. Harwell. My Lord, Upon Monday the 2d of September, I heard Mr. Ireland would be at Boſcobel, and I ſaid to my Friend that told me ſo; Sure Mr. Ireland will not be there that Night, and I ſo near him. Yes, ſaid ſhe, he will. Then, ſaid I, I will write to him; and ſo I did. And I tell you the 4th of September, which was Wedneſday, he came to my Houſe, and ſtayed that Night, and the two next Days with me, and went away upon the Saturday after.

L. C. J. You ſay, you did write to him upon the 2d of September?

Mrs. Harwell. Yes, I did ſo.

L. C. J. What was the occaſion of your writing to him at that time?

Mrs. Har-

Mrs. Harwell. One Madam Dormer, was then in thoſe Parts, and he being gone a Viſiting his Friends at Black Ladies, I writ to him, and deſired him to give her a Viſit, for I knew ſhe would be glad to ſee him.

L. C. J. He came back to you the 4*th* of September, you ſay?

Mrs. Harwell. Yes, he did ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did he own upon the Fourth of September, that he had received your Letter?

Mrs. Harwell. He ſaid he had been at the Place, my Lord, but I know not whether he had received my Letter or no; but I am ſure he waited upon my Lady; for ſhe told me ſo afterwards.

Otes. I deſire to know whether this Gentlewoman was at Ireland's Tryal?

Mrs. Harwell. No, my Lord, but I heard that upon the 17*th* of December following, Mr. Ireland was try'd at the Old Bailey for High Treaſon. Upon the 19*th*, I was informed by the Poſt what was ſworn againſt him; and particularly as to this time, which I knew to be falſe: And upon my own Coſt and Charges I ſent an Expreſs away to Town here to a Friend that I knew, upon reading the Letter that was written to me, that Mr. Ireland was falſely accuſed; and by that Expreſs alſo I ſent a Petition, humbly beſeeching His late Majeſty, that we might bring in Witneſſes to prove, that Mr. Ireland was in Staffordſhire, when Mr. Otes ſwore he was in Town; and upon that the King ſtaid the Execution about five Weeks. We did hope for a ſecond Tryal, but we could not obtain it; and he was executed. I did it at my own Coſt and Charges: For I thought it my Duty, if I could, to ſave his Life, knowing that to be falſe which was ſworn againſt him.

L. C. J. She ſpeaks gravely and ſoberly upon my Word.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. So ſhe does indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. We have abundance of them, my Lord. Swear Mr. William Ruſhton.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Tell my Lord what you know of Mr. Ireland's being at Mrs. Harwell's in Auguſt 1678, at Wolverhampton.

Mr. Ruſhton. My Lord, In the Month of Auguſt 1678, I did ſee Mr. William Ireland at Wolverhampton in the County of Stafford; and it was upon the 18*th* of Auguſt, and I ſaw him there, from the 18*th* to the 25*th*, every one of the Days but one, and that I cannot be poſitive in. He went that Day to Litchfield, which was upon the 23d, as I take it, but I cannot be poſitive; but all the reſt of the Days I did ſee him there once, if not twice or thrice a Day.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did he lodge then?

Mr. Ruſhton. At Mr. Fyfford's, or Mrs. Harwell's.

Otes. Were you at any of the Tryals of Ireland, or the five Jeſuits, Sir?

Mr. Ruſhton. No, I was never at one till now.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, what Religion is this Gentleman of, I deſire to know?

Mr. Ruſhton. Not of your Worſhip's Religion, Doctor Otes.

L. C. J. But anſwer his Queſtion.

Mr. Ruſhton. I am a Catholick.

Otes. A Roman Catholick he means, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Ruſhton. Yes, I am a Roman Catholick, and a Loyal Subject.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mrs. Katherine Winford.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Winford, Pray did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Mrs. Harwell's, the Year 1678?

Mrs. Winford. Yes, I did, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray tell the Court what you do know of that Matter.

Mrs. Winford. I did hear at Wolverhampton, that Mr. Ireland came to Town the 17*th* of Auguſt, and I did ſee him there the 18*th*, and I did ſee him there the 19*th*, and I did ſee him there the 20*th*, and I ſaw him there upon the 22*d*, 23*d*, 24*th*, and 25*th*, and that was the laſt time I ſaw him there.

L. C. J. At Mrs. Harwell's was it that you ſaw him?

Mrs. Winford. Sometimes at Mrs. Harwell's, and ſometimes at my Father's Houſe, who lived in that Town.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know how ſhe comes to remember thoſe Days ſo particularly?

Mrs. Winford. I remember them, becauſe St. Bartholomew's Day was the 24*th* of Auguſt, and that was the Saturday after he came to Town; and the firſt Day I ſaw him was the Sunday before, and ſo I reckon it to be on thoſe Days I ſaw him.

L. C. J. Have you any other Queſtions to ask her, Mr. Otes?

Otes. No, my Lord, I have not; She was a Witneſs before at Whitebread's Tryal, and was not believed there.

L. C. J. Well, make your Remarks by and by, and let them now go on with their Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. William Stanley.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray, did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton, and when?

Mr. Stanley. Upon the 18*th* of Auguſt 78. It was Sunday, I ſaw Mr. Ireland in Wolverhampton in the Morning, and in the Afternoon he was in my own Houſe. Upon Monday the 19*th* I ſaw him twice that Day at my own Houſe; I poſitively ſpeak that, and I verily believe I did ſee him on Tueſday the 20*th*, and Wedneſday the 21*ſt*; but Thurſday and Friday I cannot ſay I did ſee him thoſe two Days: For he went upon one of them to Litchfield. But upon Saturday and Sunday I am ſure I ſaw him, and two or three times ſome Days.

Otes. Pray, Mr. Stanley, did you know him before?

Mr. Stanley. No, I did not, Sir.

Otes. Was you at his Tryal?

Mr. Stanley. No, I was not.

Otes. Were you at the five Jeſuits Tryal?

Mr. Stanley. No, I was not in London ſince, till the laſt Term.

Otes. What Religion are you of, Sir?

Mr. Stanley. What Religion are you of, Mr. Otes?

L. C. J. Nay, do not ask Queſtions, but anſwer the Queſtions he asks.

Mr. Stanley. I am a Roman Catholick.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Stanley, Pray can you recollect any Circumſtance how you came to remember that it was ſuch and ſuch Days that you ſaw him?

Mr. Stanley. Yes, my Lord, I can.

L. C. J. What are they, tell them us?

Mr.

Mr. Stanley. I buried a Child that Morning, being Sunday the 18*th* of Auguſt, and he came to my Houſe in the Afternoon, and I entertained him with thoſe Things that I had provided for to entertain my Friends at the Funeral. On Monday was a Wake, and the young People went all to the Wake, and left Madam Harwell alone, and ſo ſhe came with him to my Houſe, and I entertained him with the ſame kind of Entertainment that I did the Day before.

L. C. J. That is a remarkable Circumſtance indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Dorothy Purcell. [Which was done.

What ſay you, Mrs. Purcell, when did you ſee Mr. Ireland, at Wolverhampton?

Mrs. Purcell. I ſaw him the 18*th*, 19*th*, 20*th*, 21*ſt*, 22*d*, and 23*d* Days of Auguſt, 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you ſee him?

Mrs. Purcell. At a Friend's Houſe in Wolverhampton.

L. C. J. How come you to remember thoſe Days of the Month?

Mrs. Purcell. I remember them by particular Circumſtances.

L. C. J. What are thoſe particular Circumſtances? Let us hear them, How come you to name thoſe very Days, the eighteenth, nineteenth, and ſo on?

Mrs. Purcell. I can remember it as well as any thing in the World.

Otes. I deſire, my Lord, that ſhe may tell how ſhe does remember it.

Mrs. Purcell. That's enough, and as much as need to be ſaid, I remember very well.

Otes. But I deſire to know how you come to remember it?

Mrs. Purcell. I remember it, I tell you, very well; And I do affirm I ſaw him there.

Otes. But you do not tell what Circumſtances you remember it by.

Mrs. Purcell. No, there is no need of it, I am ſure I ſaw him there then.

Mr. At. Gen. Tell him ſome Circumſtances.

Mrs. Purcell. Thoſe were the Days before Bartholomew Eve.

Otes. My Lord, Is this any thing of Evidence?

L. C. J. The Jury hears it, and they will conſider of it.

Otes. What Religion are you of, Mrs?

Mr. Purcell. Muſt I tell what Religion I am of?

L. C. J. Yes, anſwer his Queſtion.

Otes. I dare ſay ſhe is a Papiſt, ſhe need not trouble her Head to anſwer it.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Scott. [Which was done.

Were you at Wolverhampton when Mr. Ireland was there?

Mr. Scott. Yes, I was.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you do any Service for him there?

Scott. I look'd to his Horſe.

Mr. At. Gen. When did he come thither, do you remember?

Scott. I cannot tell juſt the time that he came in.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Week was it that he came thither?

Scott. It was of a Saturday.

Mr. At. Gen. What Month was it?

Scott. I cannot tell very well what Month it was; it was in Auguſt I think.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Scott. The ſpace of a Fortnight off and on.

Otes. Is that Evidence, my Lord, that he has delivered?

L. C. J. It is but very ſmall Evidence. It is only Circumſtantial to confirm the other Teſtimony.

Mr. At. Gen. How long was it before Ireland was tryed and executed, can you tell that?

Scott. No, I know nothing of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. John Stamford. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton, and when was it, I pray you?

Mr. Stamford. My Lord, in the Year 1675. I was ſent beyond Sea to St. Omers, to fetch over two young Gentlemen that were Students there; And there I became acquainted with Mr. Ireland, who was then Procurator of the Jeſuits at St. Omers. And in Auguſt 78. I did ſee him in Wolverhampton, upon the Sunday after the Aſſumption of our Lady; which was the 15*th* of Auguſt, he came to ſee me, and I ſaw him there that Day.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month is the Aſſumption of our Lady?

Mr. Stamford. That is always the 15*th* of Auguſt, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. How often did you ſee him there?

Mr. Stamford. I ſaw him Sunday and Monday, and till that ſeven Night, I ſaw him every Day in that Week but one, when he went to Litchfield.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know how he comes to remember that it was at that time?

L. C. J. He tells you a Reaſon for it, becauſe it fell out to be upon the Sunday after the Aſſumption of our Lady, which is always the 15*th* of Auguſt.

Otes. My Lord, he ſays he came acquainted with Mr. Ireland at St. Omers.

L. C. J. Yes, he ſays, that was in the Year, 1675.

Otes. I deſire to know, my Lord, what Buſineſs he had there?

L. C. J. He tells you, he went to fetch over two young Men that were Students there.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, I deſire to know what Religion he is of.

L. C. J. What Religion are you of?

Mr. Stamford. I am a Roman Catholick.

Otes. I deſire to know what his Profeſſion?

Mr. Stamford. I am a younger Brother, of a good and loyal Family as any of the County of Stafford, and that ſuffered as much as any for the late King.

Otes. I believe if it were looked into he is ſomewhat elſe beſides a younger Brother.

Mr. At. Gen. Yes, he ſays he is of a Loyal Family.

L. C. J. I am ſure there is ſuch a Family in that County that were great Sufferers for King Charles I. and the late King; and were very inſtrumental in Services for the late King, at his eſcape from Worceſter; but whether he be of that Family or no, I cannot tell.

Mr. Stamford. The Doctor thinks I am a Jeſuit, but I'll aſſure him I have a Wife and Children.

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Otes was about to have made him a Prieſt, but it ſeems he hath a Wife and Children, and ſo is out of Danger.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, ſwear Mrs. Katharine Fowler.

[Which was done.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Ireland, Mrs. Fowler, at Wolverhampton, in 1678?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, I did.

Mr. At. Gen. When was it?

Mrs. Fowler. I did ſee him on Saturday the 17th of Auguſt at Wolverhampton, he came that Day to my Mother's Houſe, where I was.

Mr. At. Gen. How long did he ſtay there?

Mrs. Fowler. Till the 27th, which was Monday was Seven-night after, I was in his Company every Day in that time unleſs it were Friday, which Day they ſay he went to Litchfield to the Fair.

L. C. J. Is Mrs. Harwell your Mother?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, my Lord, ſhe is, and I lived at that time with my Mother.

L. C. J. How do you remember this, have you any Tokens that you can give us, why you remember it was then?

Mrs. Fowler. My Lord, I recollected my ſelf after Mr. Ireland's Tryal, in which Mr. Otes ſwore that he was here in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, that that was the very Month that Mr. Ireland was in Wolverhampton, and thereupon I concluded that Mr. Otes had not ſworn true by that Recollection when it was freſh in my Memory, being within half a Year after.

Otes. Madam, Are you Mrs. Harwell's Daughter?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, I am ſo, Sir.

Otes. Did you not know one Mr. Jenniſon?

Mrs. Fowler. Which Jenniſon?

Otes. Mr. Robert Jenniſon.

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, I do know him.

Otes. Are you not a kin to him?

Mrs. Fowler. Yes, but I am ſorry to own I have ſuch a Relation.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Gifford.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire, and when, I pray you?

Mr. Gifford. I ſaw him there at Wolverhampton the 17th of Auguſt 1678, and he continued there till the 26th, I ſaw him there every Day.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to ask this Gentleman, whether he were at the Tryal of Ireland?

Mr. Gifford. No, I was not in Court, nor examined as a Witneſs.

Otes. Were you at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, Sir?

Mr. Gifford. I was there, but was not examined.

L. C. J. Was it every Day, ſay you, that you ſaw him at Wolverhampton?

Mr. Gifford. Every Day.

L. C. J. They ſay, he was one Day out of Town at Litchfield.

Mr. Gifford. He was out of Town that Day, but I ſaw him.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Elizabeth Gifford.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You hear the Queſtion, Did you ſee Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire in 78, and when?

Mrs. E. Gifford. Mr. Ireland came to Wolverhampton the 17th of Auguſt, and continued there till the 26th.

Mr. At. Gen. How do you remember it?

Mrs. Gifford. By a Wake that was juſt hard by, that was at that time; and he came to my Uncle's Houſe upon the Sunday following the Aſſumption of our Lady.

Mr. At. Gen. Did you ſee him every Day till the 26th?

Mrs. Gifford. I remember I did ſee him every Day but two Days that I was abroad at the Wake.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know, whether ſhe was examined at any of the former Tryals?

Mrs. Gifford. Yes, at the five Jeſuits Tryal, I was.

Otes. Were you not at Ireland's Tryal?

Mrs. Gifford. No, I was not.

Otes. There was one Gifford examined there.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Elizabeth Keeling.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton, and when?

Keeling. Yes, my Lord, I did ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell when it was.

Keeling. It was the 17th of Auguſt he came to my Miſtreſs's Houſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Auguſt?

Keeling. Auguſt before the Plot.

L. C. J. Who was your Miſtreſs?

Keeling. Mrs. Harwell, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did he continue there?

Keeling. He came on the Saturday, and I ſaw him there till the Monday. When I was ſent for to my Mother's Burying I left him and Madam Dormer at Dinner, and came back on the Thurſday. And in his Chamber I heard him diſcourſe, but I did not ſee him. Upon the Friday he went abroad, and returned again that Night. Upon the Saturday I ſaw him, and he continued there till Monday Morning, and then he went away, and returned on Wedneſday the 4th of September, and ſtayed till Saturday the 7th; and then went away from Wolverhampton.

Otes. I deſire to know what Religion this Woman is of?

Keeling. I am a Roman Catholick, God be thanked.

Mr. At. Gen. Mrs. Keeling, When did Mr. Ireland return again do you ſay, after he went firſt to Wolverhampton?

Keeling. It was the Wedneſday ſeven-night after, Sir.

Mr. At. Gen. That was the 4th of September.

L. C. J. How long ſtayed he there then?

Keeling. Till Saturday in the Forenoon.

Mr. At. Gen. Whither did he ſay he was going then?

Keeling. He ſaid he went to Bellamour to Dinner.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him at any time after?

Keeling. No, my Lord, I ſaw him no more.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. Richardſon.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you give an account when you ſaw Mr. Ireland and where, in the Year 78?

Mr. Richardſon. My Lord, I ſaw a Gentleman that I was informed was Mr. Ireland, at Wolverhampton, at a Wake; which was Monday the 19th of Auguſt.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did he lodge?

Mr. Richardſon. At Mrs. Harwell's.

Mr. At.

Mr. At. Gen. What, Are you a Tradeſman?

Mr. Richardſon. Yes, an Apothecary in Wolverhampton.

L. C. J. How many Days did you ſee him at Wolverhampton?

Mr. Richardſon. I ſaw him only one Day in the Market-place.

L. C. J. You did not know Mr. Ireland before?

Mr. Richardſon. But I was informed that was he.

L. C. J. What became of that Ireland that you were informed was at Wolverhampton then?

Mr. Richardſon. I heard preſently after that, upon Mr. Otes's Plot, he was ſecured and executed.

Mr. At. Gen. What Religion are you of, pray, Sir?

Mr. Richardſon. I am of the Church of England.

Otes. Pray, Sir, I would ask you this Queſtion.

Mr. Richardſon. As many Queſtions as you pleaſe, Mr. Otes.

Otes. Who told you it was Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Richardſon. Mrs. Harwell.

Otes. When was it ſhe told you it was Ireland?

Mr. Richardſon. To the beſt of my Remembrance, it was before he was apprehended as a Traitor.

Otes. He is uncertain when he was told ſo.

L. C. J. Well, make what Advantage you can of it by and by.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Eleanor Graves.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Miſtreſs, did you ſee Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton at any time?

Mrs. Graves. Yes, I did, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was it?

Mrs. Graves. The firſt time was ſix Years ago in Auguſt, it is now going on ſeven Years ſince.

Mr. At. Gen. What time in Auguſt was it?

Mrs. Graves. The firſt Day was the 20th or 21ſt, I am ſure I ſaw him upon the 22d; for I din'd with him, and was with him all the Afternoon, and ſupp'd with him. Upon the 23d we went to Litchfield together, which was Bartholomew Eve. And I ſaw him the 25th, which was Sunday after.

L. C. J. Are you ſure it is the Ireland we are now ſpeaking of?

Mrs. Graves. They ſaid it was the ſame Mr. Ireland that was executed. They call'd him ſo.

L. C. J. Nay, there is no great Doubt, but only for Mr. Otes's Satisfaction.

Mr. At. Gen. At whoſe Houſe did he lie at Wolverhampton?

Mrs. Graves. At Mrs. Harwell's.

Mr. At. Gen. Where was it you ſupp'd with him, I pray you?

Mrs. Graves. He din'd and ſupp'd at a Relation's Houſe of mine.

L. C. J. Who was that? Name him.

Mrs. Graves. It was at my Uncle Winford's.

L. C. J. Did you go along with him to Litchfield do you ſay on the 23d?

Mrs. Graves. Yes, and ſo did my Uncle; and at Night we came back together.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Religion are you of, Miſtreſs?

Mrs. Graves. I am of the Church of England.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to ask her, How did ſhe know it was the ſame Ireland that was tryed?

Mrs. Graves. It was the ſame Ireland that they ſaid was afterwards executed. I know no more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you go back with him to Mrs. Harwell's from Litchfield?

Mrs. Graves. I did, to my Uncle Winford's Houſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Now we come, my Lord, to another Period of Time, which is from the 26th of Auguſt, to the 29th; and for that we firſt call Sir Thomas Whitegrave, who is a Juſtice of the Peace, and a worthy Gentleman; a Member of the Church of England in that County. Swear him. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir Thomas, will you be pleaſed to give the Court an account, whether you ſaw Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire 1678, and what time it was?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. I ſaw Mr. Ireland upon the 29th of Auguſt before the Popiſh Plot; it was upon a Thurſday in the Afternoon upon Tixhall Bowling-green; and I diſcourſed with him; he told me he was to go home that Night with Sir James Simmons, and Mr. Heveningham. They told me afterwards he went on Saturday to Hilderſham, and went thence on Monday following towards Boſcobel; ſome time after that, a Rumour came down that Mr. Ireland was accuſed with others, of being in a Plot of the Papiſts; and my ſelf and ſome others that were in Commiſſion for the Peace in that County, did reflect upon the time that Ireland was in the Country, and we were a little diſturbed, becauſe he had been at particular Places among our Neighbours, whom we knew to be Catholicks.

Mr. At. Gen. Can you remember no Day but that one, Sir Thomas?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. Only the 29th I ſaw him there, and diſcours'd with him; and afterwards there was Word ſent to me, to deſire me that I would come up to London at his Tryal.

L. C. J. And did you come up, Sir Thomas?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. No, I did not; I had no Subpœna; and being a Juſtice of the Peace, I did not think fit to leave the Country at that time without a Subpœna.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know of this Gentleman, how long he had been acquainted with Mr. Ireland?

Sir Thomas Whitegrave. I never ſaw him before, nor ſince.

L. C. J. He goes no further than the 29th.

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, he does not. Then ſwear Mr. William Fowler.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will you give an account when you ſaw Mr. Ireland, and where?

Mr. Fowler. I ſaw Mr. Ireland upon the 27th of Auguſt 78. in Staffordſhire, at a Horſe Race at Etching-hill. The Race was run between Sir Henry Gough and Captain Chetwind.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee him any other Day in that Month?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, the 29th of Auguſt I ſaw him at Tixhall Bowling-green.

Mr. Sol.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When elſe did you ſee him?

Mr. Fowler. I ſaw him the 10th of Auguſt before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where, at Tixhall, at my Lord Aſton's Houſe?

Mr. At. Gen. Do you remember Sir Thomas Whitegrave was upon the Bowling-green the 27th of Auguſt?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, he was, and did diſcourſe with Mr. Ireland there.

L. C. J. What became of Mr. Ireland afterwards?

Mr. Fowler. He went about the Country for ſome time, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it the ſame Ireland that was executed?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, it was the ſame.

L. C. J. You ſay you ſaw him the 29th at Tixhall Bowling-green?

Mr. Fowler. Yes, I did ſo.

L. C. J. When you heard he was taken up for the Plot, what did they ſay whither he went at that time?

Mr. Fowler. I think he went to Mr. Heveningham's, or thereabouts.

Otes. I would fain know this Gentleman's Religion.

Mr. Fowler. I am a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J. We ask it only becauſe Mr. Otes deſires to be ſatisfied in that Point.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. Howard.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time in Auguſt 78 did you ſee Mr. Ireland in Staffordſhire, and where?

Mr. Howard. I came out of Shropſhire upon the 27th of Auguſt, to the Horſe Race at Etching-hill; and there I ſaw this Mr. Ireland upon the 28th. I dined at one Mr. Herbert Aſton's Houſe at Bellamore, and there I ſaw him again.

Mr. At. Gen. What other time did you ſee him?

Mr. Howard. Never any other time.

Otes. How does he know it was the ſame Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Howard. I came up to Town ſoon after, and they told me that knew him, that it was the ſame Ireland that ſuffer'd.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Drayton.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where did you ſee Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Drayton. At Etching hill Race.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day was that?

Mr. Drayton. That was the 27th of Auguſt 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you ſee him after?

Mr. Drayton. The next Day following I did not ſee him; but the Thurſday following I ſaw him at Tixhall, and he went home with Mr. Heveningham to Aſton, and I ſaw him on Friday, he was with us there, and went a fiſhing, and we catch'd a great Pike of a Yard long; which was not ordinary with us. Upon the 31ſt, which was Saturday, my Maſter went to kill a Buck in the Park, and Mr. Ireland went along with him, and they went to a little Village hard by, and there I parted with him, and did ſee him no more that Day. Mr. Gerrard of Hilderſham was to meet my Maſter a hunting, but he was ſick, and did not: Then upon Sunday the 1ſt of September, I was ſent to ſee Mr. Gerrard of Hilderſham, and there I ſaw Mr. Ireland.

L. C. J. Who was your Maſter, pray you?

Mr. Drayton. This Lord Gerrard of Bromeley's Father.

Mr. At. Gen. He was accuſed by Dugdale of the Plot, and died afterwards in Newgate.

Otes. Pray ask Mr. Drayton what Religion he is of?

Mr. Drayton. I am a Roman Catholick.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Sir James Simmons.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you ſee Mr. Ireland, Sir James?

Sir J. Simmons. Upon Tueſday the 27th of Auguſt 78, I remember very well, I ſaw Mr. Ireland at the Horſe Race at Etching-hill, between Sir Henry Gough, and Mr. Chetwind; and I remember particularly, that Sir Henry Gough's Horſe diſtanc'd him. I did not ſee him before he came to the Inn, but there we met, and drank together. And Thurſday the 29th of Auguſt, being at Tixhall Bowling-green, Mr. Ireland was there, and came home with my Father Heveningham and me, and ſome Gentlemen in the Country; and came to Aſton, and ſtay'd there that Night. I remember the next Day was Pancraſs Fair, and I went to the Fair, and did not come home.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Month is that Fair uſually kept?

Sir J. Simmons. It is an unconſtant time; now and then in September, now and then in Auguſt; and that Year we had a Subſcription to get it regulated to a certain Day.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him after?

Sir J. Simmons. My Lord, I cannot ſwear to the Saturday, becauſe I cannot ſo well tell whether I came back from the Fair on Friday Night, I think I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Green.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Green. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you ſee him in 78?

Mr. Green. The firſt time was Etching-hill Race, the 27th of Auguſt.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What other Days do you remember?

Mr. Green. Thurſday the 29th I ſaw him; I belong to Sir James Simmons, and Mr. Ireland came home with him, and ſome other Gentlemen to Mr. Heveningham's at Aſton, and was a ſetting with him on Friday the 30th in the Afternoon. And Saturday the 31ſt he was a hunting with Mr. Gerrard. Nay, more than that, I ſaw him drawn on the Sledge, but not executed. And that was the ſame Man that was there at that time.

Otes. What Religion is this Gentleman of?

Mr. Green. I was ever a Roman Catholick.

L. C. J. Pray were they a fiſhing that Day?

Mr. Green. In the Morning he was, and they got a great Pike; I ſaw the Pike and did eat part of it.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Fallas.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you ſee Mr. Ireland, Sir?

Fallas. Upon the Thurſday after Sir Henry Gough's Race, which was Thurſday the 29th of Auguſt, Mr. Ireland came to Mr. Heveningham's, and I look'd to his Horſe there. Upon Friday Morning they went a fiſhing, and got a great Pike; and I did ſee them go out a ſetting after Dinner,

Dinner, he and Mr. Green, with my Lady and the Keeper; and I ſaw him come in again. And I ſaw him drink a Glaſs of Table-Beer in the Hall. Upon Saturday Morning, which was the 31ſt of Auguſt, they went a hunting in Mr. Gerrard's Park, and kill'd a Buck; and afterwards my Maſter asked him to go home with him again, but he would not: For he ſaid he muſt go to Mr. Lowes at four, and we parted at three. And I came here, and ſaw him executed; but while he was at my Maſter's Houſe, his Horſe was never out of the Stable but I brought it to him.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you ſee him executed?

Fallas. It was the 24th of January afterwards, I think.

Otes. What Religion are you of?

Fallas. I am for the Church of England, a Proteſtant, I always was ſo.

Otes. Pray, my Lord, ask him when he was acquainted with Mr. Ireland?

Fallas. The firſt time was the 29th of Auguſt, when he came to my Maſter's Houſe.

Otes. That does not come to my time, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. But it comes very cloſe to it; it reaches to the 31ſt of Auguſt.

L. C. J. It is within a Day of you, upon my Word.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And I'll tell your Lordſhip what is yet more conſiderable; this Place is an hundred and twenty Miles from London: But we ſhall not leave him there.

Otes. I deſire to know whoſe Servant he is?

Fallas. I am a Servant to Mr. Hevening ham, and I ſerve the King; I come to teſtify the Truth. I was here before, but then we muſt not be heard; all the Cry was againſt us, that we were Rogues, and muſt be knock'd on the Head.

L. C. J. Were you here at any of the Tryals?

Fallas. I was at the Council-Table, and there I was in great Danger of being knock'd on the Head.

Otes. Would they have knock'd him on the Head at the Council-Table, does he ſay?

Fallas. I have been in the Room by the Council-Table, where they have cryed, Knock them down, hang them Rogues; do they come to be Witneſſes againſt the Saviour of the World? And they came about me there, and asked me if I knew any of them, or was of their Company? And I was glad to ſay I came thither about a Suit of Law I had with a Brother of mine; and then they pitied me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we have brought him, my Lord, every Night where he lodged from the 3d of Auguſt to the 31ſt.

Mr. At. Gen. And then we ſhall prove that he went to Mr. Gerrard's at Hilderſome that they ſpeak of; there he was the 31ſt and 32d——

L. C. J. How, Mr. Attorney, the 32d? I doubt you will hardly be able to tell us where he was that.

Mr. At. Gen. The 1ſt of September I mean, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, we underſtand you very well.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. John Proctor.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did you ſee Mr. Ireland in 78?

Proctor. I ſaw him the 31ſt of Auguſt 78.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where?

Proctor. At Fulford.

Mr. Sol. Gen. At whoſe Houſe?

Proctor. At Mr. Lowes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That was the Place the other Witneſs ſaid Ireland told him he was to be at four of the Clock, and therefore went away at three.

Mr. At. Gen. When did you ſee him afterwards?

Proctor. I ſaw him the next Day, the 1ſt of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Where?

Proctor. At Eſquire Gerrard's.

Mr. At. Gen. How far is that from Mr. Lowes?

Proctor. It is a Mile and an half.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ſee him afterwards?

Proctor. Not there, I did not.

Mr. At. Gen. What Religion are you of?

Proctor. I am a Proteſtant.

L. C. J. What did you hear became of that Ireland afterwards?

Proctor. I ſaw him executed at Tyburn afterwards, and it was the ſame Man.

L. C. J. Where did you live then?

Proctor. I lived at Fulford then.

L. C. J. What, with Mr. Lowe?

Proctor. Yes, my Lord.

Otes. It ſeems he was a Servant to a Papiſt.

L. C. J. What then, what of that?

Otes. My Lord, I deſire you would ask him, whether he ever ſaw Ireland before the 31ſt of Auguſt which he ſpeaks of?

Proctor. No, I did not.

L. C. J. But you are ſure it was the ſame Man you ſaw executed?

Proctor. Yes, I am ſure of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Circumſtance can you tell that he was the 1ſt of September at Mr. Gerrard's?

Proctor. I went to Dinner thither that Day: I rode before Madam Brooke.

L. C. J. What Day of the Week was that 1ſt of September?

Proctor. It was upon a Sunday, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Was that about Pancraſs Fair-time?

Proctor. Yes, my Lord, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He can tell you another Circumſtance how he comes to remember him at Mr. Lowes the 31ſt of Auguſt.

L. C. J. Ay, by what Token do you remember that he was there the 31ſt of Auguſt?

Proctor. I went that Day to pay ſome Money, and came home again in the Afternoon; and juſt as I came in, he came thither.

Otes. How does he ſay he knows him to be the ſame Man?

L. C. J. He has told you twice he ſaw him executed.

Otes. What Religion is he of, does he ſay?

L. C. J. He is a Proteſtant.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. John King.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, do you acquaint the Court and the Jury where you ſaw Mr. Ireland, and when.

Mr. King. I ſaw Mr. Ireland at Mr. Gerrard's of Hilderſome the 1ſt of September that Year that the Plot broke out, which was in the Year 78. There I ſaw him on Sunday; there he ſtayed all Night, and ſo did I; and on Monday Morning I went to Mrs. Crompton's where I liv'd, and he came thither to Millage as ſoon as I, which is within a Mile of Hilderſome, and dined there the ſame Day.

L. C. J. How far is that from London pray you?

Mr. King. An hundred and ten miles.

L. C. J. And he was there at Dinner, you ſay?

Mr. King. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. How long was it before Dinner was done?

Mr. King. I believe he might go thence about two of the Clock.

L. C. J. Where did he ſay he deſigned to go then?

Mr. King. He deſigned to go to Boſcobel that Night.

L. C. J. Do you remember any body elſe was at Mr. Gerrard's then when you ſaw him?

Mr. King. Yes, Mr. Jerman Drayton was at Hilderſome at that time.

Otes. Pray, what Religion is this Gentleman of?

Mr. King. I am a Roman Catholick, Mr. Otes.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray ſwear Mr. Francis Lee.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury where you ſaw Mr. Ireland, and when?

Lee. I was a Servant to Mr. Gerrard, and Mr. Ireland upon Saturday Night came to my Maſter's Houſe, and ſtayed all Night and all Day on Sunday, and went away on Monday to Millage.

L. C. J. What time and what Year was it?

Lee. It was in 78; but I am not certain of the Day of the Month: It was on a Saturday he came, and I have Witneſſes to prove I was there at that time.

L. C. J. What Month was it?

Lee. It was in Auguſt, as I think, the laſt Day, but I am not certain. And he went on Monday to Millage, and there dined at Mrs. Crompton's; and from thence he went to Pancraſs, and thence he did go to Boſcobel, and ſtayed all Night there.

Mr. At. Gen. That was the 2d of September.

L. C. J. How do you know he went to theſe Places?

Lee. I was told ſo.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know how long this Man was acquainted with Ireland before?

Lee. I never ſaw him but at that time.

Otes. How does he know it is the ſame Man then?

Mr. King. Here is a Man that ſaw me with him, and was preſent at Ireland's Execution.

L. C. J. Who is that, Proctor?

Mr. King. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then call Proctor again. (Who came in again.) Who went along with you to Dinner on Monday?

Lee. My Lord, He did ſee me at Hilderſome at Mr. Gerrard's.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Proctor, was this Gentleman there at that time?

Proctor. Yes, my Lord, I did ſee him there.

L. C. J. Was that the ſame Man that was executed, which you ſaw at Mr. Gerrard's?

Proctor. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Did you dine with Mr. Ireland on Monday at Mrs. Crompton's?

Lee. Yes, my Lord, I did, and went afterwards with him to Pancraſs, and ſtayed there two Hours, and then he went to Boſcobel.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There are the two Days gone which Mr. Otes ſwore to, and in which he was ſo poſitive that it was either the 1ſt or 2d of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mr. Biddolph.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, when did you ſee Mr. Ireland, and where?

Mr. Biddolph. My Lord, I was in Staffordſhire the latter end of Auguſt and the beginning of September, and I was at Mrs. Crompton's Houſe, which is my Aunt, the 2d of September, being Monday, where I ſaw Mr. Ireland, and dined with him that Day; and after Dinner he went with Mr. Gerrard's Son who was to go to School to Boſcobel: And I will give your Lordſhip a particular Circumſtance that may ſatisfy you that I am not miſtaken in the time: As I came thorough Northamptonſhire that Summer, I was at my Lord Cullen's, and he deſired me to be at a Horſe Race at Newton-Slade, where there is a Plate always run for upon the firſt Thurſday in September, and that Year it was the 5th of September. Now when I dined at my Aunt Crompton's, ſhe would have had me ſtay'd all Night at her Houſe, but I excuſed my ſelf, and told her I had promiſed to come to my Lord Cullen to be at the Race, and I muſt needs be there before, to be as good as my Word to my Lord; and therefore I went away to Pancraſs, and ſo on my Journey, otherwiſe I had ſtayed with my Aunt all Night: And I am ſure this was Monday before this Horſe Race.

Otes. My Lord, This Gentleman ſpeaks to no Year particularly.

Mr. Biddolph. It was in 1678, the Year before Mr. Otes's Plot broke out.

Mr. At. Gen. Now we will call Mrs. Crompton: Swear her. [Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, when did you ſee Mr. Ireland, Mrs. Crompton?

Mrs. Crompton. He was at my Houſe at Millage in Staffordſhire at Dinner, the ſame Day that my Nephew Biddolph did dine there: As for the Day of the Month I cannot ſo well tell it, becauſe when my Friends dine with me, I do not uſe to note down the Day particularly; but it was, I remember, a pretty remarkable time, for it was about Pancraſs Fair. Mr. Gerrard of Hilderſome came with him, and Mr. Ireland being a Stranger, I asked who he was, and they told me it was Mr. Ireland: He never was at my Houſe before nor after; he was a meer Stranger to me.

L. C. J. What Day was it, ſay you?

Mrs. Crompton. It was the ſame Day my Nephew Biddolph dined there.

L. C. J. Was it Monday the 2d of September, do you remember?

Mr. At. Gen. He ſays he was at her Houſe at Millage that Day, and ſhe ſays it was the ſame Day he dined there.

Mrs. Crompton. But I never note down the particular Days when my Friends dine with me, except I had particular occaſion to do it, as I had none at this time.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire to know what Religion this old Gentlewoman is of?

Mrs. Crompton. I am a Roman Catholick, my Lord.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mrs. Palmer.

Mr. Sol.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mrs. Palmer, Where did you ſee Mr. Ireland?

Mrs. Palmer. I was at Dinner at Mrs. Crompton's at Millage, where there was a Gentleman called Mr. Ireland that did dine there.

L. C. J. When was it?

Mrs. Palmer. I cannot tell truly what Day it was.

L. C. J. Who was there beſides you at Dinner that Day?

Mrs. Palmer. 'Tis ſo long ſince, I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Biddolph there?

Mrs. Palmer. Not that I remember, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you bring her for, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. At. Gen. She dined there that Day it ſeems; but if ſhe cannot remember it, I cannot help it.

L. C. J. But theſe kind of Witneſſes do but ſlack your Proof.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I think we do over do our Buſineſs indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. We have one Witneſs more to this Point, and that is Mrs. Mary Holmes; ſwear her. (Which was done.) Where did you ſee Mr. Ireland in the Year 78?

Mrs. Holmes. I ſaw him at Millage, my Lord.

L. C. J. When?

Mrs. Holmes. The 1ſt or the beginning of September, I am ſure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Holmes. Monday.

L. C. J. You have Proof enough of this, Mr. Attorney General.

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, I think ſo, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray ſwear Mrs. Eſther Gifford. (Which was done.) Mrs. Gifford, When did you ſee Mr. Ireland?

Mrs. Gifford. Upon the 2d of September 78. I ſaw Mr. Ireland, above a hundred Miles from this Place.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where?

Mrs. Gifford. At Pancraſs.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time of the Day was it?

Mrs. Gifford. In the Afternoon about four or five a Clock.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he ſtay there all Night?

Mrs. Gifford. I cannot tell indeed.

Mr. At. Gen. Swear Mr. Pendrel.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, my Lord, we are come to the 2d of September in the Evening, we ſhall prove where he was that Night and the 3d, and then we ſhall return to the 4th of September, when Mrs. Harwell ſwears he came back to Wolverhampton.

Mr. Hanſes. When did you ſee Mr. Ireland, Mr. Pendrel?

Mr. Pendrel. I ſaw him upon the 2d of September.

Mr. At. Gen. Where did you ſee him?

Mr. Pendrel. At Boſcobel at my Houſe, there he lodged with me that Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what Year was it?

Mr. Pendrel. In the Year 1678.

Mr. At. Gen. Was it the September before the Plot, and before Mr. Ireland was executed?

Mr. Pendrel. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. Did you know him before?

Mr. Pendrel. No, I did never ſee him before, as I know of.

L. C. J. How long did he ſtay there?

Mr. Pendrel. He ſtayed that Night and the next Day all Day, and went away the 4th of September to Black-Ladies.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whoſe Houſe is that?

Mr. Pendrel. It is Mr. John Gifford's.

L. C. J. You ſay you live at Boſcobel; did you hear any thing of a Letter came to your Houſe for Mr. Ireland?

Mr. Pendrel. Not that I know of, my Lord, there was not any that I remember.

Mr. At. Gen. Then ſwear Mrs. Pendrel.

[Which was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Miſtreſs, will you give an account where you ſaw Mr. Ireland?

Mrs. Pendrel. I ſaw him at Boſcobel, at the Royal Oak; he came there the 2d Day of September.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you tell what Year it was?

Mrs. Pendrel. It was the firſt beginning of the Plot.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long did he ſtay there?

Mrs. Pendrel. He ſtay'd Tueſday, and Wedneſday he went to Black-Ladies, and ſo away to Wolverhampton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have but one Witneſs more, my Lord, for Wedneſday the 4th of September, and then we have done. Swear Mr. Charles Gifford. (Which was done.) When did you ſee Mr. Ireland?

Mr. C. Gifford. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I ſaw Mr. Ireland at my Father's Houſe at Black-Ladies——

Otes. My Lord, I would ask Mrs. Pendrel a Queſtion before ſhe goes: Whether ſhe was not a Witneſs at the five Jeſuits Tryal?

Mrs. Pendrel. I was in Court, but they would not ſuffer me to ſwear.

Otes. Did ſhe not give Evidence there?

L. C. J. She was examined, but ſhe could not be ſworn, becauſe ſhe came to teſtify againſt the King in a Capital Cauſe.

Mr. At. Gen. Pray what ſay you, Mr. Charles Gifford?

Mr. C. Gifford. My Lord, I ſay I ſaw Mr. Ireland at my Father's Houſe at Black-Ladies, and he ſtay'd there an Hour and an half, and went thorough Chillington, and ſaid he would go to Wolverhampton.

Mr. At. Gen. What Day of the Month was it?

Mr. C. Gifford. I am morally certain, it was the 4th of September, and ſo he went to Wolverhampton, as I am informed. He came to our Houſe to ſee a Lady that was there.

L. C. J. What Lady was it?

Mr. C. Gifford. It was one Madam Wells.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Thus, my Lord, we have lodged him the 4th of September at Wolverhampton, when Mrs. Harwell ſays, he returned to her; and ſo, my Lord, we have given an account where he was from the 3d of Auguſt to the 14th of September.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have prov'd where he was every Day in that time, but only the 8th of September, and for that we muſt leave it to the Jury. We have proved that he came away from Mrs. Harwell's the 7th, and he ſaid he was to go to Tixhall; and the 9th he did go from Tixhall in Sir John Southcoat's Company, and came to London the 14th.

L. C. J. Well, what ſay you to it, Mr. Otes?

Otes.

Otes. Has Mr. Attorney done his Evidence, my Lord?

Mr. At. Gen. We ſhall call no more Witneſſes, unleſs you go about to ſupport your own Credit, and then we have other Witneſſes to call.

Otes. I do not value any Witneſſes you can bring againſt my Credit.

Mr. At. Gen. Well, for the preſent we do not deſign to call any more Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Then let us hear what you ſay to it.

Otes. My Lord, Here is an Indictment exhibited againſt me, which ſets forth, that I ſhould ſwear at Mr. Ireland's Tryal, that Mr. Ireland was in Town the 1ſt and 2d of September; and it ſets forth, that in truth he was not in Town: And likewiſe it ſets forth, that I ſwore at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits, that Mr. Ireland took his leave of me and others here in Town at his Lodging in Ruſſel-ſtreet, between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt; whereas the Perjury there aſſigned, is this, That he did not take his leave of me or any other Perſon, betwixt the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, at his Lodging in Ruſſel-ſtreet. Now, my Lord, I was not the only Witneſs of Mr. Ireland's being in Town in the Month of Auguſt; nor the only Witneſs of his being in Town about that time in September. My Lord, my Proſecutors have endeavoured to maintain this Charge againſt me thus: The firſt thing they have gone upon, as far as I can remember in the Indictment, is as to the 1ſt or 2d of September, or rather they have endeavoured to prove both under one. Now in anſwer to all this Evidence, my Lord, the firſt thing I ſhall offer to your Lordſhip's Conſideration and the Conſideration of the Jury, is the great Hardſhip I lie under, after ſix Years time to be put to diſprove what the Counſel here have now offered againſt me. My Lord, I obſerve firſt, that this Indictment which is now upon Tryal, is founded upon the Tryal of Ireland, which was the 17th of December 1678, at the Old Bailey, and it is now ſix Years after that Evidence of mine was delivered. A ſecond thing is, that the Indictment is found by ſpecial Commiſſion, as appears by the Indictment it ſelf. Now I muſt recommend to the Conſideration of your Lordſhip and this Jury, why the Proſecution of this pretended Perjury has been delayed ſo long, when it appears by the Evidence which has been produced, that the Witneſſes to prove it were known ſix Years ſince, as much as they are now; and there is no colour of Evidence offered, that any new Fact has been lately diſcovered which was not then known. There is no Reaſon, my Lord, that is aſſigned, or can be aſſigned for this Delay, but only that the Hardſhip might be the greater upon me: For now it is difficult, if not impoſſible, for me to maintain the Evidence I then gave, ſo many Perſons being ſince dead or gone beyond the Seas, and many things that were freſh then, are now grown out of Memory; and I beg your Favour to inſiſt upon this, and I think it cannot be denied me. If ſuch a Practice as this be admitted, no Witneſs is ſafe in giving his Teſtimony againſt any Conſpirators whatſoever. For, my Lord, I muſt deſire leave to offer another thing to your Conſideration, before I ſpeak to the particular Evidence, and that is this, That here is nothing but a bare Point of Time upon which this Perjury is aſſigned; when the Subſtance of the Teſtimony that I gave at the Tryals of Mr. Ireland and the reſt about the Popiſh Plot, is not aſſigned as any Perjury at all; it is only a Circumſtance of Time and Place: And, my Lord, I ſhall offer this to your further Conſideration, that Ireland was convicted for a Treaſonable Reſolution to murder the late King, and not for being in Town in Auguſt or September 78, or elſewhere; and he was not convicted for his being in his Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, and taking his leave there in Auguſt, which is one matter of the Perjury now aſſigned. Next, my Lord, 'tis hard and unreaſonable to tye up Witneſſes that come to diſcover Plots and Conſpiracies, to ſpeak poſitively as to Circumſtance of Time and Place; and every little Punctilio in their Evidence to bind them up to ſuch Niceties in the Delivery of their Teſtimonies, as to Time and Place. It is uſual to ſpeak with Latitude, as to ſuch kind of things, and 'tis probable my Evidence, which is now in queſtion, was not, that Ireland was the 1ſt or 2d of September poſitively here in Town; but, my Lord, I did (I believe) give my ſelf a Latitude, and would not confine my ſelf to either the 1ſt or 2d, 5th, 6th, 7th, or 8th; but, my Lord, that he was in September there, I am poſitive: I muſt therefore beg your Lordſhip's and the Court's Opinion, whether that Mr. Foſter did prove that I was poſitive and preciſe to the Days of the 1ſt and 2d of September 78?

L. C. J. In my Opinion it is a plain Evidence that you did ſwear poſitively to thoſe two Days; and you ſpoke to a Circumſtance very material in your Evidence, that either the 1ſt or 2d of September you had twenty Shillings of him in Town here: Now that Circumſtance of his Kindneſs to you, was not a Circumſtance either of Time or Place.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I ſhall begin with my Proofs; but, my Lord, I deſire I may have free Liberty to mind my Buſineſs; for here is a Gentleman behind me that will not let me be at quiet, but is either meddling with me or my Papers.

L. C. J. Who is it? Let me know him, and I will take care to make him quiet, or ſet him farther off. You, Gentlemen that are at the Bar ſhould know better, one would think: He muſt have liberty to make his own Defence; and if he complains and lets me know who meddles with him, they had better do ſomewhat elſe.

Otes. My Lord, The firſt thing that I offer, is, that Ireland was convicted of Treaſon, and for that you have the Record.

L. C. J. It is allowed of all ſides, that Ireland was convicted and attainted of Treaſon.

Otes. Then, my Lord, the principal Defence which, as near as I can remember, Mr. Ireland made at his Tryal, was an Endeavour to prove that he was not in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, nor the 1ſt and 2d Days of September, which are the Points now in Iſſue; and he then produced one Mr. Gifford and his Siſter and Mother; and fifteen or ſixteen Witneſſes were produced at Mr. Whitebread's Tryal, of which there is another Record, that being ſix Months after Mr. Ireland was tryed: There Mr.

Mr. Whitebread produces ſeveral Witneſſes, Mr. Gifford, I ſay, and ſeveral others, I think to the number of ſixteen, which were to prove Ireland's being out of Town in theſe times that theſe Witneſſes ſpeak of. Now, my Lord, all thoſe ſeveral Witneſſes being produced to prove Ireland then out of Town, the very Point that is now in Iſſue, was then ſo; and notwithſtanding all thoſe Witneſſes, the Jurors who tryed Mr. Ireland, and the Jurors who tryed Mr. Whitebread and the other four Jeſuits, found them guilty; tho' they endeavoured with all their force imaginable to oppoſe my Teſtimony, and it was left to the Conſideration of the Jury what their Witneſſes had ſaid. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to remember, my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs did obſerve to the Jury, that the Evidence of the Priſoner at the Bar did conſiſt only in Punctilio's of Time; which, as near as I can remember what he ſays, he called a Nicety of time; and in Whitebread's Tryal he was pleaſed to call it catching in Point of Time. And it was obſerv'd at Ireland's Tryal, that his Defence was ſo weak that my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs upon the Integrity of Bedloe's Evidence and mine, uſes theſe Words to the Jury, (tho' he then endeavoured to do what theſe Witneſſes do now): It is moſt plain the Plot is diſcovered, and that by theſe Men, and that it is a Plot and a villainous one; which ſhews not only the Fulneſs and Satisfactorineſs of our Proof that we gave, but does alſo take notice of the little Shifts and catching Tricks he made uſe of to prove himſelf out of Town; which would not weigh with the Court: Therefore I obſerve it is but the ſame Objection that then was made, and is not a new one now. And my Lord Chief Juſtice that then was, ſpeaking of that Proof he brought (which the Court heard with Patience, but could eaſily ſee thro' the Vanity of it) ſaid, What Arts they have of evading this, I know not; for as they have turn'd their Learning into Subtilty, ſo they have their Religion too. All this is well remembered by thoſe that were by and heard that Tryal: And tho' Ireland laboured to diſprove me in that Circumſtance of Time, yet ſtill the Court did juſtify the Evidence that Mr. Bedloe and my ſelf had given: And the ſame Chief Juſtice ſaid, I leave it to you to conſider, whether you have not as much Evidence from theſe two Men as can be expected in a Caſe of this nature; and whether Mr. Otes be not rather juſtified by the Teſtimony offered againſt him than diſcredited. This was after his Plea was debated and conſidered; and I muſt further obſerve to your Lordſhip, that tho' Mr. Ireland by his falſe Witneſſes preſſed this Matter as far as he could then, and urged the Court to believe it; yet when the Jury brought in their Verdict and found him Guilty, the Chief Juſtice expreſſed the Satisfaction of the Court in theſe Words: You have done, Gentlemen, like very good Subjects and very good Chriſtians; that is to ſay, like very good Proteſtants; and now much good may their 30000 Maſſes do them. This, my Lord, was the Caſe of Mr. Ireland, at his Tryal, and the ſame point of his being out of Town was again managed before a ſecond Jury at the Tryal of the five Jeſuits; but the Court ſaw the Deſign of the Popiſh Party to blemiſh the Evidence given of the Plot; but yet they look'd upon it only as a Trick: And my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, in ſumming up the Evidence at that Tryal, ſays, They fall foul upon Mr. Otes, meaning my ſelf; he appears to have been their Agent, and whilſt ſo, bad enough: But if he had not had a mind to have become a good Man, he would not have done us that good he has done in the Diſcovery of the Deſign they had engaged him in. And if your Lordſhip pleaſe to remember, that at that Tryal of the Five Jeſuits, when all Arts were uſed to prove Ireland out of Town, and me at St. Omers, in the ſame Charge to the Jury, my Lord Scroggs did take notice that the Jeſuits were very exact at catching in a Point of time; but now ſays, that is a thing that no Man can preciſely charge his Memory withal; and therefore he does there perſwade the Jury, that that ſhould not be too ſtrictly the Meaſure of their Judgments about Truth and Falſhood, by the Miſtake of ſeven or eight Days; For, ſaid he to the Jury, examine your ſelves how often every Day you do miſtake things that have been tranſacted half a Year ago, and err in Point of Time, taking one Week for another, and one Month for another; and therefore you are not to lay too great a Weight upon the Point of Time. Now if too great weight, my Lord, be not to be laid upon a Point of Time, then this Charge that is now brought againſt me is not of weight at all. And beſides, my Lord, this ought to be conſidered, if this were the great Objection then, and then anſwered, it ceaſes to be an Objection now. And as the Court did obſerve at the ſumming up of the Evidence, that they made their Defence about the Uncertainty of a Point of Time, which was no Defence at all: So that, my Lord, the whole Courſe of my Plea is this: 'Tis a hard Caſe for a Man after ſix Years, to be indicted for a Circumſtance of Time. I will firſt offer the Teſtimony of one Witneſs that is dead, and that is Mr. Bedloe, who at his Death confirmed all that he had ſworn of the Popiſh Plot to be true, and affirmed that he had rather ſpoken leſs than the Truth, than more; and for that I deſire that my Lord Keeper may be called, who took his dying Examination.

L. C. J. As for that, Mr. Otes, it is a thing very well known to the World, and particularly to a worthy Gentleman that ſits by you, (Pointing to Mr. North) that Mr. Bedloe, when he was ſick, did make ſome ſuch Proteſtation.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I deſire that Mr. Blayney may be ſworn, to give an account what Mr. Bedloe teſtified at Ireland's Tryal.

Then Mr. Blayney was ſworn.

Otes. Mr. Blayney, Pray will you ſee in your Notes of Ireland's Tryal, whether Mr. Bedloe did not ſwear that Mr. Ireland was in Town, the latter end of Auguſt 78, or the beginning of September.

Mr. Blayney. Whereabouts in the Tryal is it, Sir?

Otes. It is in the Printed Tryal, folio 41.

Mr. Blayney. My Lord, I do find theſe Words in my Notes, that Mr. Bedloe ſhould ſay, about the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September; but I believe it was the latter end of Auguſt, Mr. Ireland was at Harcourt's Chamber, and being asked the Queſtion by my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, Whether he ſaid poſitively, it was the latter end of Auguſt, he ſaid it was in Auguſt, he would not be poſitive to a Day, but he thought the latter end.

L. C. J. 'Tis very well known that too, that Bedloe did ſwear Ireland was in Town the latter end of Auguſt or beginning of September, and to confirm it upon Mr. Ireland's denial, you ſwore he was in Town the 1*ſt* or 2*d* of September, and gave you Twenty Shillings, that was the Occaſion of your Oath.

Otes. Then, my Lord, I deſire to call ſome Witneſſes to teſtify to the Depoſition that was taken of Mr. Jenniſon, about Ireland's being then in Town.

L. C. J. When was that Depoſition taken, and before whom?

Otes. It was taken in the Year 79. by Sir Edmund Warcup.

L. C. J. But we cannot admit that in Evidence, unleſs the King's Counſel will conſent.

Otes. My Lord, I will then produce what he ſwore at another Tryal.

L. C. J. Why, where is he, is he dead?

Otes. My Lord, it has coſt me a great deal of Money to ſearch him out; but I cannot any where meet with him, and that makes my Caſe ſo much the harder; that I cannot, when I have done all that Man can do, get my Witneſſes together. I ſent in the depth of Winter for him, when I thought my Tryal would have come on before; but I could never hear of him.

L. C. J. We cannot help that.

Otes. Will what he ſaid at any other Tryal be Evidence here?

L. C. J. Look you, though in ſtrictneſs, unleſs the Party be dead, we do not uſe to admit of any ſuch Evidence; yet if you can prove any thing he ſwore at any other Tryal we will indulge you ſo far.

Otes. Have you the Record of Sir George Wakeman's Tryal there, Sir Samuel Aſtry?

Mr. At. Gen. Here it is, if Mr. Otes have any uſe for it, we will lend it to him.

L. C. J. Put it in, and now prove what you can, what Jenniſon ſwore at that Tryal.

Otes. Mr. Blayney, have you your Notes of Sir George Wakeman's Tryal here?

Mr. Blayney. No, Sir, the Ticket of your Subpœna did only mention Ireland, Whitebread and Langhorn's Tryals. But I did formerly upon another Occaſion look for the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, but could not find it among all my Notes.

Otes. Sir, Can you remember then what Jenniſon ſwore at that Tryal, about Ireland's being here in Town?

Mr. Blayney. Truly, my Lord, I can never truſt my Memory at all when I take Notes, and it is now ſo long ſince that Tryal, that I dare not undertake to ſay I remember any Particulars of it.

L. C. J. He ſays it is ſo long ſince, that he cannot remember any thing. But there is Sir Edmund Warcup now, is he ſworn?

Cryer. Yes, My Lord.

L. C. J. What do you ask him then?

Otes. I would deſire to Examine Sir Edmund Warcup, my Lord, about the Depoſition of Jenniſon that he took.

L. C. J. But we tell you that cannot be admitted as Evidence, without they will conſent to it on the other Side.

Otes. My Lord, he proves Mr. Ireland here the 19*th* of Auguſt, and that contradicts theſe Witneſſes.

L. C. J. If they will admit it well and good, elſe we cannot do it.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, we will be ſo fair with Mr. Otes, if he will admit Mr. Jenniſon's Letter that is under his Hand, wherein he does own that he was miſtaken in his whole Evidence about that Matter, we will conſent his Depoſition be read.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. If he will not conſent to that, there's no reaſon you ſhould conſent to the other, Mr. Attorney.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Otes, Mr. Attorney makes you this Offer, You deſire to have Mr. Jenniſon's Depoſitions read; which cannot be done without their Conſent; they tell you they will conſent, if you will let them prove what he has owned ſince about that Buſineſs.

Otes. My Lord, I will conſent with all my Heart; let them read any Letter under his Hand.

L. C. J. Well, do it on both Sides by conſent: And now Mr. Otes, do you produce his Examination.

Otes. Pray Sir Edmund Warcup, will you pleaſe to give the Court an Account, what Depoſition Mr. Jenniſon made before you about Ireland's being in Town in Auguſt 78.

Sir Edmund Warcup. If my Lord commands me, I will.

L. C. J. Ay, you muſt anſwer his Queſtion.

Sir Edmund Warcup. This Mr. Jenniſon did make one Information before me, and according to the Duty that was incumbent upon me, I delivered it in to the King and Council, and there it has lain ever ſince; for me to remember the Particulars of it is impoſſible.

L. C. J. Have you his Examination here, Mr. Otes? If you have, ſhew it him.

Sir Edward Warcup. If I ſee my Hand to it, atteſting it was ſworn before me, I can ſay ſomewhat to it.

Otes. My Lord, he ſays he delivered it into the Council; but it is printed.

L. C. J. That is no Evidence, Man.

Sir Edward Warcup. I can ſay nothing to it, unleſs I ſaw it under my own Hand.

Otes. That is impoſſible for me to have, my Lord.

L. C. J. I cannot tell how to help it.

Sir Edward Warcup. You have no more to ſay to me, Sir, have you?

Otes. No, Sir, I have not. Pray call Sarah Batten.

Mr. At. Gen. Is that the ſame that was Sarah Pain?

Otes. I think ſo, Sir; I am not ſure it is ſhe, till ſhe come hither.

Cryer. Here is Sarah Batten.

Otes. Pray ſwear her, and call Sir Thomas Doleman. [Which was done.

But Sir Thomas Doleman did not appear.

Otes. Pray was not your Name, Sarah Pain?

Batten.

Batten. My Lord, I desire my Charges before I speak.

L. C. J. What is your Name, good Woman?

Batten. My Name is Sarah Batty.

Otes. Was not your Name Sarah Pain, once?

Batty. No, my Maiden name was Sarah Edmunds.

Otes. Was not you a Witness at the Tryal of Mr. Ireland?

Batty. No, Sir.

Otes. Did not you live with my Lord Arlington?

Batty. No, Sir.

Otes. Then I have been at all this Charge for nothing. Are you sure your Name was not Sarah Pain?

Batty. No, indeed, Sir.

Otes. They told me that she liv'd at Uxbridge, and thither I sent.

Batty. I do live at Uxbridge, Sir.

Otes. Upon your Oath, were you a Witness at any of the Tryals, or no?

Batty. No, my Lord, I was not.

Otes. Then I have nothing to say to her.

L. C. J. What other Witnesses have you to call?

Otes. We have laboured all we could to find her out, and searched for her with all the care imaginable; and here we thought we had had her, but it seems it is not she.

L. C. J. We cannot help it.

Batty. I hope, my Lord, you will consider my Charges in coming up hither.

Otes. I will take care of thee, Sweet-heart.

L. C. J. Who do you call next?

Otes. Pray call Mr. Charles Clare.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Pray call Mr. Percival. My Lord, I desire Mr. Blayney may give an Account what she swore about Ireland's being in Town, seeing I cannot have her here.

L. C. J. That we cannot do neither, without Mr. Attorney will consent: For this as well as the other, is an extraordinary Thing.

Otes. You see by my bringing this Witness, my Lord, that I have done what I could to find her out.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Attorney, will you consent?

Mr. At. Gen. No, my Lord, it is so irregular, that we cannot consent to it.

Otes. Pray call Mr. Percival and Mr. Vaughan.

Cryer. They do neither of them appear.

Otes. Then I must lose the Benefit of her Testimony.

L. C. J. Have you done?

Otes. No, my Lord, I will have done immediately.

L. C. J. Take your own time.

Otes. I desire Sir Michael Wharton may be called.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Pray call Mr. Charles Chetwin.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Pray call Mr. Robert Bowes.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. Pray call Mr. John Savile.

Cryer. He is not here.

Otes. My Lord, I have served all these with Subpœna's; and if they will not come, I cannot help it.

L. C. J. Nor we neither.

Otes. Mr. Jennison was used as a Witness in the Tryal of Sir George Wakeman, and so was Mr. Bowes, and Mr. Burnet, who was produced to prove the Circumstance of Mr. Jennison's Evidence: But, my Lord, since I cannot have the benefit of his Evidence, nor of Sarah Pain's, I must only sum up all I have to say in two or three Words: My Lord, besides that what I did deliver in Evidence at those Tryals, I gave in upon Oath: You have Mr. Bedloe's Evidence at the Tryal of Ireland testified by Mr. Blayney; and the Testimony of him as a dying Man, given into my now Lord Keeper, wherein he averr'd, That what he had spoken of the Plot, was all true: And you hear that he swore Mr. Ireland was here in Town in August, and so did Sarah Pain too, and I think upon my self as very hardly used, to have such a part of my Testimony brought in question, after Witnesses are dead, or gone out of the way. As for Mr. Jennison, his Evidence was formerly made use of; and his Evidence was approved of too, as is well known to those that sat Judges upon the late Viscount Stafford. But this is that, my Lord, I must needs say for my self, That as I hope to see the Day of Salvation in another World, whatever I have sworn about Mr. Ireland's being here in Town betwixt the Eighth and Twelfth of August 78. and in the beginning of September, is true, as I shall answer it before God another Day. And, my Lord, as to the Evidence this Day brought against me, I desire you would but observe, though that there are many of those Witnesses, yet a great part of them do not come up to the Eighth or Twelfth of August: And I hope your Lordship will remember and remark to the Jury, what little Credit those of them had that came to testify in the behalf of Mr. Ireland at his Tryal, and at the Five Jesuits Tryals, of which there are two Records before you; and they do first justify this, That Ireland and the rest of them were Guilty of what they were accused of; and then, that these Witnesses did not testify the Truth.

Besides these two Tryals, my Lord, you have a third Verdict, and that is at the Tryal of Mr. Langhorn: Now the whole Popish Plot almost was laid forth in those three Tryals; and my Lord, I believe verily I am the first Precedent in all England, of any one's being Indicted for Perjury that was a Witness for the King in such a Case as this, after six Years times elapsed, after Verdict upon Verdict, and Judgment and Execution upon these Verdicts, and when no new Objection is now offered, but what was then started; and no new Circumstance occurs now, but was as forcible then, except it be the Change of the Season. And I desire it may be considered, when all the Judges of England were Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer at those Tryals, these Matters were fully discussed and debated; and then they did look upon all the Objections as fully answered and confuted.

My Lord, I am confident if I had been a Witness in any other Cause than of a Conspiracy of the Papists, I might have had fairer quarter than I have now: And I do verily believe, that at this rate, it is more safe for Papists to be Traytors, than for any Protestant to discover a Popish Plot.

My

My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I beſeech you to take my Caſe into your ſerious Conſideration, as to the hardſhip of it; and ſince all my Witneſſes are in Places unknown, or they are ſuch as, conſidering the Times, dare not appear, ſome of them being Lawyers, and under fear they ſhall fare the worſe in their Practice; and others being Perſons that depend upon the Law, and think they ſhall be look'd ill upon, as I am now look'd upon with a hard Eye by the Popiſh Party and their Adherents: Yet I hope, you that are ſworn to do Juſtice, will not let me be ruined by a number of falſe Witneſſes, by the Evidence of Papiſts that are Parties. For if your Lordſhip pleaſe to conſider that Vote of the Lord's Houſe, which is a Court of Record, wherein they do declare that they are fully ſatisfied by the Proofs they have heard, that there then was, and for divers Years laſt paſt had been, a Horrid and Treaſonable Plot and Conſpiracy, contrived and carried on by thoſe of the Popiſh Religion, for the murdering of His Majeſty's Sacred Perſon, and for ſubverting the Proteſtant Religion, and the Ancient and Eſtabliſhed Government of this Kingdom: Which Vote of Parliament, my Lord, does make the Papiſts to be all Parties in this Caſe, and where they are Parties, I hope they ſhall not be admitted as Evidence, or at leaſt not be believed, becauſe there is a Turn to be ſerved by them againſt me, and a Revenge they are reſolved to take upon me; for they have hopes now of bringing in their Religion, and are to welcome that in with my Ruin; and this is the Cauſe of this Proſecution: Their Eyes do ſee now what their Hearts ſo long deſired, that is, the Death of a great Man who died but lately, and againſt whoſe Life they had conſpired ſo often and ſo long. My Lord, if this had been the firſt Conſpiracy that ever the Papiſts were guilty of, there might have been ſome more Scruple and Objection in the Caſe: But if you caſt your Eyes upon Campian and others in Queen Elizabeth's Time, of Garnet, and the Powder-Jeſuits in King James's Time, and the Deſigns of the Popiſh Party in the Time of the late King Charles, the firſt diſcovered to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury: If theſe Things do paſs for Truth, and there is no Averment againſt ſo many Records as we have of their Conſpiracies, then my Diſcovery is no ſuch improbable a Thing; and I hope then the Gentlemen of the Jury will take it into their Conſiderations, who they are that are Witneſſes in this Caſe; Men whoſe very Religion is Rebellion, and whoſe Principles and Practices are pernicious to the Government; and thereby they are to be looked upon as dangerous Perſons in Church and State. But, my Lord, if the Letters of Coleman be well conſidered, they will juſtify me, that he Correſponded with Le Cheeſe the French King's Confeſſor, for the promoting of Popery in England, is notorious to all Mankind, that have either read or heard that Tryal: Your Lordſhip was of Counſel for the King in that Caſe, and heard how it was opened, and plainly proved upon him: And when his Letters have been made ſo publick, and proved under his own Hand, nay and confeſſed by himſelf, I think no Man will doubt but that muſt be a plain Proof of the Plot, and will be enough to vindicate me.

My Lord, I have one Word more, and then I have done, and leave it to your Lordſhip and the Jury. My Lord, as they would now fling the Popiſh Plot upon me, ſo there is an evident Deſign to fling the Murder of Godfrey upon a Proteſtant Peer; and becauſe an Indictment was upon the Teſtimony of the Traytor Fitzharris, againſt that noble Lord, they have reſolved to have profligate Villains to take his Life for that Murder: That is apparent; and ſo they will go on ſtep by ſtep, if they be let alone; and think at length to wipe their Mouths with Solomon's Whore, and ſay, They have done no Miſchief. My Lord, I leave theſe Things to the Conſideration of the Court and Jury; I will not detain you any longer: I have called what Witneſſes I could get, but the diſtance of Time has made it impoſſible for me to have thoſe here now, that did give Evidence in this Matter before.

My Lord, I have one Favour to beg of the Court, I had but a bad Night laſt Night, and am now in a great Pain; I deſire that you would grant me one Requeſt, that I may have Counſel aſſigned me to argue the Errors in Yeſterday's Indictment: My Lord, I am but a poor Man, and cannot be at the Charges of feeing Counſel.

L. C. J. We did aſſign you Counſel before; you may have who you will for Counſel.

Otes. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed, to do me the Favour to let me have ſome time to prepare and inſtruct Counſel.

L. C. J. Ay, what Time would you have?

Otes. A Week's time, if your Lordſhip pleaſe.

L. C. J. Give him till this Day ſeven-night, there may be no hurt in that.

Otes. Till Monday come ſeven-night, if your Lord pleaſe, let me have.

L. C. J. No, no, we cannot do that; we give you a Week's time, which is more than ordinary; for by the Rules of the Court there are but Four Days allowed, and thoſe would be out Monday or Tueſday.

Otes. I thank your Lordſhip for that Time you have given me, but I hope you will be pleaſed to take the Particulars I have mentioned, into your Conſideration; and I deſire I may have liberty to go Home, becauſe I am not well.

L. C. J. Ay, you may go, if you will.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe Your Lordſhip, and You Gentlemen of Jury, the Queſtion that you are to try, is a Perjury, which is charged on the Defendant Titus Otes, for ſwearing that William Ireland was in Town, upon the firſt or ſecond of September, 78. And likewiſe, for ſwearing, that he took his leave of him at his Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, between the eighth and twelfth of Auguſt 78. And we do aſſign the Perjury in both thoſe Points, that he is forſworn in both, and the Evidence of that Perjury is, that it is impoſſible to be true what Otes did ſwear, becauſe Mr. Ireland was not in Town between the eighth and twelfth of Auguſt, nor the firſt or ſecond of September.

Gentle-

Gentlemen, You have heard the Evidence that has been given, and there has been no leſs than between forty and fifty Witneſſes produced to ſhew that it is really impoſſible what Otes did ſwear ſhould be true; he tells you that this Matter is in a Circumſtance of Time, wherein it is difficult for a Man to be poſitive to a Day, and a Man may be allowed ſome Latitude in ſuch a Caſe; nay, it is uſual with Witneſſes in Points of Time, to ſwear with a Latitude; but, my Lord, to ſhew that, if we ſhould grant that falſe Doctrine to be true (and falſe moſt certain it is, and of miſchievous conſequence it would be, if, when things are charged upon Men that depend upon Circumſtance of Time and Place, the Witneſſes ſhould not be ſtrictly kept to thoſe Circumſtances) yet, I ſay, granting that Poſition, it is impoſſible it ſhould do him any Service in the Caſe before you: For between the beginning of Auguſt, and the 14th of September, (which includes both the Times he ſwears to, and the Latitude of above twenty Days to boot) there is not any one Moment of Time wherein his Oath could be true.

Gentlemen, You obſerve what the Witneſſes have ſaid, how they have given you an account of every particular Day of both Months, from the 3d of Auguſt, when he firſt left London, to the 14th of September, when he returned back again: We did ask the Witneſſes, that it might appear to be plainly true, what they ſwear, if they had any particular Circumſtances that made them to remember it; and they have given a great many, and now it lies upon us, to ſhew you that it is Demonſtration, that what they have ſaid and teſtified, muſt be true; and that thoſe Days they ſpeak of, he was in the Places they named.

For take the Periods of Time, and you will find you have him from the 3d of Auguſt to the 16th, with my Lord Aſton, going from London to Tixhall, upon the 17th they give you an account of him at Mrs. Harwell's to the 26th; from the 26th to the 4th of September, there are others that give you a particular account, by remarkable Circumſtances, where he was every Day in Staffordſhire; from the 4th to the 7th you find him at Wolverhampton; for the 8th indeed we do give no particular account where he was that Day; but we prove that upon the 9th he was at Tixhall, and from thence he came away with Sir John Southcoat towards London, and there you have a particular account where he was every Day till the 14th, when he returned to his Lodging.

And now, Gentlemen, I ſhall ſhew you, that, if you believe theſe Witneſſes ſaw him in theſe Months; that certainly it was upon thoſe Days they ſpeak of, that they did ſee him.

Firſt, That he went out of Town in Auguſt, you have theſe Witneſſes, Anne Ireland, Eleanor Ireland, Mrs. Duddle, Mrs. Quino, and my Lord Aſton. Well, how come they to remember it was upon the 3d of Auguſt? Why the four Women remember it by this particular Remark; Three Days before there was a Holiday, which they keep in Memory of Ignatius; and upon that Day they remember Mr. Ireland went abroad to take a Recreation, and came home again that Night, tho' the reſt of the Company ſtayed there; becauſe he was to go out of Town. Upon the third Day after, which muſt be the 3d of Auguſt: For Ignatius's Day you hear, is always the laſt Day of July. And they do poſitively ſwear, that upon the 3d of Auguſt, he took his leave of Anne Ireland and Eleanor Ireland. Mrs. Duddle remembers, that he went out that Day. Mrs. Quino, whoſe Husband was his Taylor, ſays, he did ſtay a little to have ſomewhat in his Cloaths mended: And ſhe ſaw him in his Boots; and he ſaid he was to go out of Town. Mrs. Anne Ireland ſays, they took the Liberty to lodge a Gentlewoman in his Chamber, and ſaw him not again till a Fortnight before Michaelmas: And that he did go out of Town upon the 3d of Auguſt, is further prov'd by my Lord Aſton, who noted it down in his Book at that time that Ireland came to his Houſe at Standen in Hartfordſhire; ſo that here is as ſtrong an Evidence as can be, that he did go on the 3d of Auguſt, and that they remember it to have ſo been by all the Circumſtances that can be imagin'd.

Well, the 3d of Auguſt he went out of Town. The 4th of Auguſt we give an account where he was: He ſtayed that Day with my Lord Aſton at Standen. The 5th of Auguſt he ſet out with my Lord Aſton's Company, and went to St. Albans. The 6th, he went to Northampton. The 7th to Coventry. The 8th to Tixhall; and the Company that went with him proves it, which was Sir Edward Southcoat and Mr. John Southcoat, and Harriſon and Hobſon, who ſaw him go in the Company; and Mr. North, who ſays he ſaw him every Day; and Ingletrap the Coachman that drove the Coach, all theſe remember it poſitively; and ſome of them ſpeak of a remarkable pretty Horſe which he rid upon.

Now when he comes from Tixhall; (for we have brought him hither by manifeſt Proof, by Men that could not forget, by Men that ſaw him in the Company:) There he remained (as they all teſtify) till the 13th of Auguſt, and that was the Tueſday after his Arrival at Tixhall; and from thence he went that Day a Journey into Flintſhire to Holy-well; and that is proved by the Witneſſes that were in his Company in that Journey. They tell you, the 13th he lay at Nantwich. The 14th at Holy-well. The 15th at Cheſter. And the 16th he came back again to Tixhall. And ſo here you have abundance of Witneſſes, that give you a particular account where he was, in what Company they ſaw him from the 3d of Auguſt to the 16th. If he were then in this Company from the 3d to the 16th; he could not be in his Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet between the 8th and the 12th.

Then we came to the 17th, and then we find him to be at Wolverhampton, where he continued to the 26th; and that it muſt be between the 17th and the 26th, is plain; for after that time which Mrs. Harwell ſpeaks of, the other Witneſſes give ſuch Circumſtances, that it cannot be otherwiſe: You find him on the 27th at a Horſe Race, which is a remarkable Circumſtance. And theſe are things that Men do very well remember what Days of the Month they happen upon. We then give you an account of the 29th; that at Tixhall he was ſeen in Company upon the Bowling green, with Perſons of Quality; Sir Thomas Whitegrave and others. So we give you an account where he lodged. The 28th he was at Bellamore.

The 29th he went to Mr. Heveningham's; there he lodged till the 1st of September; and this is remember'd by particular Circumstances, that he went a Fishing, and a Setting, and a Hunting. Then the next Day, which is the 1st of September, and the next Day after, the 2d of September, they saw him at Mr. Gerrard's; he din'd upon the 2d at Mrs. Crompton's, and lay at Boscobel; there he continued the 3d, and the 4th he came to Wolverhampton again.

So that this shews, that what Mrs. Harwell did speak of, was true; for if Mrs. Harwell did see him, as 'tis not at all doubted but she did: It must be in that Interval of Time between the 16th and the 27th; where we give you an account of him by other undeniable Circumstances, that he lodged at other Places, and could not lodge at her House at Wolverhampton.

Besides, Gentlemen, the particular Circumstances that they do remember him by, proves it to be on those Days. Mrs. Harwell gives her positive Oath, that he did come there the 17th, and lay there every Night to the 26th, which was on the Monday Seven-night after; and that he came again the 4th of September after, and lay there till the 7th.

Then there is Rushton, another Witness, that saw him at her House, the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22d, and 25th. And, I say, it must be those Days, because we have given an account, by other Witnesses, of all the other Days. And it must be that very time that Otes speaks of: For it was the Summer before Ireland was apprehended and executed for the Plot, which was Michaelmas 1678.

Mrs. Winford she remembers him at Wolverhampton, the 18th, 19th, 22d, and 24th.

Stanley remembers the 18th and 19th: And if you ask him, how he remembers it? He tells you by a Circumstance, that most Men would remember; he buried his Child that Day, and entertain'd Ireland with the Provision for the Funeral. Now Men usually remark such Accidents as these; for that is a thing a Man cannot forget, that has any Concern in the World for those that are so nearly related to him. And therefore such Circumstances must of necessity evince the Truth of what he speaks; because it is brought to his Mind by an Accident that cannot be forgotten.

Mrs. Purcel, which is the next Witness: And she remembers to have seen him the 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22d, and 23d; for she remembers the last of them was the Day before Bartholomew-day, which was a remarkable Day.

Then there is another Man, that look'd to his Horse whilst he was there; but his Memory will not serve him to speak to any particular Time: He only evidences, that he was there; and the other Witnesses speak to the Time.

Mr. Stamford, he remembers it to be at that time, because he saw him on the Sunday after the Assumption of our Lady; which is always the 15th of August. And the like says Mrs. Gifford. These Circumstances verify her Testimony.

And Mr. Gifford remembers, he came on the 17th Day: And he saw him every Day, till the 26th Day.

And Mrs. Fowler, who is Mrs. Harwell's Daughter: She remembers, he came the 17th Day; and she was in his Company every Day, till the 26th; except one Day, when he went to Litchfield; that was the Day before Bartholomew-day, which was Friday.

Mrs. Keeling, she swears, that upon the 17th Day he came there, which was Saturday. She saw him on the Sunday, and on the Monday; and went on the Monday in the Afternoon, to the Funeral of her Mother: Which is another Circumstance, that she must needs remember; and by that, has the Remembrance of the Day of the Month when he was there: And she return'd back again on Thursday, and heard him that Day, but did not see him. But she saw him every Day after, till he went away: And she remembers his going away was upon the 27th. And she remembers likewise, that he return'd the 4th of September after.

Mr. Richardson, he proves, That he saw him upon the 19th Day of August at Wolverhampton; as he was told, it was he: And being ask'd, When he was told so? He says, Mrs. Harwell told him so some time before he was apprehended: So that she could not tell it him then, to serve a Turn. And he is a Protestant too.

So is likewise Eleanor Graves: Who gives you an account that she saw him there on the 20th, 21st, and 22d; and on the 23d, she went to Litchfield with him; and upon the 25th, she supp'd with him at Mr. Winford's.

Now, Gentlemen, you have a full account of it, even to a Demonstration, That he must be in these Places at this time, if you will believe one thing; that is, That these Witnesses saw him at all: And sure none can doubt, but these Witnesses did, upon the Circumstances they have testified, see him in August and September. And then it must be those particular Times, that they speak of.

At Wolverhampton then you have him to the 26th: The 27th Day, you have an account of him at the Horse Race at Etching-hill. The 28th, Mr. Howard gives you an account, he din'd at Bellamore, at Mr. Aston's. The 29th, you find him at the Bowling-green at Tixhall: And from thence to Mr. Heveningham's; where he lodg'd that Night, and stayed there the 30th: Which is prov'd by the Circumstances of Fishing in the Morning, and Setting in the Afternoon. And the next Day which was Saturday the 31st, you hear he was at the Killing of a Buck; where Mr. Gerrard was expected, but Sickness prevented his Coming. And you have him the 1st of September, which was Sunday, at Mr. Gerrard's House, where several of the Witnesses did see him.

And besides, one Proctor tells you, He saw him the 31st of August, at Fulford, at Mr. Lowe's. And he very well remembers that to be the Time, by a remarkable Circumstance: For (says he) the last Day of August I went to pay some Money, (which is a thing Men are generally very punctual in) and when I came home again, I found him there. And he swears he saw him at Mr. Gerrard's House, the 1st of September, the Day after.

Mr. King remembers he saw him at Mr. Gerrard's of Hildershame, the First of September; and that he dined at Mrs. Crompton's, the Second of September; and stay'd there till Two of the Clock in the Afternoon: And went from thence, with an intent to go to Boscobel.

Lee

Lee ſays, He ſaw him at Mr. Gerrard's Houſe, and at Mrs. Crompton's : That he dined there, and went from thence to Pancraſs, and from thence to Boſcobel.

Mr. Biddulph remembers, he dined with him on the Second of September, at his Aunt's ; and that by this Circumſtance, He was deſired by my Lord Cullen, to ſee an Horſe-Race in Northamptonſhire ; and promiſed my Lord Cullen to come : Which Horſe-Race is always on a certain Day, the Firſt Thurſday in September ; and that Year it happen'd to be the Fifth of September : And it was the Monday before, that he din'd at his Aunts'. And becauſe of his Promiſe to my Lord Cullen, he would not ſtay all Night. And ſo it muſt be the Second Day of September, that he ſaw him there.

Mrs. Crompton ſays, It was the ſame Day, that her Nephew, Mr. Biddulph, dined there : For he was a Stranger, and ſhe never ſaw him before, nor after.

And there is another Gentlewoman, Mrs. Palmer, that ſwears, He dined at Mrs. Crompton's ; but ſhe cannot tell the particular time when,

Mrs. Gifford ſaw him at Pancraſs, between the Hours of Four and Five in the Afternoon, upon the Second of September : And Lee went along with him to Pancraſs ; and from thence he went to Boſcobel.

Mr. Pendrell ſays, He ſaw him the Second of September at Night. For he came to his Houſe. Which agrees with all that the other Witneſſes ſay, which was, That he intended to go to Boſcobel that Night. He and his Wife both teſtify, That there he lodged upon the Second of September ; and ſtay'd there the Third of September ; and went from thence the Fourth, to Black-Ladies : Where Mr. Gifford tells you, he dined.

And we have given you an Account before, where he was the Fourth at Night : For then he was returned to Wolverhampton ; and there he lodged to the Seventh of September. And after the Seventh of September, though we do not give you a poſitive Evidence, That upon the Seventh of September, at Night, or upon the Eighth, he was at my Lord Aſton's : Yet we have given you that, which amounts almoſt to a Demonſtration, That he muſt be there upon the Eighth of September. For he went from thence with Sir John Southcoat, to go towards London, on the Ninth. And our Evidence is the more Credible, becauſe they ſwear cautiouſly all of them : Unleſs they remember ſome remarkable Circumſtance, they will not take upon them to fix upon a particular time.

Then, Gentlemen, we give you an Account, by the Perſons that were in his Company where he was every Day, all along from the time he left Tixhall, down to the time he came to Sir John Southcoat's Houſe in Surry. And this Journey took up the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh and Twelfth of September : There are Four Days ; and he ſtay'd there one Day. Then he ſold Mr. Southcoat his Horſe. Mr. Southcoat lent him his Horſe to come to Town ; and the next Day he did come to Town. And ſo we have brought him to Saturday the Fourteenth of September.

And now, let all the World be judge, if there be any poſſible Room left, that any one Word Mr. Otes has ſaid, can be true ; even giving him the Latitude of Time, he himſelf deſires, and ſays, All Witneſſes muſt be allowed. No, there is not one Minute for him, wherein he can be verified in any one Tittle of his Evidence, as to Ireland's being in Town. And this is that which I call (and ſure, well I may ſo call it) a Demonſtrative Proof, That what Otes did ſwear, is utterly falſe.

Gentlemen, the Jury had not this Evidence at the Tryal of Ireland : Some they were, that went out of the Town with him ; and ſome, one or two of Wolverhampton, were at the Five Jeſuits Tryals ; but not above Five or Six in all of theſe Forty odd, that now appear. True indeed it is, all theſe were not there ; and Ireland, upon that, unfortunately ſuffered ; for ſo I may take leave to ſay, It was Unfortunately.

Mr. Otes has ſaid one thing unto you, which he lays much ſtreſs upon : He would have you look upon it as a great Hardſhip, That this Proſecution comes ſo late ; and that it is ſtrange, after Six Years time ſpent, this ſhould not be ſet on foot.

But, Gentlemen, I cannot but with much Sorrow remember to you ; and I know you all remember it too well : That there was a time, when the City of London was ſo far corrupted, that it was become a Refuge and a Sanctuary for High Treaſon ; when there was no Juſtice to be had for the King there ; when Men lodged themſelves within thoſe Walls, as a Protection for their Conſpiracies ; we all remember the Time, when Indictments were preferred, and a plain Evidence given to a Grand Jury, even to the publick Satisfaction of all that heard it ; and yet they have refuſed to find the Bill : And not only ſo, but were ſo abetted by the Rabble, that it was ſcarce ſafe for the Judges to ſit upon the Bench. Theſe are Things none of us can forget, but muſt be perpetually remembered, to the Shame of the Authors and Contrivers of them : And therefore it is no wonder an Indictment was not preferred againſt Mr. Otes at that Time, when the plaineſt Proof againſt Criminals could not be admitted. And this will give every Man Satisfaction, why it has been delayed. And I hope at the ſame time give every Man a Caution, how they fall into the like Circumſtances again.

But, Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence that is now offered, to prove this Matter of Fact ; and it is a plain Demonſtration, if you will believe that Mr. Ireland was ſeen by theſe Men at all, he was ſeen at thoſe very times they have particularly declared : For upon Conſideration of the Circumſtances, it is impoſſible it ſhould be at any other times ; and ſo I leave it to you to judge upon the whole, whether the Defendant be Perjured or no.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Caſe has taken up a great deal of Time ; but it is a Caſe of that Moment and Conſequence, that ſure no time ought to be thought too long, that is employed for the diſcovering of the Truth, ſo neceſſary to be diſcovered, as the Matter now in queſtion. For as I ſaid at the beginning upon this Occaſion, and I cannot but ſay it again now ; I confeſs, I cannot without Horror and Trembling, reflect upon the many Miſchiefs and Inconveniencies we have been run into, if the Teſtimony given this Day in this Cauſe againſt Otes prove true, as I cannot in the the leaſt imagine, where there ſhould remain the leaſt Objection againſt the Truth of it; I cannot, I ſay, but bewail, that ſo many innocent Perſons (to the Reproach of our Nation be it ſpoken) have ſuffered Death upon this account.

God deliver me, from having the leaſt ſtain of Innocent Blood imputed to me; and it is more to be lamented, when we ſee that Impudence, which has brought that Infamy upon our Land, continues with a brazen Face, defying all Shame to this Day. But by this we may be informed, how ſome Men's Conſciences are ſeared, and that there are ſome People that do indeed live without the Fear of God in the World. For if that Man, who has aſſumed to himſelf the Habit and Character of one that ſhould preach to others, Religion, Vertue, and the Things that become true Chriſtians, ſhall become ſuch a Monſter of Impiety and Impudence, in defiance of Heaven and Earth; What greater and more manifeſt Proof can there be of a ſeared Conſcience?

I cannot but lament likewiſe the Wickedneſs of our Age, when I reflect upon the Teſtimony of that other Wretch (indeed I cannot uſe Terms ſevere enough for him) that when he was going into another World, ſhould perſiſt in ſuch groſs Falſities; I mean Bedloe, Infamous Bedloe; and let his Name be for ever Infamous to all Mankind, that have any regard, or deference for the Truth; that he ſhould with his lateſt Breath dare to affirm, That every Word he had ſaid of the Popiſh Plot, was true; when it is as clear as the Sun, by the Teſtimony of this Day; that every Word he ſwore about Ireland, was utterly falſe. Good God of Heaven! What an Age have we lived in, to ſee Innocence ſuffer Puniſhment, and impudent Falſity reign ſo long.

Gentlemen, I hope all Eyes are opened (I wiſh they had been ſo long ſince;) let us lay the Burden, the Infamy and Reproach of theſe Things, upon them that deſerve it; for we cannot but know, we are reckoned as a By-word to all our Neighbours, and ſhall remain Monuments of Ignominy to all ſucceeding Ages and Times, if we did not endeavour to diſcharge our ſelves, and our Religion, and the Juſtice of our Nation from theſe Scandals.

Gentlemen, I think I am obliged, in the firſt Place, to take notice of what Mr. Sollicitor General has mentioned, concerning the Inſolency of thoſe Times; wherein the Faction was grown to that extravagant Height, that, in truth, a Man durſt not appear, with ſafety of his own Life and Fortune, to Teſtify the Truth. And, Is it not a ſhame, that it ſhould be remembred, what one of the Witneſſes this Day Teſtified? That when he came to appear at the Council-Table, to Atteſt a Matter of Fact, before this Innocent Blood was ſpilt (for ſo I muſt call it, if that which has been Sworn this Day is true) the Rabble ſhould be ſo boiſterous, as to cry out; Where is that Villain, that dares come to give Evidence againſt OTES, the SAVIOUR of the NATION? Oh, horrid Blaſphemy, that no leſs an Epithet ſhould be given to ſuch a Profligate Wretch as Otes, than that which is only proper to our Bleſſed LORD! As though Otes had merited more than all Mankind; and ſo indeed he has, if we take it in a true Senſe: He has deſerved much more Puniſhment, than the Laws of this Land can inflict.

And I muſt needs ſay, Gentlemen, That this is an Inſtance, why there ſeems not to have been Puniſhment enough ordain'd in Law for Perjury, becauſe our Law-makers did not foreſee, that there could ever be ſuch Villains, ſuch Miſcreants, as theſe.

We have indeed another Inſtance in the Law, of a Crime for which there is no adequate Puniſhment; and that is in the Caſe, where a Child kills his Father; Paricide has no peculiar Judgment aſſigned for it; but we are forced, becauſe theſe Things have been ſometimes practiſed, by a Conſtruction in Law, to make that Child as a Servant to his Father, and ſo puniſh him with the Judgment of Petty-Treaſon; but take him immediately as he is a Child, and not as a Servant, and I ſay there is no particular Proviſion in Law, to puniſh ſuch an Offence: And, What is the Reaſon of it? Becauſe it is ſo unnatural, and againſt the Imaginations of Mankind to believe, there ever could be ſuch a wicked Child in the World.

If that be not to be imagined, How could it be imagin'd, that there ſhould ever be ſuch horrid Villains, as ſhould attempt the Deſtruction of the Government of Three Kingdoms? Good Lord! What Times do we live in? Surely, 'tis ſuch an Age, as was never known, from the Creation of the World, to this Day.

And to this muſt be added, what aggravates the Miſchief, That all this is done under the Umbrage, Countenance, and Pretence of Law; the Proceedings of Law, the uſual Methods of Juſtice, are made the Inſtruments of the moſt horrid Injuſtice. The Murder of our late Bleſſed Sovereign, King CHARLES the Martyr, of ever happy Memory, though a Crime as high in it ſelf, as the Law knows of; yet I may ſay, it was aggravated very much, that that Unfortunate, but Glorious King, ſhould be brought to the Block, by a Pretext of Law, and Cut off by a colourable Method of Juſtice; 'tis that which makes that Murder ten times more Baſe and Infamous. So, Gentlemen, the Deſtruction of poor innocent Perſons, by falſe Accuſations, by the pernicious Evidence of Perjur'd Witneſſes, in a Court of Juſtice, makes their Crime infinitely more odious, than common Murder.

Gentlemen, I cannot but ſpeak with warmth in a Caſe of this Nature; and I the rather ſpeak ſo, becauſe, at the time when thoſe things were done, we all know, the Nation was in a Hurry, and a ſort of ill-minded Men had crept in among us, who had blown us up to ſuch an height, that nothing but what comply'd with their malicious and Deviliſh Deſigns, was to be believed; when the King could not get common Juſtice done againſt real Traytors; but the very Streams of Juſtice were all Corrupted, though the Fountain (God be thanked) was preſerved pure.

When the Faction (by Cabals and Intrigues) had got Sheriffs of their own Party, and laboured to get all other Officers of their own wicked Principles, then came all thoſe Miſchiefs we ſo long labour'd under. When thoſe Fellows, that had ſo great a ſhare in the late Rebellion, were the only fit Men to be truſted with the Government; and all the while were deſigning to deſtroy it, and to bring us into the ſame miſerable Condition we formerly were in.

Was it ever (I ſpeak to you, Gentlemen of the Jury, Citizens of London, who know its antient Conſtitution, and have too well experienced its late Convulſions) was it ever known, till Juſtice was deſigned to be Corrupted, that there was any labouring to be Sheriffs? No, Endeavours were always uſed to be excuſed, and Fines paid to get off from that Office: And the reaſon is plain; for never was there a wiſe and wealthy Citizen, that had a mind, out of a principal Part of his Eſtate, to ſquander away ſo much as is neceſſary to defray the Charge of that Office: But it was the Deſign that thoſe Raſcals had upon the Government, that made them ſo greedy of thoſe Places; and they thought they had now an Opportunity to effect their Deſign, upon theſe Fellows pretended Diſcovery. They believed, that becauſe we were hurried into the Miſchiefs of the late Times, by Pretences of Popery, the ſame Bait would be ſwallowed now: Therefore the Cry muſt be ſet up, Popery was a coming in. They concluded, if they could but make uſe of the ſame Engines, they ſhould have the ſame Effect: Witneſs a Peer, that is now dead, one that was a main Inſtrument of our Confuſion in the late Times, and thereby experienced in Villany, was made uſe of as the Chief Tool in theſe late Contrivances.

But alas! When they found thoſe Pretences and Projects would take no longer, then they fly to that, which was indeed the bottom of All; I mean, The bloody Conſpiracy: When they found they could not overthrow the Government by Methods of Law, they betake themſelves to downright Treaſon. For by this time, the Eyes of the honeſt Citizens were opened; and they found what Intereſt was driving on: And it was time to have them open, when a Cauſe in Guild-Hall was always Tryed according to the Characters of the Client, and not the Merits of the Cauſe; when, if a Man was blaſted with the name of a Tory, he was ſure to loſe it: But if a whining Raſcal was Sanctified with the name of a Whigg, he was ſure to have it go on his Side: Witneſs the famous Cauſe of Mr. Loades, about his Limons.

But when Sheriffs came to be Elected in due manner, ſuch as were fit to be Truſted with the City-Buſineſs: What do they, but break out into a horrid Conſpiracy, to take away the Life of that bleſſed King, that merciful Prince, ſo lately deceaſed, to the Grief and Sorrow of all His loving and loyal Subjects? And not only ſo, but to rob us of His Sacred Majeſty, our preſent moſt Gracious Sovereign; whom I pray GOD to preſerve long to Reign over us. To which, the Auditory gave a great Acclamation, ſaying, Amen.

Gentlemen, When theſe Things are thought upon, you muſt give me leave to obſerve (let others think what they pleaſe) that was the real Plot, the true Plot: For there is one thing obſervable, that attends this whole Affair, That every Man who Suffered for the Plot, which the Witneſſes truly call Otes's Plot, to a Man denied it even to the laſt Gaſp; and took it upon their Deaths and Salvations, that they were Innocent: Nay, when they had not thoſe Hopes Bedloe had, of Life (for I cannot believe, that he could have been ſo egregious a Villain, as to have Atteſted ſuch notorious Lies, if he had not hoped to have recovered; and thereby increaſed his own Reputation) yet not a Man of the others, but diſowned it with their dying Breath. Now, on the other Side, there was not a Man, that was concerned in the Conſpiracy, of which this was to be the Blind and the Colour, had the Confidence to deny it, when they came to Suffer for it. All this ought to be put in the Ballance, and duly weighed.

For, Gentlemen, becauſe it is a Matter that is not only publick here, but all the World over, we muſt have the Juſtice of the Nation vindicated, and its Diſ-reputation wiped off. And having taken notice of theſe Things, which I could not well omit upon this Occaſion, I muſt now put you in mind, what is neceſſary for you to take into your Conſideration, as to the particular Caſe before you. And,

Firſt, You muſt obſerve, That this Indictment againſt Otes, is for Committing wilful and Corrupt Perjury; which is alſo ſaid to be done maliciouſly. And if it were falſe, ſurely it was malicious; becauſe, by his falſe Oath, have Innocent Men been Convicted, Condemned, and Executed.

Secondly, You are to conſider, how far the Thing goes, to make it material to the Iſſue: For if it were upon a Nicety only, or a Catch, or any of thoſe fine Words, that he has been pleaſed to make uſe of; it were not fit to Perjure him upon it. But it is certainly very material: For Time and Place are Matters ſubſtantial to diſcover Truth and Falſhood by, as in the Caſe of Suſannah; The Perjury of the Elders, as you may remember, was detected by thoſe very Circumſtances. But I ſhall ſhew you the Occaſion of this Oath; and that will manifeſt it to be a material Part, in reſpect of the Time. For,

Firſt, Here was a Conſult held, as he Teſtified, the 24*th* of April, 1678. and then he ſwears Ireland was in Town, and preſent at the Conſult: But all that Otes ſwore, would not do the Feat, becauſe that he was but one Witneſs. Then comes Bedloe, his worthy Yoke fellow (a Brace of ſuch Witneſſes, as the Lord deliver all Mankind from) and he aſſigns another Fact upon Mr. Ireland, in the Month of Auguſt, the latter end of it, or the beginning of September; which is material, and makes two Witneſſes againſt Ireland, which Otes knew well enough: For he is his Arts-Maſter; he knows all the Tricks, and can tell the very Nick that will do. And therefore, when he finds Mr. Ireland ſo poſitively affirming, That he was then out of Town; and if ſo, Bedloe did not ſwear true: Then does this Otes come in (and thereby makes his Teſtimony material to the Point then in Iſſue.) Says he, The Firſt of September, or (at leaſt) the Second, I will ſwear he was in Town; for he gave me Twenty Shillings: And that is given as a Token, why he does remember it. And thus he did prop up Bedloe's Teſtimony, againſt Mr. Ireland's Defence. This is proved to you by Mr. Waterhouſe, who was one of the Jury. And the ſame thing does the next Gentleman ſwear, which is Mr. Byfield: They do both agree in that Circumſtance punctually, That he ſwore, he had then of him Twenty Shillings.

Ay, (but ſays he for himſelf, becauſe I would remove the Objections out of the way, as they occur to me) 'tis very hard, this being now ſome six or seven Years ago, that I should be called to question about such a thing; when they might have had a time to disprove it before.

Besides, Gentlemen, the Answer that has been truly given to you, concerning the Miserableness of the Times; when, the Truth of it is, there was no Justice to be had for Protestants, if we speak of the Church of England-Men under that Name: For either they were Papists in Masquerade, or Popishly affected; or the Names of Tory and Tantivy, and I know not what, was enough to do their Work for them: And no body was reckoned of the Sober, Virtuous, Godly Party, but those that were under Associations and Covenants; as tho' there was no Sanctity to be found in any but those who were bent to destroy all Virtue and Religion. I say, besides that, there is another Answer, which I am sorry has so much Weight in it: Could any Man have believed, that Otes should dare so impudently to swear a Falshood, and that in a Cause where Life was concern'd; and the Man hang'd upon his Testimony? To what purpose then should his Relations interpose to disprove Otes, after his Death? That would not revive him. But you find there was an Inclination that way; and I wish to God, with all my Heart, it had taken effect: For what says the old Gentlewoman? As soon as she heard what Mr. Otes had sworn, which she knew to be false, immediately she dispatch'd an Express to London; and sent a Petition to the King, That either Ireland might have a new Tryal, or his Execution might be repriev'd, till they brought up such Witnesses, as would have made it apparent, and as clear as the Light, That what this Fellow had testified, was notoriously false. But such, such, I must say, was the Misfortune of the Time we were in, that stop'd the Fountain of Mercy it self, from letting forth its wonted Streams; and even compelled that Compassionate Prince, rather than he would give any Disturbance to his People, to permit that Execution against his own Inclination; because there was a Verdict, and Judgment in the Case. For, as he was really the Fountain of Justice; so was he of Mercy too. And it is well known to those that had the Happiness to be near his Person, how oft he expressed his Concern for having consented to this Execution. And this continued with him even to his dying Day, as the Business of my Lord of Strafford did with his Royal Father.

And, Gentlemen, I chose to mention this Passage concerning his late Majesty, for this Reason, That when we live in such tumultuous Times, when things are put so hard upon Princes, as to compel them to restrain their Mercy, where they think it due, rather than seem to stop the Current of Justice; this should not be remember'd with any Reflection upon them, but with Infamy to those that are the Causes and Grounds of it: When such prodigious Wretches, as Otes and Bedloe; for there appears no Evidence before you, but of those two profligate Villains, who came out of Goals: And after having been guilty of Villanies almost of all sorts that ever were committed, came to be sanctified by committing more: And were therefore called, The Saviours of the Nation.

Gentlemen, The next Objection that is made against the Evidence for the King, is, That they are all Papists; who design nothing but to destroy the Government, and ruin the Protestant Religion. And this must be taken to be the whole Design of all these Persons of Quality, and others, that they come to forswear themselves, and damn their Souls to all Eternity, on purpose only to destroy Innocent, Protestant Mr. Otes. Alack-a-day! When, at the same time, I must tell you, if it were necessary, you have about seven or eight Protestant Witnesses of the Church of England, that confirm the Testimony of the rest: Not that we must think, or ought to have any such Conception among us, but that Roman Catholicks, in Point of Law, are good Witnesses; and are to be credited as much as any other Witnesses whatsoever, unless there be some Objection made to them; which would be the same against a Protestant as a Papist: For there remains a Right in them; and they ought to have equal Credit given to their Testimony, with those of any other Perswasion, if a regular Objection be not started against them. And sure I am, that has been always the Law; and shall be my Practice, while I have any thing to do with the Administration of Justice. Let the sober Party, as they call themselves, make what Reflections they please upon it, or trouble themselves as they will about it; I value them not, nor their Opinion: Let them send as many Penny-Post Letters and Libels as they have a mind to do; two of which I receiv'd last Night, about Yesterday's Tryal. This I am sure of, Lying is as much the Talent and Inclination of a Presbyterian, as ever it can be of a Papist: Nay, more; For it is as inseparably incident to a Presbyterian, (and such sniveling, whining, canting Knaves) to Lie, as to Speak. They can no more forbear Lying, than they can forbear Speaking; for generally, as often as they do the one, they do the other.

Besides, I must observe to you, with what Caution, Care and Sobriety, both of Expression and Action, all these Gentlemen and Women have delivered their Testimony, with the greatest Tenderness and Care that possibly could be: And as well as they have given it with Caution; so I cannot but put it home to you, Gentlemen at the Bar, to give it it's due Consideration.

For tho' the other Juries did believe Otes, and not them at that time; yet that is not to be your Measure, because you have not the same Reason to do it. Could any Person think, that there should be such Villains upon Earth, as impudently to swear downright Treason against their Fellow-Subjects, if there were no Truth in the Accusation? That was the thing that guided those Juries, who were all of them, no doubt, very honest Men; and that was it, which influenc'd the Parliament to do what they did in the Matter. For it was morally impossible to be thought, any such Wickedness could be so publickly attempted.

But, God be thanked, the Eyes of all honest and understanding Men are opened. And we see the Fault was in our Credulity; and that these were Fellows should not have been believ'd: And it concerns us, when the Truth has been so debauch'd, and our Credulity so imposed upon, to shew the World our just Resentment thereof.

And this I say to you, Gentlemen, with a purpose to vindicate those Persons who were concern'd as Jurors, in the Tryals of all those Causes; because that is the thing much harp'd upon, and aim'd at: That because he was believed lieved before, to disbelieve him now, would caſt a Reflection upon the Juries; whereas, if that Opinion hold, never will there be any ſuch thing as Perjury detected, ſo long as the Sun and Moon endure: For if a Verdict be obtain'd upon falſe Teſtimony, and it ſhall be enough for the Witneſs to ſay; I was believed at ſuch a Tryal, and therefore do not you offer to proſecute me for Perjury: That would be the fineſt Doctrine that could be taught, to give a Licence to deſtroy all Truths, Juſtice, and human Society.

Therefore I leave it home upon you: Upon your Conſciences be it; for, in the Preſence of the Great God of Heaven and Earth, that ſees all our Hearts, and will judge us for our inward Thoughts at the laſt Day; Liberavi animam meam. If you can find all theſe Perſons (in number forty-ſeven) guilty of wilful, downright, malicious, and corrupt Perjury, then you muſt acquit the Defendant.

For the Particulars of the Evidence, which abound in many material Circumſtances in Point of Time and Place, I ſhall run them over as ſhort as I can, and remind you of them; not becauſe I think it extraordinary neceſſary, as tho' there were the leaſt Doubt of the Fact, but for the Satisfaction of all Mankind, that are not under invincible Prejudice againſt the Truth. And I am ſure, upon Yeſterday's Buſineſs there remained not any Doubt with any that heard it, ſave one, who I know had a great ſhare in the Deſign, that was at the bottom of it; and I doubt, was one of thoſe Perſons that ſet this Villain on Work; his Name may be concealed for the preſent, but a few Days will diſcover it here, or in ſome other Place.

Gentlemen, What Mr. Attorney, or Mr. Sollicitor General, or any of the King's Counſel have ſaid, or what the Defendant has ſaid for himſelf, if not proved, and made plain by Evidence, is to be no Guidance at all to you; who are only to go according to the Teſtimony given to you; for that is purſuant to your Oath, which Oath is the Rule of your Enquiry.

The Witneſſes that prove, that he did ſwear ſo in both the Points in the Indictment; I need not mention, they were ſo full: They tell you, he ſwore, that Ireland was in Town from the 8th to the 12th of Auguſt; but becauſe he fixed upon the 8th at firſt, there was Caution given him, Be not ſo preciſe to a Day, conſider with your ſelf. Then comes he to ſtab the Buſineſs to the quick, and to rivet it home: If I cannot be poſitive to the 8th, I will be poſitive between the 8th and 12th. And as to the other Point, I did obſerve before that, becauſe Bedloe was at a ſtand, upon Ireland's denying his being in Town the latter end of Auguſt, or the beginning of September; therefore comes Otes up again, to fix it home; and, ſays he, I am ſure he was in Town the 1ſt or 2d of September, becauſe he gave me Twenty Shillings: That he ſwore this, is teſtified by three Gentlemen, who were Jury-men at thoſe Tryals.

Now, that this is notoriouſly falſe, falſe to a tittle; and, as Mr. Sollicitor does obſerve, not the leaſt time left to give any ſort of Countenance to what he ſwore, is thus made out to you.

Firſt, You are to take notice, that upon the 3d of Auguſt, being Saturday, it is ſworn by three or four Witneſſes, that he went out of Town; and this is not ſworn as Mr. Otes gave his Evidence poſitively without Circumſtances; but they give you an account how they remember it; becauſe upon the Wedneſday before, which was a publick Day of Note among them, and always kept as a Feſtival in Memory of St. Ignatius, upon the laſt Day of July, as both they and Mr. Otes himſelf do affirm, there went Mr. Ireland, Mrs. Anne Ireland, and their Mother out of Town to a Friend's Houſe to Dinner. Mrs. Ireland did deſire him to ſtay there all Night, as ſhe did. No, ſays he, I cannot ſtay all Night, becauſe I muſt go out of Town on Saturday, and I muſt provide things neceſſary for my Journey: Nay, that is not all; for it goes yet further: Says his Siſter unto him, Why do you begin your Journey on a Saturday? That is an improper Day: Oh! ſays he, I do it, becauſe I am that Night to go to my Lord Aſton's Houſe in Hartfordſhire; where I am to meet with Sir John Southcoat, and go down with them into the Country: This does the Mother ſwear, and the Siſter. And then the Maid-ſervant, and the Taylor's Wife, do give you another Token, That it was Saturday the 3d of Auguſt, becauſe he had ſomething to be mended in his Cloaths, and ſtay'd for them; and he was to go out of Town, for he had his Boots on.

There is yet this Circumſtance further, wherein thoſe four do all agree, That as he went out of Town the 3d of Auguſt, ſo he did not return till the 14th of September; for they ſay it was the Saturday Fortnight before Michaelmas, and the ſame Day of the Week that Michaelmas day was of: So that you will find, that there is a conſtant Proof, and as plain a one as any poſſibly can be in the World, as to the Time of his going out, and coming home. And where he was in the mean time, proved directly by a great Company of Witneſſes, except one Day. For you ſee, the 3d of Auguſt he went to my Lord Aſton's at Standen: Several there are that ſaw him there the 4th, and dined with him there; particularly, Sir Edward Southcoat. And to ſhew that it is not a thing they are poſitive in, and ſwear it roundly without Conſideration, they give you an account of the Reaſons of their Knowledge. You are to conſider alſo the Teſtimony given by my Lord Aſton, a Perſon of great Honour and Quality: Says he, Tho' I dare venture all I am worth in the World upon the Truth of it, that Ireland did go along with me all the Journey; yet, becauſe I did not take ſuch particular notice of the reſt of the time as I did of thoſe two Days, I will not take upon me to ſwear it. If Mr. Otes had had the fortieth Part of that Caution in his Evidence, I dare ſay, you had not had the Trouble of this Day's Tryal.

The Fifth, You have a great many Witneſſes who give you an account, that he came on Monday Night to St. Albans with my Lord Aſton; there is Sir Edward Southcoat, Mr. John Southcoat, my Lord Aſton, the Coachman, and all the Servants: Sir Edward tells you, that Monday was a hot Day, and my Lord Aſton took him into his Coach; but he rode a Horſeback all the reſt of the way, and had a fine going Horſe; which Horſe Mr. John Southcoat bought of him when the whole Journey was ended. They tell you likewiſe, upon the 6th and 7th Days, the very Inns they lodged at upon the Road; and particularly at Northampton, they lay at the George, which was Sir William Farmer's Houſe, which was then let to an Inn-Keeper, becauſe of the Fire in that Town. And, which is moſt material of all, for Mr. Otes's Satisfaction, you have for theſe Times no leſs than four Witneſſes, that are Proteſtants of the Church of England, who give you the ſame Account. There are in all no leſs in number than fourteen to this Point; and whether you will believe thoſe fourteen to be wilfully perjured, without Evidence to the contrary, is left to you: And if they do ſwear true, Otes that was Yeſterday found Perjured, muſt be Convicted of Perjury again to Day: For in ſhort the Queſtion is, Whether you will believe Perſons of Credit, that have no ſtain upon their Reputation; or Otes, that, upon plain Evidence, was found Guilty of Perjury Yeſterday.

When we come to Tixhall, we have no leſs number, that teſtify where he was from Day to Day, and from Night to Night, to the 17*th*, and from the 17*th* to the 26*th*. You have fifteen Witneſſes more, all as direct and poſitive, as can be in the World; ſwearing where he was from time to time. It ſeems he came to Tixhall Thurſday the 8*th*; there he ſtayed till Thurſday following, and then he went to Holy-Well; he lay the firſt Night at Nantwich; the next Night at Holy-Well, at the Sign of the Star, a notorious Inn there; he came to Cheſter on Thurſday, and ſome of the Company left him there, but others came back with him to Tixhall; who ſay, he went away on Saturday Morning, which happens to be the 17th. And thus you have a full account of him, quite from the 3d to the 17th, beyond all Controverſy, plainly proved by Perſons of undoubted Credit. And if he were where they ſay he was from the 3d to the 17th, How could Otes ſwear true, that he took his leave of him here in Town, between the 8th and 12th?

Now let us come from the 17th to the 26th, and you have no leſs than fifteen Witneſſes, four whereof are Proteſtants; which I urge not as a neceſſary Qualification to be a Witneſs, but to anſwer Otes's Objection, as tho' this was a Popiſh Deſign to deſtroy him. They have given you an account where he was from time to time, by convincing Circumſtances, which you have heard, particularly of one Day that he went to Litchfield; one of the Witneſſes went with him, and a Proteſtant Witneſs too, that came back with him again, and ſupped with him at her Father's Houſe. The Apothecary tells you the Day that he ſaw him was a Wake-day, which is a remarkable Time in the Country. You are told of the Funeral of one Woman's Mother, that made her ſtay away from Monday till Thurſday: Of another Man's Child. I mention them but ſhortly to you, becauſe I know you have taken Notes of them, and they are only uſed as Inſtances to manifeſt the Integrity of the Witneſſes, that this was not a thing contrived on purpoſe to make a Story of, but did really happen in the Order they tell it. And I muſt remember you of another Circumſtance ſome of them do ſwear, that whereas Otes had a mind to evade their Teſtimony by that Queſtion, Whether this was the ſame Ireland that was tryed? It was moſt certainly he; for that is made too evidently to appear, by their ſeeing him executed at Tyburn, I am ſorry to ſay, innocently.

From the Third of Auguſt to the Twenty-ſixth, there is not one Night, but you hear where he was: And from the Twenty-ſixth of Auguſt to the Seventh of September, you hear where he was at the Horſe-Match, upon the Bowling Green at Mr. Heveningham's, Mr. Low's, Mr. Gerrard's, Mrs. Crompton's, Mr. Pendrel's, Mr. Gifford's, and Mrs. Harwel's: And from the Seventh to the Fourteenth, ſave only one Day, viz. the Eighth, you have a particular Account too; and it does not appear by a rambling Evidence, but a faithful Account is given of all the Time, ſave that Eighth Day; which ſhews the Caution of the Witneſſes. And it cannot but be eaſily preſumed, he was either at Tixhall, or thereabouts, becauſe he was at Wolverhampton the Seventh, coming to London the Ninth. How eaſy is it to imagine him there the Eighth, and the rather becauſe where he was the Eighth, is not material to the Point in Queſtion before you, but where he was the Firſt and Second?

And, Gentlemen, If in caſe you had a mind to imagine, he was the Eighth at London; it muſt be by a ſtrained Imagination: For you muſt take him to be at Wolverhampton the Seventh, and made him ride Poſt to London that Night, and return Poſt from London the Eighth to Tixhall, to be ready there early in the Morning upon the Ninth, or take four Days Journey back again; or elſe you cannot give the leaſt Countenance to any other Imagination, but that he was about Tixhall the Eighth of September.

Well, at Tixhall you have him the 9*th* of September; and from thence, you have it teſtified by all the Perſons that came along with him all the way, that he lay one Night at Coventry, another at Banbury, a Third at Agmondiſham: That he Baited at Uxbridge the Fourth, which was the 12*th* of September; and came to Sir John Southcoat's Houſe that Night, being Thurſday: He ſtayed there Thurſday Night, and Friday; and upon Saturday the 14*th* of September, Sir John Southcoat's Man went along with him to London, whither he rode upon the Horſe he ſold Mr. Southcoat; the Man ſaw him at his Lodging; and he ſays, they wondered when he came in, that he had ſtayed ſo long.

And then we return to the Four Witneſſes they begun with at firſt; who make all this Teſtimony to ſtand well together, That he went away the 3*d* of Auguſt, and was never in Town till the 14*th* of September: And every Day, but the 8*th* of September, which makes nothing to the Buſineſs, is particularly ſpoke to: And he muſt be there that Day too, except you will put him upon very hard Service, to ride Poſt to London and back again, in Twenty four Hours; for no other reaſon, but only to commit a Treaſon, that none ever found out but Mr. Otes. And, I am ſure, if he did, he took a great deal of Pains to a very little purpoſe.

Gentlemen, I have taken up much of your Time, and detained you the longer in this Matter, becauſe I cannot but ſay with grief of Heart, our Nation was too long beſotted; and of innocent Blood there has been too much ſpilt: 'Tis high time to have ſome Account of it. 'Tis a Mercy we ought to bleſs Almighty God for, that we are prevented from ſpilling more innocent Blood! God be bleſſed, our Eyes are opened; and let us have a care for the future, that we be not ſo ſuddenly impoſed upon by ſuch Prejudices and Jealouſies, as we have reaſon to fear, ſuch Villains have too much filled our Heads with of late.

Gentlemen, 'Tis incumbent upon you, to Try according to the Evidence that has been given, whether the Defendant be Guilty, or Not Guilty.

And

And 'tis incumbent upon us that ſit here as Judges, to ſee the Law executed, as we will anſwer it at the Tribunal of the great Judge of Heaven and Earth, before whom we muſt appear, and receive our Tryals at the Great Day. And God forbid, but we ſhould uſe our utmoſt Endeavours to inflict the greateſt Vengeance, that the Juſtice of the Nation can permit us to inflict upon ſuch Villains as theſe are; that have contracted ſo much Miſchief and Reproach upon us, and ſo much Guilt upon themſelves.

Gentlemen, I am ſorry, I ſay, I have kept you ſo long: 'Tis a Caſe of ſuch Importance, that I could not but ſay what I have done in it. There may be other Circumſtances ariſing from the Evidence, which I may have omitted; but were very largely and fully ſpoken to, by Mr. Sollicitor. Whatſoever has been forgotten by him, or by me, I am ſure, will be ſufficiently ſupplied by your own Obſervations: For I know you to be Gentlemen of great Knowledge and Experience in Matters of this Nature.

Then the Jury withdrew, to Conſider of their Verdict; and, after half an Hour's Receſs, returned to the Bar; and, anſwering to their Names, delivered in their Verdict, That the Defendant was Guilty of the Perjury whereof he ſtood Indicted: Which being Recorded, the Lord Chief Juſtice ſpoke to the Gentlemen of the Jury, to this Effect.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen, becauſe there has been ſome Notice taken to Day, as there was Yeſterday, concerning the Opinions of Judges, about Verdicts that have been given; I would ſay a Word or two to you: Not that I much admire the doing of it, at any time; nor would I do it now, for your Sakes; becauſe, I am ſure, you act according to your Conſciences, and affect not Commendation: But becauſe it may be neceſſary, for the Satisfaction of ſome People, that they ſhould know our Opinions alſo in this Matter; I muſt tell you, You have given a Verdict, that becomes your Honeſty, Integrity, and Loyalty. And I declare, in the Preſence of Almighty God, the Searcher of Hearts, That had I been of the Jury, I muſt have given the ſame Verdict. Gentlemen, 'Tis an Honeſt and Juſt Verdict, that you have given; and by it, you have Contributed, as much as in you lies, to vindicate the Nation from the Infamy it has ſo long lain under.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. For my part, I think, if you had given any other Verdict, you had found againſt plain Demonſtration; the Evidence was ſo full and clear.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. The Court is very well ſatisfied with the Verdict; and you have acquitted your ſelves like worthy, honeſt Gentlemen.

Mr. Juſt. Walcot. There is nothing can be ſaid to the Verdict, but that it is a juſt Verdict, and according to the Evidence.

[And then the Court aroſe.

Die Lunæ, 11 Maii 1685. Banco Regis. Dominus Rex verſus Otes.

THis Day Mr. Wallop moved, That in regard the Court were pleaſed to give the Defendant time till Saturday next, to move in Arreſt of Judgment, upon the Conviction on Friday laſt; they would pleaſe to give to the ſame Day, to move in Arreſt of Judgment, upon the Conviction on Saturday; which the Court granted. But afterwards, upon the Motion of Mr. Attorney General, they order'd, That a Note of the Exceptions to both Indictments ſhould be ſent to the King's Counſel ſome Days before Saturday.

Die Sabbati, 26 Maii 1685. Banco Regis. Dominus Rex verſus Otes.

THis Day being appointed for the Defendant to move what he could in Arreſt of Judgment, upon the two Convictions of Perjury; he was brought, by Rule from the Priſon, to the King's-Bench-Court.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney General, Have you any thing to move?

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, I pray your Judgment upon Otes, who is convicted upon two Indictments, for two notorious Perjuries.

L. C. J. Who is Counſel for Otes?

Mr. At. Gen. Mr. Wallop moved for him.

L. C. J. What is it that Mr. Wallop has to ſay?

Otes. My Lord, I deſire I may ſpeak one Word. It was Thurſday Night before my Attorney could make an end of examining the Records; Sir Samuel Aſtry knows it very well: Then I ſent the Rule to thoſe Gentlemen that were aſſign'd to be my Counſel; and the Exceptions were delivered in but yeſterday. I pray I may have a Day or two more, that my Counſel may be prepared to argue for me.

L. C. J. We cannot do that: We gave you beyond the ordinary Rules, in extending it till to Day.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, He talks of Examining the Records: He had Copies of them all this long Vacation.

Otes. My Lord, My Attorney will be ready to make Oath, that he finiſhed the Examining but on Thurſday Night.

L. C. J. We do all know they were pleaded to the laſt Term; and you have had all this Vacation, to conſider of them: And we have indulged you beyond the ordinary Time.

Otes. My Lord, I deſire but a Day or two more.

L. C. J. No, we cannot do it: We have done more already than we ordinarily do. Perſons that are Convicted uſe to have but four Days allowed them to move in Arreſt of Judgment; but you, inſtead of having but four Days, after had eight.

Otes. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to give me time till Monday.

L. C. J. I tell you, We cannot do it. If Mr. Wallop have any thing to ſay for you, we'll hear him.

Mr. Wallop. I have nothing to ſay.

Mr. At.

Mr. At. Gen. Here are four Exceptions delivered to me last Night, as made by Mr. Wallop.

L. C. J. But he says he has nothing to say. We know not whose these Exceptions are.

Otes. I do deliver in those Exceptions, my Lord: Pray let them be read.

L. C. J. Read them, Sir Samuel Astry.

Cl. of Cr. Reads. Dominus Rex versus Otes. The Defendant's Exceptions.

I. That a Witness, sworn in the behalf of the King in a Process of High Treason, cannot be punished for Perjury by the King.

II. That it does not appear, that the Indictments of Ireland, &c. found in Middlesex, were legally transmitted into London; and consequently, all the Proceedings thereupon were Coram non Judice.

III. That the Perjuries assign'd, are in Matters foreign to the Issue.

IV. It is Resolutio Signat' in that part of the Indictment, that mentions what the Defendant swore; and in the Perjury assigned 'tis Resolutio Signand'; and it is no good Assignment of the Perjury.

Mr. Just. Withins. These are doughty Exceptions indeed.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, What say you unto them?

Mr. At. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think I need not say much to them; the first Exception is a plain Mistake of the Indictment: For had Mr. Otes been indicted upon the Statute, it had been something; but at the Common Law certainly he may be prosecuted by the King, tho' he was Witness for the King before. As to the second, That it does not appear Ireland's Indictment was well transmitted from Middlesex to London; that sure is well enough: For after it is recited, that they were so and so indicted, it does set forth, that the Tryals were had upon Records there depending before the Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-delivery; and it shall be taken, that they were well brought before them. As to the third Exception, That the Perjuries assigned are foreign to the Matter in Issue; that is not so: For it is apparent, one of the Indictments is in the express Point of the great Treason charged against them; that is, the Consult of the 24th of April. And as to the second Indictment, it appeared upon the Evidence, That there was a treasonable Meeting sworn in August; and he swore Ireland was here in Town in the beginning of August, and in the beginning of September. And then for the fourth Matter, That he swore he saw them sign it; and the Perjury assigned is, That he did not carry it to be signed; that receives a plain Answer: For we alledge, he falsly and corruptly swore that he was present, and that he carried the Resolution to be signed, and he saw them sign the Resolution. Now, in these two things, we have laid the Perjury; 1. We say he was not there: And 2. He carried no such Resolution to be signed: Indeed, we do not say that he did not see them signed, nor we need not; for if he were not there, nor did carry it, he could not see them sign it. There is nothing in the Exceptions, my Lord; and therefore I pray your Judgment.

L. C. J. Is there any body of Counsel for Mr. Otes, that will say any thing to these Exceptions?

Otes. I pray, my Lord, that I may have liberty but till Monday, for my Counsel to prepare.

L. C. J. No, we cannot do it: Indeed, if there had been any colour or weight in the Exceptions, it might have been something; tho' we have indulg'd, in this Case already, more than ever we used to do in Cases of this nature; for it is known to every body that knows any thing of the Course and Practice of the Court, That after Conviction no more than four Days are allowed to move in Arrest of Judgment: And being the Practice of the Court, it is the Law of the Court; and I am sure, as little Favour ought to be shewn in a Case of Perjury, as in any Case whatsoever: But yet, however, because he should not think that the Extremity of the Law was aimed at by the Court in this Case, and he hindered in his legal Defence, the Court did indulge him more time than is usually granted in such Cases. Now, as for the Exceptions, certainly they are very frivolous.

For the First, It would be admirable Doctrine indeed, in case it should obtain, That if a Man be a Witness in any Case for the King, and forswear himself, he should not be prosecuted for Perjury at the King's Suit: For we know that no Man can be prosecuted for his Life, (except it be in Cases of Appeal) but at the Suit of the King; and to be sure, all Prosecutions for Treason must be at his Suit. If then Witnesses come and forswear themselves, to take away Men's Lives, and they should not be called in question for it, criminally, by the King; That were a fine way to sanctify the greatest Villainy, and make the Process of Law to become an Instrument of the most infamous Cruelty in the World. I presume, no Gentleman at the Bar would think that an Exception fit to put his Hand to.

Then as to the Second, That the Perjury is not assigned in Points material to the Issue, that is plainly otherwise; for the time must needs be very material, because it was impossible that Mr. Ireland could be guilty of the Treason sworn against him, at his Chamber in Russel-street, between the 8th and 12th of August, if he were not in Town between the 8th and 12th of August: Nor could he be privy to the Treason sworn by Bedloe, the latter end of August, or the beginning of September, in Harcourt's Chamber, if he were out of Town from the 3d of August till the 14th of September; and therefore both those Perjuries were in the very Points in Issue.

And then for the 24th of April, which is the main Perjury of all; It is not laid in this Indictment, That there was no Consult of the Jesuits upon that Day: nor is there any notice taken, That there was no Consult at the White-Horse Tavern; but it says only, that Otes did swear, there was a Consult there, and that he was present at it; and that he saw the Resolution written down by Mico, if I do not misremember the Name: And that upon the 24th of April, he went with it from Chamber to Chamber, to have them sign it. And then comes the Indictment, and assigns the Perjury, Ubi revera he was not at the White-Horse Tavern that Day; and I think it is pretty plain he was not, for he was then at St. Omers.

Then admitting all that Matter about the signing of the Resolution, to be out of Doors, a plain Perjury is assign'd and prov'd. For it was most proper for them to lay it as they did; and so it was in the other Point too, He swore he carried the Resolution from Chamber to Chamber, and saw it signed. Now, say they, He did not carry it from Chamber to Chamber, to be signed; and if so, then he could not see it

it ſigned; and it will all be well enough ſure. And if any one part of the Oath he ſwore proves falſe, that is ſufficient to maintain this Verdict; and 'tis notoriouſly plain, it was falſe throughout.

And of this Matter he now ſtands Convicted, upon as full and plain an Evidence as ever was given in any Caſe in the World; and I am ſorry to think that any Man, who is guilty of ſuch an Offence, ſhould continue ſo obſtinate and hardened in Villany as he appears to be.

But I think it not amiſs for me to ſay ſomething upon this occaſion, for the Satisfaction of ſome that hear me; and for an Example for the future. The Crime whereof this Man ſtands Convicted, is certainly a very heinous one, attended with ſuch diſmal Conſequences that enſued upon it, that I think no Man can have a true Chriſtian Spirit in him, but he muſt begin to melt with the Conſideration of the great Miſchiefs his Perjury has brought upon himſelf and us: It has brought the Guilt of innocent Blood upon many; to be ſure it hath on his own Head, and I pray God deliver all Men from having any Hand in innocent Blood.

And as the Crime is great, ſo it is to be known, that a proportionable Puniſhment of that Crime can ſcarce by our Law, as it now ſtands, be inflicted upon him. But that you may ſee we have conſidered how to puniſh it, as ſuch a Crime does deſerve; We have conſulted with all the Judges of England, that if the Law would allow it, he might have ſuch a Judgment for this heinous Offence, as might be proper to terrify all others from committing the like again. For Puniſhment is not intended only for the ſake of the Offender, to reward him according to his Deſerts; but it has a Proſpect alſo of Example and Terror to all others, that they ſhould take care how they offend in any ſuch manner, and that is as conſiderable a part of the End of the Law as any other.

Gentlemen, It is known, that by the Old Laws of England Perjury was puniſhed with Death; it grew a little more moderate afterwards, not to make the Crime the leſs, but becauſe of the Danger there might be of Malice of ſome revengeful Perſons, by endeavouring by Perjury to Convict others of Perjury. But the next Step was cutting out of the Tongue, to ſhew that the Law in all Ages had an Abhorrency of falſe Oaths, and puniſhed that impious Crime of Perjury with the moſt terrible Puniſhments.

Since that time our Anceſtors have yet been more moderate, and have not extended the Judgment to Life and Member; but by the unanimous Opinion of all the Judges of England, whom we purpoſely conſulted with upon this Occaſion, It is conceived, That by the Law, Crimes of this nature are left to be puniſhed according to the Diſcretion of this Court, ſo far as that the Judgment extend not to Life or Member.

And I tell you this, Gentlemen, the rather, becauſe I obſerve our Law-Books are more ſilent here, in regard the Judgments for theſe Offences are not ſo ſolemnly and particularly entered up, as they are in Caſes Capital: But they are left more diſcretionary; becauſe that Crimes of this nature may be attended with particular Circumſtances, either to aggravate, or leſſen the Puniſhment: And therefore the Puniſhment might be diſtributed accordingly.

And for that reaſon, Gentlemen, it is well known to us all, that that was the occaſion of taking away the Court of Star-Chamber, as the Preamble of the Act for taking it away does manifeſt: That inaſmuch as the Authority, for the Correction of all Offences whatſoever, was by the Common Law of this Land originally fixed in the Court of King's-Bench; and the Proceeding by Information in the Star-Chamber, when it might be by Proceſs in this Court, was look'd upon as a double way of Vexation: Therefore that Court is aboliſhed, and the Authority of the King's-Bench Court left entire. And it is notoriouſly known, how Puniſhments, of all ſorts and kinds, were inflicted by the Court of Star-Chamber for Perjury, and ſuch like Offences, while that Court was up; and ſince that time, in Fox's Caſe and others that you have heard of, it has been according to the Diſcretion of this Court, puniſhed, as ſeverely as this Court thought fit, ſo as the Sentence did not extend to Life or Member.

Now I thought it proper for me, not only for the ſake of the Caſe now before us; but alſo for your Learning ſake, to tell you, This was the Reſolution of all the Judges of England, upon Conſideration of the Precedents, and of all the Rules of Law; which have been fully debated, and conſidered of: And this, I declare, is their unanimous Opinion.

If then this be ſo, and it is left to the Diſcretion of the Court to inflict ſuch Puniſhment as they think fit; far be it from this Court at any time, as on the one ſide to inflict Puniſhment heavier than the Crimes deſerve (no, we would rather uſe Commiſeration, than extraordinary and exorbitant Severity;) ſo, on the other ſide, to let go Crimes ſo notorious and heinous as theſe, without the ſevereſt Mark that can, by Law, be put upon them. When a Perſon ſhall be convicted of ſuch a foul and malicious Perjury, as the Defendant here is, I think it is impoſſible for this Court, as the Law now ſtands, to put a Puniſhment upon him any way proportionable to the Offence, that has drawn after it ſo many horrid and dreadful Conſequences: We do therefore think fit to inflict an exemplary Puniſhment upon this villanous perjur'd Wretch, to terrify others for the future; which is not my part to pronounce: But what it is, my Brother will tell you.

Mr. At. Gen. My Lord, You will be pleaſed to remember there are two Judgments.

L. C. J. There are ſo, we know it very well, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. At. Gen. That which was tryed firſt, was about the Conſult on the 24th of April; we deſire that ſome particular Mark may be ſet upon that Day.

Then the Judges conſulted a little together, and Mr. Juſtice Withins pronounced the Sentence thus.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Titus Otes, You are Convicted upon Two Indictments for Perjury; I ſay, for Perjury: I muſt repeat the Word twice, becauſe you are doubly Convicted. One of the greateſt Offences, that our Law has Cognizance of; 'tis ſo in its own Nature: But your Perjury has has all the Aggravations that can be thought of to heighten it. If a Man kills another with his Sword, and there be forethought Malice in the Caſe, he is to be hang'd for it: But when a Man ſhall draw innocent Blood upon himſelf by a malicious, premeditated, falſe Oath, there is not only Blood in the Caſe, but likewiſe Perjury, corrupt, malicious Perjury: I know not how I can ſay, but, That the Law is defective that ſuch a one is not to be hang'd. For, if we conſider thoſe dreadful Effects which have followed upon your Perjury, we muſt conclude our Law defective; they are ſuch, as no Chriſtian's Heart can think of, without bleeding for that innocent Blood which was ſhed by your Oath; and every knowing Man believes, and every honeſt Man grieves for. God be thanked, our Eyes are now opened; and indeed we muſt have been incurably blind, if they had not been opened firſt by the Contradictions, Improbabilities, and Impoſſibilities in your own Teſtimony; but likewiſe by the poſitive, plain, direct and full Proof of forty-ſeven Witneſſes to one particular Point: Againſt whom you had not one Word to object, but they were Papiſts and Roman Catholicks; which is no Objection at all: Tho' at the ſame time, it did appear, that nine or ten of them were Proteſtants of the Church of England. That was all you had to ſay; you had not one Word to juſtify your ſelf from that great and heinous Perjury you were accuſed of. I hope, I have not been thought a Man of ill Nature; and, I confeſs, nothing has been ſo great a Regret to me in my Place and Station, as to give Judgment, and pronounce the Sentence of Law againſt my Fellow-Subjects, my Fellow-Creatures: But as to you, Mr. Otes, I cannot ſay, my Fellow Chriſtian. Yet, in this Caſe, when I conſider your Offence, and the diſmal Effects that have follow'd upon it, I cannot ſay, I have any Remorſe in giving Judgment upon you. And therefore having told you my Thoughts ſhortly about your Crime, and how readily I pronounce your Sentence; I ſhall now declare the Judgment of the Court upon you. And it is this:

Firſt, The Court does Order for a Fine, That you pay a Thouſand Marks upon each Indictment.

Secondly, That you be ſtrip'd of all your Canonical Habits.

Thirdly, The Court does award, That you ſtand upon the Pillory, and in the Pillory, here before Weſtminſter-Hall Gate, upon Monday next, for an Hour's time, between the Hours of ten and twelve; with a Paper over your Head (which you muſt firſt walk with round about to all the Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall) declaring your Crime. And that is upon the firſt Indictment.

Fourthly, (On the ſecond Indictment.) Upon Tueſday, you ſhall ſtand upon, and in the Pillory, at the Royal Exchange in London, for the ſpace of an Hour, between the Hours of twelve and two; with the ſame Inſcription.

You ſhall upon the next Wedneſday be whipp'd from Aldgate to Newgate.

Upon Friday, you ſhall be whipp'd from Newgate to Tyburn, by the Hands of the Common Hangman.

But, Mr. Otes, we cannot but remember, there were ſeveral particular Times you ſwore falſe about: And therefore, as Annual Commemorations, that it may be known to all People as long as you live, We have taken ſpecial Care of you for an Annual Puniſhment.

Upon the 24th of April every Year, as long as you live, you are to ſtand upon the Pillory, and in the Pillory, at Tyburn, juſt oppoſite to the Gallows, for the ſpace of an Hour, between the Hours of ten and twelve.

You are to ſtand upon, and in the Pillory, here at Weſtminſter-Hall Gate, every 9th of Auguſt, in every Year, ſo long as you live. And that it may be known what we mean by it, 'tis to remember, what he ſwore about Mr. Ireland's being in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt.

You are to ſtand upon, and in the Pillory, at Charing-croſs, on the 10th of Auguſt, every Year, during your Life, for an Hour, between ten and twelve.

The like over-againſt the Temple Gate, upon the 11th.

And upon the 2d of September, (which is another notorious Time, which you cannot but be remember'd of) you are to ſtand upon, and in the Pillory, for the ſpace of one Hour, between twelve and two, at the Royal Exchange: And all this you are to do every Year, during your Life; and to be committed cloſe Priſoner, as long as you live.

This I pronounce to be the Judgment of the Court upon you, for your Offences. And I muſt tell you plainly, If it had been in my Power to have carried it further, I ſhould not have been unwilling to have given Judgment of Death upon you: For, I am ſure, you deſerve it.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, We will take care, that the Clerk ſhall diſtinguiſh the Judgments in the Entries.

Then the Priſoner was taken away.

THE

TRYAL

OF THE LADY

ALICE LISLE.

On Thurſday the 27th of Auguſt, 1685. the Grand Jury for the County of Southampton, at the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol-Delivery, holden for the ſaid County at the City of Wincheſter, upon ſpecial Commiſſion from his Majeſty for thoſe Purpoſes, found an Indictment of High Treaſon againſt Alice Liſle, Widow, then in Cuſtody in the County Gaol; Upon which ſhe was Arraigned and Try'd in manner following.

Cl. of Ar. ALICE LISLE, Hold up thy Hand.

[Which ſhe did.

Thou ſtandeſt here Indicted by the Name of Alice Liſle, of the Pariſh of Ellingham, in the County of Southampton, Widow; For that thou, as a falſe Traytor againſt the moſt illuſtrious and moſt excellent Prince James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, thy ſupream and natural Lord, the Fear of God in thy Heart not having, nor weighing the Duty of thy Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, the Love and true, due and natural Obedience which a true and faithful Subject of our ſaid Lord the King, towards him our ſaid Lord the King ſhould, and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing, and with all thy might intending the Peace and common Tranquility of this Kingdom of England to diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to ſtir up and move, and the Government of our ſaid Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to ſubvert, and our ſaid Lord the King from the Title, Honour and Regal Name of the Imperial Crown of this his Kingdom of England to depoſe, caſt down and deprive, and our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put, the 28*th* Day of July, in the firſt Year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. at the Pariſh of Ellingham aforeſaid in the County aforeſaid, well knowing one John Hicks, of Keinſham in the County of Somerſet, Clerk, to be a falſe Traytor, and as a falſe Traytor traiterouſly to have conſpired and imagined the Death and Deſtruction of our ſaid Lord the King, and War, Rebellion and Inſurrection againſt our ſaid Lord the King within this Kingdom of England traiterouſly to have levied and raiſed: Thou the ſaid Alice Liſle afterwards, to wit, the ſame 28*th* day of July, in the firſt year of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the King that now is, at the Pariſh of Ellingham aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, the ſaid John Hicks in thy Dwelling-Houſe, ſituate at the Pariſh aforeſaid in the County aforeſaid, ſecretly, wickedly and traiterouſly didſt entertain, conceal, comfort, uphold and maintain; and that thou the ſaid Alice Liſle then and there, for the comforting, upholding and maintaining of the aforeſaid John Hicks, Meat and Drink unto the ſaid John Hicks then and there maliciouſly and traiterouſly didſt give and deliver, and cauſe to be given and delivered, againſt the Duty of thy Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. How ſayeſt thou Alice Liſle, art thou Guilty of the High Treaſon contained in this Indictment, or Not Guilty?

Liſle. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, By whom wilt thou be Tryed?

Liſle. By God and my Countrey.

Cl. of Ar. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Then Proclamation was made for the Jurors impanell'd to try the Iſſue between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner at the Bar to appear. And the Priſoner deſiring, by reaſon of her Age and Infirmities (being thick of hearing) ſome Friends of her's might be allow'd to ſtand by her, and inform her of what paſs'd in the Court; one Matthew Brown was nam'd, and allow'd of by the Court to give her all Aſſiſtance that he could in that matter. Then the Names of the Jurors were call'd over, and the Appearance Recorded: And it being a Cauſe of great Expectation and Moment, the Lord Chief Juſtice order'd the Sheriff to take care, that a very ſubſtantial Jury ſhould be Returned of the beſt Quality in the County.

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made in uſual manner, and the Priſoner was bid to look to her Challenges, and the Jury was Sworn in this Order.

Cl. of Ar. Alice Liſle, Hold up thy Hand: You Gentlemen of the Jury that are Sworn, look upon the Priſoner and hearken to her Charge: She ſtands indicted by the Name of Alice Liſle, &c. Upon this Indictment ſhe hath been Arraigned, and upon that Arraignment ſhe has pleaded thereunto, Not Guilty; and for her Tryal has put her ſelf upon God and the Countrey, which Countrey you are: Your Charge is to inquire, whether ſhe be Guilty of the High Treaſon whereof ſhe is indicted in manner and form as ſhe ſtands indicted, or Not Guilty: If you find her Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements ſhe had at the time of the High Treaſon committed, or at any time ſince: If you find her Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether ſhe did fly for it; if you find that ſhe did fly for it, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels ſhe had at the time of the Flight, as if you had found her Guilty: If you find her Not Guilty, nor that ſhe did fly for it, you are to ſay ſo, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mundy. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are Sworn; This is an Indictment of High Treaſon againſt Alice Liſle, the Priſoner at the Bar; and the Indictment ſets forth, That ſhe, as a falſe Traytor againſt our Sovereign Lord King James the Second, her ſupream and natural Lord, not having the Fear of God in her Heart, nor regarding the Duty of her Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the inſtigation of the Devil, and withdrawing the Love and true Obedience which ſhe owed to him as her Sovereign, and intending, as well as in her lay, to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, and to depoſe the King and put him to Death, the 28*th* day of July, in the firſt year of this King, well knowing one John Hicks, late of Keinſham in the County of Somerſet, Clerk, to be a falſe Traytor, and to have raiſed War and Rebellion againſt the King, ſhe did then at Ellingham in this County, in her Dwelling-Houſe traiterouſly entertain, conceal and comfort the ſaid John Hicks, and for his maintenance and comfort then gave him Meat and Drink. This is laid to be againſt the Duty of her Allegiance, againſt the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided: To this ſhe has pleaded Not Guilty; if we prove this Fact, you muſt find her Guilty.

Mr. Pollexfen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel in this Caſe for the King. The Priſoner that ſtands now at the Bar, Alice Liſle, is the Widow of one Liſle, who was in his Life-time ſufficiently known: The Perſon mentioned in the Indictment to be entertained and concealed by her, John Hicks, is a Conventicle-Preacher, and one, that for bringing the traiterous Purpoſes intended in this late horrid Rebellion to effect, was one of the greateſt and moſt active Inſtruments: for he was perſonally in this Rebellion, and did perſuade and exhort ſome loyal Perſons, that happened to have the misfortune of being taken Priſoners by that rebellious Crew, to quit their Duty and Allegiance to the King their Sovereign Lord, and become Partakers with them and the reſt of his traiterous Accomplices, in taking Arms under their falſe pretended Prince. This, my Lord, we ſhall prove to you by plain, evident and undeniable Teſtimony ny of thoſe very Perſons whom this Seducer thus applied himſelf to. Gentlemen, After it pleaſed God, by his Bleſſing on the victorious Arms of the King, that the Rebels were defeated, their pretended Prince and Head, with ſome of the chief of his Accomplices, were taken Priſoners, and that in a place near the Houſe where the Priſoner lived, when all the Countrey was full of hurry in purſuit after thoſe wicked Rebels: Thus, by God's Bleſſing and Providence diſſipated, and forced, like Vagabonds, to skulk up and down; then does this Hicks, having got from the Battle as far as Warminſter in the next County, ſend a Meſſenger, one Dunne, to the Priſoner's Houſe, to deſire her and requeſt her, that ſhe would receive and harbour him and his Friend (who that was will appear by and by) Mrs. Liſle returns an Anſwer by the Meſſenger, that ſhe would receive him, but does withal give particular Direction, that the time when they did come ſhould be late in the Evening; accordingly he comes in the beginning of the Night, at 10 of the Clock, booted and ſpurr'd, and brings with him another Arch-Rebel, one Nelthorp, that ſtands Outlaw'd for a moſt black and horrid Treaſon: When they come to the Priſoner's Houſe, they turn their Horſes looſe at the Gate; for the Danger was ſo great, and their Apprehenſions of being taken ſo urgent upon them to conceal and ſhift for themſelves, that they thought it convenient to let their Horſes go where they would. When they came there, the Meſſenger, as we ſhall prove by himſelf, was convey'd away to a Chamber, but Mrs. Liſle cauſes Meat and Drink to be ſet before Mr. Hicks and Nelthorp, and they ſupp'd with her, and afterwards they were lodg'd by her particular Order and Direction. The next Morning Colonel Penruddock, who had ſome intimation, in his ſearch after the Rebels, that ſome Perſons lay concealed in Mrs. Liſle's Houſe, comes thither, and tells her, after he had beſet the Houſe, Madam, You have Rebels in your Houſe, I come to ſeize them, pray deliver them up: She denied that ſhe had any in her Houſe; but upon ſearch, Hicks, and Nelthorp, and that other Fellow, the Meſſenger, were all found there, and ſhe thereupon ſecured with them. The Method wherein we ſhall give our Evidence, will be this: We ſhall firſt begin with this piece of Evidence; That we ſhall prove, that Hicks was actually in the Army and in the Rebellion; and then we ſhall prove the ſeveral ſubſequent Facts as have been opened. We deſire Mr. Pope, Mr. Fitzherbert and Mr. Taylor may be Sworn.

Liſle. My Lord, As for what is ſaid concerning the Rebellion, I can aſſure you, I abhorr'd that Rebellion as much as any Woman in the World——

Lord Jefferies. L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Liſle, becauſe we muſt obſerve the common and uſual Methods of Tryal in your Caſe, as well as others, I muſt interrupt you now: You ſhall be fully heard when it comes to your turn to make your Defence, but any thing you ſay now before-hand is altogether irregular and improper. You, it may be, are ignorant of the Forms of Law, therefore I would inform you: You are firſt to hear what your Accuſation is; you ſhall ask any Queſtions of the Witneſſes that you will, after the King's Counſel have examined them, as they go along, and when all their Teſtimony is delivered, you ſhall be heard to make your own Defence, and have full ſcope and liberty to inlarge upon it as long as you can; it is a buſineſs that concerns you in point of Life and Death; all that you have or can value in the World lies at ſtake, and God forbid that you ſhould be hinder'd, either in time or any thing elſe whereby you may defend your ſelf; but at preſent it is not your turn to ſpeak; for the Forms of Law require your Accuſers firſt to be heard, and it is abſolutely requiſite that the uſual Forms and Methods of Law be inviolably obſerved, and be ſure it does the Priſoner no injury that the Law is kept ſo ſtrictly to; and we have that Charity, as well as Juſtice that it becomes, and is not below all Courts to have for Perſons in your Condition; and we are obliged to take care, that you ſuffer no Detriment or Injury by any illegal or irregular Proceedings: For tho' we ſit here as Judges over you by Authority from the King, yet we are accountable, not only to him, but to the King of Kings, the great Judge of Heaven and Earth; and therefore are obliged, both by our Oaths, and upon our Conſciences, to do you Juſtice, and by the Grace of God we ſhall do it, you may depend upon it: And as to what you ſay concerning your ſelf, I pray God with all my heart you may be innocent. Pray call your Witneſſes.

Mr. Pollexfen. Swear Mr. Pope, Mr. Fitzherbert, and Mr. Taylor. [Which was done.]

L. C. J. Who do you begin with?

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Pope, Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know concerning this Hicks: Pray tell your whole Knowledge.

Mr. Pope. My Lord, I had the misfortune to be taken Priſoner by Monmouth's Army, going about ſome buſineſs of my own; and after I had been taken ſome few days, we happened to be brought to Keinſham, and we were put into Sir Thomas Bridges's Stables, and kept under a Guard there: Whilſt we were there, I did ſee that Gentleman that goes by the Name of Mr. Hicks, who is now in Salisbury Gaol, and there I ſaw him yeſterday; he came and asked for the Priſoners, which were about 4 or 5 in number, and he asked them, How they did? They made him little reply: Then he deſired to know how we were dealt with; whether we were kindly uſed, or no? I replied, No, for we had had but a piece of Bread for two days: He made me anſwer, that he was ſorry for that, for it was otherwiſe intended: And there was with him another Gentleman that was called the King's Chaplain, that is, the Duke of Monmouth's; and afterwards he pretended he would do us a kindneſs in ſpeaking to the King (as he called him) for us. He talked with us ſome little time, and by and by he began to ask us what was the reaſon that we were there; we told him, we were taken Priſoners; upon which, ſaith he, This King (meaning, as I ſuppoſe, the late Duke of Monmouth) is a good King, and a Proteſtant; and a great deal to that purpoſe, with ſome reflecting Words on the Government, and upon the Perſon of the King; and he told us, he wonder'd what we had to ſay for our ſelves, being Proteſtants, that we did what we did in ſerving a Popiſh Prince, and not obeying a Proteſtant one. This is the Subſtance of what I have to ſay upon this matter.

L. C. J. Tho' you were pleaſed to phraſe it, Sir, in the beginning of your Teſtimony, a Misfortune that you were taken Priſoner by the Rebels, yet, I ſuppoſe, you could not be without the Conſolation of a good Conſcience, that you ſuffered in the way of doing your Duty.

Mr. Pope. My Lord, I am very well ſatisfied I did ſuffer in a good Cauſe.

L. C. J. There is one piece of Happineſs in it; that by that means you are able to give this Teſtimony this day, and do the King this piece of Service. But pray Sir let me ask you this Queſtion; Are you ſure the Man you ſaw yeſterday at Salisbury, is the ſame Man that you ſpoke with at Keinſham, that goes by the Name of Hicks?

Mr. Pope. Yes, my Lord; and when I was there yeſterday with him, I asked him whether he knew me; and told him, ſaid I, you may well remember you ſee me at Keinſham: Saith he, I do not remember that ever I ſaw your Face before; ſaid I, you remember Sir Thomas Bridges's Stables there? Said he, I remember I did ſee ſome Priſoners; ſaid I, was not it there you ſaw me, and had ſuch a Diſcourſe with me? He ſeemed to deny it, but I told him, a Man of your Coat ſhould not tell Untruths, you cannot but remember you ſaw me there; ſaith he, I will recollect my Memory if I can; and he afterwards ſent to the George in Salisbury for me, and then he told me, he did recollect that he ſaw and talked with ſuch a Perſon there.

Mr. Rumſey. Sir, I would ask you this one Queſtion; Did you ſee him in the Army about the time of the Fight?

Mr. Pope. I think I ſaw him about a day or two before.

L. C. J. Had he any Weapon on?

Mr. Pope. I think not, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. Our next Witneſs is Mr. Fitzherbert. Pray, Sir, will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of this Hicks.

Mr. Fitzherbert. My Lord, During the time that I was a Priſoner with this Gentleman at Keinſham, the 25*th* of June, I ſaw this Man, John Hicks, who held a Diſcourſe with Mr. Pope near an Hours time, diſparaging the Government and his Majeſty, and extolling the Duke of Monmouth, what a brave Prince, and how good a Proteſtant he was.

L. C. J. Then he was among them, was he?

Mr. Fitzherbert. Yes, my Lord, he was, and I ſaw him yeſterday at Salisbury.

L. C. J. Is that the ſame man that you ſaw in Monmouth's Army?

Mr. Fitzherbert. Yes, he owns himſelf to be the ſame man.

Mr. Pollexfen. How often did you ſee him there beſides that time when he diſcourſed with Mr. Pope?

Mr. Fitzherbert. I ſaw him ſometimes out of the Town, but I never diſcourſed him.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him there before or after that Diſcourſe?

Mr. Fitzherbert. It was after.

L. C. J. Would the Priſoner ask this Witneſs, or the other, any Queſtions?

Liſle. No, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. Then, Mr. Taylor, what ſay you to the matter?

Mr. Taylor. My Lord, I ſaw him at the ſame time that theſe Gentlemen ſpeak of, at Sir Thomas Bridges's at Keinſham.

Mr. Pollexfen. Were you a Priſoner there, Sir?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, I was.

Mr. Pollexfen. What place was it you ſaw him in?

Mr. Taylor. It was in the Stables the firſt time that I ſaw him.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe had you with him? What did he ſay to you?

Mr. Taylor. He ſaid, he wonder'd at us that we ſhould take up Arms againſt ſo good a Prince and a Proteſtant as the Duke of Monmouth, and againſt the Proteſtant Religion, and hold up with Popery: Saith he, York is but a Papiſt; and a great many ſuch Words.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him afterwards?

Mr. Taylor. Yes, my Lord, but I cannot tell particularly the Time and Place; up and down the Army.

L. C. J. Did you ſee him at Salisbury?

Mr. Taylor. Yes.

L. C. J. Is that the ſame man?

Mr. Taylor. Yes it is.

Mr. Pollexfen. Next, my Lord, we come to prove the Meſſage and Correſpondence between this ſame Hicks and the Priſoner Mrs. Liſle.

Mr. Jennings. Swear Mr. James Dunne.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Pollexfen. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to obſerve, the Times will fall out to be very material in this Caſe: The Battle at Kings Edgmore was the 6*th* of July; 3 or 4 days after was the taking of Monmouth and my Lord Grey at Ringwood; upon the 26*th* day of July, 10 or 12 days after the taking of Monmouth, was this Meſſage ſent by Dunne to Mrs. Liſle; ſo we call Dunne to prove what Meſſage he carried upon the 26*th*, what Anſwer was returned; he will tell you, that Tueſday was the time appointed for them to come, in the Night, and all the other Circumſtances: But withal I muſt acquaint your Lordſhip, that this Fellow, Dunne, is a very unwilling Witneſs; and therefore, with ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip, we do humbly deſire your Lordſhip would pleaſe to examine him a little the more ſtrictly.

L. C. J. You ſay well: Hark you, Friend, I would take notice of ſomething to you by the way, and you would do well to mind what I ſay to you. According as the Counſel that are here for the King ſeem to inſinuate, you were employ'd as a Meſſenger between theſe Perſons; one whereof has already been proved a notorious Rebel, and the other is the Priſoner at the Bar, and your Errand was to procure a Reception at her Houſe for him.

Dunne. My Lord, I did ſo.

L. C. J. Very well. Now mark what I ſay to you, Friend: I would not by any means in the World endeavour to fright you into any thing, or any ways tempt you to tell an Untruth, but provoke you to tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, that is the Buſineſs we come about here. Know, Friend, there is no Religion that any man can pretend to, can give a countenance to Lying, or can diſpenſe with telling the Truth: Thou haſt a precious immortal Soul, and there is nothing in the World equal

equal to it in value: There is no relation to thy Miſtreſs, if ſhe be ſo; no relation to thy Friend, nay to thy Father or thy Child, nay not all the temporal Relations in the World can be equal to thy precious immortal Soul: Conſider that the great God of Heaven and Earth, before whoſe Tribunal thou, and we, and all Perſons are to ſtand at the laſt Day, will call thee to an Account for thy reſcinding his Truth, and take Vengeance of thee for every Falſhood thou telleſt. I charge thee therefore, as thou wilt anſwer it to the great God, the Judge of all the Earth, that thou do not dare to waver one tittle from the Truth, upon any Account or Pretence whatſoever: For tho' it were to ſave thy Life, yet the value of thy precious and immortal Soul, is much greater than that thou ſhouldſt forfeit it for the ſaving of any the moſt precious outward Bleſſing thou doſt enjoy; for that God of Heaven may juſtly ſtrike thee into eternal Flames, and make thee drop into the bottomleſs Lake of Fire and Brimſtone, if thou offer to deviate the leaſt from the Truth, and nothing but the Truth: According to the Command of that Oath that thou haſt taken, tell us who employ'd you, when you were employ'd, and where, who cauſed you to go on this Meſſage, and what the Meſſage was. For I tell thee God is not to be mocked, and thou canſt not deceive him, tho' thou mayſt us: But I aſſure you, if I catch you prevaricating in any the leaſt tittle (and perhaps I know more than you think I do; no, none of your Saints can ſave your Soul, nor ſhall they ſave your Body neither) I will be ſure to puniſh every variation from the Truth that you are guilty of. Now come and tell us how you came to be employ'd upon ſuch a Meſſage, what your Errand was, and what was the iſſue and reſult of it?

Dunne. My Lord, there came a man to my Houſe, and deſired me to go of a Meſſage to my Lady Liſle's.

L. C. J. Prithee tell me when it was, and what Hour of the Day?

Dunne. What, when the man came to my Houſe?

L. C. J. Yes.

Dunne. That I will, my Lord.

L. C. J. Be ſure you do, and do not ſpeak one word but what is true, and let the Truth come out o' God's Name.

Dunne. It was Friday Night.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was it?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot exactly tell that.

L. C. J. Was it after the Fight at Weſton, or before?

Dunne. It was after the Battle, my Lord.

L. C. J. How many Days after was it?

Dunne. I cannot exactly tell.

L. C. J. Was it the Friday Se'night after the Fight?

Dunne. No, it was not.

L. C. J. What was deſired of thee at that time?

Dunne. He deſired me to go of a Meſſage to my Lady Liſle's.

L. C. J. Doſt thou know what man it was that came to thee, and deſired thee to go on this Meſſage?

Dunne. My Lord, I can tell what manner of man he was.

L. C. J. Give me a Deſcription of the man?

Dunne. He was a ſhort black man.

L. C. J. You ſay he was a ſhort man?

Dunne. Yes, he was ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was he a ſwarthy, or a ruddy Complectioned man?

Dunne. He was not ruddy, but ſwarthy.

L. C. J. And what did he ſay to thee?

Dunne. He deſired me to go to my Lady Liſle's for him, for one Mr. Hicks, and I went accordingly.

L. C. J. What were you to ſay when you came there?

Mr. Pollexfen. What Reward were you to have?

Dunne. That man that came to me, promiſed me that I ſhould be well rewarded for my pains.

L. C. J. Where do you live (by the way)?

Dunne. In Warminſter Pariſh.

L. C. J. How far is it from my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. Six and twenty miles, or thereabouts.

L. C. J. You did go, you ſay? When?

Dunne. Upon the Saturday.

L. C. J. Well, we are got thus far; you went to my Lady Liſle's upon the Saturday, and from one Mr. Hicks: What was your Errand?

Dunne. To know of my Lady Liſle, whether ſhe would entertain Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. Well, now go on.

Dunne. When I came to my Lady Liſle's Houſe, I went to the Bailiff that belonged to my Lady Liſle.

L. C. J. Ay, who was that Bailiff? Tell us his Name? I love to know Men's Names.

Dunne. His Name is Carpenter, I think.

L. C. J. Well, and what did you ſay to him?

Dunne. I asked him, whether my Lady would entertain one Hicks, or no: He told me he'd have nothing to do with it; but ſent me to my Lady, and to my Lady I went; and when I came, I asked my Lady, whether ſhe would entertain one Mr. Hicks, or no? She ſaid, ſhe did not know but ſhe might.

L. C. J. Well, what then?

Dunne. My Lord, I'll tell you.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee take time to recollect thy ſelf; but be ſure thou ſpeak nothing but the Truth. What ſaid my Lady to thee?

Dunne. My Lady ſaid, they might come to her Houſe: And upon thoſe Terms I went away home again, and returned that Anſwer to the Meſſenger that came to me. I came home on the Sunday Night, and that Meſſage I delivered unto him, and told him, that upon Tueſday Night they might come to my Lady's.

L. C. J. You told him, you ſay, they might come on Tueſday?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. C. J. Therefore I would fain know from you, how you came to tell him, They might come upon Tueſday? For you ſaid juſt now, my Lady's Anſwer was, That ſhe did not know but ſhe might entertain him. Had you any ſuch Direction from Carpenter, or any one elſe, to tell him, that they might come on Tueſday?

Dunne. I had ſuch Directions from my Lady.

L. C. J. Very well; then let us know what were the particular Directions ſhe gave; tell us what further Directions you had from her?

Dunne.

Dunne. I will, my Lord, preſently, when I have recollected my ſelf.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee compoſe thy ſelf, recollect thy ſelf.

[Then he pauſes for a good while.

L. C. J. Come now, tell us, Did ſhe give you any Directions what time of the Day they might come thither, remember your ſelf well, and tell us what ſhe ſaid to you?

Dunne. My Lord, I will as near as I can, ſpeak the Truth.

L. C. J. Ay, in God's Name, let's have the Truth whatſoever comes on it?

Dunne. I will, my Lord.

L. C. J. Come then, What time did ſhe give Directions that they ſhould come?

Dunne. On Tueſday in the Evening.

L. C. J. Upon your Oath, Did ſhe ſay Tueſday in the Evening?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, ſhe did.

L. C. J. What time in the Evening, early or late?

Dunne. She did not give any Directions at all about that, but only in the Evening.

L. C. J. What elſe did ſhe ſay to you, tell us all the Diſcourſe that paſſed between you?

Dunne. She ſaid nothing elſe that I remember, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee, how did ſhe ſay ſhe would receive him, tell us what Words ſhe uſed, for thou muſt needs imagine, we do ſuppoſe there muſt needs be ſome longer Diſcourſe between you, than what you talk of.

Dunne. All that ſhe ſaid was, ſhe would entertain him.

L. C. J. Him, Who?

Dunne. Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. Juſt now you talked of them, and, they; Did you mention no body to her but Mr. Hicks?

Dunne. My Lord, I was ſent to ſee whether ſhe would receive Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. Prithee Friend mind what thou haſt ſaid, and recollect thy ſelf, I'll repeat it to thee, becauſe thou ſhalt ſee that I remember it all very well, It ſeems that a Man, a ſhort black Man came to your Houſe in Warminſter Pariſh to get you to go for a Meſſage to Mrs. Liſle's, to know whether ſhe would entertain one Hicks, and that you went upon the Saturday, and firſt, you met with Carpenter, and ask'd him that Queſtion, whether his Lady would entertain one Mr. Hicks, and he told you he would have nothing to do with it, and thereupon you went to Mrs. Liſle and asked her the Queſtion, and ſhe told you that you ſhould tell the Man that they ſhould come the Tueſday following, and come in the Evening, and ſhe would entertain him: Is not this what you have ſaid?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it is.

L. C. J. Well then, now let us know what other Diſcourſe you had with her?

Dunne. My Lord, I do not remember any thing more.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray Mr. Dunne, did ſhe ask you any Queſtions whether you knew Mr. Hicks or no?

Dunne. Nothing at all of that, that I remember.

Mr. Coriton. Did ſhe believe that you knew Mr. Hicks?

Dunne. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mr. Coriton. Do you believe that ſhe knew him before?

Dunne. I cannot tell truly.

L. C. J. Why, doſt thou think ſhe would entertain any one that ſhe had no Knowledge of meerly upon thy Meſſage? Mr. Dunne, Mr. Dunne have a Care, it may be more is known of this Matter than you think for.

Dunne. My Lord, I tell you the Truth.

L. C. J. Ay, be ſure you do, do not let me take you prevaricating?

Dunne. My Lord, I ſpeak nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Well, I only bid you have a Care, Truth never wants a Subterfuge, it always loves to appear naked, it needs no Enamel, nor any Covering; but Lying, and Snivelling, and Canting, and Hickſing, always appears in Maſquerade. Come, go on with your Evidence?

Dunne. My Lord, I ſay I went back again and returned my Anſwer to the ſame Man that brought the Meſſage to me.

L. C. J. Pray let me ask you one Queſtion; Were you got to your Houſe before you found him, or was he waiting there for you?

Dunne. He came to my Houſe after I came home.

L. C. J. It was the ſame Man you ſay?

Dunne. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Had he no Company with him neither time?

Dunne. No.

L. C. J. Well, and what Anſwer did you return him?

Dunne. I told him, my Lady ſaid ſhe would entertain Mr. Hicks; he asked when he might come up, I told him upon Tueſday, and upon Tueſday they came to my Houſe.

L. C. J. What time did they come to your Houſe?

Dunne. About ſeven of the Clock in the Morning.

L. C. J. What Day of the Month was it?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot readily tell what Day of the Month it was?

L. C. J. Was it one or two that came to thy Houſe?

Dunne. My Lord, there were three in all.

L. C. J. Who were thoſe three, prithee?

Dunne. My Lord, there was the little black Man that brought the Meſſage, and two other People.

L. C. J. Prithee deſcribe what two other People theſe were?

Dunne. One was a full fat black Man, and the other was a thin black Man.

L. C. J. Who was that thin black Man?

Dunne. My Lord, I did not know him.

L. C. J. Did you not fanſy which was Hicks?

Dunne. My Lord, I never knew any of their Names.

L. C. J. How long did they ſtay at your Houſe?

Dunne. About three Hours.

L. C. J. When did you go away from thence?

Dunne. About eleven of the Clock.

L. C. J. Which way did you go then?

Dunn. We went through Deverel, and from Deverel to Chilmark, and from Chilmark to Sutton, and from Sutton to the Plain, and then one Barter met me; I knew the Way no further, and he was to ſhew me the Way from thence.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Prithee hold, before thou goeſt any further, I deſire to be ſatisfied about a Queſtion or two; Doſt thou ſay thou didſt not know the Way?

Dunne. No, my Lord, after I came to the Plain.

L. C. J. How didſt thou find the Way when thou wentſt on thy Meſſage firſt?

Dunne. My Lord, after I came to Salisbury-Plain, I met with one Barter, and he ſhewed me the Way.

L. C. J. Where is that Barter?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we have him here, we ſhall examine him by and by, there he ſtands. [Being a very luſty Man.]

L. C. J. Sure that was not the little Man thou ſpokeſt of?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Prithee let me underſtand thee then if I can: Thou didſt ſay at firſt there was only a little Man with a black Beard that was concerned with thee about that Meſſage; now thou talkeſt of ſome Guide that thou hadſt, prithee who did guide thee, let us know?

Dunne. My Lord, I ſay I went ſo far as Fovant, and ſo to Chalk, but when I came upon the Plain I did not know my Way to my Lady Liſles's Houſe at Moyle's Court, I asked twenty People in the Street which was my way, but no body would tell me, at laſt I ſpoke to one John Barter to go with me to my Lady Liſle's, and he and I did agree to go together, and he ſhewed me the way and carry'd me to the Houſe.

L. C. J. Thou ſhouldſt have told us this before, Man, that we might have underſtood it. Where did you lie upon the Saturday Night?

Dunne. At Fovant.

L. C. J. I thought you had ſaid, you had come to Mrs. Liſle's on Saturday?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I did ſo, and came back to Fovant that Night.

L. C. J. And where did you lie on Sunday Night?

Dunne. I lay at my own Houſe on Sunday Night.

L. C. J. And Barter came along with you when you came on Tueſday?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. And did you go the ſame way upon the Tueſday that you went upon the Saturday?

Dunne. Do you mean, my Lord, the ſame way I came at firſt?

L. C. J. Ay.

Dunne. No, my Lord, we came to Sutton, not to Fovant.

L. C. J. Why did not you go the ſame way upon the Tueſday that you went upon the Saturday?

Dunne. Becauſe I had appointed to meet him at ſuch a Place.

L. C. J. Come, prithee anſwer me freely, and according to Truth; Who did deſire thee, or order thee to go another way than that thou went'ſt at firſt? How came it to paſs? Let us know the Truth?

Dunne. My Lord, I did count that to be the nearer way, and therefore I went that way.

L. C. J. That cannot be the Reaſon, for thou wouldſt have gone the neareſt way at firſt, I believe, come, tell us truly?

Dunne. My Lord, I know no other Reaſon.

L. C. J. Come, tell us what Towns and Villages you did go through then upon Saturday?

Dunne. My Lord, I went through ſeveral, Chilmark and Fovant.

L. C. J. And what Villages did you go thro' upon the Tueſday?

Dunne. I went through moſt of the ſame Towns.

L. C. J. What, and at Noon-day too?

Dunne. Yes.

L. C. J. And how chanc'd when you went that way, that you appointed Barter to meet you in another Place at Fovant?

Dunne. Becauſe I did not know the way afterwards.

L. C. J. Then let me ask you another Queſtion: Did you go the ſame way from Fovant to my Lady Liſle's as you went before?

Dunne. No, we did not.

L. C. J. How came that to paſs?

Dunne. I would have went the ſame way, but they would not.

L. C. J. Which way did you go then?

Dunne. We went through Chalke and ſo thro' Rocksborne, and from Rocksborne to Fording-Bridge, and ſo to Moyle's Court.

L. C. J. How far is this about now?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot readily tell.

L. C. J. How many Miles is it from Fovant to my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. My Lord, it is about fourteen or fifteen.

L. C. J. How many Miles was it the way that you went upon the Tueſday?

Dunne. It might be twenty, my Lord, for ought I know.

L. C. J. What was the Reaſon that Barter went that way?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Pray let me ask you another Queſtion then; What Diſcourſe had you with Barter? Or what Bargain did you make with him for ſhewing you the way? For you would not ask him to go with you without promiſing him ſome Reward.

Dunne. My Lord, I asked him to ſhew me the way to my Lady Liſle's Houſe, and told him I was going for one Hicks, and ſo he took his Horſe and went with me.

L. C. J. What Reward did you promiſe him?

Dunne. Half a Crown, my Lord, and half a Crown I gave him.

L. C. J. Well, that was the firſt time, and what did you promiſe him the ſecond time?

Dunne. The ſecond time one of the two Men gave him five Shillings.

L. C. J. What Man was it?

Dunne. It was the black Man.

L. C. J. What was his Name? It was not the little black Man that came firſt to deſire you to go on the Meſſage, was it?

Dunne. No, my Lord, it was not he that ſpoke to me firſt.

L. C. J. Did not that little Man that ſpoke to you firſt, promiſe you a Reward for your Pains?

Dunne. No, my Lord, that Man never promiſed me any thing.

L. C. J. Did he go along with you?

Dunne. No, my Lord, he did not.

L. C. J. Who were the two Men that went with you?

Dunne. Hicks and Nelsborp.

L. C. J. Which of them two was it that gave Barter five Shillings?

Dunne.

Dunne. It was Nelthorp that gave him five Shillings.

L. C. J. How do you know his Name was Nelthorp?

Dunne, At my Lady Liſle's, after he was taken I knew his Name to be Nelthorp.

L. C. J. What Name did he go by before?

Dunne. Were I to die preſently, my Lord, I cannot tell it.

L. C. J. Well, you went ſo much about: What time did you get to my Lady Liſle's upon the Tueſday?

Dunne. About nine or ten of the Clock at Night, my Lord.

L. C. J. Let us conſider a little; you ſay you went from your Houſe about eleven a Clock: What time did you get to Fovant?

Dunne. About two or three of the Clock, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did you ſtay by the way?

Dunne. No where, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you ride on ſtill?

Dunne Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it before nine or after nine that you came to my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. I believe it was rather after nine, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who came firſt to my Lady Liſle's, prithee tell us frankly?

Dunne. My Lord, we came all three together to the Gate.

L. C. J. Who knocked at the Gate, you or Barter, or who elſe?

Dunne. Barter, my Lord, was diſcharg'd before we came near the Houſe, about eight Miles from it.

L. C. J. Sayſt thou ſo; How came you then to know the way without him?

Dunne. My Lord, I'll tell you, they loſt their way, and they ſent me down to Marton, and there I went to a Man, my Lord, and told him one Hicks deſired to ſpeak with him.

L. C. J. Thou ſayſt well, now muſt I know that Man's Name.

Dunne. The Man's Name that I went to at Marton, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, and look to it, you tell me right, for it may be I know the Man already, and can tell at what end of the Town the Man lives too.

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell his Name preſently.

L. C. J. Oh! pray now, do not ſay ſo, you muſt tell us, indeed you muſt think of his Name a little.

Dunne. My Lord, if I can mind it I will.

L. C. J. Prithee do.

Dunne. His Name, truly my Lord, I cannot rightly tell for the preſent.

L. C. J. Prithee recollect thy ſelf, indeed thou canſt tell us if thou wilt.

Dunne. My Lord, I can go to the Houſe again if I were at Liberty.

L. C. J. I believe it, and ſo could I, but really neither you nor I can be ſpared at preſent, therefore prithee do us the Kindneſs now to tell us his Name?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I cannot mind his Name at preſent.

L. C. J. Alack a-day, we muſt needs have it, come, refreſh your Memory a little.

Dunne. My Lord, I think his Name was Fane.

L. C. J. Thou ſayſt right, his name was Fane truly, thou ſeeſt I know ſomething of the Matter: Well, what didſt thou ſay to him?

Dunne. I told him I came from one Mr. Hicks.

L. C. J. And what didſt thou deſire of him?

Dunne. I told him that one Mr Hicks deſired to ſpeak with him, and when he came out to Mr. Hicks, Mr. Hicks did deſire him to ſhew him the Way to Mrs. Liſle's.

L. C. J. Now tell us what kind of Man that was that did deſire this of Mr. Fane?

Dunne. My Lord, it was the full fat black Man.

L. C. J. Now we have got him out, now we know which was Hicks: Now go on.

Dunne. My Lord, this Man went and rid along with them as far as the new Houſe that is built there, within a Mile of that Houſe Fane went along with us, and afterwards, whether Hicks or Nelthorp, or who knew the way I cannot tell, but to my Lady Liſle's we went.

L. C. J. Who directed you the way when Fane left you?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell, for my part I did not know the way.

L. C. J. Who went with you?

Dunne. None but Hicks and Nelthorp.

L. C. J. How far from my Lady's Houſe was that place where Fane left you?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot directly tell.

L. C. J. Then Hicks knew the way it ſeems from thence?

Dunne. So he might, my Lord, for ought I know, for I did not.

L. C. J. Thou art ſtrangely ſtiff, but now we are come thus far with you, tell me what Entertainment you had at my Lady Liſle's, and look to it that you be ſure to tell me Truth, for I know it to a tittle, I can aſſure you that?

Dunne. They went in before me, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who went in before you?

Dunne. Hicks and Nelthorp.

L. C. J. But the Door was ſhut when you came, was it not?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell truly.

L. C. J. Then tell me what Entertainment you had there?

Dunne. For my own part, my Lord, I carry'd a bit of Cake and Cheeſe from my own Houſe, and that I eat.

L. C. J. What became of your Companions Hicks and Nelthorp, I pray you?

Dunne. I never ſee them again till after they were taken.

L. C. J. How is that, prithee recollect thy ſelf?

Dunne. Sure, my Lord, I did not ſee them till then.

L. C. J. Who came to the Door to you?

Dunne. A young Girl, my Lord, I knew not who nor what ſhe was.

L. C. J. Did they go directly into the Houſe?

Dunne. It was dark, my Lord, I did not ſee what they did.

L. C. J. Was there never a Candle there?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. It was dark, very dark, was it not?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it was ſo.

L. C. J. Was my Lady ſtirring then?

Dunne. I did not ſee her.

L. C. J. And this is as much as you know of the Buſineſs?

Dunne.

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, this is all that I remember.

L. C. J. Well, and what hadſt thou for all thy Pains?

Dunne. Nothing but a Month's Impriſonment, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou ſeemeſt to be a Man of a great deal of Kindneſs and good Nature; for by this Story, there was a Man that thou never ſaweſt before, (for I would fain have all People obſerve what Leather ſome Mens Conſciences are made of) and becauſe he only had a black Beard and came to thy Houſe, that black Beard of his ſhould perſwade thee to go 26 Miles and give a Man half a Crown out of thy Pocket to ſhew thee thy way, and all to carry a Meſſage from a Man thou never kneweſt in thy Life, to a Woman whom thou never ſaweſt in thy Life neither, that thou ſhouldſt lie out by the way two Nights, and upon the Sunday get home, and there meet with this ſame black-bearded little Gentleman, and appoint theſe People to come to thy Houſe upon the Tueſday, and when they come, entertain them three or four Hours at thy own Houſe, and go back again ſo many Miles with them, and have no Entertainment but a piece of Cake and Cheeſe that thou broughteſt thy ſelf from Home, and have no Reward, nor ſo much as know any of the Perſons thou didſt all this for, is very ſtrange.

Dunne. My Lord, the Man that came to deſire me to go on this Meſſage ſaid that Hicks ſhould reward me and pay me for my Pains.

L. C. J. But why wouldſt thou take the word of a Man thou didſt not know?

Dunne. I was forced to take his word at that time, my Lord.

L. C. J. There was no neceſſity for that neither; no body could force thee to do it: Alack a-day; Thou ſeemeſt to be a Man of ſome conſideration: I mightily wonder thou ſhouldſt be ſo kind to People thou didſt not know, without any proſpect of Recompence whatſoever.

Dunne. All the reaſon that induced me to it was, they ſaid they were Men in Debt, and deſired to be concealed for a while.

L. C. J. Doſt thou believe that any one here believes thee: Prithee what Trade art thou?

Dunne. My Lord, I am a Baker, by Trade.

L. C. J. And wilt thou bake thy Bread at ſuch eaſie Rates, upon my word, then thou art very kind, prithee tell me, I believe thou doſt uſe to bake on Sundays, doſt thou not?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I do not.

L. C. J. Alack a day, thou art preciſe in that, but thou canſt travel on Sundays to lead Rogues into lurking Holes: It ſeemeth thou haſt a particular Kindneſs for a black Beard, that's all thy Reaſon for undertaking all this Trouble: Thou haſt told me all the Truth, haſt thou?

Dunne. I have, my Lord.

L. C. J. But I aſſure thee thy Bread is very light Weight, it will ſcarce paſs the Ballance here.

Dunne. I tell the Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. No doubt of that, but prithee tell me whoſe Horſe didſt thou ride when thou wenteſt firſt?

Dunne. The Man's Horſe that came to me to deſire me to go the Meſſage.

L. C. J. How came he to truſt thee with his Horſe?

Dunne. The Lord knows, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou ſayſt right, the Lord only knows, for by the little I know of thee I would not truſt thee with Two-pence: Whoſe Horſe didſt thou ride the ſecond time?

Dunne. My own, my Lord.

L. C. J. And where didſt thou put thy Horſe when thou cameſt to my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. In the Stable, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where did they put their Horſes?

Dunne. They left them without the Gate, I think, my Lord, I did not ſee them take them in.

L. C. J. No, thou ſaidſt it was ſo dark thou couldſt not ſee any thing: Pray were you with the two Men when they did alight?

Dunne. We did all three come together.

L. C. J. What did you give Fane for his Pains in ſhewing you the Way?

Dunne. He had nothing that I know of.

L. C. J. Well, you are the beſt natur'd and kindeſt hearted People that ever I knew: Whereabouts do you live?

Dunne. At Warminſter, near my Lord Weymouth's.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray Mr. Dunne will you anſwer me one Queſtion; Was not there ſearching at that time up and down the Country for Rebels that were fled from the Battle?

Dunne. I did hear there was, ſome were taken.

Mr. Pollexfen. But did you hear there was ſearching at that time for other of the Rebels?

Dunne. I did not hear of any near me, but there were in other Places.

L. C. J. Then it being ſuch a ſuſpicious time when that little Man with the black Beard came to thee, didſt thou not ask what that Hicks was?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. And when Mr. Hicks and the other Man that is call'd by the Name of Mr. Neltborp came to thy Houſe, didſt not thou ask their Names?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Nor didſt not thou ask upon what Occaſion they were to be conducted to my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. No, my Lord: Hicks, the fat Man, told me they were in Debt.

L. C. J. Did not the Man that firſt came to you, and employ'd you to go on this Meſſage; Did not he know Hicks?

Dunne. I cannot tell, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did not he tell you, Hicks deſired you to go, and that he was in Debt, and therefore deſired to be concealed?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, he did.

L. C. J. How came you to be ſo impudent then as to tell me ſuch a Lie?

Dunne. I beg your pardon, my Lord.

L. C. J. You beg my pardon? That is not becauſe you told me a Lie, but becauſe I have found you in a Lie. Come Sirrah, tell me the Truth; What did Hicks and Neltborp with their Horſes when they came to my Lady Liſle's?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Why, you impudent Raſcal, did not you tell me juſt now that they left them at the Door?

Dunne. My Lord, I ſaid I believ'd they might, but cannot directly tell what they did with them, I know not but one or other might have them away, but I did not ſee it.

Mr. Pollexfen. Prithee Friend tell the Truth, What did become of the Horſes?

Dunne. I cannot tell truly, my Lord, if any body had them away, I did not ſee them.

L. C. J. Where didſt thou lie that Night?

Dunne. In one of the Chambers.

L. C. J. Who ſhew'd thee the way to thy Lodging?

Dunne. The Girl.

L. C. J. Who elſe didſt thou ſee in the Houſe?

Dunne. I ſaw no body at all.

L. C. J. Then who ſhew'd thee the way to the Stable, and help'd thee with Horſe-meat?

Dunne. No body helped me with Horſe-meat.

L. C. J. Why, thy Horſe did not feed on thy Cake and Cheeſe, did he?

Dunne. There was Hay in the Rack, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was the Stable-door lock'd or open?

Dunne. The Stable-door was latch'd, and I pluck'd up the Latch.

L. C. J. How came you to know the way to the Stable then?

Dunne. Becauſe I had been there before, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou hadſt need to know it very well, for it ſeemeth thou wenteſt without a Candle or any thing in the World, and put in thy Horſe; Didſt thou ſee that Man Carpenter the Bailiff that thou ſpokeſt of?

Dunne. Mr. Carpenter gave my Horſe Hay.

L. C. J. Was there any Light in the Stable?

Dunne. Not when I put in my Horſe firſt.

L. C. J. Who brought the Light thither?

Dunne. Goodman Carpenter.

L. C. J. Did not he give thy Horſe Hay?

Dunne. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. And did he not give him Oates too?

Dunne. No, my Lord, he did not.

L. C J. Did not he conduct you into the Houſe?

Dunne. Who, my Lord?

L. C. J. That ſame Goodman Carpenter.

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you ſee any body elſe but that Girl you ſpeak of?

Dunne. My Lord, I did ſee the Girl there.

L. C. J. But you Blockhead, I ask you whether you did ſee any body elſe.

Dunne. I do not know but I might ſee Goodman Carpenter.

L. C. J. Why, thou ſaidſt he brought the Light, and gave thy Horſe Hay, but I ſee thou art ſet upon nothing but Prevarication: Sirrah, tell me plainly, Did you ſee no body elſe?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Not any body?

Dunne. No, my Lord, not any one.

L. C. J. Did you not drink in the Houſe?

Dunne. No, my Lord, not a drop.

L. C. J. Did not you call for Drink?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not, I had nothing but my Cake and Cheeſe that I brought thither my ſelf.

L. C. J. Who went up to the Chamber with you?

Dunne. The Girl, my Lord.

L. C J. And no body elſe?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was the Bed made?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. You eat nothing in the Houſe, you ſay?

Dunne. Nothing but my own Cake and Cheeſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. But you did not drink in the Houſe at all?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you drink at Marton where you did call upon Fane?

Dunne. Yes, I did, but not afterwards.

L. C. J. Did you ſee any Body there the next Morning before they were taken?

Dunne. No, my Lord, but after the Houſe was beſet, I ſaw my Lady and Mr. Hicks, and I think I ſaw Goodman Carpenter.

L. C. J. They and you were taken there together, were not you?

Dunne. Yes.

L. C. J. Did you ſee Carpenter's Wife, upon your Oath, that Night?

Dunne. My Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Nor no Woman-kind beſides the Girl you ſpeak of?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Nor no Man beſides Carpenter?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. You are ſure of this?

Dunne. I am ſo, my Lord.

L. C. J. You are ſure you did not drink there?

Dunne. I am, my Lord.

L. C. J. And you ſay he brought the Light into the Stable, and gave your Horſe Hay?

Dunne. He did, my Lord.

L. C. J. Now prithee tell me truly, where came Carpenter unto you? I muſt know the Truth of that; remember that I give you fair Warning, do not tell me a Lye, for I will be ſure to treaſure up every Lye that thou telleſt me, and thou mayſt be certain it will not be for thy Advantage; I would not terrifie thee to make thee ſay any think but the Truth: But aſſure thy ſelf I never met with a lying, ſneaking, canting Fellow, but I always treaſure up Vengeance for him, and therefore look to it that thou doſt not prevaricate with me, for to be ſure thou wilt come to the worſt of it in the end?

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell the Truth as near as I can.

L. C. J. Then tell me where Carpenter met thee?

Dunne. In the Court, my Lord.

L. C. J. Before you came to the Gate, or after?

Dunne. It was after we came to the Gate, in the Court.

L. C. J. Then tell me, and I charge you tell me true, Who was with you when Carpenter met you?

Dunne. Hicks and Nelthorp.

L. C. J. Was there any body elſe beſides them two in the Court?

Dunne. There was no body but Hicks and Nelthorp, and I and Mr. Carpenter.

L. C. J. You are ſure of that?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Conſider of it, are you ſure there was no body elſe?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I did not mind that there was any body elſe.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Recollect your ſelf, and conſider well of it.

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I do not know of any body elſe.

L. C. J. Now upon your Oath tell me truly, who it was that opened the Stable door, was it Carpenter or you?

Dunne. It was Carpenter, my Lord.

L. C. J. Why, thou vile Wretch didſt not thou tell me juſt now that thou pluck'd up the Latch? Doſt thou take the God of Heaven not to be a God of Truth, and that he is not a Witneſs of all thou ſayſt? Doſt thou think becauſe thou prevaricateſt with the Court here, thou canſt do ſo with God above who knows thy Thoughts, and it is infinite Mercy, that for thoſe Falſhoods of thine, he does not immediately ſtrike thee into Hell? Jeſus God! there is no ſort of Converſation nor human Society to be kept with ſuch People as theſe are, who have no other Religion but only in Pretence, and no way to uphold themſelves but by countenancing Lying, and Villany: Did not you tell me that you opened the Latch your ſelf, and that you ſaw no body elſe but a Girl? How durſt you offer to tell ſuch horrid Lyes in the Preſence of God and of a Court of Juſtice? Anſwer me one Queſtion more: Did he pull down the Hay or you?

Dunne. I did not pull down any Hay at all.

L. C. J. Was there any Hay pull'd down before the Candle was brought?

Dunne. No, there was not.

L. C. J. Who brought the Candle?

Dunne. Mr. Carpenter brought the Candle and Lanthorn.

L. C. J. It ſeems the Saints have a certain Charter for Lying; they may lye and cant, and deceive, and rebel, and think God Almighty takes no notice of it, nor will reckon with them for it: You ſee, Gentlemen, what a precious Fellow this is, a very pretty Tool to be imploy'd upon ſuch an Errand, a Knave that no body would truſt for half a Crown between Man and Man, but he is the fitter to be employ'd about ſuch Works; What Pains is a Man at to get the Truth out of theſe Fellows, and it is with a great deal of Labour that we can ſqueeze one Drop out of them: A Turk has more Title to an Eternity of Bliſs than theſe Pretenders to Chriſtianity, for he has more Morality and Honeſty in him. Sirrah, I charge you in the Preſence of God, tell me true, What other Perſons did you ſee that Night?

Dunne. My Lord, I did not ſee any than what I have told you already.

L. C. J. Then they went out and brought word that thou wert come, and ſo he came out to meet thee; very well: I would have every body that has but the leaſt Tang of Saintſhip to obſerve the Carriage of this Fellow, and ſee how they can cant and ſnivel, and lie, and forſwear themſelves, and all for the good old Cauſe: They will ſtick at nothing if they think they can but preſerve a Brother or Siſter Saint forſooth; they can do any thing in the World but ſpeak Truth, and do their Duty to God and their Governours: I ask you again, Did not Carpenter meet you before you left Hicks and Nelthorp?

Dunne. No, he did not.

L. C. J. Then I ask you again once more, Did not Carpenter ask you to drink?

Dunne. No, he did not.

L. C. J. Did not he light you with a Lanthorn and Candle into the Houſe?

Dunne. I went into the Houſe.

L. C. J. Doſt thou believe we think any body thruſt thee in: Did he light thee in, I ask thee?

Dunne. I went in along with Mr. Carpenter.

L. C. J. What Room did he carry you into?

Dunne. My Lord, he carry'd me into no Room, the young Woman ſhew'd me into a Room.

L. C. J. What Room was it?

Dunne. Into the Chamber.

L. C. J. Was not thou in the Hall or Kitchen?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. It is hard thou hadſt not one Cup of Drink to thy Cake and Cheeſe.

Dunne. My Lord, I had never a Drop.

L. C. J. No, nor did no body ask you to eat or drink?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Thou art the beſt natur'd Fellow that ever I met with, but the worſt rewarded: Come, I will ask thee another Queſtion: When was the firſt time thou heardſt Nelthorp's Name?

Dunne. Not till he was taken.

L. C. J. What Name did the Fellow with the black Beard tell thee he had?

Dunne. My Lord, he never told me any Name?

L. C. J. Didſt thou never ask him his Name?

Dunne. No, my Lord, that Man that was afterwards found to be Nelthorp, I did not know to be Nelthorp till he was taken, nor what his Name was, nor any Name he had.

L. C. J. No, prithee tell the Truth, Did not Nelthorp go by the Name of Crofts?

Dunne. He did, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then prithee, when did he firſt go by that Name in thy Hearing?

Dunne. My Lord, I only heard Hicks ſay he went by the Name of Crofts.

L. C. J. When was that?

Dunne. When they were taken.

L. C. J. Did you not hear him call'd by that Name any time of the Journey?

Dunne. I cannot recollect, my Lord, that I ever did.

L. C. J. Thou canſt recollect nothing of Truth: Is this as much as you can ſay?

Dunne. It is, my Lord.

Mr. Jennings. You ſay Carpenter met you very civilly, and took Care of your Horſe: Did he make no Proviſion for Hicks and Nelthorp's Horſes? What became of them?

Dunne. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mr. Rumſey. Did you ſee their Horſes afterwards?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

Mr. Rumſey. When they alighted from them, were they ty'd faſt to the Gate, or how?

Dunne. They were not ty'd at all, as I know of.

Mr. Jennings. Did you tell Carpenter that their Horſes were there?

Dunne. I did not tell him any ſuch thing.

L. C. J. Thou art a ſtrange prevaricating, ſhuffling, ſnivelling, lying Raſcal.

Mr. Pollexfen. We will ſet him by for the preſent and call Barter, that is the other Fellow.

L. C. J. Will the Priſoner ask this Perſon any Queſtions?

Liſle. No.

L. C. J. Perhaps her Queſtions might endanger the coming out of all the Truth, and it may be ſhe is well enough pleaſed to have him ſwear as he does; but it carries a very foul Face, upon my Word.

Then Barter was ſwern.

L. C. J. Is this Barter?

Mr. Pollexfen. Yes, my Lord, for his part we have his Examination before two Juſtices of Peace, but we hope he is an honeſt Fellow and will tell the Truth.

L. C. J. That is all one whether you have his Examination or not: I expect he ſhould tell me the Truth, and the whole Truth here. Friend, you know your Soul is at pawn for the Truth of what you teſtifie to us; the other Fellow thou ſeeſt has been prevaricating with us all this while, and ſwearing off and on, and ſcarce told one Word of Truth, I know very well: Now I know as much of thee as I do of him, therefore look to thy ſelf, and let the Truth, and nothing but the Truth come out?

Barter. May it pleaſe your Honour, my Lord, this Man Dunne came to my Houſe upon the Saturday, and ſpoke to me to ride along with him to Moyle's-Court, where my Lady Liſle liv'd, and I having no other Buſineſs at that time, did go along with him: He had a Letter in his Pocket, and I ſaw him produce the Letter to my Lady's Bailiff, Mr. Carpenter, but he would not meddle with it, ſo I ſuppoſe he went in with it to my Lady; and while I was in the Kitchin my Lady came thither, and asked me, ſaith ſhe, What Countryman art thou? Said I, Madam, I am a Wiltſhire Man, ſaith ſhe, Do'ſt thou make Bricks? No ſaid I, Madam, I cannot, I can help in Husbandry Work; ſaith ſhe, If thou could'ſt make Bricks, I will give thee Ten Acres of Ground in ſuch a Place: I told her, no, I could not: And then ſhe goes to this Man Dunne, and there ſhe was laughing with him, and looked upon me, and afterwards when we were going along, I asked him what ſhe laughed at?

L. C. J. Ay, and now tell me what he ſaid to thee about it?

Barter. He told me, my Lord, my Lady ask'd whether I knew any thing of the Concern, and that he anſwer'd her, No, this the Fellow told me was that ſhe laughed at: After this I could not eat, nor drink, nor ſleep for Trouble of Mind till I had diſcover'd this to ſome Juſtice of the Peace, and I reſolved at laſt to go to Colonel Penruddock and conſult with him about it, ſo I went over and told him of it.

L. C. J. What did you tell Colonel Penruddock, let us hear?

Barter. Where I had been the Saturday before, and where I ſhould meet them again upon Salisbury Plain upon the Tueſday, for I did expect to meet them there according to Appointment, and we did agree he ſhould come and take them there; but afterwards miſſing them there, or, for ſome other Reaſon I do not know what, his Mind altered, and he came to take them in the Houſe: So when I met them, we rode on about Ten Miles, and they would have had me to have led them a private Way over the Fording Bridge towards Moyle's-Court, but I told them, in Caſe they intended to have me for their Guide, they muſt go the Way that I could tell, but they would go that private way, and ſo loſe their way; then they ſent back this Dunne to Marton, to one Fane, that was the fat Man that ſent him, but I finding that I was of no more Value then, rode away from them, and having a Relation that liv'd on that Side of the Country, I went to let Colonel Penruddock know that they were at the Houſe, but before I went away from them, Nelthorp gave me five Shillings, half a Crown, and two Shillings and a Six-pence.

L. C. J. Now thou ſayſt Nelthorp did, Didſt thou hear his Name named?

Barter. I never could find any of their Names till they were taken.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray Barter what Diſcourſe had you with Dunne the firſt time you were going to and from my Lady Liſle's, concerning the Men that he was to bring thither, and what Eſtates they had?

Barter. My Lord, he ſaid they had half a Score of Thouſands of Pounds a Year a piece.

Mr. Pollexfen. Did he tell you they were to come to my Lady's?

Barter. Yes, he told me they were to come upon the Tueſday, and they were to come ſuch a Way, and were to come to my Lady's in the Evening.

L. C. J. What wert thou to have for thy Pains?

Barter. I made no Bargain, my Lord.

L. C. J. You are all very free, kind-hearted People, I ſay that for you.

Mr. Pollexfen. What did Dunne ſay about his Gains?

Barter. He told me he had a very fine Booty for his Part, and that he ſhould never want Money again, and that I ſhould be very well paid, and gave me half a Crown.

L. C. J. Then let my honeſt Man Mr. Dunne ſtand forward a little. Come, Friend, you have had ſome time to recollect your ſelf; let us ſee whether we can have the Truth out of you now: You talked of carrying a Meſſage from Hicks to my Lady Liſle: Did not you carry a Letter?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Did not you ſhew a Letter to the Bailiff, Carpenter?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Barter, to that?

Barter. My Lord, I did ſee him produce the Letter to the Bailiff.

L. C. J. Then I will ask you another Queſtion: Did you not tell Barter that you ſhould be at Salisbury Plain, with two People, upon the Tueſday?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I ſaid between Compton and Fovant.

L. C. J. Did not you tell him, that they were brave Fellows, and had God knows how many Thouſand Pounds a Year apiece?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Then one thing more: Did not you tell him, that you told my Lady, when ſhe asked whether he was acquainted with the Concern, that he knew nothing of the Buſineſs?

Dunne. My Lord, I did tell him ſo.

L. C. J. Did you ſo? Then you and I muſt have a little further Diſcourſe: Come now, and tell us, what Buſineſs was that? and tell it us ſo, that a Man may underſtand and believe that thou doſt ſpeak Truth.

Dunne.

Dunne. Does your Lordſhip ask what that Buſineſs was?

L. C. J. Yes, it is a plain Queſtion; What was that Buſineſs that my Lady asked thee, whether the other Man knew; and then you anſwered her, that he did know nothing of it?

Then he pauſed a while.

L. C. J. Remember, Friend, thou art upon thy Oath; and remember withal, that it is not thy Life, but thy Soul that is now in danger: Therefore I require from thee a plain Anſwer to a very plain Queſtion; What was that Buſineſs my Lady enquired after, whether the other Fellow knew, and thou toldſt her, he did not?

Dunne made no Anſwer, but ſtood muſing a while.

L. C. J. He is now ſtudying and muſing how he ſhall prevaricate; but thou hadſt better tell the Truth, Friend: Remember what thou haſt ſaid already; Thou haſt ſaid, that thou didſt tell that Man, that the Lady asked you, whether he knew any thing of the Buſineſs, and thou toldſt her, he did not. Now I would know what that Buſineſs was?

Still he made no Anſwer, but ſeemed to muſe.

L. C. J. Look thee, if thou canſt not comprehend what I mean, I will repeat it to thee again; for thou ſhalt ſee what Countreyman I am, by my telling my Story over twice: Therefore I ask thee once again. Thou ſaidſt thy Lady asked thee, whether he knew of the Buſineſs; and thou toldſt her, he did not. Now let us know what that Buſineſs was?

Dunne. I cannot mind it, my Lord, what it was.

L. C. J. But mind me prithee: Thou didſt tell that honeſt Man there, that my Lady Liſle asked thee, whether he knew any thing of the Buſineſs, and thou ſaidſt, no. What was that Buſineſs?

Dunne. That Buſineſs that Barter did not know of?

L. C. J. Yes, that is the Buſineſs; be ingenuous, tell the Truth: Oh! How hard the Truth is to come out of a lying Presbyterian Knave. Prithee, Friend, conſider the Oath that thou haſt taken; and that thou art in the Preſence of a God that cannot endure a Lie, nor whoſe Holineſs will not admit him to diſpenſe with a Lie: Conſider that that God is an infinite Being of Purity, Holineſs and Truth; and it would be inconſiſtent with his Being to diſpenſe with the leaſt Untruth; and thou haſt called him to witneſs that thou wouldſt teſtifie the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. I charge thee, therefore, as thou wilt anſwer it to that God of Truth, and that thou mayſt be called to do, for ought I know, the very next Minute, and there thou wilt not be able to palliate the Truth; what was that Buſineſs you and my Lady ſpoke of?

Then he pauſed for half a quarter of an Hour, and at laſt ſaid:

Dunne. I cannot give an Account of it, my Lord.

L. C. J. Oh bleſſed God! Was there ever ſuch a Villain upon the Face of the Earth; to what Times are we reſerved? Do'ſt thou believe that there is a God?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Do'ſt thou believe that that God can endure a Lie?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I know he cannot.

L. C. J. And do'ſt thou believe then that he is a God of Truth?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, I do.

L. C. J. Do'ſt thou think that that God of Truth may immediately ſink thee into Hell-Fire if thou telleſt a Lie?

Dunne. I do, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do'ſt thou believe that he does obſerve every thing that thou thinkeſt, ſayeſt or doeſt; knows the Secrets of thy Heart, and knows whether thou telleſt a Lie or not, tho' perhaps it may be hid from us, and knows whether thou do'ſt prevaricate or not?

Dunne. I know the Lord does know all things.

L. C. J. Do'ſt thou believe, that he knows the Buſineſs that you and my Lady, the Priſoner, were talking of, as well as you do; that he hath an Almighty Power over all his Creatures, an All-piercing Eye, that looks into the Hearts of every one of them, and from which nothing can be concealed? Do'ſt thou believe it poſſible to conceal that very Diſcourſe of yours from the knowledge of that infinite Being?

Dunne. My Lord, I do believe that there is a God above.

L. C. J. I ask thee then again; Do'ſt thou believe that that God above, who is a God of Truth himſelf, is Omniſcient, Omnipreſent, to whom all Truth is naked and open, that he knows every thing that is either thought, ſaid or done by any of his Creatures, ſees and knows the Hearts of all Hearts; Do'ſt thou believe all this?

He ſtood ſilent for a good while.

L. C. J. Friend, deceive not thy ſelf; the great God does obſerve and know the ſecret workings of thy Thoughts now, and how Truth ſtruggles to get out, but Baſeneſs and Villany keep it in: All the private Imaginations of thy Heart are not only known to him, but regiſtred by him, and thy Conſcience will bear witneſs to thy Accuſation when thou art called to anſwer for them, and anſwer for them thou muſt; for the Scripture, that is the Word of God, tells us, That every vain Thought we muſt account for. Do'ſt thou then believe, that any Diſcourſe between you, tho' never ſo private, is private from the Almighty, All-knowing God?

Dunne. My Lord, I know it is not, nor can be.

L. C. J. I therefore once more adjure thee, as thou wilt anſwer it to that God that is the Searcher of the Hearts and Trier of the Reins, to whom all Hearts are open, and from whom no Secrets are hid, that thou make me a plain Anſwer to my Queſtion; and as thou haſt called God to bear Witneſs to the Truth of the Evidence thou giveſt here in this Court; ſo I charge thee, in his Name, to declare the Truth, and nothing but the Truth. Now tell us what was the Buſineſs you ſpoke of?

But

But he made no Anſwer.

L. C. Baron. Friend, mind what my Lord ſays to you, and conſider, how eaſie a thing it is for a Man to ſpeak Truth, and give a plain Anſwer to a plain Queſtion. You cannot but underſtand what my Lord asks of you; you ſaid even now, that you did tell the other Witneſs, Barter, that my Lady asked you, whether he knew any thing of the Buſineſs, and you told her, he did not. Now my Lord would have you tell us, what that Buſineſs was?

He ſeemed to turn his Head on one ſide, but returned no Anſwer.

L. C. J. He is going to ask that Man there, whether he ſhall tell the Truth.

Dunne. No, my Lord, I ask no Man any ſuch Queſtion.

L. C. J. Prithee tell us the Truth then now: Thou art to know, that thou ſtandeſt in the Preſence of the God of Truth, and haſt called him to witneſs, that thou wouldſt tell the Truth.

Dunne. My Lord, I do tell the Truth, as far as I can remember.

L. C. J. Then what was that you told my Lady Liſle, Barter did not know?

Dunne. What Barter did not know, my Lord?

L. C. J. Ay, is not that a plain Queſtion? Of all the Witneſſes that ever I met with, I never ſaw thy Fellow.

He ſtood a good while, and made no Anſwer.

L. C. J. I hope, Gentlemen of the Jury, you take notice of the ſtrange and horrible Carriage of this Fellow; and withal, you cannot but obſerve the Spirit of that ſort of People, what a villanous and deviliſh one it is: Good God! That ever the thing called Religion (a Word that People have ſo much abuſed) ſhould ever wind up Perſons to ſuch a height of Impiety, that it ſhould make them loſe the Belief that there is a God of Truth in Heaven; that ſees and knows, obſerves and regiſters, and will puniſh and take vengeance of Falſhood and Perjury. It may well make the reſt of Mankind, that have any ſort of Faith in a Deity and a future Life, to abhor and deteſt both the Men and their Religion, if ſuch abominable Principles may be called ſo. A Turk is a Saint to ſuch a Fellow as this, nay a Pagan would be aſhamed to be thought to have no more Truth in him. O bleſſed Jeſus! What an Age do we live in, and what a Generation of Vipers do we live among? Sirs, is this that you call the Proteſtant Religion? Shall ſo glorious a Name be applied to ſo much Villany and Hypocriſie? Is this the Perſuaſion you hope to live, and die, and find Salvation in? Will any of you all, Gentlemen, be contented to die with a Lie in your Mouth? Do not you all expect, according to the Orthodox Doctrine of the true Church of England, that eternal Damnation will be the Portion of Liars? And thou wicked Wretch, how durſt thou appear to give Teſtimony before even an Earthly Tribunal with ſo much Impudence and Falſhood, when every Lye will coſt thee ſo dear, and except a ſincere and hearty Repentance, and the infinite Mercy of the great God interpoſe? I charge you once more, as you will anſwer it at the Bar of the great Judge of all the World, that you tell me what that Buſineſs was, you and the Priſoner talked about; do but conſider what a Condition thou bringeſt thy ſelf into by all this Shuffling and Prevarication, even as to any thing of Mercy in this Life, for indeed it is not fit thou ſhouldſt have the leaſt Hopes of Mercy on this ſide Eternity, and truly there is no Man can imagine leſs than infinite Mercy can pardon ſo flagitious a Sin, one that ſo impudently tells and ſtands in a Lye.

Still he would make no Anſwer.

L. C. J. Jeſus God! Was there ever ſuch a Fellow in the World as thou art: Prithee let me ask thee once again, Doſt thou believe that there is a God, that this God is Sporleſs, Truth and Purity it ſelf? Doſt thou believe thou haſt a precious and immortal Soul, that is to live in everlaſting Bliſs or eternal Miſery after this Life accordingly as thou carrieſt it here; if thou doſt believe it, ought not the Concerns of that precious immortal Soul of thine to be much dearer to thee than Ten thouſand Worlds? Does not the bleſſed Word of Truth tell thee, What will it profit a Man to gain the whole World, and loſe his own Soul, or what ſhall a Man give in exchange for his Soul? Is not this the Voice of Scripture it ſelf? And wilt thou hazard ſo dear and precious a thing for a Lye, and an unprofitable Lye too? Thou Wretch, all the Mountains and Hills in the World heaped upon one another, will not cover thee from the Vengeance of the great God for this Tranſgreſſion of falſe Witneſs-bearing: What Hopes can there be for ſo profligate a Villain as thou art, that ſo impudently ſtands in open Defiance of the Omnipreſence, Omniſcience and Juſtice of God, by perſiſting in ſo palpable a Lye, I therefore require it of you, in his Name, to tell me the Truth?

Dunne. I cannot tell what to ſay, my Lord.

L. C. J. Good God! Was there ever ſuch an impudent Raſcal, well, I will try once more, and tell thee what I mean; you ſaid you told that honeſt Man (for truly he ſeems ſo to be) that my Lady asked you whether he knew of the Buſineſs, and you told her, he did not, prithee be ſo free as to tell us what that Buſineſs was?

Dunne paused, but would make no Anſwer.

L. C. J. Prithee what didſt thou mean, or thy Lady mean by that Buſineſs?

He paused again, but would make no Anſwer.

L. C. J. Why, prithee doſt thou think thou doeſt her any Kindneſs by this way of proceeding, ſure thou canſt not think ſo, for ſuch a ſort of Carriage were enough to convert her, if there were nothing elſe?

Dunne. Truly, my Lord, I do not think to do her any Kindneſs at all.

L. C. J. Then prithee let me perſuade thee to have ſome kindneſs for thy ſelf, look to thy own Soul that is in great peril of everlaſting Ruin and and Deſtruction by theſe means; Doſt thou call this Religion? It is a prodigious piece of Religion; come, pray tell me what Buſineſs it was you talked of? You ſhould not have asked me a Queſtion ſo often, but I would have given you a plain Anſwer, though I were not under the Obligation of an Oath as you are.

Dunne. My Lord, pray ask the Queſtion over again once more, and I will tell you.

L. C. J. I will ſo, and I will ask it you with all the Calmneſs, and Serioufneſs, and Candour that I can, if I know my own Heart, it is not in my Nature to deſire the Hurt of any body, much leſs to delight in their eternal Perdition; no, it is out of tender Compaſſion to you that I uſe all theſe Words: I would have thee to have ſome Regard to thy precious and immortal Soul, which is more valuable than the whole World; reflect upon that Scripture again which I mention'd before, which muſt be true, becauſe it is the Words of him that is Truth it ſelf: What ſhall it profit a Man to gain the whole World and loſe his own Soul, or what ſhall a Man give in exchange for his Soul? If that Soul of thine be taken away, what is the Body fit for, but like a putrid Carcaſe to be thruſt into and covered with the Duſt with which it was made; therefore I ask you, with a great Deſire that thou mayſt free thy ſelf from ſo great a Load of Falſhood and Perjury, tell me what the Buſineſs was you told the Priſoner, the other Man Barker did not know?

Dunne. My Lord, I told her, he knew nothing of our coming there.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, that can never be it, for he came along with thee.

Dunne. He did not know any thing of my coming there till I met him on the way.

L. C. J. Prithee mind my Queſtion, Sure enough thou hadſt told him whither thou wert going, or elſe he could not have been thy Guide, ſo that he muſt needs know of thy coming there, but what was the Buſineſs that thou toldſt her, he did not know?

Dunne. She asked me whether I did not know that Hicks was a Nonconformiſt.

L. C. J. Did my Lady Liſle ask you that Queſtion?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, and I told her I did not.

L. C. J. But that is not my Queſtion; What was that Buſineſs that he did not know?

Dunne. It was the ſame thing, whether Mr. Hicks was a Nonconformiſt.

L. C. J. That cannot be all, there muſt be ſomething more in it?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, it is all, I know nothing more.

L. C. J. What did ſhe ſay to you when you told her, he did not know it?

Dunne. She did not ſay any thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Why doſt thou think, that after all this pains that I have been at to get an Anſwer to my Queſtion, that thou canſt banter me with ſuch ſham Stuff as this? Hold the Candle to his Face that we may ſee his brazen Face.

Dunne. My Lord, I tell you the Truth.

L. C. J. Did ſhe ask thee whether that Man knew any thing of a Queſtion ſhe had asked thee, and that was only of being a Nonconformiſt?

Dunne. Yes, my Lord, that was all.

L. C. J. That is all Nonſence, Doſt thou imagine that any Man hereabouts is ſo weak as to believe thee?

Dunne. My Lord, I am ſo baulked I do not know what I ſay my ſelf; tell me what you would have me to ſay, for I am clutter'd out of my Senſes.

L. C. J. Why, prithee Man, there's no body baulks thee but thy own ſelf, thou art asked Queſtions that are as plain as any thing in the World can be, it is only thy own depraved naughty Heart that baulks both thy Honeſty and Underſtanding, if thou haſt any, it is thy ſtudying how to prevaricate that puzzles and confounds thy Intellect; but I ſee all the Pains in the World, and all Compaſſion and Charity is loſt upon thee, and therefore I will ſay no more to thee.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, becauſe he pretends to Ignorance what Hicks was, I deſire to ask Barter one Queſtion; Pray, what did he tell you concerning his Carriage towards theſe People?

Barter. My Lord, he told me, that he had concealed them in his Houſe Ten Days before.

Dunne. That I never did in my Life.

Barter. I know not whether you did or no, but you told me ſo; and I made Anſwer to him again, my Lord, I wonder how he were able to keep them without being diſcovered, there being ſuch Search, and he anſwered, He did keep them in a Chamber all Day, and then they walked out at Night, for the Searches of the Houſes were uſually at Night.

Dunne. My Lord, I can bring Teſtimony to the contrary.

L. C. J. But really I believe it will be no ſtrange thing for me to ſay, I do believe him rather than thee; I would I had half as much reaſon to believe thee, as I have to believe him; I would fain have thee ſpeak Truth if I could. What ſay you to the Queſtion I asked you?

Dunne. I cannot tell what to ſay, my Lord.

L. C. J. Say the Truth, Man.

Dunne. I do, as I hope for Mercy, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do'ſt thou hope for Mercy? Thou haſt very little reaſon for it I aſſure thee. Well, I will try thee with another Queſtion: Didſt thou tell that Man, that it was the beſt Job thou ever hadſt in thy life?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Nor nothing to that purpoſe?

Dunne. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What ſay you, Barter, did not he tell you ſo?

Barter. Yes, my Lord, he did; and that he ſhould never lack Money again as long as he lived.

L. C. J. Then I ask you one Queſtion more, Barter; Did you tell this to Col. Penruddock?

Barter. Yes, I did, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then that will fortifie his Teſtimony; therefore Swear him, becauſe I would make theſe concealed Wretches (for in my Conſcience I know there are ſome ſuch in the bottom of this Buſineſs) know, that the Truth will out one way or other. And as for this Fellow; I expect it from all you Gentlemen of the King's Counſel, and others that are concerned, that you take notice and remember what what has paſſed here, and that an Information of Perjury be preferred againſt this Fellow.

Then Col. Penruddock was Sworn.

L. C. J. Col. Penruddock, upon the Oath you have taken; Did that Man Barter come to you, and what did he ſay to you?

Col. Penruddock. My Lord, That Man Barter came to my Houſe in the Morning, upon Monday, and told me, he had been with one Dunne, upon a Journey to Mrs. Liſle's Houſe, to get Entertainment for ſome People; and that they had appointed to meet him the Tueſday following, between 9 and 11, upon Salisbury Plain, and there, if I pleaſed, I might take them. I ordered him to go according to the Appointment, and withal, I ſent a Servant of my own to watch when they came by; but it happen'd, I ſuppoſe, by their taking another way, that he miſſed of them; but Barter left word, that in caſe he did not find them there, we muſt conclude, that he was gone with them to my Lady Liſle's Houſe; and he told me withal, ſays he, I believe they are Rebels, becauſe he that deſired me to be their Guide, ſaid the ſame to me. So early the next Morning I took ſome Soldiers with me, and beſet my Lady Liſle's Houſe; it was a pretty while before I could get any body in the Houſe to hear; at length that Man that they ſay was the Bailiff, Carpenter, came out, and I ſaid to him, Friend, you had beſt be free and ingenuous, and diſcover who are in your Lady's Houſe, for I am ſure there were ſome Strangers came thither laſt Night; let me know who they are, and ſhew me what part of the Houſe they are in? He did confeſs to me there were Strangers in the Houſe, and pointed to ſuch a part of the Houſe; but pray, ſays he, do not tell my Miſtreſs of it. Accordingly we went in, and immediately we took Mr. Hicks and this ſame Dunne in the Malthouſe.

L. C. J. Was Dunne taken in the Malthouſe?

Col. Penruddock. Yes, he had covered himſelf with ſome ſort of Stuff there.

L. C. J. Well, what did you do then?

Col. Penruddock. My Lady afterwards coming to us, I told her, Madam, you have done very ill in harbouring Rebels, and giving Entertainment to the King's Enemies: Saith ſhe, I know nothing of them, I am a Stranger to it. Pray, ſaid I, Madam, be ſo free and ingenuous with me, and ſo kind to your ſelf, as if there be any other Perſon that is concealed in any part of your Houſe (for I am ſure there is ſome body elſe) as to deliver him up, and you ſhall come to no further trouble. She denied it, and ſaid, I know nothing of them: But we went on, and ſearched, and at laſt diſcovered the other Man Nelthorp, hid in a Hole by the Chimney.

L. C. J. Dunne, How came you to hide your ſelf in the Malthouſe?

Dunne. When I heard the ſtir and buſtle, I went thro' the Chamber where I lay, and came into that Room where I was taken.

L. C. J. When thou heardſt a ſtir and a buſtle: Why, wert thou afraid of any thing?

Dunne. My Lord, I was frighted at the noiſe.

L. C. J. Prithee, what needeſt thou be afraid, for thou didſt not know Hicks, nor Nelthorp; and my Lady only asked thee whether Hicks were a Nonconformiſt Parſon: Thou art a very innocent Soul, and ſurely needeſt no occaſion to be afraid: I doubt there was ſomething of that Buſineſs in the caſe that we were talking of before, if we could but get out of thee what it was.

Dunne. My Lord, I heard a great noiſe in the Houſe, and I did not know what it meant, and ſo I went and hid my ſelf.

L. C. J. Alack-a-day! That is very ſtrange, that thou ſhould'ſt hide thy ſelf for a little noiſe, when thou kneweſt nothing of the Buſineſs, nor wert acquainted with any thing of the matter at all. But Col. Penruddock, I would ask you one Queſtion more: Did that honeſt Man tell you, that Dunne had told him, it was the beſt Job that ever he had in his Life; and that he ſhould want no Money?

Penruddock. I cannot tell that truly, my Lord, I do not remember that, but he ſaid, he apprehended them to be Rebels, and that Dunne had told him as much.

L. C. J. What do you ſay to that, Dunne? It ſeems you told Barter that you apprehended them to be Rebels?

Dunne. I apprehend them for Rebels, my Lord!

L. C. J. No, no, you did not apprehend them for Rebels, but you hid them for Rebels. But did you ſay to Barter that you took them to be Rebels?

Dunne. I take them to be Rebels!

L. C. J. You Blockhead, I ask you, did you tell him ſo?

Dunne. I tell Barter ſo!

L. C. J. Ay, is not that a plain Queſtion?

Dunne. I am quite cluttered out of my Senſes, I do not know what I ſay.

[A Candle being ſtill held nearer his Noſe.

L. C. J. But to tell the Truth would rob thee of none of thy Senſes, if ever thou hadſt any, but it ſhould ſeem that neither thou, nor thy Miſtreſs the Priſoner had any, for ſhe knew nothing of it neither, though ſhe had ſent for them thither.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray Colonel Penruddock, did you tell her you came to ſearch for Rebels?

Col. Penruddock. Yes, Sir, I told her as ſoon as I ſaw her, but we had a good while beſet the Houſe before any body anſwered us, at length, there were ſome Ladies, or Gentlewomen, I imagined them to be her Daughters, that upon our noiſe looked out at the Window; and I told them there were Rebels in the Houſe, and I required them in the King's Name to be deliver'd to me; but I ſaw not my Lady till after I had brought out Hicks and Dunne.

L. C. J. What ſaid ſhe to you?

Col. Penruddock. She ſaid, ſhe knew nothing of their being in the Houſe; but I told her there was ſome body elſe beſides, and ſhe would do well to deliver him without trouble; but ſhe denying of it, we ſearched further, and found Nelthorp, as I told you.

L. C. J. But ſhe denied it at firſt, it ſeems?

Liſle. My Lord, I hope I ſhall not be condemned without being heard.

L. C. J. No, God forbid, Mrs. Liſle; that was a ſort of Practice in your Husband's time; you know very well what I mean: But God be thanked, it is not ſo now, the King's Courts of Law never condemn without hearing. Col. Penruddock, have you any more to ſay?

Col.

Col. Penruddock. No, my Lord, but here is one Mr. Dowding, that was with me when I ſearched the Houſe.

L. C. J. Swear him. [Which was done.

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Dowding, Pray did you go with Col. Penruddock to Mrs. Liſle's Houſe?

Mr. Dowding. Yes, my Lord: We came to the Houſe and beſet the Houſe round, ſome to the back Gate and ſome to the fore-Gate; we called almoſt half an hour before we got in; and had found two, and we came to my Lady, ſhe ſaid, ſhe knew nothing of any body being in the Houſe——

Liſle. My Lord, This Fellow that now ſpeaks againſt me broke open my Trunk, and ſtole away a great part of my beſt Linnen; and ſure, my Lord, thoſe Perſons that rob me, are not fit to be Evidences againſt me, becauſe it behoves them that I be convicted, to prevent their being indicted for Felony.

L. C. J. Look you, Friend, you ſay you went with Col. Penruddock to ſearch the Houſe, did you find any body there?

Dowding. Yes, my Lord, I found this ſame Dunne in a little Hole in the Malthouſe.

L. C. J. Was he covered, or not?

Dowding. He had taken ſome ſtuff or other to cover him.

L. C. J. Did you find Hicks there?

Dowding. Yes, my Lord, we did find one that ſaid his Name was Hicks.

L. C. J. Is that the ſame Hicks that is in Salisbury Gaol?

Dowding. Yes, my Lord, it is, I ſaw him yeſterday at the George in Salisbury, when he had that Diſcourſe with thoſe other Gentlemen.

Mr. Pollexfen. Swear Carpenter and his Wife.

[Which was done.]

Dowding. My Lord, Hicks acknowledged before me, that he was at Keinſham, in the Duke of Monmouth's Army.

Mr. Pollexfen. Come, Mrs. Carpenter, tell my Lord and the Jury; Did you know the time when theſe Men came to your Lady's Houſe?

L. C. J. Is this the Bailiff's Wife?

Mr. Pollexfen. Yes, my Lord, it is.

L. C. J. Well then, what ſay you to the Queſtion: Do you know the time when they came?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes, my Lord, they came at night.

L. C. J. Did you ſee them there?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes.

L. C. J. Were they lodged there?

Mrs. Carpenter. Yes but I never made the Bed.

L. C. J. Who did?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Had they any Supper, or Victuals there?

Mrs Carpenter. Yes, they had.

L. C. J. Who dreſs'd it?

Mrs. Carpenter. I did.

L C. J. By whoſe Order did you dreſs it?

Mrs. Carpenter. By my Lady's Order.

L. C. J. Prithee where did they eat their Meat?

Mrs. Carpenter. In the Chamber, my Lord, where they lay.

L. C. J. Who was with them?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lord, I cannot tell, for I did not ſtay in the Room.

L. C. J. Didſt thou ſee them when they came into the Room?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lord, I dreſs'd the Meat, and carried it within the Door, and my Huſband ſet it upon the Table.

L. C. J. Prithee tell me who was with them? Was thy Lady there?

Mrs. Carpenter. My Lady was in Preſence there then.

L. C. J. How long did they ſtay below ſtairs before they went up?

Mrs. Carpenter. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Did your Lady uſe to ſup below ſtairs or above?

Mrs. Carpenter. She uſed to ſup below, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, this Woman and her Husband are both unwilling Witneſſes; but we will examine the Husband, and ſee what we can get out of him: Hark you, Carpenter, did you meet with this Fellow Dunne, at his firſt coming to your Lady's Houſe?

Mr. Carpenter. Yes, my Lord, I did ſee him there on the Saturday.

L. C. J. Well then, let me ask you a Queſtion: and be ſure you tell me Truth, for it may be I know it already: Did he offer you a Letter to be delivered to your Lady?

Mr. Carpenter. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. What do you ſay Barter?

Barter. I ſaw him produce it to Mr. Carpenter, but he refuſed to meddle with it.

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, he asked me, if my Lady would give Entertainment to one Hicks, and another Perſon, but he did not know who that Perſon was.

L. C. J. Did he ſpeak of another Perſon?

Mr. Carpenter. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Who was that other Perſon?

Mr. Carpenter. I did ask his Name, but he ſaid, he did not know him.

L. C. J. Well then, when they came there on the Tueſday night, how did you receive them?

Mr. Carpenter. I did not receive them.

L. C. J. Did not you light the Candle, and bring it in a Lanthorn, to light him into the Stable?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, that was afterwards.

L. C. J. Did not you bring the Men into the Houſe?

Mr. Carpenter. No, my Lord, indeed I did not.

L. C. J. Did not you ſee them all night?

Mr. Carpenter. Yes, my Lord.

L C. J. Then where did you ſee them firſt?

Mr. Carpenter. In the Room where they ſupp'd and lay.

L. C. J. Did not you meet them in the Court-yard?

Mr. Carpenter. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Who gave you Directions to light Dunne into the Stable?

Mr. Carpenter. They told me his Horſe was out in the yard.

L. C. J. Who told you ſo?

Mr. Carpenter. The Men did.

L. C. J. Where did they ſup?

Mr. Carpenter. In the Room above ſtairs.

L. C. J. Who ſupp'd along with them?

Mr. Carpenter. I cannot ſay any body ſupp'd with them.

L. C. J. Was not my Lady there?

Mr. Carpenter. She was in the Room, but I did not ſee her eat any thing.

L. C. J. What time of the night did they come?

Mr. Carpenter. About Ten of the Clock.

L. C. J. And where did they lie?

Mr. Carpenter. In the Room where they ſupped.

L. C. J. Who lay there?

Mr. Carpenter. Hicks and Nelthorp lay there.

L. C. J. Was Nelthorp named there?

Mr. Carpenter. No, I never heard of his Name till after he was taken.

L. C. J. What a kind of Man was he?

Mr. Carpenter. A tall, thin, black Man.

L. C. J. Well, what can you ſay more?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, this Perſon has ſwore, that a Letter was offered me, but I refuſed it; but I aſſure your Lordſhip I never ſaw any Letter.

Barter. I am ſure he met you, and, as I remember, there was a Letter produced.

L. C. J. Thou ſhouldſt not be angry with him for he ſpoke very kindly of thee, that thou refuſedſt to meddle in it, and thereupon Dunne went in to thy Lady, and delivered his Meſſage to her.

Mr. Carpenter. That, my Lord, I acknowledge.

L. C. J. Then, prithee let me ask thee another Queſtion: Did you carry any Beer up into the Room?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lady gave order for the Proviſion.

L. C. J. Did you make Dunne drink?

Mr. Carpenter. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Did you offer him any Drink?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, I did not ſee him drink at all.

L. C. J. What ſay you, good Woman; Did not your Lady ſup there?

Mr. Carpenter. My Lord, my Wife was little there at all.

Mr. Rumſey. Now, my Lord, Dunne ſays he will tell all, whether it make for him or againſt him.

L. C. J. Let him but tell the Truth, and I am ſatisfied.

Dunne. Sure, my Lord, I never entertained theſe Men a Night in my Houſe in my life; but this Hicks ſent that Man to me, to go to my Lady Liſle's, to know, whether ſhe would pleaſe to entertain him: And when I came, my Lady asked me, whether he had been in the Army or no? I told her, I could not tell, I did not know that he was. She then asked me, if he had no body elſe with him? I told her, I believed there was; this is the very Truth of it, my Lord: I asked her, Might the Men be entertained? She ſaid they might. So when we came to my Lady Liſle's, on the Tueſday night, ſome body took the two Horſes, I cannot tell who if I were to die; the two went in, and after I had ſet up my Horſe, I went in along with Carpenter up into the Chamber to my Lady, and to this Hicks and Nelthorp; and when I came there, I heard my Lady bid them welcome to her Houſe; and Mr. Carpenter, or the Maid, I cannot tell which, brought in the Supper and ſet it on the Table.

L. C. J. And didſt thou eat or drink with 'em in the Room, or not?

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell every thing that I know; I confeſs I did both eat and drink there in the Room.

L. C. J. I pity thee with all my Soul, and pray to God Almighty for thee to forgive thee, and to the bleſſed Jeſus to mediate for thee; and I pray for thee with as much earneſtneſs, as I would for my own Soul; and I beg of thee once more, as thou regardeſt thy own eternal Welfare, to tell all the Truth.

Dunne. My Lord, I did never know theſe Men were in the Army when I carried the Meſſage to my Lady Liſle's, nor never did entertain them in my Houſe in my lifetime, ſo much as one Night.

L. C. J. Prithee, I do not ask thee what thou didſt not, but what thou didſt?

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell all I know.

L. C. J. What Diſcourſe had you that Night at the Table in the Room?

Dunne. I cannot tell what Diſcourſe truly, my Lord, there was.

L. C. J. Was there nothing of coming from beyond Seas, who came from thence, and how they came? Come, I would have it rather the Effect of thy own Ingenuity, than lead thee by any Queſtions that I can propound, come, tell us what was the Diſcourſe?

Dunne. I do not remember all the Diſcourſe.

L. C. J. Prithee let me ask thee one Queſtion, and anſwer me it fairly, Didſt not thou hear Nelthorp's Name named in the Room?

Dunne. My Lord, I cannot tell whether he were called Nelthorp, but it was either Croſts or Nelthorp, I am ſure one of them.

L. C. J. Prithee be ingenuous and let's have the Truth on't?

Dunne. My Lord, I am ingenuous, and will be ſo.

L. C. J. I will aſſure you Nelthorp told me all the Story before I came out of Town?

Dunne. I think, my Lord, he was called Nelthorp in the Room, and there was ſome Diſcourſe about him.

L. C. J. Ay, there was unqueſtionably, and I know thou wert by, and that made me the more concern'd to preſs upon thee the Danger of Forſwearing thy ſelf.

Dunne. My Lady asked Hicks who that Gentleman was, and he ſaid it was Nelthorp, as I remember.

L. C. J. Very well, and upon that Diſcourſe with Nelthorp, which I had in Town, did I give particular Direction that the Outlawry of Nelthorp ſhould be brought down hither, for he told me particularly of all the Paſſages and Diſcourſes, of his being beyond Sea, and coming from beyond Sea? I would not mention any ſuch thing as any piece of Evidence to influence this Caſe, but I could not but tremble to think, after what I knew, that any one ſhould dare ſo much to prevaricate with God and Man, as to tell ſuch horrid Lyes in the Face of a Court.

Dunne. What does your Lordſhip ask me?

L. C. J. Come, I will ask thee a plain Queſtion; Was there no Diſcourſe there about the Battle, and of their being in the Army?

Dunne. There was ſome ſuch Diſcourſe, my Lord.

L. C. J. Ay, prithee now tell us what that Diſcourſe was?

Dunne.

Dunne. My Lord, I will tell you when I have recollected it, if you will give me time till to morrow Morning.

L. C. J. Nay, but we cannot ſtay ſo long, our Buſineſs muſt be diſpatched now, but I would have all People conſider what a Reaſon there is, that they ſhould be preſſed to join with me in hearty Prayers to Almighty God that this Sin of Lying and Perjury may never be laid at thy Door: What ſayſt thou? Prithee tell us what the Diſcourſe was?

Dunne. My Lord, they did talk of Fighting, but I cannot exactly tell what the Diſcourſe was.

L. C. J. And thou ſaidſt thou didſt eat and drink with them in the ſame Room?

Dunne. I did ſo, my Lord, I confeſs it.

L. C. J. And it was not a little Girl that lighted thee to Bed, or conducted thee in?

Dunne. It was not a little Girl.

L. C. J. Who was it then?

Dunne. It was Mr. Carpenter, my Lord.

L. C. J. And why didſt thou tell ſo many Lyes then? Jeſu God! that we ſhould live to ſee any ſuch Creatures among Mankind, nay, and among us too, to the Shame and Reproach be it ſpoken of our Nation and Religion: Is this that that is called the Proteſtant Religion, a thing ſo much boaſted of and pretended to? We have heard a great deal of Clamour againſt Popery and Diſpenſations, what Diſpenſations pray does the Proteſtant Religion give for ſuch Practices as theſe? I pity thee with all my Soul, and pray for thee, but it cannot but make all Mankind to tremble and be filled with Horror that ſuch a wretched Creature ſhould live upon the Earth: Prithee be free and tell us what the Diſcourſe was?

Dunne. My Lord, they did talk of Fighting, but I cannot remember what it was.

L. C. J. Did you lie with them?

Dunne. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. Well, I ſee thou wilt anſwer nothing ingenuouſly, therefore I will trouble my ſelf no more with thee: Go on with your Evidence, Gentlemen.

Mr. Jennings. My Lord, we have done, we have no more Witneſſes.

L. C. J. Then you that are for the Priſoner at the Bar, now is your time to make your Defence; you hear what is charged upon you, and you ſee what a kind of Shuffling here has been to ſtifle the Truth, and I am ſorry to find the Occaſion to ſpeak it, that under the Figure and Form of Religion ſuch Practices ſhould be carried on. What have you to ſay for your ſelf?

Liſle. My Lord, that which I have to ſay to it, is this, I knew of no Body's coming to my Houſe but Mr. Hicks, and for him, I was inform'd that he did abſcond, by Reaſon of Warrants that were out againſt him for preaching in private Meetings, but I never heard that he was in the Army, nor that Nelthorp was to come with him; and for that Reaſon it was that I ſent to him to come by Night, but for the other Man Nelthorp, I never knew he was Nelthorp, I could die upon it, nor did not know what Name he had till after he came into my Houſe, but as to Mr. Hicks, I did not in the leaſt ſuſpect him to have been in the Army, being a Presbyterian Miniſter that uſed to preach and not to fight.

L. C. J. But I will tell you, there is not one of thoſe lying, ſnivelling, canting Presbyterian Raſcals but one way or other had a Hand in the late horrid Conſpiracy and Rebellion, upon my Conſcience I believe it, and would have been as deep in the actual Rebellion, had it had any little Succeſs, as that other Fellow Hicks; their Principles carry them to it; Presbytery has all manner of Villany in it, nothing but Presbytery could lead that Fellow Dunne to tell ſo many Lies as he has here told, for ſhew me a Presbyterian, and I will engage to ſhew a lying Knave.

Liſle. My Lord, I abhorred both the Principles and Practices of the late Rebellion.

L. C. J. I am ſure you had great Reaſon for it.

Liſle. Beſides, my Lord, I ſhould have been the moſt ungrateful Perſon living, ſhould I have been diſloyal, or acted any thing againſt the preſent King, conſidering how much I was obliged to him for my Eſtate.

L. C. J. Oh then! Ungrateful, ungrateful adds to the Load which is between Man and Man, and is the baſeſt Crime that any one can be guilty of.

Liſle. My Lord, had I been try'd in London, I could have had my Lady Abergavenny, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, that could have teſtified how much I was againſt this Rebellion, and with what Deteſtation I ſpoke againſt it during the time of it, for I was all that time at London, and ſtay'd there till after the Duke of Monmouth was beheaded; and if I had certainly known the time of my Tryal in the Country, I could have had the Teſtimony of thoſe Perſons of Honour for me: But, My Lord, I am told, and ſo I thought it would have been, that I ſhould not have been try'd as a Traytor for harbouring him, till he was Convict for a Traytor; My Lord, I would take my Death of it, that I never knew of Nelthorp's coming, nor any thing of his being Nelthorp, I never asked his Name, and if he had told it me, I had then remembred the Proclamation. I do aſſure you, my Lord, for my own part I did abhor thoſe that were in that horrid Plot and Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life, I know my Duty to my King better, and have always exerciſed it, I defie any body in the World that ever knew the contrary to come and give Teſtimony.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay?

Liſle. As to what they ſay of my denying Nelthorp to be in my Houſe, I was in great Conſternation and Fear of the Souldiers, who were very rude and violent, and could not be reſtrained by their Officers from Robbery and plundering my Houſe: And I beſeech your Lordſhip to make that Conſtruction of it; and I humbly beg of your Lordſhip not to harbour an ill Opinion of me, becauſe of thoſe falſe Reports that go about of me, relating to my Carriage towards the old King, that I was any ways conſenting to the Death of King Charles I. for, my Lord, that is as falſe as God is true; my Lord, I was not out of my Chamber all the day in which that King was beheaded, and I believe I ſhed more Tears for him than any Woman then living did; and this the late Counteſs of Monmouth, and my Lady Marlbrough, and my Lord Chancellor Hyde, if they were alive, and 20 Perſons of the moſt eminent Quality, could bear Witneſs for me. And I do repeat it, my Lord, as I hope to attain Salvavation, I never did know Nelthorp, nor never did ſee him before in my Life, nor did I know of any body's coming but Mr. Hicks, and him I did know to be a Nonconformiſt Miniſter; and there being, as is well known, Warrants out to apprehend all Nonconformiſt Miniſters, I was willing to give him ſhelter from theſe Warrants. I was come down but that Week into the Countrey, when this Man came to me from Mr. Hicks, to know if he might be received at my Houſe; and I told him, if Mr. Hicks pleaſed, he might come upon Tueſday in the Evening, and ſhould be welcome; but withal I told him, I muſt go away the Monday following from that place, but while I ſtaid I would entertain him. And I beſeech your Lordſhip to believe, I had no intention to harbour him but as a Nonconformiſt, and that I knew was no Treaſon: It cannot be imagined, that I would venture the the hazard of my own Life, and the ruin both of my ſelf and Children, to conceal one that I never knew in my Life, as I did not know Mr. Nelthorp, but had heard of him in the Proclamation. And for that white-headed Man that ſpeaks of my denying them, as I ſaid before, he was one of them that rifled and plundered my Houſe, and tore open my Trunk; and if I ſhould not be Convicted, he and the reſt of them may be called to account for what they did, for they ought not to have meddled with my Goods: Beſides, my Lord, I have a Witneſs that can teſtifie what Mr. Nelthorp ſaid, when he was examined before——

L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Liſle, that will ſignifie little; but if you have any Witneſſes, call them, we will hear what they ſay: Who is that Man you ſpeak of?

Liſle. George Creed his Name is; there he is.

L. C. J. Well, what do you know?

Creed. I heard Nelthorp ſay, That my Lady Liſle did not know of his coming, nor did not know his Name; nor had he ever told his Name, till he named himſelf to Col. Penruddock when he was taken.

L. C. J. Well, this is nothing; ſhe is not indicted for harbouring Nelthorp, but Hicks: Have you any more Witneſſes?

Liſle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you any more to ſay for your ſelf?

Liſle. My Lord, I came but five days before this into the Countrey——

L. C. J. Nay, I cannot tell when you came into the Countrey, nor I do not care; it ſeems you came time enough to harbour Rebels.

Liſle. I ſtaid in London till all the Rebellion was paſt and over; and I never uttered a good Word for the Rebels, nor ever harboured ſo much as a good Wiſh for them in my Mind: I know the King is my Sovereign, and I know my Duty to him, and if I would have ventured my Life for any thing, it ſhould have been to ſerve him, I know it is his due, and I owed all I had in the World to him: But tho' I could not fight for him my ſelf, my Son did; he was actually in Arms on the King's ſide in this Buſineſs; I inſtructed him always in Loyalty, and ſent him thither; it was I that bred him up to fight for the King.

L. C. J. Well, have you done?

Liſle. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Have you a mind to ſay any thing more?

Liſle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then command Silence.

[Which was done by Proclamation.]

Liſle. My Lord, may I ſpeak one word more. My Lord, I beſeech you afford me your Patience and your Advice; Keinſham, where Mr. Hicks is ſaid to be in Arms, does not lie in this County.

L. C. J. That is nothing: But the Treaſon you committed was in this County.

Liſle. But I aſſure your Lordſhip I never knew he was in the Army; and for any Talk or Diſcourſe in private about his or Nelthorp's being there, I never heard any; indeed one of them asked me, whether the Duke of Monmouth was beheaded, and I told them, yes, for ſo he was before I came out of Town: And that is all the Diſcourſe that I can remember, wherein he is concerned.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to ſay now?

Liſle. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then Gentlemen of the Jury: This is a Caſe of very great Example, and withal, of very great Weight and Moment; wherein the Intereſt of the Publick, and the Life of a Perſon of Quality and Fortune are put into your Hands: And the great Buſineſs which has detained both us and you ſo long, has been an endeavour (if it were poſſible) to find out the Truth; which indeed is the buſineſs of all Enquiries of this nature: We ſit not here, nor are you there upon any other Errand; nor is any thing deſired by the Court, or required of you, but that the Truth may be made manifeſt: 'Tis that you are bound to by the Oaths you have taken in this Service; and in that Inquiry you are to be guided by the Evidence that has here been given forth unto you; for your Oath is, That you ſhall well and truly try, and true deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, according to your Evidence, as you ſhall anſwer it to God. So that, Gentlemen, this Oath of yours being your Direction what is your Duty, and you being all Perſons of Quality and Reputation in your Countrey, Men of great Underſtanding and known Integrity, it is to be hoped, that not any thing can move you, either to Compaſſion of the Priſoner on the one hand, or her Allegations and Proteſtations of Innocence; nor on the other hand, to be influenced by any thing that comes from the Court, or is inſinuated by the learned Counſel at the Bar; but that you will entirely conſider what Evidence has been given to you, and being guided by that Evidence alone, you that are Judges of the Fact, will let us know the Truth of that Fact by a ſincere and upright Verdict.

And inaſmuch, Gentlemen, as the Evidence has been long in giving (tho' the Subſtantial part of it, perhaps, be in a narrow compaſs) I will repeat it to you, as near as I can, with all Faithfulneſs and Integrity, as I ſhall anſwer it to the great Judge of Heaven and Earth, before whom you, and we, and all muſt ſtand to be judged; without any Aggravation or Alteration on the one ſide, and without any Omiſſion on the other: And I ſhall do it, purely to help your Memories who are to determine the Fact; and I do pray and adjure, that you would do equally, according to the Truſt repoſed in you, and according to the Oath that you have taken: And I would repeat it once more, more, that you are not to be led by any Inſinuations of the Priſoner, nor by any Allegations from the Learned Counſel, whoſe Buſineſs it is to open the Fact; but that Fact ſo opened is no further to guide you in your Enquiry than as it is proved.

Gentlemen, Before I come to the particular Evidence of this Fact, I muſt crave leave to ſay ſomething of a Matter in general that is very well known: It was very well obſerved by that Learned Gentleman that opened the Cauſe at the beginning, that we are all of us here unſpeakably oblig'd to bleſs the great God of Heaven, the Father of Mercies, and praiſed for ever be his Holy Name, for his infinite Goodneſs in preſerving and protecting us from the imminent Ruin which the late horrid and deteſtable Rebellion would (had it ſucceeded) have inevitably brought upon us, had not he of his own infinite Mercy and gracious Goodneſs protected and delivered us from our Enemies, they had undoubtedly ſwallowed us up quick: But as the Attempts of our Enemies were very malicious, ſo the Preſervation and Deliverance of our good God was very great and ſignal.

And we have Reaſon to bleſs that great God for many Deliverances he has been pleaſed to give us; We are by no Means to forget his Mercy towards our late Sovereign of bleſſed Memory, and with him towards us, when he brought him out of Exile and Bondage, and us out of that State of Confuſion and Miſery, which our Country had for many Years groaned under: When all Religion as well as Sovereignty, and all Obedience, Duty and Deference to Superiors were quite loſt, God of his infinite Mercy, and of his own moſt gracious bountiful Diſpoſition brought our bleſſed Sovereign (now in Heaven) and his gracious Majeſty that now reigns, and all the Royal Family after a long and tedious Rebellion, into a quiet and peaceable Poſſeſſion of their undoubted Rights and Inheritances, and with him reſtored to us our Religion, the beſt of Religions, the true Proteſtant reformed Religion, the Religion eſtabliſhed by Law, which now is, and I hope will ever remain eſtabliſhed among us, as now profeſſed and practiſed in the Church of England; and when we reflect on that Deliverance, we are to this Circumſtance to heighten both our Admiration and our Gratitude, that it was brought about without the leaſt drop of Blood ſhed, by a miraculous Providence, and by the Strength of an Almighty Arm.

Beſides, Gentlemen, we cannot be ſufficiently thankful to our God, for the Mercies we enjoy'd under that bleſſed King, for we are to conſider we liv'd in all the Affluence of Peace and Plenty, we ſafely and uninterruptedly enjoyed our Religion, the greateſt Bleſſing on this ſide Immortality, our Lives, Liberties and Properties inviolably were ſecured; every Man ſafe under the Shadow of his own Vine, and eat the Fruit of his own Labour; and while our Neighbours ſuffered the Calamities of War, we were ſurrounded with all the Bleſſings of Peace, and ſlept ſecurely under the Government of a gracious and merciful King: Every one of us had even what our own Hearts could deſire, and if we wanted any thing, it could be only thankful and dutiful Hearts to our God and our Prince, during whoſe Life we continued in a happy State and Condition.

But, it having pleaſed God, the King of Kings, the great Ruler both of Heaven and Earth, to take that bleſſed Prince to himſelf, What Thanks ought we to pay him for his gracious Goodneſs, in leaving ſo great and ſo glorious a Succeſſor as his Royal Brother, our preſent Sovereign, whom I pray Almighty God may long live and happily reign among us: This gracious Prince, as ſoon as ever he came to the Poſſeſſion of his undoubted Right and Inheritance, upon his Brother's Death, in the Imperial Crown of this Realm, to Entitle himſelf to the good Opinion of his People, and to engage them to the Expreſſion of that Duty which the Chriſtian Religion, and I am ſure particularly the Religion of the true Church of England does oblige all it's Followers to: What does he? Even before he was ask'd, in the very firſt Minutes of his Reign, he begins with Bounty to his Subjects and declares his Reſolution to preſerve them ſafe in their deareſt and moſt precious Enjoyments, in their Religion, and not only in that, but in the Laws, Liberties, Rights and Properties, with the moſt inviolable Security to their Lives and all that is dear unto them: And this gracious Declaration came from his Royal Mouth without any Sollicitation or any Inducement, ſave only the generous and gracious Inclination of his own Royal Heart, and to give it the greater Edge, to the Honour of the Church of England's Religion be it ſpoken, he was pleas'd to tell what Opinion he had of our Religion and its true Profeſſors, that they were the true Friends and faithful Supporters of the Government, an Opinion which I hope every honeſt Church of England-man will endeavour to cheriſh by a ſuitable Practice of what is certainly the Doctrine of that Religion, Loyalty and Obedience.

But alas! without Horror and Confuſion, we cannot but remember that inſtead of making good Returns of Reſpect and Duty to ſo gracious a Sovereign for his great Bounty, Faction and Sedition, Hypocriſie and Malice had beſotted and bewitched a great Part of his Subjects, and corrupted, blinded, and bigotted them to ſuch an Height of Impiety, that a Rebellion muſt begin his Reign, and all the poiſonous Arts of Diſobedience are made uſe of to inſtigate the King's Subjects, with all the Rancour and Vengeance in the World to riſe againſt him.

Bleſſed God! What is the way that this Devil of Sedition comes to bewitch People to ſuch a height, when Almighty God had ſo lately delivered us from the Miſery and Confuſion of a Civil War? It is that way ſurely, we find it but too plain, which he had always found very ſucceſsful, the Pretence of Sainthip, Conſcience, and that glorious Name, Religion; What Religion can it be? The Chriſtian Religion had this Form of it's great Rule; Render to Cæſar the things that are Cæſar's, and to God the things that are God's. But theſe Men act as though that were not Scripture, when yet pronounced by our bleſſed Lord himſelf, and both joined in one Sentence as indiſpenſible Duties; and they will hardly be brought to believe that Rebellion is the Sum of Witchcraft, though the Scriptures have directly given it that Character. Good God!

God! that we ſhould live to ſuch an Age; when Men can call God to aſſiſt and protect them in a Rebellion, for not to reflect upon what was done in former times, it is late enough for us to remember, but not without Horror, that Men have been ty'd by all the Bonds and Contracts Hell could invent in a Combination and Confederacy to murder both the late King and his preſent Majeſty, and all this while this muſt be ſanctified with the Name of Religion: So that a Man that is a Murderer by the Law of God, and an Offender againſt the firſt Precept that God Almighty enjoined, Not to ſhed Innocent Blood, ſhall yet be a Saint for an Aſſaſſination upon the Account of Religion, and this ſhall be accounted a pious Cauſe to obtain Heaven.

Who did theſe Miſcreants, that were juſtly by Law condemned for that barbarous Conſpiracy, when they came to die, invocate? The great God to teſtifie for them, that they died for the ſake of Religion, when they come to ſuffer for Treaſon: They can bleſs God Almighty for the Honour he does them in dying in his Cauſe, and call themſelves Martyrs for it.

Nay, is it not yet more ſtrange and horrid, that ſome Men who call themſelves Miniſters of the Goſpel ſhall come to be Belwethers of Rebellion, and cry out, they are fighting the Lord's Battle, when they are attempting to kill the Lord's Anointed?

Jeſus God! that ever we ſhould have ſuch a Generation of Vipers among us, that can plunge themſelves into the moſt horrid Impieties, and yet think to eſcape Confuſion here, and purchaſe a Crown of Glory hereafter.

When we conſider, Gentlemen, the Ringleader of this late Rebellion, the Center of all our Trouble, the Arch-Rebel and Traitor, Monmouth I mean, ſhould arrive to ſuch a Height of Impudence and Villany as to bleſs God that he could with Satisfaction reflect upon a two Year's Life very regularly ſpent; But how? In manifeſt Adultery and Uncleanneſs, nor can it be ſpoke or thought of without inexpreſſible Horror.

Alack! Gentlemen, when we find Religion made uſe of as a Subterfuge and Cloak for ſuch impious Practices, it gives too much Occaſion for our Enemies to think us Atheiſts; the very Turks will hate us, and Pagans deteſt us, as the moſt irreligious prophane People in the World. When we who profeſs Love and Duty to Jeſus Chriſt as our Holy and Bleſſed Redeemer, do theſe things and even boaſt of them, whom they that deny him bluſh at the very thoughts of, and never ſo much as name, much leſs act without Horror and Confuſion.

Gentlemen, I do not ſpeak this for the ſake of ſpeaking, but I ſhould fain deliver my own Soul and yours from having any hand in ſuch horrible Impieties, and that, by teſtifying our Abhorrence of them, by publickly declaring our ſelves to be Enemies to thoſe Hypocrites the Nonconformiſt Parſons; I mean, that pretend indeed pure Religion to be their great Aim and End, and through a Scrupuloſity of Conſcience, cannot conform to that Decency and Duty which is required of them in the Church; but yet, without remorſe, can kill, or be the occaſion of the Death of Ten Thouſand People, as in the Conſequence of this late Rebellion perhaps it may prove. For do but conſider how many Families by this means are utterly ruined, how many innocent Babes ſtarved, or expoſed to the utmoſt Penury and Want; how many Widows left in a diſtreſſed deſolate Condition, deſtitute of all manner of Proviſion and Maintenance; and all this by the inſtigation of theſe Villains that have preached and pray'd them into it, gilding the Bait that has drawn them into it, by the ſpecious pretence of Religion and Conſcience?

Conſider, Gentlemen, this is that which has brought this poor unfortunate Gentlewoman, the Priſoner at the Bar, into this deplorable Condition: What could prevail upon her to run ſuch a Hazard as this, but only her Affection and deluded Zeal for that Wretch, that had nothing but the name of Religion, for his Soul is blacker in the Eyes of God, and the Thoughts of all honeſt Men, than ever his Coat was? You ſee by the Proofs what an impudent unſanctified Villain he was; for when theſe Gentlemen that have given Evidence, were in the Cuſtody, and under the Power of the Rebels, he muſt tempt and provoke them to leave off and forſake their Duty to their natural Lord and lawful Sovereign the King, whom God had ſet over them, and ſubmit to an Uſurper, a King of their own making; and ſuch a King too, that I dare boldly affirm, the meaneſt Subject within the Kingdom that is legitimate, has a better Title to the Crown than he had; and this all under the pretence of Religion, and the Proteſtant Religion too, and that ſame Prince of their's muſt have the Title of a Proteſtant Prince; and an excellent Proteſtant he lived and died, living in the open Violation of the Law of God, and in manifeſt Rebellion againſt his lawful Sovereign; and he died without any Remorſe for either, boaſting of his own Wickedneſs beyond the bounds of common Modeſty and Humanity.

Gentlemen, Let us all join in hearty Prayers to our God, the God of infinite Mercy; that as he has yet once more delivered our Sovereign, and us with him, out of the Jaws of theſe Lions and ravenous Wolves; ſo he would ſtill pleaſe to preſerve him and us from the hands of all our Enemies; and I pray God it may have that good effect upon all of us, as to make us more careful and conſcientious in our Duty to him, and his Vicegerent the King: To him alone muſt all the Glory be aſcribed; it was not our Hand, or Arms of the King that could have ſaved or protected us, had not the ſpecial Interpoſition of the Divine Power and Goodneſs wrought this Deliverance for us.

But now, Gentlemen, to come to the particular Caſe here before you; and the Fact, upon the Evidence, ſtands thus: It is very notorious this Fellow Hicks was actually in this Rebellion; you have it Sworn by three ſeveral Perſons that ſaw him, and they particularized to you ſuch Tokens of their Knowledge and Remembrance, that ſure, if any thing can, muſt make him bluſh at the repetition of them; for they tell you, when they were in Priſon he would have corrupted them from their Duty; and yeſterday they ſaw him in Priſon, and upon diſcourſe of ſome Circumſtances, he could not deny but he was there.

This

This Perſon, Mrs. Liſle, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſhe is accuſed for receiving and harbouring this Perſon: And, Gentlemen, I muſt tell you for Law, of which we are the Judges, and not you; That if any Perſon be in actual Rebellion againſt the King, and another Perſon (who really and actually was not in Rebellion) does receive, harbour, comfort and conceal him that was ſuch, a Receiver is as much a Traitor, as he who indeed bore Arms: We are bound, by our Oaths and Conſciences, to deliver and declare to you what is Law; and you are bound, by your Oaths and Conſciences, to deliver and declare to us, by your Verdict, the Truth of the Fact.

Gentlemen, That he was there in Rebellion is undeniably and unqueſtionably proved: That there are ſufficient Teſtimonies to ſatisfie you, that this Woman did receive and harbour him, is that which is left to your Conſideration; and for that, the Proofs lie thus. And truly I am ſorry to have occaſion for repeating the Circumſtances of the Proof; I mean, the great Art that has been uſed to conceal it; how difficult a thing it was to come at it; what time has been ſpent in endeavouring to find out Truth in a Fellow, that in defiance of all Admonition, Threats and Perſuaſion, would prevaricate and ſhuffle to conceal that Truth; nay lie and forſwear himſelf to contradict it: But out of true Chriſtian Charity, as I told him, ſo I tell you; I do heartily pray (and all good Chriſtians I hope will join with me in it) to the God of infinite Mercy that he would have mercy upon his Soul, upon which he hath contracted ſo great a Guilt by the impudence of his Behaviour, and pertinacious Obſtinacy in thoſe Falſhoods which he hath made uſe of in this Caſe.

Gentlemen, I would willingly forget all his Prevarications, but I muſt take notice of them in ſhort, to come to the Truth. Firſt, he ſays, He came upon an Errand from a Man he knows not whom, to my Lady Liſle's Houſe; and thither he is brought by one Barter; and when he comes there, he tells her, he comes in the Name of one Hicks, who deſired to be entertained there: Then ſhe asks the Queſtion, whether Hicks had been in the Army; and he told her he did not know; and he ſwears now he did not: But at laſt it came out, that it was to entertain Hicks and another Perſon; but it ſhould ſeem that other Perſon was not named; and Barter tells you, that Hicks and another Perſon (who afterwards proved to be Nelthorp) are promiſed to be entertained, and ordered to come in the Evening. But not to go backward and forward, as he has done in his Evidence, denying what he afterwards acknowledged, that he ſaw any Body beſides a little Girl; That he pulled down the Hay out of the Rack for his Horſe; That he eat any thing but Cake and Cheeſe that he brought with him from home; That he was ever made to drink, or to eat or drink in the Houſe, or ever medled or made with any body in the Houſe. At laſt we are told that Carpenter met with him, and came out with a Lanthorn and Candle, took care of his Horſe, carried him into the Room where Hicks and Nelthorp were, and the Priſoner at the Bar, Mrs. Liſle; there they all ſupp'd together; there they fell into Diſcourſe; there Nelthorp's Name was named, and they talked of being in the Army, and of the Fight; and ſo it is all come out, and makes a full and poſitive Evidence.

But then, Suppoſe there was no more than the other Evidence, and that the Fellow remain in an hard-hearted Obſtinacy, then you are to conſider the Circumſtances even from his firſt Evidence, that this was after the Rebellion was all over; for it ſeems during the Rebellion ſhe was in London, and it was notoriouſly known the King's Forces were in purſuit of the Rebels, and this without any poſitive Proof would be in it ſelf a ſufficient Teſtimony to convince any conſiderate Perſon, that ſhe was to Conceal thoſe ſhe ought not to Conceal; becauſe ſhe directed the particular time wherein they ſhould come, and that was at Night; and no Prudent Perſon would receive Strangers in the Night, and give ſuch directions in ſuch a Seaſon, without ſome Extraordinary ground for it. When they came there ſhe provided a Supper for them, and you ſee what Care is taken, that the Woman only is permitted to bring that Supper to the Door, and the Husband muſt ſet it on the Table; no body is permitted to attend there but he. Works of Darkneſs always deſire to be in the Dark: Works of Rebellion and ſuch like are never done in the Light.

But then comes that Honeſt Fellow Barter (I call him ſo becauſe he appears ſo to be, and he ought to be remembred with a great Remark for his Honeſty) he tells you, he conducted him to the Houſe, and what Diſcourſe paſs'd there in his hearing: The Priſoner asked him, what Countreyman he was, and whether he was a Brick-maker, and promiſed him ſo many Acres of Land in Carolina: The Fellow, upon Obſervation and Conſideration, found himſelf under a great Load, could not ſleep nor eat quietly, as Men that have honeſt Minds are uneaſie under ſuch things; Falſhood, and Treaſon, and Hypocriſie are a heavy Load; and, bleſſed be God, things were by this means diſcovered; for he goes and tells Col. Penruddock; and witnal, Dunne ſwears to Barter, it was the braveſt Job that ever he had in his Life; whereas in the beginning of his Story, he would have told you a ſtrange Story of a black Beard, and I do not know what, and that he got not one Groat by it; that he gave the Man half a Crown out of his own Pocket, and was ſo induſtrious, as when he knew the way no further, then he would hire one himſelf to ſhew him the way, and all for nothing, but only for the kindneſs he had for a black Beard.

Beſides, Gentlemen, I am ſorry to remember ſomething that dropped even from the Gentlewoman her ſelf, ſhe pretends to Religion and Loyalty very much, how greatly ſhe wept at the Death of King Charles the Martyr, and owns her great Obligations to the late King and his Royal Brother; that ſhe had not had a Being, nor any thing to maintain it for twenty Years laſt paſt but from their Bounty, and yet no ſooner is one in the Grave, but ſhe forgets all Gratitude, and entertains thoſe that were Rebels againſt his Royal Succeſſor: I will not ſay what Hand her Husband had in the Death of that bleſſed Martyr, ſhe has enough to anſwer for of her own Guilt; and I muſt confeſs it ought not one way or other to make any Ingredient into this Caſe what ſhe was in former Times: And I told a Relation of hers, Mr. Tipping by Name, that came to me laſt Night to deſire that ſhe might not lie under ſome Imputations that were gone Abroad of her, that ſhe rejoyced at the Death of King Charles I. nor that any falſe Report of that Nature might influence the Court or Jury againſt her, that it ſhould not: Be the thing true or falſe, it is to be of no Weight one way or other in the Tryal of this Caſe, nor is ſhe to be accountable for it.

But I muſt remember you of one Particular, that is plain upon this Evidence, and is of very great Moment in this Caſe, that after all theſe private Meſſages and Directions given to come by Night, and the kind Reception they met with when they came, and after all this Care to lodge them and feed them, when Colonel Penruddock, after the Diſcovery made by Barter, came to ſearch her Houſe, then ſhe had no body in it truly, which is an Aggravation of the Offence teſtified by Colonel Penruddock himſelf, whoſe Father likewiſe was a Martyr and died for his Fidelity to the Crown, and who was the Judge of that Father we all very well know. God Almighty is a juſt God, and it may be worth conſidering (eſpecially by her) how God has been pleaſed to make uſe of him as the Inſtrument in this Buſineſs, and ſhe would likewiſe do well to conſider the Finger of God in working upon the Heart of that Man Barter, who was imploy'd in all this Affair, and that all the Truth has been told by Nelthorp, that blackeſt of Villains Nelthorp, that would have murdered the late King and his Royal Brother; that he that was one of thoſe barbarous, malicious Aſſaſſinates in that black Conſpiracy, and Outlaw'd, ſhould be harbour'd by one that pretends a Love for the Royal Family, and entertained and diſcourſed with at Night about being in the Army; yet that he and that other Villain Hicks, who pretends to Religion and be a Preacher of the Goſpel, but is found in Rebellion and in the Company of Traytors ſhould be deny'd the next Morning.

I hope they themſelves are all by this time ſatisfied Truth will come out, and I hope you will not be deceived by any ſpecious Pretences. Our fore-Fathers have been deluded, but the Deception, I hope, is now at an end; and I muſt needs ſay, if all theſe Witneſſes that have freely diſcovered their Knowledge, joined to that Truth which is at length drawn from that Dunne, be worthy of any Credit, it is as plain a Proof as can be given, and as evident as the Sun at Noon-day.

Gentlemen, Upon your Conſciences be it: The Preſervation of the Government, the Life of the King, the Safety and Honour of our Religion, and the Diſcharge of our Conſciences as Loyal Men, good Chriſtians and faithful Subjects, are at ſtake, neither her Age nor her Sex are to move you, who have nothing elſe to conſider but the Evidence of the Fact you are to try: I charge you therefore, as you will anſwer it at the Bar of the laſt Judgment, when you and we muſt all appear, deliver your Verdict according to Conſcience and Truth: With that great God the Impartial Judge, there is no ſuch thing as reſpect of Perſons, and in our Diſcharge of our Duty in Courts of Juſtice, he has injoined us his Creatures, that we muſt have no ſuch thing as a Friend in the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, all our Friendſhip muſt be to Truth, and our Care to preſerve that inviolate.

Liſle. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſe——

L. C. J. Miſtreſs, you have had your Turn, you cannot now be heard any more after the Jury is charged.

Liſle. My Lord, I did not know Nelthorp I declare it before he was taken.

L. C. J. You are not indicted for Nelthorp, but we are not to enter into Dialogues now, the Jury muſt conſider of it.

Jury man. Pray, my Lord, ſome of us deſire to know of your Lordſhip, in point of Law, whether it be the ſame thing, and equally Treaſon, in receiving him before he was convicted of Treaſon, as if it had been after?

L. C. J. It is all the ſame, that certainly can be no Doubt; for, if in caſe this Hicks had been wounded in the Rebels Army, and had come to her Houſe and there been entertained, but had dy'd there of his Wounds, and ſo could never have been convicted, ſhe had been nevertheleſs a Traytor.

Then the Jury withdrew, and ſtaying out a while, the Lord Jefferies expreſſed a great deal of Impatience, and ſaid, he wonder'd that in ſo plain a Caſe they would go from the Bar, and would have ſent for them with an Intimation, that if they did not come quickly, he would adjourn and let them lie by it all Night; but after about half an Hour's Stay the Jury returned, and the Foreman addreſſed himſelf to the Court thus:

Foreman. My Lord, we have one thing to beg of your Lordſhip ſome Directions in, before we can give our Verdict in this Caſe: We have ſome Doubt upon us whether there be ſufficient Proof that ſhe knew Hicks to have been in the Army.

L. C. J. There is as full Proof as Proof can be, but you are Judges of the Proof, for my part I thought there was no Difficulty in it.

Foreman. My Lord, we are in ſome Doubt of it.

L. C. J. I cannot help your Doubts: Was there not proved a Diſcourſe of the Battle and of the Army at Supper-time?

Foreman. But, my Lord, we are not ſatisfied that ſhe had Notice that Hicks was in the Army.

L. C. J. I cannot tell what would ſatisfie you, Did ſhe not enquire of Dunne whether Hicks had been in the Army? And when he told her he did not know, ſhe did not ſay ſhe would refuſe him if he had been there, but order'd him to come by Night, by which it is evident ſhe ſuſpected it, and when he and Nelthorp came, diſcourſed with them about the Battle and the Army: Come, come, Gentlemen, it is a plain Proof.

Foreman.

Foreman. My Lord, we do not remember that it was proved that ſhe did ask any ſuch Queſtion when they were there.

L. C. J. Sure you do not remember any thing that has paſſed? Did not Dunne tell you there was ſuch Diſcourſe, and ſhe was by, and Nelthorp's Name was named? But if there were no ſuch Proof, the Circumſtances and Management of the thing is as full a Proof as can be, I wonder what it is you doubt of.

Liſle. My Lord, I hope——

L. C. J. You muſt not ſpeak now.

Then the Jury laid their Heads together for near a quarter of an Hour, and at length agreed, and being call'd over, deliver'd in this Verdict by the Foreman.

Cl. of Arraignments. Alice Liſle, Hold up thy Hand. Gentlemen of the Jury look upon the Priſoner, How ſay ye, Is ſhe guilty of the Treaſon whereof ſhe ſtands indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands, or Tenements had ſhe?

Foreman. None that we know of.

Cl. of Ar. Look to her Gaoler, ſhe is found guilty of High Treaſon, and prepare your ſelf to die.

Then the Verdict was Recorded.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I did not think I ſhould have had any Occaſion to ſpeak after your Verdict, but finding ſome Heſitancy and Doubt among you, I cannot but ſay, I wonder it ſhould come about, for I think in my Conſcience the Evidence was as full and plain as could be, and if I had been among you, and ſhe had been my own Mother, I ſhould have found her Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd till the next Morning.

Die Veneris 28 Auguſti, 1685.

THis Day Alice Liſle was brought to the Bar, and being asked what ſhe had to ſay for her ſelf why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon her, being convicted of High Treaſon, but offering nothing, ſhe was, with the reſt of the Priſoners that were to receive the Sentence of Death, Condemn'd by the Lord Jefferies, who paſſed Sentence thus:

L. C. J. Alice Liſle, and you the ſeveral Priſoners now at the Bar, you have been ſeverally Indicted, Arraigned, and now ſtand ſeverally Convicted of Crimes that by the Laws of the Land are to be puniſhed with Death, you ſtand Convicted by your Equals, by a Jury of your Country, againſt whom you might have had, and were allow'd to make (and one of you did make) what Challenges you could, but upon full Evidence, by that Jury of your own Country-men you have been found guilty of thoſe Crimes for which you are to die; and there remains now no more with the Court but to perform their Duty, which is to pronounce that Sentence, that diſmal Sentence of Death, which the Law has provided for ſuch Offenders.

And ſure I am it cannot but be thought uneaſie, and far from pleaſant, not only to me, but to every Body elſe that ſees ſuch a lamentable Object, ſuch a Number of Perſons that might have acquired to themſelves an honeſt Livelihood by Diligence in their lawful Callings, being dutiful to God and obedient to their Sovereign and the Laws of the Land, who yet in Defiance of all theſe have brought themſelves to a ſhameful untimely End by their own wicked Courſes.

Particularly, I cannot but lament the deplorable Condition of you, Mrs. Liſle, a Gentlewoman of Quality and of Fortune, ſo far ſtricken in Years, therefore ought to have had more Diſcretion: One, who all your Life-time have been a great Pretender to, and Profeſſor of Religion, and of that Religion which bears a very good Name, the Proteſtant Religion, but that Name has been perverted to very ill Purpoſes by ſome People who have had nothing but the Name to protect themſelves under.

There is no Religion whatſoever (except that hypocritical Profeſſion of theirs which deſerves not the Name of Religion, I mean the canting, whining, Presbyterian, Phanatical Profeſſion) that gives the leaſt Countenance to Rebellion or Faction; and I cannot but lament to find you involved in that Herd.

And I cannot but deplore it withal, as a moſt ſad and diſmal thing, that in this little Caſe ſo many Perjuries ſhould be added to the Crime of Treaſon, ſuch, as for my part I cannot but tremble to remember; Perjuries in defiance of all the Inſtruction and Admonition that true Chriſtian Charity could expreſs, and in defiance of the Omniſcience and Juſtice of the All-ſeeing God of Truth: You ought to reflect upon whoſe Account thoſe Perjuries were committed, and to lay them ſeriouſly to Heart, for e'er long, in a few Hours (deceive not your ſelf) you are to give an Account at a greater Bar for all your Thoughts, Words and Actions.

You would likewiſe do well to bethink your ſelf with all Seriouſneſs and Remorſe, of your own falſe Aſſeverations and Proteſtations, that you upon your Salvation ſhould pretend Ignorance in the Buſineſs, when ſince that time, even ſince the laſt Night, there has been but too much diſcover'd how far you were concern'd; no, 'tis not unknown who were ſent for upon the Monday Night, in order to have that rebellious, ſeditious Fellow to preach to them, what Directions were given to come through the Orchard the back and private way, what Orders were given for Proviſion, and how the Horſes were appointed to be diſpoſed of: I only ſpeak this, that you ſhould bethink your ſelf in this ſhort time that you have left here upon Earth, to get theſe Sins of yours duly repented of, and truly pardoned, and not only ſo, but conſider you have it now in your Power to make ſome Recompence to the publick Juſtice of the Nation, by diſcovering the Truth in this Matter, and all Religion enjoins you to do what you can: For without the infinite Mercy of the great God you are in a deplorable Condition, and without true Contrition and Repentance, of which all the Recompence you can make, both for publick and private Injuries, is a part, you can never hope for the Mercy of that God to be extended to you.

Sirs; It is not in my Province to adviſe you in your Preparation for that Eternity you are all ſuddenly to enter into; but out of pure Charity, and hearty Compaſſion to you, and the miſerable Condition you have brought your ſelves into, and out of a tender regard to your precious immortal Souls, I cannot but aſſure you of my own, and recommend you to the earneſt and fervent Prayers of all good Chriſtians, to the God of infinite Mercy, that he would be merciful unto you all.

And the great God of his gracious Goodneſs grant, that all we that are here may learn ſuch Leſſons as are proper from ſuch Examples: From that Woman the ſad and diſmal Effects of Diſloyalty and Treaſon; and from all the reſt the deplorable Miſchiefs that attend Licentiouſneſs and Debauchery: For by the Courſe of Nature, moſt of theſe might have lived a much longer time, and that with Comfort to themſelves and their Relations; but now, to the anguiſh of their own Hearts, and the unſpeakable Grief of all their Friends, they have ſhortened their own Days, and brought a diſmal Sentence upon themſelves.

And I recommend them not only to my ſelf and others, but chiefly and eſpecially to the Pious, Orthodox and Learned Miniſtry, to give the beſt Aſſiſtance they can, during the ſhort remainder of their time; for their Abode here upon Earth is but ſhort, and God grant they may meet with a bleſſed Immortality.

There remains no more for me to do, I ſay, but to pronounce the Sentence of the Law, which is this; and the Court does award,

That you, Mrs. Liſle, be conveyed from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence you are to be drawn on a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where your Body is to be burnt alive till you be dead. And the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

The reſt of the Priſoners had the uſual Judgment, as in Caſes of Felony.

L. C. J. Look you, Mrs. Liſle, when I left his Majeſty, he was pleaſed to remit the Time of all Executions to me; that wherever I found any Obſtinacy or Impenitence, I might order the Executions with what ſpeed I ſhould think beſt: Therefore, Mr. Sheriff, take notice, you are to prepare for the Execution of this Gentlewoman this Afternoon: But withal, I give you, the Priſoner, this Intimation; We that are the Judges, ſhall ſtay in Town an Hour or two; you ſhall have Pen, Ink and Paper brought you, and if in the mean time you employ that Pen, Ink and Paper, and this Hour or two well (you underſtand what I mean) it may be you may hear further from us, in a deferring the Execution.

Then the Priſoner was taken away.

But afterwards, upon the Interceſſion of ſome Divines of the Church of Wincheſter, ſhe was Reprieved till Wedneſday the Second of September.

On Sunday the Thirtieth of Auguſt, the following Letter was ſent to the Right Honourable the Earl of Clarendon, Lord Privy-Seal, at Windſor; [Which the Earl did then read to the King; who anſwered, That he would do nothing in it, having left all to the Lord Chief Juſtice.]

My Lord,

'UNderſtanding that Mrs. Liſle is Condemned, and that many falſe things are reported of her, that may hinder the King from ſhewing her Mercy; particularly, that ſhe was an Enemy to the King's Friends in the time of the late Wars: As to that, we can aſſure your Lordſhip, that ſhe was a Favourer of them in their greateſt extremities; and particularly of us, and of ſome others that are ſince dead: And for theſe late Years we have often been in her Company, and never heard her ſay any thing but what became a Loyal Subject. This we deſire your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to repreſent to the King, and to intercede for her Reprieve; which will be a great Obligation to your Lordſhip's humble Servants,

M. St. Johns.
E. Abergeveney.

On Monday the Thirty firſt of Auguſt, the following Petition was preſented to the King.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty:

The Humble Petition of Alicia Liſle:

Humbly Sheweth,

'THAT Your Petitioner lieth under a Sentence of Death for Harbouring one John Hicks; and is ſentenced to be Burnt on Wedneſday next.

'That ſhe is the Daughter of Sir White Beconſaw, deſcended of an Ancient and Honourable

'rable Family, and related to ſeveral of the 'beſt Families of the Nobility of this King-'dom.

'Wherefore your Petitioner humbly begs 'your Majeſty, that Execution may be altered 'from Burning to Beheading, and may be Reſ-'pited for four Days:

And your Petitioner ſhall pray, &c.

To which his Majeſty anſwered: That he would not Reprieve her One Day; but for altering the Sentence, he would do it, if there were any Precedents for it.

Thereupon the following Precedents, for the altering of the Sentence, were offered to the King.

That Execution may vary from the Judgment, ſee the Regiſter, Fo. 165. in Felony, Parl. 8. E. 3. where the Judgment always is Suſpendatur per collum, yet the Party may be beheaded, which is no Part of the Sentence; ſo was the Duke of Somerſet in the Time of Edw. VI. for Felony; ſo was the Lord Audley, 7 Car. I. for Felony (Rape.)

Queen Katherine Howard for Treaſon, Hen. VIII. and Jane Grey, primo Mariæ: The Counteſs of Salisbury being attainted of Treaſon, Anno 1541. was Beheaded 32 Hen. VIII.

Whereupon his Majeſty was pleaſed to ſign the following Warrant.

James R.

WHereas we are informed that Alicia Liſle has received Sentence of Death for High Treaſon at the Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol-Delivery, held at our City of Weſtminſter, for Harbouring of John Hicks a Rebel, and that the Sentence is to be executed upon her the Second of September next, by burning her alive; And whereas the ſaid Alicia Liſle has humbly petitioned Us to alter the Manner of the ſaid Execution, by cauſing her head to be ſevered from her Body: We being graciouſly pleaſed to condeſcend to her Requeſt, have thought fit hereby to ſignifie Our Will and Pleaſure accordingly: And our further Will and Pleaſure is, that you deliver the Head and Body to her Relations to be privately and decently interred: And for ſo doing this ſhall be your Warrant.

Given at Our Court at Windſor, the Thirty firſt Day of Auguſt, 1685. in the Firſt Year of our Reign.

SUNDERLAND.

To our Truſty and Well-beloved the High Sheriff of our County of Hampts, and to all others whom it may concern.

Which Warrant being delivered to the Sheriff, ſhe was, on Wedneſday the Second of September, in the Afternoon, brought to Execution, which was perform'd upon a Scaffold erected in the Market-place of the City of Wincheſter, where ſhe behaved her ſelf with a great deal of Chriſtian Reſolution: She then delivered a Paper to the Sheriff, a Copy of which follows; and after ſome little time was executed, having her Head ſevered from her Body.

A Copy of the Paper delivered to the Sheriff.

Gentlemen, Friends and Neighbours,

'IT may be expected that I ſhould ſay ſome-'thing at my Death, my Birth and Educa-'tion being near this Place: My Parents in-'ſtructed me in the Fear of God, and I now 'die of the reformed Religion, always being in-'ſtructed in that Belief, That if Popery ſhould 'return into this Nation, it would be a great 'Judgment, I die in the Expectation of Pardon 'of my Sins, and Acceptation with the Father, 'by the imputed Righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, 'he being the End of the Law for Righteouſ-'neſs to every one that believes: I thank God, 'through Jeſus Chriſt, I depart under the Blood 'of Sprinkling, which ſpeaketh better things 'than the Blood of Abel, God having made this 'Chaſtiſement an Ordinance to my Soul.

'I did as little expect to come to this Place 'on this Occaſion as any Perſon in this Na-'tion, therefore let all learn not to be High-'minded, but fear the Lord; the Lord is a 'Sovereign, and will take what way he ſees 'beſt to glorifie himſelf by his poor Creatures, 'therefore do humbly deſire to ſubmit to his 'Will, praying him, that in Patience I may 'poſſeſs my Soul.

'My Crime was entertaining a Nonconfor-'miſt Miniſter, which is ſince ſworn to have 'been in the late Duke of Monmouth's Army: 'I am told, if I had not denyed them, it would 'not have affected me; I have no Excuſe but Sur-'prize and Fear, which I believe my Jury muſt 'make uſe of to excuſe their Verdict to the 'World.

'I have been told, the Court did uſe to be Coun-'ſel for the Priſoner, inſtead of which, there was 'Evidence from thence, which, though it were but 'Hearſay, might poſſibly affect my Jury: My De-'fence was ſuch as might be expected from a weak 'Woman, but ſuch as it was, I did not hear it re-'peated again to the Jury, but I forgive all Per-'ſons that have done me Wrong, and I deſire 'that God will do ſo likewiſe.

'I forgive Colonel Penruddock, though he told me 'he could have taken thoſe Men before they came to my 'Houſe.

'As to what may be objected, that I gave 'it under my Hand that I had diſcourſed with 'Nelthorp, that could be no Evidence to the 'Court, or Jury, it being after my Conviction 'and Sentence.

'I acknowledge his Majeſty's Favour in al-'tering my Sentence, and I pray God to pre-'ſerve him that he may long Reign in Peace, 'and the true Religion flouriſh under him.

'Two things I have omitted to ſay, which is, 'that I forgive him that deſired to be taken from the 'Grand Jury to the Petty Jury, that he might be 'the more nearly concerned in my Death.

'Alſo I return humble Thanks to Almighty 'God, and the Reverend Clergy that aſſiſted 'me in my Impriſonment.

Primo Gulielmi & Mariæ: Anno 1689.

An Act for annulling and making void the Attainder of Alicia Liſle, Widow.

WHereas Alicia Liſle, Widow, in the Month of Auguſt, in the firſt Year of the Reign of the late King James the Second, at a Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol-delivery, holden for the County of Southampton, at the City of Wincheſter in the ſaid County, by an irregular and undue Proſecution, was Indicted for entertaining, concealing and comforting John Hicks, Clerk, a falſe Traytor, knowing him to be ſuch: Though the ſaid John Hicks was not, at the time of the Tryal of the ſaid Alicia Liſle, Attainted or Convicted of any ſuch Crime: And, by a Verdict injuriouſly extorted and procured by the Menaces and Violences, and other illegal Practices of George Lord Jefferies, Baron of Wem, then Lord Chief Juſtice of the Kings Bench, and Chief Commiſſioner of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol-delivery within the ſaid County, was Convicted, Attainted and Executed for High-Treaſon. May it therefore pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſties, at the humble Petition of Triphena Lloyd and Bridget Uſher, Daughters of the ſaid Alicia Liſle: That it be declared and enacted by the Authority of this preſent Parliament: And be it Enacted by the King and Queens moſt excellent Majeſties, by and with the Advice and Conſent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the Authority of the ſame, That the ſaid Conviction, Judgment and Attainder of the ſaid Alicia Liſle be, and are hereby Repealed, Reverſed, made and declared Null and Void to all Intents, Conſtructions and Purpoſes whatſoever, as if no ſuch Conviction, Judgment or Attainder had ever been had or made, and that no Corruption of Blood, or other Penalty or Forfeiture of Honours, Dignities, Lands, Goods or Chattles, be by the ſaid Conviction or Attainder incurred: any Law, Uſage or Cuſtom to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Ex' Joh. Brown, Cleric' Parliamentor'.

Middleſex. 'THE Jurors for our Sovereign 'Lord the King do preſent 'upon their Oaths, That William Ring, late of 'the Pariſh of St. Clements Danes in the County 'of Middleſex, Taylor, as a falſe Traitor againſt 'the moſt Illuſtrious and excellent Prince James 'the Second, by the Grace of God of England, 'Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, and his 'natural 'natural Lord, not having the fear of God in 'his Heart, nor the Duty of his Allegiance 'any ways weighing, but being mov'd and 'seduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and 'the true, due, and natural Obedience which 'true and faithful Subjects of our ſaid Lord the 'King towards our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould 'and of right ought to bear, wholy withdraw 'ing; and with his whole Strength intending 'the Peace and common Tranquillity of this 'Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt, and 'diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our 'ſaid Lord the King within this his Kingdom 'of England to incite and ſtir up, and the Go'vernment of our ſaid Lord the King in this his 'Kingdom of England to ſubvert, and our ſaid 'Lord the King from his Title, Honour, and 'regal Name of his Imperial Crown of this his 'Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive, 'and our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final 'Deſtruction to bring and put; the 20th day of 'Ju'y, in the firſt Year of the Reign of our So'vereign Lord James the Second, by the Grace 'of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland 'King, Defender of the Faith, and divers other 'days and times, as well before as after, at the 'Pariſh of St. Clements Danes in the County of 'Middleſex, falſly and maliciouſly, deviliſhly 'and traiterouſly, with divers other Rebels and 'Traitors to the Jurors unknown, he did con'ſpire, imagine, and intend, our ſaid Lord the 'King, our ſupream and natural Lord, not only 'from his royal State, Title, Power, and Go'vernment of his Kingdom of England to de'prive and depoſe, but alſo our ſaid Lord the 'King to kill and put to death, and the ancient 'Government of this Kingdom of England to 'change and alter, and wholly to ſubvert, and 'a miſerable Slaughter among the Subjects of 'our ſaid Lord the King throughout this whole 'Kingdom of England to cauſe and procure, 'and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid 'Lord the King to procure, move, and aſſiſt: 'And his ſaid moſt wicked and deviliſh Treaſons 'and traiterous Conſpiracies, Compaſſings, Ima'ginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil, effect, 'and perfect, he the ſaid William Ring, as a falſe 'Traitor, then and there, to wit, the ſaid 20th 'day of July in the ſaid firſt Year of the Reign 'of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, afore'ſaid, at the Pariſh and County aforeſaid, well 'knowing Joſeph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence 'to be falſe Traitors, and as falſe Traitors trai'terouſly to have conſpired and imagined the 'Death and final Deſtruction of our ſaid Lord 'the King, and War and Rebellion againſt our 'ſaid Lord the King within this his Kingdom of 'England, traiterouſly, with divers other Traitors 'to the Jurors unknown, to have levied and 'raiſed and ſtirred up; and he the ſaid William 'Ring afterwards (to wit) the ſaid 20th day of 'July, in the firſt Year of the Reign of our 'ſaid Sovereign Lord the King aforeſaid, at the 'Pariſh aforeſaid, the ſaid Joſeph Kelloway and 'Henry Lawrence, in the dwelling Houſe of him 'the ſaid William Ring ſituated in the Pariſh and 'County aforeſaid, knowingly, ſecretly, wick'edly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, he did har'bour, conceal, comfort ſuſtain, and maintain; 'and then and there, for the comforting ſuſtain'ing, and maintaining of the ſaid Joſeph Kelloway 'and Henry Lawrence, he, the ſaid William Ring 'Meat and Drink to the ſaid Joſeph Kelloway 'and Henry Lawrence maliciouſly and traiterouſly 'did give and deliver, and did cauſe to be given 'and delivered, againſt the Duty of his Alle'giance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Sovereign 'Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and 'againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe 'made and provided, &c.

How ſayeſt thou, William Ring, art thou guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Ring. Not guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Ring. By God and my Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Set Henry Corniſh to the Bar.

Henry Corniſh, hold up thy Hand.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I have been confined without any notice given me until Saturday about noon of my Tryal. My Lord, I do hope, ſeeing I appear before your Lordſhips and this Honourable Bench, who have known ſomething of my Converſation, that you will be pleaſed to conſider me, and grant me what is cuſtomary, and commonly done to Perſons in my Circumſtances.

Mr. Jones. Mr. Corniſh, if you pleaſe you ſhall have your time of ſpeaking hereafter, but now you are only to plead without any more ado.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I beſeech you hear me a little; I have been ſo confined ——

Lord Mayor. Mr. Corniſh, you muſt obſerve the Rules of the Court.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I hope I ſhall be allowed what is cuſtomary in ſuch Caſes.

Lord Mayor. What is it you would have?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I do deſire, if your Lordſhip will pleaſe to conſider me——

Mr. Jones. Wou'd you not be arraign'd, Mr. Corniſh? After you are arraign'd and have pleaded, you may ſpeak.

Mr. Corniſh. Let me tell your Lordſhip what my Caſe is: Is it reaſonable not to have above half a-days time for Preparation for my Tryal, and no Counſel allowed me?

* Mr. Recorder. Nor ought, without leave of the Court, or by his Majeſties ſpecial Appointment.

* Sir Thomas Jenner.

Mr. Corniſh. I have not had a Friend to come to me, but in the Preſence of Major Richardſon.

Mr. Recorder. None have in your Circumſtances.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, ought not I to have a Copy of the Pannel? it is a thing never denied.

Recorder. It hath been denied very often.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, it is a matter wherein my Life is concern'd; and therefore I hope your Lordſhip will hear me.

Mr. Jones. After you are arraign'd you may ſpeak, and put off your Tryal if you can.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I cannot go from this before I poſſeſs your Lordſhip with a right Underſtanding of it; it is beyond Precedent: no ſuch Precedent, that any Man ſhould be kept with that Strictneſs I have been.

Recorder. Mr. Corniſh, I wonder you will ſay ſo: I tell you there is no Man accuſed of your Crime but is ſo kept.

Mr. Corniſh. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to allow me a little time, I do not queſtion but I can very well ſatisfie your Lordſhip, and this honourable Court, that I am a very innocent Perſon.

Mr. Recorder.

Mr. Recorder. You will have your proper time for that, but now you muſt plead, that you may hear the Particulars of your Charge, and have an Opportunity to make out your Innocence; for we muſt keep the ſame Method with you we do with all other Perſons in your Circumſtances; and therefore you muſt plead as other Perſons do.

Mr. Jones. Will you, or will you not, Sir, without any more ado? the Law gives you advantage, you may challenge any body; there are fourſcore returned, honeſt Men, and you may challenge who you pleaſe.

Mr. Corniſh. Alas! my Lord, what can I do?

Council. He diſputes out of time; he is to be arraign'd.

Recorder. Come, Mr. Corniſh, you muſt plead.

Mr. Corniſh. I did underſtand laſt Night His Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed to refer theſe matters, as to my Tryal, to my Lords the Judges; and, my Lord, I do hope that the Judges, when they hear this matter, that I ſhall have ſome time allowed.

Recorder. Pray, Mr. Corniſh, take the Rule of the Court; your buſineſs is now to plead; when you have pleaded, what you have to offer for the putting off your Tryal may be heard then.

Clerk. Henry Corniſh, hold up thy Hand.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I would do nothing that ſhould be a diſhonour to your Lordſhip and the Court.

Sir James Smith. You know the way of the Court Mr. Corniſh; you muſt plead.

Mr. Jones. If you will not plead, I will move the Court to record your ſtanding mute.

Mr. Corniſh. I have known that this Court hath heard what the Priſoner hath to ſay at the Bar; and I have more to ſay perhaps than any Man that ever ſtood at this Bar.

Recorder. Mr. Corniſh, when you have pleaded, you have time to ſpeak for your ſelf.

Clerk. Henry Corniſh, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Thou ſtandeſt indicted by the Name of Henry Corniſh.

'THAT Henry Corniſh, late of the Pariſh of 'St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, London, Merchant, 'as a falſe Traitor againſt the moſt Illuſtrious 'Prince Charles the Second, late King of Eng- 'land Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of 'the Faith, then his natural Lord, not having 'the fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the 'Duty of his Allegiance, but moved and ſeduced 'by the Inſtigation of the Devil, and the cordial 'Love and true due and natural Obedience, 'which a true and faithful Subject of our late 'Sovereign Lord the King towards our late So- 'vereign Lord the King ſhould and of right 'ought to bear, altogether withdrawing; and 'minding, and with all his Strength intending, 'the Peace and common Tranquillity of this 'Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt, and 'diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our late 'Sovereign Lord the King, within this King- 'dom of England to ſtir up, move, and procure; 'and the Government of our ſaid late Sovereign 'Lord the King of this Kingdom of England to 'ſubvert, change, and alter, and our ſaid late 'Sovereign Lord the King from the Title, Ho- 'nour, and Kingly Name of the Crown Impe- 'rial of this Kingdom of England to depoſe and 'deprive; and our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the 'King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring 'and put: the 30th day of May in the 35th Year 'of the Reign of our ſaid Sovereign Lord the 'King, and divers other days and times, as well 'before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Michael 'Baſſiſhaw, London, falſly, maliciouſly, deviliſh- 'ly, and traiterouſly, with divers falſe Traitors 'to the Jurors unknown, did conſpire, compaſs, 'imagine, and intend, our ſaid late Sovereign 'Lord the King, his ſupream and natural Lord, 'not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power and 'Government of this Kingdom of England to 'deprive and throw down; but alſo the ſaid late 'King to kill and put to Death, and the ancient 'Government of this his Kingdom of England 'to change, alter, and altogether ſubvert, and 'a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of 'our late Lord the King thorough this King- 'dom of England to cauſe and procure, and In- 'ſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid late 'Lord the King to procure, promote, and aſſiſt: 'And the ſame moſt wicked and deviliſh Trea- 'ſons and traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations, 'and Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil, perfect, and 'bring to effect, He the ſaid Henry Corniſh, as a 'falſe Traitor, then and there, to wit, the ſaid '30th day of May in the Year aforeſaid, at the 'Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, 'and traiterouſly knowing James the late Duke 'of Monmouth, William Ruſſel, Eſq; and Thomas 'Armſtrong, Knight, and divers other Rebels and 'Traitors, then lately before in the Pariſh and 'Ward aforeſaid within the ſaid City of London, 'falſly unlawfully, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, 'to have conſpired the Death and final Deſtru- 'ction of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King; 'he the ſaid Henry Corniſh, as a falſe Traitor, then 'and there, to wit, the ſaid 30th day of May in 'the Year aforeſaid, within the Pariſh and Ward 'in the ſaid City of London, falſly, unlawfully, 'wickedly, and traiterouſly, did promiſe to the 'ſaid divers falſe Traitors and Rebels, then and 'there preſent, That he the ſaid Henry Corniſh 'would be aiding and aſſiſting in the Treaſons 'aforeſaid, to be done, perfected, and brought 'to effect; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, 'againſt the Peace, and againſt the form of the 'Statute, &c.

Clerk. How ſay'ſt thou, Henry Corniſh, art thou guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt indicted, or not guilty?

Mr. Corniſh. This is an heinous Charge.

Council. Anſwer. You know you muſt anſwer.

Mr. Corniſh. I am perfectly innocent.

Council. Are you guilty, or not guilty? You muſt take the Words.

Mr. Corniſh. Not guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, how wilt thou be try'd?

Mr. Corniſh. By the great God of Heaven, and my Country.

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

L. C. J. Jones. I don't know in what ſtate things are here in the Court; I can't tell whether there be a Jury return'd or not.

Clerk. He is arraign'd.

L. C. J. Jones. Why don't you go on with the Jury?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I humbly pray your Lordſhip. I have ſome ground for it.——

L. C. J. Jones. You ſhall be heard in good time, Sir.

Mr. Corniſh. My poor Children laſt night prefer'd a Petition to His Majeſty, and he was pleaſed to refer it moſt graciouſly to my Lords the Judges; and I now make my Application to Your Lordſhips.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you any Anſwer to the Petition, from the King?

Mr. Corniſh. It was refer'd to your Lordſhips the Judges, to conſider my Caſe.

L. C. J. Jones. We may hear more of your Buſineſs anon, when Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor do come: we will ſtay here till they come, to know whether there be any Order from the King to them concerning you.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I hope it will not be offenſive if I ſhould acquaint your Lordſhips what Uſage I have met with ſince I have been under Confinement. I have been under very cloſe Confinement, I had no notice of my Tryal till about twelve a Clock on Saturday; no Friend came to me till Eight a Clock at night; and I had no time for Preparation for my Tryal. My Lord, theſe are hard things; but tho' I am denied Council, I truſt in God I ſhall not need Council, for I hope, if your Lordſhip pleaſes to allow me time, to clear my ſelf of all matters; and I hope with ſuch Satisfaction to your Lordſhips, that you will acquieſce in whatſoever I ſhall lay before your Lordſhips. I do not come to make an Harangue and Talk; my Caſe was ſuch, that I had neither Pen, Ink nor Paper.

Mr. Juſt Withins. Mr. Corniſh, Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor will come, we muſt hear them.

L. C. J. Jones. You ſhall be heard in your proper time: it is a ſtrange thing you won't be ſatisfied: you ſhall be heard, I tell you, in your proper time.

Mr. North. We have arraign'd one Fernley, if you pleaſe to try him, who (with Ring) was brought to the Bar.

Clerk. You the Priſoners at the Bar, thoſe Perſons you ſhall hear call'd, and appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and You, upon your ſeveral Lives and Deaths; if you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to challenge them when they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they be ſworn.

Cryer. O Yes, all manner of Perſons are commanded to keep ſilence upon pain of Impriſonment.

The Middleſex Jury.

Nehemiah Arnold	William Thompſon
Francis Stevens	William Read
Richard Fiſher	Samuel Peacock
John Howlet	Richard Fitz-gerrard
John Vigures	Richard Bromfield
Samuel Birch	John Haynes.

Cryer. O Yes, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Juſtices, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney, before this Inqueſt be taken between our Sovereign Lord the King and John Fernley and William Ring, the Priſoners at the Bar, let them come forth and they ſhall be heard; for now the Priſoners ſtand at the Bar upon their Deliverance: and all Perſons that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence againſt either of the Priſoners at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or elſe they forfeit their Recognizance, and all Jury-men of Middleſex that have appear'd and are not ſworn, let them depart.

Clerk. Set William Ring to the Bar, and ſet by the other.

William Ring, hold up thy Hand. You that are ſworn look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Charge, he ſtands indicted by the name of William Ring, &c. (prout ante.) Your Charge is, to enquire whether he be guilty of the Treaſon whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty, &c.

Mr. Phipps. You the Gentlemen that are ſworn, the Priſoner at the Bar is indicted for that knowing one Joſeph Kelloway and one Henry Lawrence to be falſe Traitors, and to have levied War againſt the King on the 20th of July did harbour, conceal, and relieve thoſe Traitors, againſt the Duty, &c. Upon this he hath pleaded, not guilty, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. Gentlemen of the Jury, the courſe of our Evidence will be thus; Kelloway and Lawrence were in the late Rebellion in the Weſt, in the late Duke of Monmouth's Army; and after that Battle when they were overthrown, they came up to London, and the Priſoner at the Bar receiv'd and comforted them, and not only provided a Lodging, and Meat and Drink for them, but afterwards provides another Lodging for them; and this he knew, for they were very merry, telling the whole Story of the Fight; and notwithſtanding this he entertains them. We will firſt ſhew you the Record of the Conviction of Kelloway and Lawrence, and then call Witneſſes to prove the other things upon the Priſoner. (The Record produced) Mr. Harcourt ſworn. Sir Robert Sawyer.

L. C. J. Jones. Is that a true Copy of the Record? Mr. Harcourt anſwered Yes: whereupon the Clerk reads:

Joſeph Kelloway ſtands indicted by the Name of Joſeph Kelloway of Taunton in the County of Somerſet, Yeoman, and Henry Lawrence of the ſame Pariſh and County Yeoman, with a great many others.

L. C. J. Jones. See what they have done.

Clerk. They are indicted of Treaſon for levying War againſt the King, and they have confeſſed the Indictment upon their Arraignment; and the Judgment upon the Indictment is, That the ſaid Kelloway, and the reſt of them there, ſhould be led to the Priſon from whence they came, and from thence to be drawn to the place of Execution, and upon the Gallows there to be hanged, every one of them in the ſaid Indictment, and living to be cut down, and their Entrails to be taken out of their Bodies, their Heads to be taken off from their Bodies, and their Bodies divided into four Quarters.

Mr. Att. Gen. This ſhews they were Traitors. Now we will ſhew you, that in the mean time between their Treaſon and Conviction, this Priſoner did receive them. Call Mr. Barrington. (Who was ſworn.)

Mr. Jones. Mr. Barrington, what do you know concerning Mr. Ring?

Mr. Barrington. If it pleaſe you my Lord, on the 11th of July laſt I was abroad about my Maſter's Buſineſs, and in the mean time when I was abſent, as I was inform'd, there came Mr. Ring, who lives in Witch-ſtreet at the Sign of the Bible, and when I return'd I was told that Mr. Ring was at our Houſe to ſpeak with me, and that there was one Mr. Lawrence there at Mr. Ring's at the Bible in Witch-ſtreet; and when I came there, there was Mr. Lawrence at Mr. Ring's Houſe; and when I came to the Houſe on the right-Hand there was his Wife, as I take it; I asked for Mr. Lawrence and ſhe was a little at a ſtand: ſaid I, I underſtand Mr. Ring was in ſuch a place to inform me Mr. Lawrence deſired to ſpeak

ſpeak with me, upon that ſhe ſhewed me where he was: I went up to him, and he was lying upon the Bed very weary and tired; and when I had been there a while there came in one Kelloway, and they ſaid they came both out of the Weſt Country, and came on Friday night, and I ſaw them on Saturday. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, I called there after and knocked at Mr. Ring's Door, and there came a Woman and made Anſwer, That they were gone from thence both of them, and that they were to go on Ship-board to ſee ſome Friends; and I call'd there upon Wedneſday the 15*th* day at night, to ſee Mr. Lawrence at Mr. Ring's Houſe, and Mr. Lawrence told me he was going from thence to the Pewter-Platter in Saint Johns; and when Mr. Common Serjeant came to examine me about theſe men, I made a true Confeſſion that they were at Mr. Ring's, and removed to the Pewter-Platter; and when we came to ſearch at the Pewter-Platter, at firſt they did not know any ſuch men, till we deſcribed them; then they confeſſed there were ſuch men there on Tueſday and Wedneſday night, but not the night before which was Thurſday night, from thence we went without Temple-bar to Mr. Ring's, where they were at firſt, and Mr. Criſp and I went together to enquire for theſe men, and there was a Woman, which I think is Mr. Ring's Wife, I can't tell. I enquired for theſe men, and ſhe made Anſwer, That they were not there at preſent, and ſaid ſhe could not tell at preſent, but that they lay there the laſt night, which was Thurſday night; that was Ring's Wife, I take it, ſhould ſay they were there the night before; ſo after that ſhe had owned they lay there on Thurſday night, ſhe asked me what this Gentleman was, ſo I told her he was a Friend of mine; ſo afterwards we were at the Caſtle Tavern without Temple-Bar by St. Clements Church, and Mr. Common Serjeant was pleaſed to ſend for Mr. Ring to examine him about theſe men, what Lodgers he had in his Houſe on Friday night, Saturday night, Sunday night, and Monday night. Mr. Ring knew nothing of any men that came out of the Country; ſo upon that, he denying it, Mr. Common Serjeant ordered his Houſe to be ſearched, and in ſearching they found a Paper upon the Chamber Window that was brought to the Caſtle Tavern, where Mr. Ring was, and the Paper was produced, and Mr. Ring would confeſs nothing till ſuch time as they found that Paper.

L. C. J. Jones. See, is that the Paper you ſpeak of?

Mr. Barrington. That is all I have to ſay, if it pleaſe your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you ſee them in the Company of Ring?

Mr. Barrington. I did not ſee him when I was at the Houſe.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Sol. Gen. You ſay Mr. Ring would confeſs nothing till ſuch time as the Paper was found; What did he ſay after the Paper was found?

Mr. Jones. Ring was by, what did he ſay upon producing that Paper?

L. C. J. Jones. Was the Paper ſhewed to him?

Mr. Barrington. I think not; he would have ſeen it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You ſay he would confeſs nothing till that Paper was produced.

Mr. Barrington. Truly, I can ſay no more of it.

Mr. Jones. When the Paper was produced at the Caſtle Tavern, what did he ſay then?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. What did Ring ſay at the Caſtle Tavern?

Mr. Barrington. I can't remember, but that he denied every thing,

Clerk. Call Mr. Barrow. (Who was ſworn)

Mr. Barrow. Sir, I heard Ring confeſs to my Lord-Mayor in July laſt, that he lodged Lawrence and Kelloway, and that Lawrence and Kelloway did tell him, that they had been both in the late Weſtern Rebellion in Monmouth's Army; and that after that he had lodged them two or three Nights, this I heard him confeſs.

Council. Pray ſpeak it again.

Mr. Barrow, That Lawrence and Kelloway had told Mr. Ring, they had been in the late Weſtern Rebellion in Monmouth's Army, and that he had lodged them two or three nights in his own Houſe.

Mr. Common Serjeant. What did you hear him ſay concerning Mr. Herle?

Mr. Barrow. There was ſome talk concerning Mr. Herle or Hurle.

L. C. J. Jones. Did he ſay he lodged them, after they had told him that?

Mr. Barrow. After that. That is all I can ſay.

Clerk. Call Mr. Criſp. (Who was ſworn.)

Council. Give my Lord and Jury an Account of what you know concerning Mr. Ring.

Mr. Criſp. I went to ſearch Mr. Ring's Houſe, my Lord, and in the Window there was that Letter under Mr. Lawrence's own Hand, ſealed up and directed to Newberry for a Horſe which he had ſtole from his Maſter, and left at Newberry; which Letter I brought to the Tavern, and when we came to the Tavern, we examined him, and he denied every thing; but at laſt we ſhewed him the Letter, and he owned he had ſuch a Couſin, and another that he did not know, but that he did not lodge there then: and when he came to the Seſſions-Houſe, Lawrence and Kelloway were produced before him, and were examined what Account they had given to him when they came to his Houſe; they told him after the Duke of Monmouth was beaten they ran away to London, and Kelloway being his Couſin brought Lawrence with him; they told him the Duke was beaten, and lay there Friday night, Saturday night, Sunday night, and Monday night.

Mr. Jones. He owned he knew Kelloway?

Mr. Criſp. Yes.

L. C. J. And that Kelloway had been in the Duke's Army, and that he was beaten?

Mr. Criſp. Yes.

L. C. J. What did Ring ſay upon it?

Mr. Criſp. Ring ſaid nothing there to it; he confeſs'd he lodg'd them two or three nights.

Council. Swear Mr. Hardiſty (Which was done)

Mr. Att. G. Mr. Hardiſty, pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an account of his Examination?

Mr. Hardiſty. I was directed to attend my Lord Mayor at the Examination of Mr. Ring, the Priſoner at the Bar, above here in the Room, and did accordingly: and upon Examination, my Lord, he did make this Confeſſion. This is the Examination, and it is as he gave it in himſelf, and ſigned by himſelf.

L. C. J. Jones. And read to him?

Mr. Hardiſty. Yes, half a dozen times I believe.

Mr. Comm. Serj. My Lord, upon the appearing of Lawrence and Kelloway before him, then he confeſſed all.

The

The Examination of William Ring of the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, Taylor, taken before the Right Honourable Sir James Smith, Kt. Lord-Mayor of the City of London, this 18. day of July, 1685. who being examined, saith as followeth:

'THat Joseph Kelloway, and one Henry Lawrence, 'the said Kelloway's Acquaintance, came to 'this Examinants House on Friday or Saturday last; 'That this Examinant did ask of Kelloway (being 'this Examinant's Kinsman) what did drive them 'to Town? That they told this Examinant, that 'they went to Monmouth, that he was routed, and 'that brought them to Town, or to that purpose; 'That they were in Monmouth's Army: That the 'night they came, he this Examinant told them, 'he was unwilling to lodge them; That he this 'Examinant did lodge them after this Discourse, 'Saturday, Sunday, and Monday nights, and they 'dined twice with this Examinant; That they 'were at his House on Friday morning; but where 'they lay on Wednesday and Thursday saith, he 'knows not. Saith, that Lawrence sent this 'Examinant to a Glover in St. Bartholomews Close 'who was a Journey man in the House, as this 'Examinant supposeth, and told the Master of 'the House, that there was a Kinsman of his 'Journey man's would speak with his Journey-'man. Saith, Kelloway and his Acquaintance told 'this Examinant, that they left their Horses at 'Newberry. That a Note being produced, directed 'to this Examinant, to deliver several Goods 'therein mentioned, and being examined upon 'the said Note, this Examinant saith, That he 'this Examinant was sent for to the Castle Tavern 'near Shoe lane in Fleetstreet, and one Bond brought 'this Examinant the Note above-mentioned, 'and now produced to him; believes the Note to 'be the hand writing of James Hooper. That this 'Examinant was there to enquire of one Hearne, 'but expected to meet James Hooper, who form-'erly told this Examinant that he went by the 'Name of Hearne. That being in Discourse with 'James Hooper about the time of the late Duke of 'Monmouth's Landing, James Hooper told this 'Examinant, that his the said Hooper's Brother 'was with the Duke of Monmouth, and that he 'the said James Hooper would go to him the said 'Duke, or to that purpose. Further this Exami-'nant saith, That about a Fortnight ago he car-'ried, according to a Note from Hooper to that 'purpose, to a Joyner's House in Ivy-lane, London, 'a Cravat and a pair of Cuffs, and then enquired 'for Hooper of a Woman of the said house; and 'saith, that then he this Examinant did speak 'with James Hooper who lay private there, be-'cause, as this Examinant believes, the said 'Hooper was concerned in the Rebellion. Saith, 'he hath not seen him the said Hooper this Fort-'night, nor heard from him otherwise than by 'the Note now produced. Will. Ring.

Taken before me Sir James Smith, Lord-Mayor.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Richardson, to prove that these were the same men that were carried down. (Who was sworn.) Mr. Richardson, pray give an account, whether these were the men you carried down into the West.

Mr. Richardson. My Lord, those two Persons, that is, Joseph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence, that were committed for being in the late Rebellion: I carried them both down into the West, where they were both Convicted; one is executed, and the other hath a Reprieve.

Mr. Just. Withins. Henry Lawrence was Capt. Hunt's man.

Mr. Richardson. The same, he ran away with his Horse and Arms.

L. C. J. Jones. Can you tell these were the same men, that were present at his Examination?

Mr. Richardson. The very same men; they were committed at the same time; he was examined before them, for they were all committed at the same time together.

L. C. J. Jones. What do you say Sir, you the Prisoner at the Bar, what do you say for your self?

Mr. Ring. I did not understand what they were.

L. C. J. You knew the Prisoners, one of them was your Kinsman?

Mr. Ring. I did know him, but the other I did not know; I did not know what Design they had been upon.

L. C. J. Jones. Your own Examination says, you did.

Mr. Ring. Then my Examination is wrong.

L. C. J. Jones. Hear, hear again: You did receive them, and then they told you that they were in Monmouth's Army, and that Monmouth was beaten; and afterwards you continued to harbour them in your House three nights.

Mr. Just. Withins. And dined twice with them.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, I never heard of it.

L. C. Baron. That Gentleman heard you say, they had told you they had been in Monmouth's Army, and you lodged them after.

Mr. Crisp. Yes my Lord; and when we were there, the Woman would not own them.

L. C. J. Jones. Why did you hide them in your House, and not confess it?

Mr. Ring. At first I did deny it.

Council. Yes, and did deny it, till Lawrence and the other man were brought before you.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, what I did was ignorantly done.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you hear your Examination now read?

Mr. Ring. I heard most of it, I believe.

L. C. J. Jones. Pray let it be read again.

Council. It was read over and over 4 or 5 times.

Mr. Hardisty. He was upon it, I believe, an hour together: it was taken first in parts, and as he recollected himself it was compared, and afterwards my Lord Mayor desired him to consider with himself: and then the Examination was written fair over, and he signed it, and it was read several times, 6 or 7 times.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, I do acknowledge I did lodge them, but I did not understand what Design they had been upon.

L. C. J. Jones. But you see here you have acknowledged, they said they were in the Army, and you did lodge them afterwards; they were of Monmouth's Party, they had told you so. Read that part again.

Mr. Hardisty. Joseph Kelloway, and one Lawrence the said Kelloway's Acquaintance, came to this Examinant's House on Friday or Saturday last; that this Examinant did ask Kelloway being this Examinant's Kinsman, What did drive them to Town? that they told this Examinant, that they went to Monmouth, that he was routed, and that that brought them to Town.

Mr. Ring. I never said that Word.

Mr. Just. Withins. It is under your Hand.

Mr. Ring. If it be under my hand, I never said it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that part read to him?

Mr.

Mr. Hardisty. Yes.

L. C. J. Jones. Read on.

Hardisty. That they were in Monmouth's Army; that the Night they came, this Examinant told them, he was unwilling to lodge them, and that this Examinant did lodge them after this Discovery, Saturday, Sunday and Monday night, and they dined twice at this Examinant's House.

L. C. J. Jones. What do you say now to this? Can there be any thing more plain?

Mr. Ring. I do acknowledge, my Lord, I did lodge them, but I was not sensible what the issue of this Business would be.

L. C. J. Jones. You did not know, That to harbour known Traitors was High Treason.

Mr. Ring. My Lord, I don't know whether they came from Monmouth or no.

L. C. J. Jones. It is no great matter whether you do or no; they told you so.

Mr. Ring. I never heard such a Word from them.

L. C. J. Jones. How came it to be put in your Examination?

Mr. Ring. I don't know, my Lord, when it was taken I was in a maze. I think the Parish knew well enough, that I never kept any such Company, nor had any such Design.

Mr. Just. Withins. He confesses it over-night, causes it to be writ down next Day, and sets his Hand to it too: Nothing can be more plain.

L. C. J. That is a great Argument you were not in such surprize, that you had not the use of your Understanding; for you confessed the same thing over Night, and you had time to consider of it all Night, and you came the next Morning, and then confessed as now it is written, and put your Hand to it.

Mr. Ring. I was ordered to put my Hand to it.

L. C. J. Jones. That is, if you acknowledged it to be true.

Mr. Ring. I did not know what was put down.

Mr. Just. Levins The matter is so plain, that nothing can be more. When they came to you, they inform'd you where they had been, and afterwards you were unwilling to lodge them; you knew therefore they had been in the Rebels Army and so the matter is plain: and for ought I can hear, this is not the first time you have harbour'd such Men.

L. C. J Jones. There is another thing touching one Hurle; but you are not charged with it in the Indictment, and so we don't trouble the Jury with any Evidence concerning that: Have you any more to say?

Mr. Ring. I do acknowledge, my Lord, that I lodg'd them; but I did not understand any thing else.

L. C. J. Jones. Why! did not you confess it?

Mr. Ring. I did not confess it.

Mr. Just. Withins. And you shifted Lodging for them after they were known to you.

Mr. Ring. I did not.

L. C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner stands indicted of High-Treason for receiving Joseph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence, who were Traitors, and known to him to be Traitors, and harbouring them in his House, and giving them Entertainment and Comfort: this, Gentlemen, is clearly High-Treason by Law; and tho' this Man himself were not in actual Rebellion, yet, if he do receive any that he knows to have been so, he is equally guilty; he is a principal Traitor by the Judgment of the Law, and however he would now pretend his Ignorance, that he did not know that they were in the Army, or, if he did know they were in the Army, that he had incur'd so great a Danger as the forfeiture of his Life, which now he stands as well as he can to defend; yet it does appear plainly to you, not only by his own Confession taken upon his Examination, but likewise by the Testimony of the Witnesses, who were present at the time when he did confess that these Men had discoursed with him, and acknowledged that they were in Monmouth's Army, and that he was routed, and that yet he did entertain and receive them: The first Witness indeed does not say the very thing, but it is very much inducing to the Evidence that is given more express by the other Witness, for he says, that he was at his House, and he enquir'd for them there, tho' he did not see him at all, but his People; and they not only did confess that they had lodged there, but that there was a Lodging provided for them elsewhere: But however, if that were quite laid aside, and not taken at all into Consideration, yet what is testified by the other Witnesses, and upon his own Examination, makes it as clear and plain as can be, that he did receive these Persons into his House, and comfort them, and entertain them, knowing them to have been guilty of High-Treason, that is, to have been in the Army of Monmouth, of that Party, and that they came to London, and went away from the West because he was beaten; and there is an Expression in the Examination to that purpose: so that I take the Indictment to be very fully and clearly prov'd upon him; and it is not his Ignorance of the Law that will excuse him, that is, his Ignorance of the Danger that he hath incur'd by entertaining these People; altho' you cannot but take notice, that he was in some dread and fear that it was an Offence to do so; for at first he says by his Examination, that he did refuse to entertain them, which shews that he had some Consideration of the Danger that he might incur by receiving them: and yet after this plain Discourse of theirs, that they were in the Army, he entertains them: That they were the same Men that were in the Army, appears plainly; for though at first he did deny it, and did stand in it, before he was confronted by the Men, they being present; yet afterwards he did confess, that they were the Men that were entertain'd by him; and that they were the same Men, doth appear by the Testimony of Captain Richardson, who saw them, and afterwards caused them to be brought down to the West, where one of them was executed for Treason. So I must leave it to you, Gentlemen. I think it is a very plain Case.

Mr. Ring. Here is abundance of these things that I know nothing of.

Council. Set John Fernley to the Bar.

(Which was done.)

Clerk. John Fernley, hold up thy Hand. You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge: He stands indicted by the Name of John Fernley, &c. (prout ante.)

Mr. Phipps. This is an Indictment of High-Treason against John Fernley, the Prisoner at the Bar: It sets forth, that the said John Fernley, knowing one James Burton to be a Traitor, and to have conspir'd against the Life of the King, did traiterously conceal the said Burton two Days and two Nights, and gave him Meat and Drink, againſt the Duty, &c.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this Priſoner ſtands indicted of Treaſon for receiving and harbouring one James Burton who was guilty of Treaſon, he knowing him to have been guilty of Treaſon. And the courſe of our Evidence will be this: We will prove that this James Burton ſtood out lawed for Treaſon before he committed a new Treaſon, when he went into the Weſt, and was there with Monmouth in the late Rebellion; and tho', Gentlemen, the very Outlawry againſt the ſaid Burton is enough to ſatisfie any man, that this Man could not be ignorant that he was a Traitor, for no man can imagine, when a Man ſtands out a Proceſs till he become out-lawed for High-Treaſon, that any ſhould be ignorant that he is guilty of Treaſon, and that it would be very dangerous to receive a Man after that, without any more Evidence: But this Burton, after he was out-lawed and fled, came again, and was in Arms with Monmouth in the Rebellion; and after their Defeat he came up to Town: and Fernley knowing he had been then in the Weſt with Monmouth, he received him, and harboured him; and this we will prove by Witneſſes. Firſt, we will ſhew the Record of the Outlawry.

Clerk.——An Indictment prefer'd againſt James Burton and divers others for High-Treaſon, for which the ſaid Burton and divers others ſtand out lawed, by the Return of Samuel Daſhwood, Eſq; and Sir Peter Daniel, Sheriffs. This is the Record it ſelf, my Lord.

Council. Swear Mr. Ward.

Which was done.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Look upon it, Mr. Ward, is that the Record?

Mr. Ward. Yes, it is, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Pray ſee when the Outlawry was.

Mr. Hardiſty. Upon Monday next after the Feaſt of St. Martin, Biſhop, the ſaid Richard Rumbold, Richard Goodenough, Francis Goodenough, here are the Names of a great many Men.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Is James Burton among them?

Mr. Hardiſty. On Monday next after the Feaſt of St. Michael, the ſaid Richard Rumbold, James Burton Richard Nelthorp, are out lawed, and every one of them is out lawed.—— It is November was Twelve-month.

Call James Burton. (Who was ſworn)

Mr. North. James Burton, ſtand up there: Do you give my Lord and the Jury an account concerning your being in the Weſt, and your being entertain'd here at Mr. Fernley's Houſe, with all the Circumſtances.

Mr. Burton. I came out of the Weſt into London on Wedneſday Night from Monmouth's Army.

L. C. J. Jones. What Wedneſday Night?

Mr. Burton. Truly, I have forgot the Day of the Month, but it was about three Weeks after the Rout, and I came home to my Wife and ſtayed two Nights, and ſhe was not ſatisfied I ſhould be there, and went to endeavour to get a Lodging for me for two or three Nights, and ſhe went to get leave at Mr. Fernley's for me to be there two or three Nights; and I went thither on Friday Night, and on Sabbath-day in the Evening I was taken there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Speak aloud, ſay that again.

Mr. Burton. On Wedneſday Night I came out of the Country, after I had been in the Army, I came home to my Wife, and ſtayed till Friday Night, and on Friday Night ſhe got me a Lodging at Mr. Fernley's; there I went about ten a Clock at Night, and ſtayed there till Sunday Night, and I was taken.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Did you ſee Mr. Fernley?

Mr. Burton. I ſaw him at Dinner on Sunday, and not before.

L. C. J. Jones. What Acquaintance had you before? He does not keep a Publick Houſe, does he?

Mr. Burton. I had been gone two Years, or very nigh.

L. C. J. Jones. What was the occaſion of your going?

Mr. Burton. My Wife was acquainted there.

L. C. J. Jones. What was the occaſion of your going away, and your Abſence for two Years?

Mr. Burton. The occaſion of my going then, was, I was in the Proclamation for being with Rumbold at the Mitre Tavern within Aldgate.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Fernley knew you before, did not he?

Mr. Burton. He knew me by ſight.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Had you any Acquaintance with him?

Mr. Burton. I lived pretty near to him for a while.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. How near?

Mr. Burton. I lived within two or three Doors of him.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Did he know you?

Mr. Burton. Yes, Yes, he did know me.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. You came to lodge at his Houſe on Friday Night?

Mr. Burton. Yes, an't pleaſe you.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Had you no Diſcourſe till Sunday you dined together?

Mr. Burton. No, not till Sunday at Dinner.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Tell your Diſcourſe at Dinner.

Mr. Burton. My Lord, I have forgot what altogether the Diſcourſe was; I had ſome Diſcourſe of the Army; he knew I was in the Army.

L. C. J. Jones. I would have you ſpeak the Senſe, ſo far as you remember of the Diſcourſe at that time with him.

Mr. Burton. The Senſe, as far as I remember, was, That the Army was routed.

L. C. J. Jones. And that you were there.

Mr. Burton. He knew I was there.

L. C. J. Jones. How came he to know you were there?

Mr. Burton. I believe I told him ſo my ſelf.

Mr Juſt.—Upon your Oath, did he know you fled upon the Account of the Proclamation before?

Mr. Burton. It is like he might know it by others, but not by me.

L C. J. Jones. When were you taken? What Day?

Mr. Burton. I was taken on Sunday in the Evening: I had been four Days in London; two Days at Home, and two Days at his Houſe.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you not ſee him before Sunday at Dinner?

Mr. Burton My Lord, he was in the Shop all Saturday; he is a Barber.

Mr Juſt Withins. You lay privately at his Houſe all Saturday?

Mr.

Mr. Burton. Yes, my Lord, privately.

Council. Call Mary Burton.

(Who was ſworn)

Mr. North. How came this Man to lodge at Mr. Fernley's Houſe, can you give an account? and why it was?

Mrs. Burton. Becauſe I thought he was not ſafe at home; and having Acquaintance with Mrs. Fernley, lodging pretty near, and ſhe being a young Woman, and having Children, I had Acquaintance going to and fro, and we having a cloſe Houſe and no Yard, I had the Privilege of going to dry Linnen there, ſo that we had Acquaintance and a little Familiarity, and, being acquainted, I thought I might have Entertainment there; that is all I can ſay.

L. C. J. Jones. Were you at Dinner upon Sunday?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, I was at Dinner.

L. C. J. Jones. What Diſcourſe had they at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Indeed I can't ſay they had any Diſcourſe, I was very ill and laid me down upon the Bed, and fell aſleep.

L. C. J. Jones. You are upon your Oath.

Mrs. Burton. I know I am, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. What Diſcourſe was at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Whilſt I was eating, I did not mind.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. You liv'd cloſe by, why did you ask for a Lodging there?

Mrs. Burton. We do not live cloſe by now, I live with my Daughter, I have no Houſe now.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. She knew he was your Husband, why ſhould you lodge your Husband at another Houſe than where you lodged your ſelf?

Mrs. Burton. What was it you ſaid, my Lord?

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Sure you would give the Woman ſome account, why you lodged your Husband at another Houſe than where you lodged your ſelf?

Mrs. Burton. She was not altogether a Stranger, and upon the account of the Proclamation there were none of them Strangers.

L. C. J. Jones. For whom did you ask a Lodging?

Mrs. Burton. For my Husband.

Mr. North. Did you ſpeak with Mr. Fernley himſelf?

Mrs. Burton. I did not ſpeak with Mr. Fernley himſelf.

Mr. North. On Sunday you ſaw him at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, I ſaw him at Dinner.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Had you any Diſcourſe with them about the Proclamation?

Mr. Att. Gen. About your Husband's going away upon that Proclamation?

Mrs. Burton. An't pleaſe you, my Lord, my diſtreſs was ſo great, that I was hardly in my Senſes to diſcourſe with any body; but, I thank God, I am now in my Senſes between whiles.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Diſcourſe with your Neighbours about that Proclamation, your Husband went away upon?

Mrs. Burton. I had not indeed.

Then Mr. Reynolds was ſworn.

Mr. North. Mr. Reynolds, What do you know concerning Mr. Burton's being lodged at Mr. Fernley's Houſe?

Mr. Reynolds. Towards the beginning of Auguſt laſt, hearing that there were ſeveral that were in the Weſt lurk'd about Wapping, I took the Lieutenant of the Tower's Warrant, and we had ſome Intimation, that a ſuſpected Perſon lay at Mr. Fernley's Houſe; I went on Sunday about eight a Clock at Night, and took Mr. Burton in Mr. Fernley's Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You took him there, did you?

Mr. Reynolds. I took him there, my Lord?

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ſpeak with Fernley before you took Burton?

Mr. Reynolds. I took Burton; and Mr. Fernley being Maſter of the Houſe, I wiſhed the Conſtable to ſecure him for harbouring him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did Fernley ſay?

Mr. Reynolds. Says I, Mr. Fernley, how come you to harbour Mr. Burton that is in the King's Proclamation; he is a Traytor you know; ſays he, I did not know it was Mr. Burton, but my Wife deſired me to lye out of the Chamber where I lay before, that a Friend of hers might lye there for two or three Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you find him?

Mr. Reynolds. He was in a Room up one pair of Stairs, up the Chimney, and while we were there he fell down the Chimney, with all the Soot about him: Mr. Fernley was then one pair of Stairs higher; I deſired the Conſtable to go up to ſee for him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you no diſcourſe with him about the buſineſs of being in the Army? with Fernley, I mean.

Mr. Reynolds. No my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you hear no Diſcourſe between Burton and him?

Mr. Reynolds. No, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He was very friendly to lye out of his own Chamber for him.

Mr. Reynolds. They were put in two ſeparate Chambers, by the King's Direction, till they were ſent to Newgate.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you on Sunday Night that he did not know it was Burton?

Mr. Reynolds. To the beſt of my Remembrance, he did ſo, when I brought him to the Tower.

Mr. Att. Gen. And yet he dined with him on Sunday.

Mr. Reynolds. I looked upon it as an Excuſe.

Mr. North. What Day was Burton taken?

Mr. Reynolds. It was Sunday.

Mr. North. What time on Sunday?

Mr. Reynolds. Sunday about eight a Clock at Night. He had been in Bed, my Lord, I believe, and before we could get open the Door I believe he got out of Bed and went to get up the Chimney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, you obſerve in the courſe of the Evidence, that the firſt Evidence we produce is James Burton; now James Burton ſtood outlawed for Treaſon, and as he ſtands outlawed he is not a competent Witneſs, but now to take off that Objection which the Priſoner ought to make, but we make it for him, we ſhew you here a Pardon whereby that Outlawry is diſcharg'd, ſo that he ſtands now a very legal Witneſs.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You underſtand, Gentlemen, what Mr. Solicitor mentions.

(The Pardon produced) and Read.

L. C. J. Jones. What ſay you?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I am charged for entertaining Burton. My Lord, I knew nothing of him when when he came into my Houſe till Sabbath day at Dinner. I asked my Wife what time Burton came in, ſhe told me he came on Friday Night, Saturday was a buſie Day with me, my Lord, on Sunday Morning I got up and went to Church, when I came from Church, I went up to Dinner, and when I came in and ſaw him, I asked him, what in the name of God brought him there? it hath pleaſed God, ſaid he, to preſerve me hitherto, and my Wife interceded ſo far as to procure me a Nights Lodging, which I hope may be no Detriment to you. I wiſh it may not, ſaid I, and at Dinner I asked him, how he made his eſcape, and he told me how he did eſcape. Says I, what do you mean to do? ſays he, ſome Friends will procure me a Paſſage beyond Sea, upon this I conſidered with my ſelf, and diſcours'd with him about the Weſt, and his eſcape out of it, and about half an Hour after we had dined, one knocked at the Door.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. What Day was this?

Mr. Fernley. Sabbath day at Noon, ſome body knocked at the Door, and they told me there was one would ſpeak with me, and I came down, and there was one Gaunt in the Shop; ſays he, is Mr. Burton within? may I ſpeak with him? Yes, ſaid I: up I went, and Gaunt with me; and when we came into the Room they embraced one another, and were very glad to ſee one another, and Burton gave Mr. Gaunt thanks for a Guinea he had ſent him; ſays Gaunt, Mr. Burton, I am glad to ſee you; I hope in a little time I ſhall have a Paſſage for you beyond Sea; ſays he, if you had been here a while ſooner you might have gone; there are ſome Gentlemen went away a while ago; ſays I to Mr. Gaunt, Who were they? he told me it was Major——— and his Son, and another: ſays I to Mr. Gaunt, Do you hear of Ferguſon? no ſays he, I hear nothing of him as yet, but in a little time I may hear from him; and Burton asked, when he thought he might be going; in a Day or two's time ſaid he: ſays Burton, I have no Money nor no Cloaths; ſays he, take no care for that, ſo he named ſome Gentlemen that were to go: He told him of Colonel Danvers and Major Wildman. Upon this Diſcourſe, within my ſelf I did conſider what way I might do his Majeſty a piece of Service: I thought it better to forbear, and not to ſeize him preſently, till I had acquainted ſome Magiſtrate; and I did think in the Morning to have gone to a Juſtice of Peace and have had him apprehended: Burton, my Lord, I knew was ſecure, for he could not eſcape my Hands. I had no Deſign of concealing him; I have ſeveral eminent Gentlemen to teſtify for my Loyalty: I thank God, I never had an ill Thought againſt His Majeſty in my Life, only this Misfortune hath befallen me upon the account of my Wife. I am as innocent as a Child unborn, as to any thing againſt the King.

L. C. J. Jones. But he plainly told you, he came from the Army.

Mr. Fernley. He did acquaint me, my Lord, he did ſo; as ſoon as I ſaw him, I was ſtartled; I did look upon it as a thing ſent from God Almighty; for I knew my Lord, that there was 100*l.* for him, I knew there was a Proclamation out againſt him; but as for the Outlawry, I knew nothing of that: a Proclamation I knew there was againſt him, and being a poor Man, there was no Obligation upon me to conceal him and ruine my ſelf and Family.

L. C. J. Jones. What was the reaſon, you were ſo kind as to part with your own Lodging to entertain him?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I had fitted my Chamber before he came to the Houſe.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is proved, you did it upon his account

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, no body will offer to ſay that.

L. C. J. Jones. That you quitted your Lodging, and that he came into the ſame Lodging, is clearly proved.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, my Chamber was fitted above a Week before he came, not knowing of him, for I had no Thoughts of him.

L. C. J. Jones. Pray, what Servants have you?

Mr. Fernley. Only a Boy, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Could not you have ſent out your Boy when he had diſcourſed thus treaſonably with you, but keep him in your Houſe ſeven or eight Hours after you had entertain'd him at Dinner?

Council. Are you a Conſtable?

Mr. Fernley. I am a Conſtable my ſelf, and upon the account of my Office I was the more ſecure. I was certain he could not eſcape my Hands, and I thought to do his Majeſty more Service.

L. C. J. Jones How could you do His Majeſty more Service?

Mr. Fernley. Gaunt told him, he would come again to him.

L. C. J. Jones. When did he come to you?

Mr. Fernley. About half an Hour after Dinner.

L. C. J. Jones. But you ſhould have ſeized him immediately after Dinner. How came this Man to take ſo much Freedom before you that were an Officer, as to talk High-Treaſon?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I thank God if I were to die this Minute, I never harbour'd a Thought againſt the King.

L. C. Baron. If you had had a loyal Heart, you ſhould have kept Gaunt, if you had any Thoughts to have done it.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I will tell you why I let Gaunt go, becauſe he promiſed to come again the next Day.

L. C. J. Jones. Would you, being a Conſtable, let a Man go upon his Word, that had confeſſed himſelf guilty of Treaſon?

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, if I did any thing, it was ignorantly. My Lord, as for Gaunt, when I knew there was a Proclamation out againſt Danvers and Wildman, I hearing Gaunt diſcourſing about their Deſign, I thought (promiſing to come the next Day) to know how they were to go.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. For God's Sake, would you truſt all this to your own Breaſt! If you had had an honeſt Intention, you would have gone to ſome Officers, and acquainted them with it; ſome of the King's Juſtices of the Peace, or ſome of the Privy-Council, that ſuch Perſons would be at your Houſe the next Day.

L. C. Baron. By your own Diſcourſe, after you had heard all this Diſcourſe, and after Burton had told you this, you could let him go quietly to his own Chamber: If you had ſuch a Deſign as you ſay, you ſhould have firſt ſeized Burton.

Mr. Fernley. Another Chamber; no, he dined in his Chamber, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You went into another Chamber from him. Have you any Witneſſes?

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. They had a Confidence in you, otherwiſe Burton and Gaunt would not have talk'd ſo freely before you.

L. C. J. Jones. There was a great Confidence in lodging him in your Houſe, being a Conſtable: no body would ſearch a Conſtable's Houſe. Have you any Witneſſes to call?

Mr. Fernley. Mr. William Ruſh, Captain Haddock, (who were call'd.)

L. C. J. Jones. Did Burton's Wife dine with you and him?

Mr. Fernley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Where did you dine?

Mr. Fernley. In the Chamber, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. And was this Diſcourſe concerning Monmouth's being beaten in the Weſt, at the time of Dinner?

Mr. Fernley. The Diſcourſe of it? Yes, my Lord; what Diſcourſe was, was at Dinner?

Mr. Juſt. —— Was Burton's Wife at Dinner, or was ſhe upon the Bed?

Mr. Fernley. She din'd at the Table, my Lord. My Lord, ſhe went to ſleep when Gaunt came in.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Where did ſhe go to ſleep, in the ſame Room?

Mr. Fernley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Where do you uſe to dine at other times?

Mr. Fernley. In the Kitchen, my Lord. My Lord, when I came from Church, the Dinner was ſent up thither.

L. C. J. Jones. Woman, you are upon your Oath, remember that you are oblig'd by your Oath to confeſs the Truth, let it concern whom it will: The Diſcourſe between your Husband and this Man you could not but be privy to; there was only you three at Dinner, your Husband, you and Fernley the Priſoner at the Bar: All this Diſcourſe was at Dinner-time, how is it poſſible that you ſhould not hear it?

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Fernley himſelf owns he did diſcourſe with your Husband at Dinner that he came from the Rebels in the Weſt.

Mrs. Burton. An't pleaſe you, my Lord, I did not hear. As I ſaid before, I muſt ſay again, I did not hear.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Nothing about Monmouth?

Mrs. Burton. No, not one Word, if I were to die as I ſtand here.

Mr. Juſt. —— You were at Dinner?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. —— And this Diſcourſe was at Dinner-time.

Mrs. Burton. I did not hear it.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. What would you ask him, Sir?

Mr. Fernley. What account he can give of my Life and Converſation, how I have behaved my ſelf, and carried my ſelf.

L. C. J. Jones. What are you, Sir? What is your Quality?

Mr. Ruſh. I am a Diſtiller, Sir.

Mr. Juſt Levins Where do you dwell?

Mr. Ruſh. I did dwell two Years ago in Wapping, but not now: I live now at Waltham-Stow.

Officer. He is a very great Whig.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. If he be a Whig, he can't be a little one.

L. C. J. Jones. How long have you liv'd at Waltham Stow?

Mr. Ruſh. Two Years and upwards, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. That is long before any thing that this Man is charged withal.

Mr. Ruſh. I formerly knew the Man, he was a Barber, and us'd to trim me: I always looked upon him to be a good ſober Man.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. A Wapping Man, a ſober Wapping-Man.

Mr. Ruſh. I hope there is a great many there.

L. C. J. Jones. That is all you can ſay for him.

Mr. Ruſh. I have nothing to ſay to his Fact: He demeaned himſelf always well among his Neighbours; I know nothing of the Fact for which he is here.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know Burton?

Mr. Ruſh. Yes Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was Burton? was he reputed an honeſt Man?

Mr. Ruſh. I never knew him otherwiſe; I never was in his Company; I know he dwelt cloſe by where I liv'd.

L. C. J. Jones. And you took him to be a very honeſt Man?

Mr. Ruſh. Before this: He has not been ſo lately, it ſeems. He is a Perſon I never had any Company or Converſation with in my Life.

Cryer. Captain Haddock.

Officer. He won't come in, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Well, well, let him ſtay there.

Cryer. Mr. Dove.

Officer. He won't come in, I can't make him come in.

L. C. J. Jones. Here are none that give any Teſtimony for you, at leaſt will. —— What are you?

Mr. Whittal. I dwell in Wapping, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. What trade are you?

Mr. Whittal. A Plumber.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Who knows you?

Mr. Whittal. I am well known there, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Do you go to Church?

Mr. Whittal. Here's Mr. Tanner knows me, the Clerk of the Peace.

Mr. Tanner. Yes, Sir, I know him.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Do you go to Church?

Mr. Whittal. Always went to Church.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. There were a parcel of them that went conſtantly to Church trimmingly.

L. C. J. Jones. Priſoner, what would you ask him?

Mr. Fernley. Only to give an account how I behaved my ſelf.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Well, Sir, what do you ſay?

Mr. Whittal. All I know is, he behav'd himſelf very well, and went to Church as other Neighbours did; and I never heard him ſpeak againſt the Government.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Did you know Burton?

Mr. Whittal. No, Sir; he was gone before I came to live there.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you any more to ſay?

Mr. Fernley. This, my Lord, may give ſome account that I had no Deſign againſt the Government. I am a poor Man, my Lord, and upon that account I owe a great deal of Money: I knew there was 100 l. for ſecuring Burton, there was no gain by concealing him; he was not a Perſon could requite me, that I ſhould harbour him, and loſe 100 l. which was certain for taking him; which (my Lord) ſhews I had no Deſign.

L. C. J. Jones. No, this argues you to be a ſtronger Confederate; and that you were ſo firm to your Party, you would not gain 100 l. though you might have it for doing your Duty.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I look'd upon it as ſure as if I had it in my Pocket. I knew nothing of him till Sabbath-day at Noon, and I did not deſign to conceal him afterwards, any farther than to ſerve the King.

L. C. J. Jones. You tell us a Story of your ſelf, it is to no purpoſe to try any Priſoner, if his Saying muſt be taken for Evidence: We will hear what Witneſſes you have to produce, or if you can object to the Evidence that's againſt you.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, I own it to be true, I have declared more than the Witneſſes have ſaid againſt me; but my Lord, I am innocent in it, God knows my Heart, I had no deſign in it. It was but ſix Hours I knew of him.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You lay out of your Bed before.

Mr. Fernley. My Lord, not upon his account, I was a Week before out of that Bed, to prepare it for my Wife to lie-in.

L. C. J. Jones. Is your Wife delivered?

Mr. Fernley. No.

L. C. J. Jones. You made great haſt.

Mr. Fernley. It was my Wife's fault.

L. C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Priſoner ſtands indicted for harbouring and relieving one James Burton, knowing him to have committed Treaſon. Gentlemen, you are to be acquainted, that this James Burton, was not only guilty of the late Rebellion in the Weſt, but he was likewiſe charg'd by Proceſs with being guilty of the Plot at the Rye houſe, and thereupon there was ſuch Proceedings by Law, that he was Outlawed, the Record of which Outlawry hath been produced to you; ſo that if there were no more, if you be perſwaded that he is the Perſon guilty, whether he were in the Rebellion in the Weſt or no, that may induce you to find this Indictment, for the Priſoner receiving him after the Rebellion in the Weſt, and knowing him to have committed Treaſon, whereupon he was Outlawed, it equally makes him liable to the Offence wherewith he is charg'd. But, Gentlemen, that is not all; you have expreſs Teſtimony from Burton himſelf, who it ſeems was acquainted with him, and who had fled from his Neighbourhood, by the ſpace of two Years almoſt, and yet he receives this Burton into his Houſe: I will not ſay, at the firſt time that he came into his Houſe, it doth appear by any Evidence, that he knew him to have been in the Rebellion in the Weſt, but when he came thither upon Friday, he was ſo kind to him as to leave his own Chamber, and to let him have that for his Lodging, although now he gives you another Excuſe plainly frivolous and falſe, that is, a Pretence of making way for his Wife to lie-in, who yet is not delivered. He lies there upon Saturday Night, and dines with him upon Sunday. Saturday perhaps might be a buſy Day, and there is no Teſtimony at all given by any Evidence of any Diſcourſe that was between them upon that Day, but upon Sunday, when they dined together, Burton ſwears, that he did tell him that he had been in the Weſt in the Rebellion there, and he came thither for ſhelter: This Man being acquainted with this, allowed him to dine with him, and harboured him in his Houſe for the ſpace of ſeven or eight Hours more, without bringing him before any Juſtice of Peace, or any Magiſtrate who had Authority to commit him, although he had a particular Authority of his own (as he was Conſtable) for the Conſervation of the Peace, yet he forgets his Oath as well as his Duty and Allegiance, and ſuffers him ſtill to remain there. It is true the Wife of Burton dined with them, as Burton himſelf ſays, and the Woman confeſſes, but ſhe was ſo buſie at her Victuals, that ſhe can remember nothing, ſhe did not hear that there was any Diſcourſe concerning Monmouth. But leſt you ſhould want another Witneſs, for Burton is but one Witneſs to that particular, you have him plainly confeſſing it himſelf, which is above a Thouſand Witneſſes, you have him confeſſing that Burton did acknowledge he had been in the Weſt, and that Monmouth was Routed, and yet he continues him in his Houſe, nay more, this Man doth appear to be a Perſon in whom there was that great Confidence, that another Perſon, Gaunt came, and he bids him come into his Houſe, and there he diſcourſt of ſome Traytors, and the means of conveying away Burton, though he had confeſſed it himſelf. Gentlemen, what he tells you, is, that he did mean to diſcover; when did he intend to diſcover? He did not diſcover to any body, before the Man was apprehended by an Officer: he lets Gaunt, who plainly appears to be as arrant a Traytor as could be in the World, to go away meerly upon his own Parole, without taking any courſe to apprehend him. He pretends he is a poor Man, and he might have gain'd 100 l. if he had diſcover'd him, and ſurely he would have diſcover'd him, to gain 100 l. but this is a ſtrong Argument, that he was deep in the Rebellion himſelf, and one in great Eſteem with them, that being a poor Man, he would not do his Duty, for which he might have had a Reward of 100 l. but ſuffers him to eſcape. This is the Caſe, Gentlemen, that is before you, if you believe he did knowingly, as he himſelf upon the matter doth confeſs, give any comfort or relief to Burton, knowing him to be a Rebel, you ought to find him guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew to conſider the Evidence.

Clerk. Set Elizabeth Gaunt to the Bar, (which was done.) Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy Hand, (which ſhe did.)

'THOU ſtandeſt indicted by the Name of 'Elizabeth Gaunt, Wife of William Gaunt, 'of the Pariſh of St. Mary White-Chappel, in the 'County of Middleſex Yeoman: As a falſe Traytor 'againſt our late Serene Lord Charles the Second, 'by the Grace of God her then natural Lord; 'not having the fear of God in her Heart, nor 'weighing the Duty of her Allegiance, but 'moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the 'Devil, and the true and natural Obedience 'which a true and faithful Subject of our ſaid 'Sovereign Lord the King towards our ſaid late 'Lord the King of right ought to bear withdrawing, and with all her Strength intending the 'Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt and diſturb, 'and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom 'of England to ſtir up and move, and the Government of our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King 'in this his Kingdom of England to ſubvert, and 'our ſaid late Sovereign Lord the King from 'the Title, Honour, and Kingly Name of the 'Crown Imperial of this Kingdom of England

Clerk. How ſayeſt thou, art thou guilty or not guilty?

Mrs. Gaunt. I deſire to have more time to conſider of it.

L. C. J. Jones. You know whether you be guilty of this Offence; what need you have any time of Conſideration for that?

Mrs. Gaunt. I don't know, Sir; I am ignorant in the Law, and in things of that nature.

L. C. J. Jones. But this is not matter of Law; it is, whether you did receive theſe Traytors or no knowingly; this James Burton, knowing him to have committed Treaſon: Can't you tell whether you did or no?

Mrs. Gaunt. Not guilty.

Clerk. How wilt thou be try'd?

Mrs. Gaunt. By God and my Country?

Clerk. God ſend thee a good Deliverance.

Then the Middleſex Jury returning, Mrs. Gaunt was ſet aſide, and Ring and Fernley brought to the Bar, who were both brought in guilty by the Jury.

Clerk. Set Henry Corniſh to the Bar, and Elizabeth Gaunt, (which was done.) — You the Priſoners at the Bar, theſe Men that have been now called, and here appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon your ſeveral Lives or Deaths: If you challenge any of them you muſt ſpeak as they come to the Book to be ſworn, before they are ſworn.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I muſt humbly beg leave of your Lordſhip and this honourable Court, that I may renew my Requeſt. The time of notice given me for my Tryal being ſo ſhort, it hath no Precedent, I think: I humbly pray your Lordſhip I may have time allowed for my Tryal; I have had no Council, no Pannel, no help in the World; I had not Pen, Ink, nor Paper, my Lord, theſe are very hard things. My Lord, His Majeſty was petitioned laſt Night by my Children, and he was graciouſly pleas'd to ſay, that he would refer it to my Lords the Judges. I only pray your Lordſhips, that you would be pleaſed to allow me time: Though here is a grievous Indictment brought againſt me, yet I doubt not but to clear my ſelf of what is alledged againſt me, if I have but time to prepare my ſelf for it: therefore I humbly pray I may have time allotted.

L. C. J. Jones. You told us ſo before, that you had exhibited a Petition to the King and that the King did refer it to the Judges, you ſhew us nothing of that

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I can but only ſignifie to your Lordſhip what I hear; my Children were with me, and told me they had petitioned the King, and his Majeſty was pleaſed graciouſly to receive it.

Mr Att. Gen. The King left you to the courſe of the Law.

Mr. Corniſh. It is very hard meaſure; I have no preparation at all, no more than at the firſt moment; but I bleſs God I hope I ſhall in time ſatisfie you of my Innocency.

L. C. J. Jones. You were apprehended and ſeized upon Tueſday laſt, this is almoſt a week; you knew what you were charged withal.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I did not know what I was charged withal. I had no liberty of Friends to come to me; my Wife at length obtained leave, but it was in the preſence of Major Richardſon; I had no Friend with my Wife, no Pen, Ink, nor Paper.

L. C. J. Jones. Was Pen, Ink, and Paper deny'd you? did you ask it?

Mr. Att. Gen. As ſoon as he petition'd for it he had it.

Capt. Richardſon. He had Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Jones. When was that?

Capt. Richardſon. On Saturday.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, it was eight a clock at night.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Mr. Corniſh, I would not have you think you are uſed otherwiſe than other men are; for I muſt tell you it is not uſual to have Pen, Ink, and Paper, without leave.

Mr. Corniſh. I know it hath been allowed in the like caſe.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Ay, upon petition, never elſe.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. There are many men, and of as good quality as you, tried for killing men: does does any body give them notice? Is there any more neceſſity of notice in point of Treaſon, than in point of Murther?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I told you what your offence was, when you were committed.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I remember in my Lord Ruſſel's Caſe he had at leaſt ſeven or eight days allowed him.

Mr Juſt. Levins. It may be ſo; but it is not neceſſary. Priſoners that are tried here generally have no notice at all; if one man hath a ſingular favour, another man cannot claim it.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I have a material Witneſs above 140 miles off.

L. C. J. Jones. My Lord's Trial, I think, was put off but till the afternoon.

Mr Corniſh. With ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip, I think he had eight days aſſign'd him. But my Lord, I humbly conceive I have a Witneſs that is very material in my Caſe, that is 140 miles out of Town, in Lancaſhire; I humbly pray I may have time allotted me to ſend for him.

L. C. J. Jones. Why did not you ſet forth that in your Petition to the King?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I did not underſtand the caſe.

L. C. J. Jones. Were not you committed for High-Treaſon?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I told you ſo my ſelf: I ſhew'd you the Commitment; therefore you can't pretend you were ignorant of it.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, it did not mention this King or the laſt: And I am not a Lawyer, I am not skill'd in theſe things; I am very ignorant, and hope your Lordſhip will conſider me; my Innocence will appear as bright as any mans that ever ſtood at this Bar.

L. C. J. Jones. I don't believe you want that Evidence 140 miles off. Is he the only man that can make your Innocence appear?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, by what I apprehend he will be the moſt material Witneſs I have. My Lord, I ſhall deſire nothing but with ſubmiſſion to your Lordſhip and the Bench; but I humbly conceive it is very reaſonable I ſhould have time, I humbly pray your Lordſhip to conſider it.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Attorney, have you any directions?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

Mr. Corniſh. I do not doubt, if I might have a little time, to make my defence.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You ſhould have applied your ſelf to the King, it does not lie in our power.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I humbly pray you to conſider my caſe.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Bridgman here on the Bench ſays, there was a Petition before the King for putting it off, and the King abſolutely refus'd it.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. We have nothing to do, Sir; we are here by Commiſſion to try you.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I have been denied a copy of the Pannel, I hope that is reaſonable; I muſt deſire a copy of the Pannel.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is none of your right, Mr. Corniſh.

Mr. Corniſh. Mr. Attorney, with ſubmiſſion, I hope I ought to have it.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, you ought not to have it; You have your peremptory challenges, you may challenge 35 without cauſe.

L. C. J. Jones. You ſhall have a copy of the Pannel here.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, here he may.

Mr. Corniſh. It is a very hard caſe, when I have a material Witneſs ſo far out of Town, that I can't have a little time allotted.

L. C. J. Jones. Can't every man that comes here to be tried ſay the very ſame thing, that he hath a material Witneſs in France, Spain, or any where elſe, and that when that Witneſs comes his Innocence will be as clear as the Sun?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, my Witneſs is in Lancaſhire, I cannot help it; I beſeech your Lordſhip to conſider me: I apt to believe that he would ſo much vindicate my Reputation in this matter, that it would be a very great ſatisfaction to your Lordſhips; and I am ſure you are not for oppreſſing any man.

L. C. J. Jones. No, Sir, that we are not.

Mr. Corniſh. I am ſure you are for the juſt vindication of the Government, for executing of Juſtice, and I will deſire no other than that.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Attorney, if you pray he may be tried, we can't deny it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Corniſh, I cannot defer it, I have no authority; and why you ſhould be in another condition than other Priſoners, I don't know; you have not deſerved ſo well of the Government.

Mr. Corniſh. I have not the names of the Wards where theſe men live, and their Trades.

Mr. North. He hath a copy of the Pannel, and that is ſufficient.

L. C. J. Jones. You may ask them where they live.

Mr. Corniſh. I hope I may have Pen and Ink, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Ay, ay.

Then the Jury were called, and after Mr. Corniſh had challenged 35 of them, the Jury ſworn were as followeth:

Thomas Rawlinſon	William Clowdſly.
Thomas Langham.	Richard Holford.
Ambroſe Iſtead.	William Longboat.
Thomas Pendleton.	Steven Coleman.
John Grice.	Robert Clavel.
Thomas Oneby.	William Long.

Proclamation being made, If any one can inform, &c. Mr. Corniſh was ſet aſide, and Elizabeth Gaunt at the Bar.

Clerk. Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy hand. (which ſhe did.) ——You of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner, and hearken to her Cauſe: She ſtands indicted by the name of, &c. (as before in the Indictment.) Upon this Indictment ſhe hath been arraigned, and thereunto pleaded not guilty, and for her Trial hath put her ſelf upon her Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is, to enquire whether ſhe be guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof ſhe ſtands indicted, or not guilty. If you find her guilty, &c

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, Elizabeth Gaunt the Priſoner at the Bar ſtands indicted, for that ſhe knowing James Burton, together with other Traitors traiterouſly to have conſpired the death of the late King, and to raiſe Rebellion in this Kingdom, did harbour the ſaid James Burton, and gave him five Pounds in Money.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, the Priſoner ſtands indicted for harbouring of Burton, who was a great Traitor, and for procuring a way for his eſcape beyond-ſea, and alſo for giving him 5*l.* to bear his charges. In the former Trial you had an account of her Husband, and in this you will hear ſhe and her Husband were the great Brokers for carrying over ſuch Traitors, as my Lord Shaftsbury and others; theſe have taken care to convey them over at all times. We will produce our Witneſſes. Call Burton and his Wife.

Mr. Burton ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Gaunt?

Mr. Burton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an account how ſhe harbour'd you, and all the paſſages that paſt between you and Mrs. Gaunt. Pray tell firſt whether you were engag'd in the matter of the Rye?

Mr. Burton. How I came concerned I will tell you, if it pleaſe you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Speak.

Mr. Burton. The firſt time I knew any thing of it, Mr. Keeling came to me one Saturday morning, and asked me if I was to go to London: I ſaid, Yes, I was to go to the Exchange; and he deſir'd me to meet him at the Miter Tavern within Aldgate, and ask for Number Five. I came at the time, and no body being there, I was going away, and met with a Countrey-man with a ſtick in his hand, that had but one Eye; he came and ask'd for the ſame Number: So the Gentleman ſent his Boy after me, and told me one ſtay'd for me: When I came, he ask'd me if I ask'd for Number Five; and I ſaid, Yes. By whoſe appointment? By Joſiah Keeling's, ſaid I. So he ask'd the man of the houſe to ſhew a Room: He ſhew'd a Box, but he would have a Room, and went up ſtairs, and call'd for Pipes and a Candle, and a pint of Wine. In a little while Keeling came in, and brought Barber and Thompſon, and no body ſpake almoſt any thing but Rumbold, (that was Rumbold with one eye, for Keeling when he came in call'd him Capt. Rumbold) and Rumbold talk'd about Priviledges and ſuch things at firſt and he ſaid his houſe was a convenient houſe, and there they might do the buſineſs: but before they had done, I found they deſign'd to kill the King, but nothing troubled him but killing the Poſtillion, to kill a man in cold blood. But then ſays we, If you are for killing, we have done, and ſo broke up; that was the end of that. A while after Mr. Keeling went in, and made a Diſcovery: I never came among them afterwards. So after Mr Keeling had diſcovered, I was in the Proclamation for being there at that meeting, and abſconded my ſelf, and lay hid. A matter of two months after, Mrs. Gaunt came to enquire of my Wife where I was, to ſpeak with me; ſhe brought her to me. She told me there were ſome perſons about to make an eſcape, and would have me go along with them. I told her with all my heart: So I ask'd her which way and how they intended to go: She told me they had provided Horſes to ride down to Rochford-Hundred, and there was a Veſſel to carry them over; and, ſays ſhe, be ready by ſuch an evening, and I will call for you. Accordingly ſhe did and had me into Biſhopſgate-ſtreet, and in Half-moon Alley in a little Brew-houſe, up ſtairs in a Chamber, there were both the Rumbolds, one of them did not go, and the other and I lay there all night, and in the morning a man came and called us away, and we went to White-Chappel to take Horſe, to ride down to Rochford-Hundred, and ſtaid for the Veſſel two days; and when we met the Veſſel, it was a ſmall Veſſel, and bad weather, and the Maſter of the Veſſel had but one hand, and two Boys, one a very little one; and we went down the Creek, and I asked the man where he did intend to land us; and he told us at Oſtend. ſaid I, I underſtood we were to go for Holland to the Brill. Says he, My Veſſel is only able to go to Oſtend or Dunkirk, either of them. Says Rumbold, I don't underſtand the Sea. Says I, This is a very ſmall Veſſel, and leaky, and the man not able to manage it. Says I, I will go back again to London. Says he, I will do as you do; and we both parted at London, and I never ſaw him afterwards till I ſaw him at Amſterdam I lay by a great many months after; then Mrs Gaunt came to me again, and told me there was two other perſons going and I might have a paſſage if I would go: So ſhe bid me be ready by ſuch an evening, and I was ready, and a Boat being ready at the water ſide, carried me to Graveſend, where I went in a Veſſel to Amſterdam.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where were you?

Mr. Burton. I was with my Wife at my Daughters: I had a Daughter married, her Husband was drown'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came Mrs. Gaunt to take ſo much care of you? give the Court an account.

Mr. Burton. She might think I knew ſomething of her Husband if I ſhould be taken; I ſuppoſe that might be the chief thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. What had her Husband done?

Mr. Burton. Her Husband, I ſuppoſe, knew ſomething of the buſineſs.

Mr. Att. Gen. What buſineſs?

Mr. Burton. About ſeizing the Tower: He came to me, and would have had me gone with him with Capt. Walcot to the Tower, to ſee what force there was of Soldiers; and Capt. Walcot ſaid he had a deſign to take an houſe over againſt the Tower, to put in ſome men there to break in upon the Tower, and Gaunt was with him.

L. C. J. Jones. What diſcourſe had you with her about the Plot?

Mr. Burton. Nothing with her.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it ſhe would help you away for?

Mr. Burton. I ſuppoſe this was the reaſon, becauſe ſhe knew I knew her Husband was concern'd.

Mr. North. Did ſhe aſſiſt you with any money?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. North. How much?

Mr. Burton. She gave me a parcel of money juſt as I was going away; I put it among other money.

Mr. North. How much? 30 or 40 s.?

Mr. Burton More than that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you gone from your own houſe when this woman came to you?

Mr. Burton. My own houſe was broke up a great while before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you appear publickly when ſhe came to you?

Mr. Burton. No an't pleaſe you.

L. C. J. Jones. Had there been any ſearch for you before?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. North. You were in the Proclamation at this time?

Mr. Burton.

Mr Burton. Yes an't pleaſe you, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did ſhe carry you to Rumbold?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. Att Gen. Was there any diſcourſe between Rumbold and her?

Mr. Burton. No. There was an elderly man in the houſe, I did not know him, carried me up to Rumbold, there was both of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What money had you of her?

Mr. Burton. I believe about 5*l*. I told her I had lain a great while, and money was very bare with me; and ſhe told me ſhe would get me a little.

Mr. Att Gen. Did ſhe know what you were conceal'd for?

Mr. Burton. Every body knew that, becauſe I was in the Proclamation.

Mr. North. What directions did ſhe give you how you ſhould behave your ſelf when ſhe went with you to Biſhopſgate-ſtreet? how did ſhe ſay you muſt carry your ſelf?

Mr. Burton. Nothing there, ſhe gave no order about that.

L. C. J. Jones. Did ſhe tell you you were concern'd in the Plot with her Husband?

Mr. Burton. She did not tell me ſo, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you tell her you were concern'd in the Plot with her Husband?

Mr. Burton. I did not tell her ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were the two Men that were prepared to go with you that time?

Mr. Burton. One Patchil.

Mr. Att. Gen. He was kill'd in the Fight. Was Patchil in the Fight?

Mr. Burton. Yes, an't pleaſe you, he was killed.

Mr. Att. Gen. And who was the other?

Mr. Burton. T'other was a Man liv'd in Southwark; I never ſaw him before.

Mr. Com. Serj. What Directions did ſhe give you about your own Name, or any others when you went in the Boat?

Mr. Burton. If I knew any body, that I ſhould not take notice I knew them.

L. C. J. Jones. You were not to take any Acquaintance of any body in the Boat?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Heark you, Sir, you looked upon all thoſe to be engaged in the Plot. All that ſhe endeavour'd to ſave were of the ſame level?

Mr. Burton. Rumbold was; Rumbold was in the Proclamation.

L C. J. Jones. Did ſhe tell you, that you were in the Proclamation?

Mr. Burton. No, an't pleaſe your Lordſhip, ſhe did not tell me ſo.

Mr. North. Did ſhe never diſcourſe of your being in the Proclamation?

Mr. Burton. No, not as I remember; it was a general thing.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. But why ſhould ſhe come to you to tranſport you, if it were not for ſuch a thing?

Mr. Burton. Her Husband was with me about going to the Tower.

Mr. Att. Gen. Burton, pray thus, when you came from the Weſt, what Overtures were to help you here from her or her Husband?

Mr. Burton. Her Husband was with me at Fernley's Houſe, and he told me there were two or three Perſons to go in two or three Days, and I ſhould go along with them.

Mr. Att. Gen. You named your Daughter, what is her Name?

Mr. Burton. Mary Gilbert.

Then Mary Gilbert was called and ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Gaunt?

Mary Gilbert. Yes, Sir, I know her; ſhe was our Neighbour.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then give an account of her coming to you about your Father.

Mary Gilbert. She came to our Houſe that Night my Father went away. I never heard a Word of the Diſcourſe that paſt, for I always went out of the way.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Why did you go out of the way?

Mary Gilbert. Becauſe they were not willing I ſhould hear the Diſcourſe.

Mr. Com. Serj. You are upon your Oath, Miſtreſs, you muſt tell the Truth.

Mary Gilbert. I do, Sir, I will tell no more.

Mr Sol Gen. Did you ſee your Father go away? Who did he go with, in what Company?

Mary Gilbert. I can't tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Mrs. Gaunt go with him?

Mary Gilbert. I met my Father and Mrs. Gaunt in Houndſditch, my Mother and I were to meet them in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet.

Mr. Com. Serj. Well, what was the reaſon why you did not meet?

Mary Gilbert. We were to meet at ſeven a Clock, and we went to the Houſe, and they were not come; and we were coming home, and met them in Houndſditch, and my Father had Mrs. Gaunt under the Arm, and went back to a Houſe without Biſhopſgate.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Mrs. Gaunt carry him thither?

L. C. J. Jones. Do you know why your Father was to go away?

Mary Gilbert. He went upon the account of the Proclamation.

L. C. J. Jones. Then you knew of the Proclamation?

Mary Gilbert. Yes, Sir, I knew of the Proclamation.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whoſe Acquaintance was the Man in Biſhopſgate-ſtreet?

Mary Gilbert. He was none of mine.

Council. When your Father went up Stairs into a Room, did you ſee any body with him?

Mary Gilbert. Yes, Sir, it was a Man that had but one Eye, a full ſet Man, full of Pock holes; but I never ſaw him before nor after.

Council. How came you to ſee him?

Mary Gilbert. By going up Stairs to ſee my Father.

Mary Burton ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know Mrs. Gaunt there?

Mrs. Burton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you tell the Court, how ſhe came to enquire after your Husband?

Mrs. Burton. Yes Sir, at my Daughter's Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Diſcourſe happened between you?

Mrs. Burton. No Diſcourſe, but ſhe ſaid if I was willing, my Husband ſhould go away, and ſhe would take care.

Mr. Att. Gen. But why ſhould he go away?

Mrs. Burton. I don't know why, but only upon the Proclamation.

Council. Woman, did ſhe take notice your Husband was gone from home, and had left his Houſe?

Mrs.

Mrs. Burton. I knew my ſelf, my Lord.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Where did you go?

Mrs. Burton. My Husband went out of Doors by his own ſelf, by Appointment, and we were to meet, my Child and I together, without Biſhopſgate by the Catherine-wheel.

Mr. Com. Serj. Who made that Appointment?

Mrs. Burton. Mrs. Gaunt.

Mr. Com. Serj. Upon what account did ſhe come to you to ſecure your Husband?

Mrs. Burton. Upon the account he was in the Proclamation, and I thought within my ſelf, for fear my Husband ſhould know any thing againſt her Husband; but I never ſaid ſo, for I was glad my Husband ſhould be helped away, willing to ſave his Life, for I knew it was Death.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. And you took that to be the meaning of it in reference to the Proclamation.

Mr. Att. Gen. How far did you live from her?

Mrs. Burton. Formerly we dwelt pretty near one another, when Mr. Gaunt kept a Tallow Chandlers Shop.

L. C. J. Jones Woman, do you verily believe ſhe knew your Husband was in the Proclamation?

Mr. Juſt. —— Did you never ſee the Priſoner at the Bar at any time in Holland?

Mrs. Burton. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nor her Husband?

Mr. Burton. Nor her Husband.

Mr. Att. Gen. I ask you at this time when your Husband went away, and his Houſe was ſearch'd, how far did ſhe live from you then?

Mrs. Burton. She had but Lodgings, I don't know where her Dwelling-houſe was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where were her Lodgings?

Mrs. Burton. At the upper end of Old Gravel-Lane, and my Daughter in the middle of Gravel-Lane, in Worſter-ſtreet, as far as it may be to Newgate, thereabouts.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it taken notice of all over the Street that the Houſe was ſearched and your Husband gone? Was that taken notice of in the Neighbourhood?

Mrs. Burton Yes, yes.

Council. Between the time your Husband went firſt away, and the time ſhe came to take care of him, had you no Diſcourſe about the reaſon of his going away, nor of the Proclamation?

Mrs. Burton. No.

L. C. J. Jones. What ſay you Woman, to this Evidence, ſeveral Witneſſes ſay you were very buſie in contriving the eſcape of Burton, what was the reaſon why you would ſend him away?

Mrs. Gaunt. I did not contrive to ſend him away.

L. C. J. Jones. The Woman ſays ſo, Burton ſays ſo, the Daughter ſays the ſame.

Mrs. Gaunt. Where Sir?

L. C. J. Jones. At Biſhopſgate or Houndſditch.

Mrs. Gaunt. I deny it.

L. C. J. Jones. And you gave him Money afterwards.

Mrs. Gaunt. Who ſaw me give it him?

L. C. J. Jones. He ſwears it.

Mrs. Gaunt. He was the more beholden to me.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you or did you not?

Captain Richardſon. She ſays ſhe is not come here to tell your Lordſhip what ſhe did.

L. C. J. Jones. Woman, did not you hear that Burton's Name was in the Proclamation about Rumbold's Plot?

Mrs. Gaunt. It is like I might.

L. C. J. Jones. You might hear it.

Mrs. Gaunt. Yes.

L. C. J. Jones. And yet you would by all means help him to eſcape?

Mrs. Gaunt. I can ſay nothing againſt it, if they ſwear it.

L. C. J. Jones. Do you know what you are charg'd withal? You are accuſed for relieving and comforting Burton, whom you knew to have committed Treaſon.

Mrs. Gaunt. My Lord, he ſays ſo.

L. C. J. Jones. And for helping him to eſcape, and giving him Money in order to it.

Mrs. Gaunt. He ſays ſo.

L. C. J. Jones. He ſwears ſo; what do you ſay?

Mrs. Gaunt. Is that ſufficient?

Mr. Juſt. —— Ay, and another ſwears it, that is ſufficient.

Mrs. Gaunt. I have not heard any body elſe ſwear it.

Mr. Juſtice ——— Yes, his Wife.

Mrs. Gaunt. Not about the Money.

Mr. Juſtice ——— You came and ſollicited him to go ſeveral times.

Mrs. Gaunt. It is very untrue, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you know his Houſe had been ſearch'd to find him?

Mrs. Gaunt. I did not know it a great while, ſince I might know.

Here Burton's Pardon was produced again.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is a Pardon for Burton, now he is a good Witneſs, Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you any more, Woman, to ſay for your ſelf? if you can, tell us any other Cauſe than that he was guilty of Treaſon wherein your Husband was concern'd.

Mrs. Gaunt. No, I deny that, that I knew my Husband was concern'd in any thing of that kind.

L. C. J. Jones. Wherefore then would you take ſo much care to ſend him away?

Mrs. Gaunt. I don't tell you, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. You don't tell us, but the Witneſſes have ſworn it.

Mrs. Gaunt. I muſt leave it to them.

L C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Woman ſtands indicted for High Treaſon for concealing, comforting and relieving one James Burton, a Perſon that had committed High Treaſon; and for endeavouring that he might make his eſcape, and giving him 5 l. in Money. Gentlemen, the Evidence that is given, is by Burton, his Wife and his Daughter. Burton ſays that this Woman was very ſolicitous ſeveral times to help to ſend him beyond Sea. He does tell you, that when there was a Plot againſt the Life of the King, wherein Rumbold was concern'd, and one of the chief Actors, that he himſelf was preſent at one of the Conſultations concerning it, and that afterwards he did withdraw himſelf from the Company, as he ſays; but he ſays, that this Woman's Husband being likewiſe concern'd in the Plot, and this Woman, as he believes, knowing that he was able to make ſome Diſcovery concerning her Husband, and knowing alſo his danger in reſpect of his own guilt, ſhe endeavours to ſend him away firſt to Rochford, and ſo to go beyond Sea. And afterwards in another place in Houndſditch, and from thence he was to be conveyed beyond Sea. It is true, there is no direct Proof that there was any particular mention that Burton was in the Proclamation for that Treaſon, but the Woman ſays, and Burton himſelf ſays, that they do both verily believe, that the Priſoner at the Bar did know he was in the Proclamation, and therefore there was no particular Diſcourſe concerning it; and ſhe her ſelf being examined, ſays, ſhe might hear that his Name was in the Proclamation, and ſhe might hear that his Houſe was ſearched, and that he could not be found; and yet notwithſtanding all this, ſhe endeavours to conceal him. What can be the meaning of all this in this Woman, but that ſhe was very zealous to maintain the Conſpiracy, and was a great Aſſiſtant to all Perſons that were concern'd in it? She will not tell you any other Cauſe wherefore ſhe ſhould be concerned to convey this Man beyond Sea, and therefore in all reaſon you ought to conceive it was for this; it was a known Cauſe, made known to all People by the King's Proclamation. If you believe ſhe did know or believe Burton to have been guilty of that Treaſon, and that ſhe did help to convey him away, as the Witneſſes have proved that ſhe did, by giving him Money, and ſoliciting him ſeveral times to be gone, then you ought to find her guilty.

Then the Jury deſiring to ask a Queſtion, Burton was called again, but being gone out of Court, was ſent for, and Mr. Corniſh was ſet to the Bar.

Clerk. Henry Corniſh, Hold up thy Hand; you of the Jury, look upon the Priſoner and hearken to his Cauſe; he ſtands indicted by the Name of Henry Corniſh, late of the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, in the Ward of Baſſiſhaw, London, Merchant, &c. as before in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraign'd, and thereunto pleaded Not Guilty, &c.

Mr. Phipps. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen that are ſworn, Henry Corniſh, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted, for that he knowing that the late Duke of Monmouth, William Ruſſel, Eſq; the late Lord Gray, and other Traytors, had conſpired the Death of the late King, and to raiſe Rebellion in this Kingdom, did promiſe to aid and aſſiſt them in compaſſing this wicked Imagination, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c. to this he hath pleaded not guilty, &c.

Mr. Corniſh. I am innocent of the whole matter.

Officer. Burton is come.

L. C. J. Jones. Let us make an end of that firſt. In the Evidence that you give againſt Elizabeth Gaunt, you ſaid that you did receive Money from her, 5 l. or ſome ſuch Sum.

Mr. Burton. Yes, an't pleaſe your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Jones. Did ſhe owe you any Money?

Mr. Burton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Upon what accompt was it you receiv'd that Money?

Mr. Burton. She gave it me.

L. C. J. Jones. Upon what accompt was it? To aſſiſt you in your eſcape?

Mr. Burton. She knew I was bare of Money, and gave it me of her free Will.

L. C. J. Jones. And it was at that time you went away?

Mr. Burton. Yes.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It was to aſſiſt you in your eſcape?

Mr. Burton. Yes, I believe ſo.

Mr. Com. Serj. Who paid your Boat-hire?

Mr. Burton. I paid none, I don't know, the Waterman can tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, Mr. Corniſh, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted for contriving the Death of the late King, and for raiſing Rebellion in the Kingdom, and is charged that he did conſent to be aſſiſting to that Rebellion that was then deſigned; it is not unknown to you, Gentlemen, for there have been ſeveral Tryals of that Conſpiracy, that there was a great Rebellion deſign'd in England by the late Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Ruſſel, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong; and particularly Gentlemen, there was a Meeting (which already hath appeared in publick) at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, where the Lord Ruſſel, the late Duke of Monmouth, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Mr. Rumſey, and the late Lord Gray, met to conſider and adjuſt matters. At that Meeting Mr. Corniſh indeed came in very late (for he was invited and knew their Deſign then) he came in late, and ſo was not at the whole Diſcourſe; but there was a Declaration framed to be put out when they ſhould Riſe, and they did acquaint Mr. Corniſh with it, and they read it to Mr. Corniſh, and Mr. Corniſh did like it very well, and promiſed he would be aſſiſting, as we will prove to you Gentlemen. Another inſtance of Mr. Corniſh's Rebellion, for I need not tell you what part he acted when he was Sheriff, and maintain'd That that was the ground Work of the Rebellion, ſetting the Commonalty againſt the Government of the City. Another inſtance we will give you is, His Under-Sheriff that was employed to divide the City, and to raiſe Men within the City, having diſcourſe with Mr. Corniſh about ſettling that matter, he liked it very well, and promis'd he would be aſſiſting to him, and you may eaſily preſume Mr. Goodenough the Under-Sheriff was very privy to all the Acts of Mr. Corniſh at that time. We will call our Witneſſes. Mr. Rumſey.

Mr. Corniſh. I deſire the Witneſſes may be kept apart.

Mr. Att. Gen. They are ſo two times.

Mr. Corniſh. You will find me guilty of neither; I am as innocent as any Perſon in this Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. So was my Lord Ruſſel to his Death, Mr. Corniſh: do you remember that?

Mr. Corniſh. Mr. Attorney General, I ſpeak in the Preſence of the great God, I am as innocent as any Man in this Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Rumſey, pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an account of the Inſurrection that was to have been in England, in the late King's Time, and what concern the Priſoner had in that Affair.

Mr. Rumſey. My Lord, about the latter end of October, or the beginning of November, my Lord Shaftsbury deſired me to go to Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, where there was a Meeting of thoſe Gentlemen that I did name before, the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Ruſſel, my Lord Gray, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and Mr. Ferguſon, and Mr. Sheppard, and accordingly I went; I came late there my ſelf, for they were juſt going away, when I came in; I told them my Meſſage, and they told me they were diſappointed by Mr. Trenchard. I had not been there a quarter of an Hour, but we were going away, and Mr. Sheppard was call'd for by his Man, and he went down Stairs and brought up Mr. Corniſh; and when he came into the Room, he told the Gentlemen there met, that Mr. Alderman Corniſh was come; ſo as ſoon as Mr. Alderman Corniſh came into the Room, he made his Excuſe to the Gentlemen that he did not come ſooner,

ſooner, and that he could not ſtay with them; the reaſon why he could not ſtay with them, he told them, was, that they were to meet that Night about their Charter, and there was never another Alderman in Town but himſelf, and therefore he could not ſtay, there was a neceſſity of an Alderman to be there. And upon that Mr. Ferguſon opened his Boſom, and from under his Stomacher pull'd out a Paper; they told him, they had that Paper read, and deſired to read it to him: Mr. Ferguſon read it, and Mr. Sheppard held the Candle all the while that it was reading; and after they had read it, they asked him how he liked it, and he did ſay he liked it very well.

L. C. J. Jones. What were the Contents of that Paper?

Mr. Rumſey. The firſt part of it was complaining of the miſgovernment of the late King; there were two Points in it that I do remember very well, that they would declare for: One was, Liberty of Conſcience; and t'other was, That all thoſe that would aſſiſt in that Inſurrection, that had any Lands of the Church, or the Kings, in the late War, ſhould have them reſtored to them.

L. C. J. Jones. Was there any thing in that Paper that did engage any Body to an Inſurrection?

Mr. Rumſey. I did not hear all the Paper, nor did I take great notice of it; but thoſe two Points were in it, to engage them that would aſſiſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the effect of the Paper?

Mr Rumſey. It was to be a Declaration upon the Riſing; when the Riſing was to have been, this was to have been diſperſed abroad.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Rumſey, was there a Riſing intended at that time?

Mr. Rumſey. Yes, and they met there for that purpoſe; and Mr. Trenchard was the Man to manage the Buſineſs about Taunton, and he diſappointed them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was your Meſſage from my Lord Shaftsbury to them?

Mr. Rumſey. It was to know what iſſue they had come to about the Riſing, and to preſs them to it, for ſuch a matter as that was not to be long kept afoot; either let them come to a Reſolution to riſe, or let it fall for good and all.

Mr. Att. Gen. After Mr. Corniſh had expreſſed his liking of this Buſineſs and Declaration, what follow'd?

Mr. Rumſey. He did ſay, he liked it very well; and that poor Intereſt he had, he would joyn with it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Speak that again.

Mr. Rumſey. Mr. Corniſh did ſay, he did like the Declaration, and with the ſmall Intereſt he had, he would appear to back it, or Words to that Effect.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, ſince he takes the Freedom to charge me with theſe things, I never was at a Conſult in my Days.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. You were not then at Mr. Sheppard's that Night?

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you deny you were at Mr. Sheppard's that Night?

Mr. Corniſh. I do declare, I never was at Mr. Sheppard's in any Conſult in my Life, as he declares; but I have had great Dealings with Mr. Sheppard.

L. C. J. Jones. You ſhall be allowed your Liberty; pray, Sir, be not tranſported with Paſſion. I doubt, before this time, notwithſtanding the Confidence you ſeem to have, there are few believe you to be as innocent as any Perſon preſent.

Mr. Att. Gen. You will hear more from his Oracle.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Were you there when my Lord Ruſſel was there?

Mr. Corniſh. I was not there when my Lord Ruſſel was there, as I remember.

L. C. J. Jones. Were you preſent, hear, hear, Sir: were you preſent at Sheppard's when Ferguſon was there?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I have been at Sheppard's ſeveral times, but I never liked the Man for his Morals, and therefore never liked to be in his Company.

L. C. J. Jones. He pull'd the Paper out of his Boſom.

Mr. Corniſh. It is as great an untruth as ever was told in the World; but, my Lord, ſeeing he takes this Freedom to charge me, I deſire to know whether he ſtands here as a lawful Evidence?

L. C. J. Jones. What is your Exception?

Mr. Corniſh. He ſtands charged guilty of Treaſon.

L. C. J. Jones. That it ſelf does not diſable him to be a Witneſs.

Mr. Corniſh. Before he hath his Pardon, my Lord?

L. C. J. Jones. I don't know whether he hath his Pardon or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is no Indictment at all upon him.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. If he were convicted, or outlawed of Treaſon, it were ſomething; an innocent Man may be charged.

Mr. Rumſey. My Lord, Mr. Corniſh and I have been very well acquainted theſe fourteen Years or thereabouts, and have had great Concerns together; for during the time that I managed the King's Cuſtoms at Briſtol, ſix Years I was there Collector, he did return between three and four hundred thouſand Pound for me; he is a very honeſt Gentleman, and I appeal to himſelf, whether I take delight to appear here to accuſe him.

Mr. Corniſh. But Colonel, what is the reaſon that you have not accuſed me all this while?

Mr. Rumſey Mr. Corniſh, I hope that is not an Objection, I think I ſuffer for it and not you; it was Compaſſion, and the ſame Compaſſion makes you deny it to ſave others; if you would deal openly, I make no doubt, but you might partake of the King's Favour yet, as well as I have done.

Mr. Corniſh. I do thankfully accept of His Majeſties Favour at all times, but I thank God I am innocent in this matter, and do not ſtand in need of it.

Mr. Rumſey. And you ſay I accuſe you falſely; then Mr. Corniſh, you don't ſtand there nor I here.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you ask him any Queſtions?

L. C. J. Jones. But pray don't enter into a long Harangue.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I do humbly conceive, that he does not ſtand here as an Evidence.

L. C. J. Jones. You have the Judgment of the Court for that.

Mr. Corniſh. Before he is pardon'd?

L. C. J. Jones. I don't talk of a Pardon; what Record have you againſt him?

Mr. Att. Gen. You were preſent and heard that reſolv'd before in my Lord Ruſſel's Caſe.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, Mr. Rumſey did upon his Evidence give in, and he was obliged by his Oath to ſpeak the whole Truth——

L. C. J. Jones. Now you are making your Speech, it is not your proper time; you ſhall urge any thing againſt Mr. Rumſey's Evidence, or the credibility of it when it is your time.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I do here deſign it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Rumſey, pray recollect; had you never any Diſcourſe with him at other times?

Mr. Rumſey. We have had a long Acquaintance, fourteen Years, but in my Life, I never heard him ſpeak any thing before or ſince that, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Corniſh, will you ask him any more Queſtions?

Mr. Corniſh. I deſire to know——

Mr. Rumſey. What would you know?

Mr. Corniſh. Whether did you and I diſcourſe of theſe matters at any other time?

Mr. Rumſey. No.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. You muſt not ſtand to dialogue between one another, but ſpeak as we may hear you.

L. C. J. Jones. You ſhall argue if you will, when you come to make your Defence in the proper time, the improbability of any thing that he hath ſaid, or the impoſſibility, or repugnancy to any Truth, or any Evidence that you can give to the contrary; but I ſay, this is not your time.

Mr. Corniſh. I never was at any Conſult in my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is a Name he gives it; was you never at a Meeting about a Riſing?

Mr. Goodenough ſworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Goodenough, are you acquainted with Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Goodenough. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I humbly conceive he is not a Witneſs, he ſtands indicted upon an Outlawry; I can produce it.

Mr. Att. Gen. We do admit it.

L. C. J. Jones. They admit your Exception, and will anſwer it by producing a Pardon.

Mr. Corniſh. I need not ſay any thing againſt him, he is known well enough.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He was your Under Sheriff, Mr. Corniſh.

Mr. Corniſh. Much againſt my Will; I oppos'd him to the utmoſt; and this is nothing but Malice againſt me.

Mr. Goodenough's Pardon Read.

Mr. Corniſh. I do humbly conceive this can't be done, but by a Writ of Errour, or an Act of Parliament.

L. C. J. Jones. Can't the King pardon an Outlawry?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. That is no piece of Law, I am ſure of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Goodenough, pray what do you know of a Riſing intended againſt the late King?

Mr. Goodenough All that I have to give an account of is a Diſcourſe——

Mr. Att. Gen. Anſwer what I ask you; what do you know of a Riſing by others?

Mr. Goodenough. I know nothing of that Buſineſs of my Lord Ruſſel's; but there was a Deſign to riſe, Sir, in London; we deſign'd to divide it into twenty parts, and out of each part to raiſe five hundred Men, if it might be done, to make an Inſurrection.

L. C. J. Jones. What were theſe Men to do when they were raiſed?

Mr. Goodenough. They were to take the Tower, and drive the Guards out of Town.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, acquaint my Lord and the Jury what Diſcourſe you had with Mr. Corniſh.

Mr. Goodenough. Before this was agreed on by us, I chanced to be at Alderman Corniſh's; Sir, ſaid I, now the Law won't defend us, tho' we be never ſo innocent; but ſome other way is to be thought on; upon this, ſaid he, I wonder the City is ſo unready, and the Country ſo ready. I ſaid to him again, Sir, there is ſomething thought of to be done here; but, ſays I, in the firſt place, the Tower ought to be ſeized, where the Magazine is; upon this he made a little Pauſe, and ſaid, I will do what I can, or what good I can, to this purpoſe he anſwered me; and about ſome time after, he met me upon the Exchange, and asked me, how Affairs went? which I underſtood to be relating to what we diſcours'd; this is all that I can ſay. I never met after this, but only upon the Exchange, he ask'd how matters went.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Diſcourſe about ſeizing the Guards?

Mr. Goodenough. I have told you the whole Diſcourſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, repeat it.

Mr. Goodenough. I told him, ſays I, Sir, now it is plain, the Law will not defend us, tho' we are never ſo innocent, or to this purpoſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Upon what occaſion was that Diſcourſe?

Mr. Goodenough. Every thing going againſt us.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How?

Mr. Goodenough. This was in Eaſter Term, as near as I can remember, 83.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, 83.

Mr. Goodenough. Therefore, ſays I, ſomething elſe is to be thought on, ſome Courſe elſe is to be taken: to this purpoſe he anſwered me, I wonder the City is ſo unready, and the Country ſo ready.

L. C. Baron. What Country?

Mr. Goodenough. He had been in the Country, as I underſtood before, that I don't know.

Mr. Corniſh. What time was this, Sir?

Mr. Goodenough. In Eaſter Term, or thereabouts, 83. I told him then, Sir, there is ſomething thought of to be done here in London, to this purpoſe; but ſays I, in the firſt place, the Tower is to be ſeiz'd, where the Magazine is; ſo he anſwered me, after ſome Pauſe (he pauſed upon it) ſays he, I will do what good I can, or what I can, to this purpoſe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he ſeem to diſlike ſeizing the Tower at all?

Mr. Goodenough. Not at all, Sir, it did not appear ſo to me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Diſcourſes had you any other time?

Mr. Goodenough. I never had any Diſcourſe of this matter, or any thing relating to it at any other time, but only when I came upon the Exchange, how things went.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And did you give him an account?

Mr. Goodenough. I ſaid, Well. I gave him a general Anſwer, for that was not a place to talk in, and that I apprehended of this Diſcourſe.

Mr.

Mr. Sol Gen. Had you any other matters?

Mr. Goodenough. I had ſome other matters of managing the Riot, that was brought againſt him, and ſeveral others, and my ſelf alſo.

L. C. J. Jones. Will you ask him any Queſtions, Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Corniſh. Whether his Pardon be allowed?

L. C. J. Jones. We heard it read.

Mr. Corniſh. This being a Court inferiour to the King's Bench———

L. C. J. Jones. Here is a Pardon under the Great Seal, Sir, and here is a Pardon of that Offence which you charge him with, and which you take to be a ſufficient Exception againſt his being a Witneſs, we are ſatisfied it is ſufficient.

Mr. Corniſh. Pray, my Lord, is not this Pardon ſpecial?

L. C. J. Jones. What do you mean by that?

Mr. Corniſh. Becauſe, my Lord, he hath been in an Act of Treaſon ſince; therefore, my Lord, if he be not pardoned of that———

L. C. J. Jones. No, no, he is not indicted for it; we can't try him now for any Treaſon of that nature.

Mr. Corniſh. I humbly conceive he hath not had a Pardon for his laſt Treaſon.

L. C. J. Jones. I muſt tell you, if he be guilty of Treaſon, till he is tried and convicted, it doth not take off his Teſtimony.

Mr. Corniſh. Pray, Mr. Goodenough, remember all your Tricks, whether or no, was there any body preſent when this Diſcourſe paſt between you and I?

Mr. Goodenough. No body but you and I.

Mr. Corniſh. You were not ſo converſant in my Houſe, I know.

Mr. Goodenough. Sir, I came to you about the buſineſs of the Riot.

Mr. Corniſh. How many times might you be at my Houſe? not three times, I believe.

L. C. J. Jones. You ask a Queſtion, and anſwer it your ſelf.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I deſire to know, where it was theſe Words were ſpoke.

Mr. Goodenough. Sir, in your lower Room.

Mr. Corniſh. In my own Houſe?

Mr. Goodenough. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Corniſh. And no Company there?

Mr. Goodenough. And no Company.

Mr. Corniſh. That is very ſtrange, and that afterwards you ſhould meet me, and diſcourſe this matter again.

Mr. Goodenough. No, Sir, all I ſay, is this, you met me upon the Exchange, and asked me how things went.

Mr. Corniſh. That might be in Reference to the Suit you were managing for the Rioters; I know of nothing elſe.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. And I tell you, Mr. Corniſh, that was a Branch of the Plot; take that from me.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, he was Attorney in that Cauſe, and I might ask, how matters went in reference to that Tryal, but I take God to witneſs, nothing elſe, as I remember.

L. C. J. Jones. But here you ſay, it was a ſtrange thing that Mr. Goodenough and you ſhould be in a Room alone, when you acknowledge him to have been the Attorney in a Cauſe of mighty Conſequence among you.

Mr. Corniſh. He was concern'd for all, and I ſtedfaſtly believe he was never with me twice about that Suit; but he hath been at Sir Thomas Player's; there he often went about that Affair; and I do not believe that ever he came to me about that Buſineſs.

L. C. J. Jones. Is that all you have to ſay to him, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any more Queſtions? if not, go on, we have done.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, Colonel Rumſey is a Perſon that hath acquainted the Court, that there was a long acquaintance between him and me. I have ſerved His Majeſty in my Place, and do it to this Day. My Lord, it is a very improbable thing, that I ſhould meet him at Mr. Sheppard's, where I ſaw ſuch wicked horrible Doings; and that he ſhould never afterwards ſpeak to me about that affair; he came to my Houſe, I remember, about the return of ſome Monies for his own private Uſe; for he was then out of his Majeſties Employment. He does declare here, he never ſaid a Word to me, never ſpake to me any thing of it but there. My Lord, it is a very ſtrange thing, that there ſhould be ſuch a Contrivance to ruin the King and Kingdom, and that I ſhould be one in this Buſineſs, this Villany, and not be conſulted how to carry it on, it is very ſtrange, they ſhould ſee me and never ſay a Word of it afterwards to me. My Lord, I hope, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, that you will conſider the improbability of it; it is as improbable as any thing in the World. I hope it doth appear to your Lordſhip and this Bench, that there is no probability in it; he owns we had a great deal of Freedom; he owns we were acquainted for fourteen Years together, and that I ſhould be at ſuch a wicked villainous place once, and ſee him ſo often afterwards, and never ſpeak of it, and never ſay any thing of it, the Great God of Heaven and Earth, before whom I ſtand, knows that I know nothing of all that he hath ſworn againſt me: He muſt ſwear theſe things to ſave his own Life; if he will take away my Life, he will take away many others, without queſtion, if he can ſave his own. I ſhould not urge this, but God is my Witneſs, I never heard any thing of a Contrivance or Plot, till my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal: Theſe are very ſtrange things, if ſo be ſo good a Government as we have, ſhall not protect ſuch innocent Men; truly, my Lord, I am as innocent as any Man in this Court, if I were to appear before the great God in Judgment this Moment.

L. C. J. Jones. Look you, Mr. Corniſh, I would with all my Heart allow you all the Liberty imaginable, to ſpeak pertinently to your Defence, but to oppoſe Confidence, and very great Aſſurance, upon your being in the Preſence of Almighty God, againſt expreſs Teſtimony, is the weakeſt Defence that can be; if you have any Witneſſes, if you have any thing to urge againſt the Teſtimony of any of theſe Perſons, beſides the improbability of it, which you have often mentioned over and over again; you ſhall be heard with all Patience, if you have Witneſſes that you will call, we will hear them likewiſe.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord I think his Treaſon being confeſſed, and not being pardoned———

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Is that all you will ſay, Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Corniſh. I hope you will bear a little with me, I am highly concerned.

L. C. J. Jones. You are ſo.

Mr.

Mr. Corniſh. I have had no help, and it is well known, I am not skilful in the Law. I don't underſtand what to ſay, nor how to plead my Cauſe, having no help, nor no aſſiſtance allowed me. My Lord, it is a moſt improbable thing that I ſhould be at this place, where this horrible Wickedneſs was, and that it ſhould lie all this time never mention'd: I have been my Lord, ſeveral times in Priſon this Year, and I think my Vertue will be ſo much the greater, to be again and again purged, as I have been; that which hath pleaſed me very much, hath been my innocency: Would any Man in my Circumſtances have ſtayed and continued in this Nation, if he had not known himſelf perfectly innocent? Others have gone away, and I could as freely have gone, after I have been taken up four times.

L. C. J. Jones. I doubt there are a great many are not gone, Mr. Rumſey hath told you plainly, it was Compaſſion to you, though Injury to himſelf, that he did not accuſe you ſooner.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Here is Gaunt ſtayed here till within this Week or Fortnight, and never ſtir'd.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Corniſh, my Lord hath put you in the right way for your Defence, if you can invalidate the Teſtimony, or call any Witneſſes, do it, but to talk at this rate, you may do it this Month (for ought I know) and 'twill ſignifie no more than it hath done already.

Mr. Corniſh. The improbability is ſo manifeſt.

L. C. J. Jones. Is it enough to ſay, improbability, improbability, improbability? Is that enough? Have you ſaid any more?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I have ſaid this, that this Gentleman that ſhould be ſo converſant in the Town, I in his Company, and he in mine. Is it not improbable? ——

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Look you, Mr. Corniſh, I will tell you what the Method is, to give Evidence firſt, and then apply it in ſumming up the Evidence; if you were ſumming it up, the Court hath all the reaſon in the World to hear you; if you have Evidence, the way is to give your Evidence, and apply it if you can.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Have you any Witneſſes.

Mr. Corniſh. Againſt Mr. Rumſey.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Againſt any body, Mr. Rumſey if you will.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I humbly conceive that this Witneſs, Mr. Rumſey, ought not to ſtand; if your Lordſhip ſatisfies me, I ſhall be very much obliged to your Lordſhip: He declared upon his Oath, when he ſwore againſt my Lord Ruſſel, that he had nothing elſe to ſwear againſt any Man.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. How does it appear?

Mr. Corniſh. I will produce it, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to give me time.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. But afterwards he diſcover'd a great deal more.

L. C. J. Jones. Look you, Sir, if you have any Exception againſt Mr. Rumſey's Teſtimony, we will hear you, propound a legal Exception.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I humbly conceive, he not producing his Pardon, his Evidence is not good.

L. C. J. Jones. You have had the Opinion of the Court

Mr. Corniſh. If your Lordſhip over-rule me.

L. C. J. Jones. We muſt over-rule you.

Mr. Corniſh. If that will not be granted me.

L. C. J. Jones. Then you have no more to ſay?

Mr. Corniſh. But for my innocency, for that (I know) I have enough to ſay.

L. C. J. Jones. That is in your own Breaſt, the Jury can't ſee that; will you call any Witneſſes?

Mr. Corniſh. I have ſome Witneſſes to call here, as to Mr. Goodenough, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. What is your Exception againſt Mr. Goodenough?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, it was my moſt great Unhappineſs and Misfortune, that this Goodenough was admitted into the Office of Under-Sheriff; and my Lord, that I might fully convince your Lordſhip and this Court, all that I deſire is, ſome few Men may be call'd; beſides, I think there are a thouſand, I may ſay, that will bear me witneſs, I did oppoſe him.

L. C. J. Jones. But pray, Mr. Corniſh, is that an Exception that he does not ſwear true, becauſe you would not let him be your Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Corniſh. It looks like Malice.

L. C. J. Jones. You did admit him to be Under-Sheriff, all the World knows that.

Mr. Corniſh. But I can ſet forth that I did oppoſe him, and the reaſons why I did oppoſe him.

L. C. J. Jones. You may, if you will, give Evidence, what an Inſtrument he was to you, and how he ſerved you in your Office, when you were Sheriff: is this to the purpoſe?

Mr. Corniſh. Yes.

L. C. J. Jones. It is not at all to the purpoſe.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I was impoſed upon by my Partner.

L. C. J. Jones. You could not be impoſed upon, you had equal Power with your Partner.

Mr. Corniſh. If your Lordſhip pleaſes to conſider the Temper of that Man.

L. C. J. Jones. What Man?

Mr. Corniſh. Bethel, I mean, what an obſtinate Man he was. My Lord, I hope I can purge my ſelf greatly in theſe matters.

L. C. J. Jones. If you will, tell to what you will call them.

Mr. Corniſh. The great Averſion that I had.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will admit that, he did oppoſe him, becauſe he would have had more Money.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. You have heard the Opinion of the Court.

Mr. Juſt.——It is not material whether he came in with or without your Conſent.

Mr. Corniſh. Mr. Gosfright, will you be pleas'd to declare to my Lord, how I was impos'd upon, by ſuffering Goodenough to be Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Gosfright. My Lord, after that Bethel and Corniſh were choſen Sheriffs, they had ſome Meetings together concerning an Under-Sheriff; Mr. Bethel he named Goodenough, Mr. Corniſh he named another; they could not agree, the difference did ariſe in three or four, or more Days Debate, as I remember, and Mr. Corniſh did tell Sheriff Bethel, He was reſolved if Goodenough were Under-Sheriff he would fine, and not hold, and told him the reaſon why: He ſaid he was a Man that he would not truſt a hair of his Head with, and he had no Knowledge he believ'd of the Buſineſs, but withal, he told him, he was a Man obnoxious to the Government, and he was an ill man, and had done ill things, and he would not truſt his Eſtate and his Reputation in the hands of ſuch an Under-Sheriff: Bethel he inſiſted upon it, and he was reſolved he would have Goodenough, and Corniſh's Man ſhould not be.

Man,

L. C. J. Jones. Who was Coniſh's Man?

Mr. Gosfright. I know the Man, but forget his Name.

——— Millman.

L. C. J. Jones. Can you tell what Goodenough was to give for the Under-Sheriffwick?

Mr. Gosfright. No, indeed.

L. C. J. Jones. Was there no diſcourſe?

Mr. Gosfright. Not in my hearing.

L. C. J. Jones. Was Goodenough Under-Sheriff to Corniſh at laſt?

Mr. Gosfright. Yes Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. How did they agree?

Mr. Gosfright. I believe the animoſities were ſo great, that they were never reconciled, for Corniſh had ſo beſpatter'd Goodenough that he was ſo ill a man, that Goodenough, I believe, could never digeſt it well.

L. C. J. Jones. Did you hear any angry words, after he was admitted to be Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Gosfright. Truly, I never was at Alderman Corniſh's while he was Sheriff: But I heard that character of him.

L. C. J. Jones. And that was the reaſon you did not go to Mr. Corniſh.

Mr. Gosfright. No, I believe Goodenough never came there, but I was at neither of their Houſes.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Pray, how many Juries did you help him in?

Mr. Gosfright. Truly I was ſo little acquainted, I could not help him.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. I hear other People ſay the contrary.

Mr. Gosfright. I was but newly come into England, and could know no Man.

Mr. Corniſh. Alderman Love.

L. C. J. Jones. To what purpoſe do you call him, Sir? To the ſame?

Mr. Corniſh. It is evidently to declare how much I was impoſed upon.

L. C. J. Jones. Pſha, I will tell the Jury, I will do this for you, upon this Man's Teſtimony, that you were unwilling that Goodenough ſhould be Under-Sheriff.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, there is a great deal more in it.

L. C. J. Jones. What is there more? he never heard an angry word between you, during the time, he ſays, afterwards you admitted him to be Under-Sheriff?

Mr. Corniſh. Mr. Love, will you pleaſe to declare to the Court, what averſion I had to Mr. Goodenough being the Under-Sheriff.

Mr. Love. My Lord, I did receive a Sub-pœna laſt Night, and I wonder'd at it, I confeſs, ever ſince I was ſo happy to get out of publick Employment, having apply'd my ſelf to my private Affairs, I never came to Guild-Hall. But all I can ſay, is this, that when it was publickly talkt upon the Exchange, meeting Mr. Corniſh upon the Exchange, I did hear him inclined to have another Man (one I don't know,) to be his Under-Sheriff, and that he did not like Mr. Goodenough, but was inclin'd to another Man, but it is ſo long ago, I believe I might perſwade him, having been Sheriff above twenty years ago, to Mr. Haſtings, an honeſt Man, I got my quietus eſt, without trouble: But I muſt ſay this for the Gentleman, I did hear him complain, that he was impoſed upon to take this Man.

L. C. J. Jones. How long was this after the time?

Mr. Love. It was before they had pitched upon a man, and he was much inclined to one Mr. Milbourne or Millman, or ſome ſuch name, that is all I can ſay.

L. C. J. Jones. Do you think we ſit here to hear impertinencies; God forbid, Sir, I ſhould hinder you from giving any Evidence: but this is not at all material.

Mr. Corniſh. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to let Mr. Jekyl come, he will tell you what this man did declare, why I was againſt him.

L. C. J. Jones If you had not entertain'd Mr. Goodenough, then there might be ſomething of malice in it, but you did receive him.

Mr. Corniſh. I had private Covenants with Bethel, before I would let him come into the Office. Mr. Jekyl, pray will you declare to my Lord, and the Jury, what averſion I had againſt Mr. Goodenough's being Under ſheriff?

Mr. Jekyl. Truly, my Lord, Alderman Corniſh and I, living near together, I had occaſion to go to him, ſeveral times, about Bills of Exchange; and he told me, when he was Sheriff, how he was troubled with Bethel, becauſe he would put Goodenough upon him, for I don't intend to have him, ſays he, for I know he is obnoxious to the King and Government, and deſired me to ſpeak to Mr. Bethel about it, but I I had no acquaintance with him 'till he was Sheriff: And ſome came to me, to deſire me to ſpeak to Alderman Corniſh to receive Goodenough. Truly, ſays I, I find him ſo averſe againſt him, that it is not for me to perſuade him, to take a Servant he muſt put ſuch truſt and confidence in, for I ſaw Alderman Corniſh was ſo averſe to it, that I would not do it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray do you think, in your Conſcience, he was more obnoxious to the Government than his Partner, Sheriff Bethel, was?

Mr. Jekyl. I muſt confeſs, I have heard much of Sheriff Bethel, but I never heard that Corniſh was any diſaffected man to the Government.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But which was the moſt diſaffected man to the Government, Bethel, or Goodenough?

Mr. Jekyl. Truly, as I remember, he ſaid, he would not have him, becauſe he was obnoxious to the King and Government.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. This Gentleman was in a limb of the Plot himſelf, as great a Rioter, and as hot as any of them, this Evidence that they call: I remember you, Mr. Jekyl, I'll aſſure you.

Mr. Corniſh. If Sir William Turner be upon the Bench, I deſire him to ſpeak.

L. C. J. Jones. We will hear Sir William Turner any thing.

Mr. Corniſh. I deſire he would declare how I was uſed.

Sir William Turner. I don't remember that ever I ſaw Mr. Goodenough's face before this time, ſo I have nothing at all to ſay againſt him, nor can I ſay any thing, but what Mr. Corniſh told me, and that was, he once came to my Houſe ſome time after he was choſen Sheriff, and told me, that Mr. Bethel preſſed very much for taking Goodenough to be his Under-ſheriff, that he had no mind to accept him, and he would propoſe poſe another, and it cauſed a great difference, but it was at laſt compoſed, but how I can't tell.

L. C. J. Jones. Now, Mr. Corniſh, by my conſent, if you will, call all the Aldermen upon the Bench; whether they will, or will not, ſay the ſame thing, for my part, I will agree, that they have given Evidence (if they will be contented themſelves) to the ſame purpoſe.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I ſhall not give your Lordſhip unneceſſary trouble, but I think it is convenient to call ſome Witneſſes, to prove the manner of my Life and Converſation.

L. C. J. Jones. Your Life hath not been in the dark.

Mr. Corniſh. The Dean of Canterbury, Dr. Tillotſon, (who did not appear.)

L. C. J. Jones. Will any man atteſt your Loyalty in London?

Mr. Corniſh. The Dean of Norwich, Dr. Sharp. Is the Dean of Norwich here?

Officer. No, Sir.

Mr. Corniſh My Lord, hear is Mr. Lane, I deſire he may be asked what he knows.

Mr. Lane. Upon the Tryal of my Lord Ruſſel, according as Mr. Corniſh deſires I may be heard, it is with reſpect to Colonel Rumſey's Evidence; Colonel Rumſey ſays, in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, he did not hear the Declaration read, becauſe it was read before he came there.

Mr. North. Were you preſent at my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal?

Mr. Lane. No, Sir.

Mr. Juſtice Levins. Sir, that ſignifies nothing.

Mr. Corniſh. That is a very material thing, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. What is? it is no proof at all.

Mr. Corniſh. Not the Printed Tryal?

L. C. J. Jones. No.

Mr. Corniſh. It is by Authority.

L. C. J. Jones. Any body that was preſent may ſwear it.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I deſire I may have the Miniſter of the Pariſh, Dr. Calamy, for my conſtancy at my Pariſh Church, and receiving the Sacrament, according to the Rites of the Church of England, that I am, to all appearance, a Perſon that does as well affect the Government as any man.

L. C. J. Jones. I doubt you are all appearance.

Dr. Calamy. My knowledg of Mr. Corniſh hath been ſince I came to be Miniſter of the Pariſh, which is about two years, a little above two years; whenever he was in Town he did uſe to come to Church as conſtantly as any one, and come with his Family to Prayers, and did come to the Sacrament, and he did not only come at Eaſter, to ſave himſelf from a Preſentment, but at our monthly Communion, and ſince I have been Miniſter of the place, I have often converſed with him: All that I can ſay, is, that I never heard him ſay a diſreſpectful word of the Government.

L. C. J. Jones. I hope he took you to be a man of another Kidney.

Dr. Calamy. I marked his words, becauſe of the Character I had heard of him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what was the Character he had before thoſe two years?

Dr. Calamy. That was what was publick.

Mr. Corniſh. Joſeph Reeve, Eſq;

Mr. Reeve. My Lord, I received a Sub-pœna, from the Priſoner at the Bar, yeſterday. I have been acquainted with him about fourteen or fifteen years, and had a conſiderable trade with him, and ſometimes we had ſome converſation, and drank a glaſs of Wine together; I thought he was always very Loyal, and drank the late King's Health, and this King's Health, and all the Royal Family. I have no more to ſay.

Mr. Corniſh. Mr. John Cook.

L. C. J. Jones. What do you examine this Witneſs to?

Mr. Cook. My Lord, I have dealt with him for theſe twenty years laſt paſt, I alwavs found him a very honeſt man, and a juſt man, and very upright in his dealing, I always reckon'd him a very honeſt juſt man: I have dealt with him for great ſums, and always knew him very juſt and upright.

L. C. J. Jones. Your Obſervation of him, as to the Government.

Mr. Cook. I never knew any thing to the contrary, but that he was always very Loyal.

Mr. Corniſh. Mr. John Knap.

L. C. J. Jones. Mr. Corniſh, it is not impoſſible for you to produce men enough, that ſhall ſay, they know nothing againſt you, concerning the Government, and that you have been a Loyal man, ſure thoſe you chuſe will ſay ſo, you have choſe them; and, perhaps, if it were the buſineſs of the King's Council, they could do contrary: you are not accuſed touching your general Converſation, but concerning a particular Fact.

Mr. Corniſh. It is improbable I ſhould be a Perſon ever concern'd in theſe matters, if you conſider, you find Corniſh mentioned only about being there.

L. C. J. Jones. Does not Mr. Rumſey tell you the meaning why?

Mr. Corniſh. It is very ſtrange a Man ſhould be at ſuch an Helliſh Meeting, and I ſee him over and over ſo many times, and never ſpeak of it again.

L. C J. Jones. Mr. Corniſh, Do not you know that Goodenough could not be produced, till the Rebellion in the Weſt?

Mr Corniſh. Is it probable that I ſhould entertain any Treaſonable Diſcourſe with Mr. Goodenough, when I had ſo much oppoſed him in coming in to the Office?

L. C. J. Jones But you let him in.

Mr. Corniſh. It is known to hundreds in this Town, that I was impoſed upon by an unreaſonable Man, my Innocency is as great as any Man's, and my Virtue ſhould be conſidered, when I have been under theſe impoſitions; I have been Loyal and Dutiful to my Prince, and Faithful to the Government in all reſpects; I have oppoſed all manner of Heats, as much as any Man whatſoever; I can bring hundreds to ſhew, that where I heard Heats I allay'd them, and it is ſtrange I ſhould be ſuch a Man as I am repreſented here.

L. C. J. Jones. Have you done, Sir?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I have thus much further to ſay, that I do think there is no probability that I could be at this Meeting; though a Man ſhould have a care how he takes Gods Name in vain, I have ſaid it, and I do in the preſence of the Great God of Heaven declare it, I was never at the Debate about theſe Affairs; I take the Great God to Witneſs, I would not do it for a whole World, if I were not innocent. My Lord, it is moſt improbable what Mr. Rumſey ſays.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Jones. It is a probable thing that Rumſey ſhould forſwear himſelf, it is a probable thing that Goodenough ſhould forſwear himſelf, who have taken the Great God to witneſs to the truth of what they ſwear againſt you, but it is improbable that Mr. Corniſh ſhould not ſpeak the truth.

Mr. Corniſh. I will call ſome other Friends, if your Lordſhip pleaſe, to prove my Loyalty.

Mr. Knap. I ever found him a fair, good Pay-maſter.

Mr. Attor. Gen. He calls you for his Loyalty. Did you never hear him ſpeak any thing againſt the Government?

Mr. Knap. I have not been in his Company but now and then.

Mr. Corniſh. Did you ever know me ſpeak any thing againſt the Government?

Mr. Knap. No Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. I marvel that you, who have been an Alderman a great while, don't call ſome of the Aldermen; you have call'd Sir William Turner, a very worthy Alderman, I wonder you don't call ſome others of your Brethren, that are known Perſons.

Mr. Corniſh. Mr. Carleton.

Mr. Carleton. I have been acquainted with my Couſin Corniſh ever ſince the year 61, when, being a Merchant, Trading in Cloth, I began my acquaintance with him, and afterwards, he recommended me to the Party I married, and being Relations, we had great intimacy together; I have been ſeveral times at his Houſe, he did always aſſure me of his Loyalty; I have told him what I have heard People ſay abroad, but he did aſſure me he was Loyal, and I do hope the very ſame of him.

L. C. J. Jones. But you remember you have heard that he was not a Perſon of ſuch eminent Loyalty.

Mr. Carleton. That was upon the account, my Lord, of his being in with Bethel, but he he did always aſſure me of it.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhip will conſider what temper the Man was of that I was to be with, and how obſtinate he was, and I hope I ſhall not anſwer for his Crimes.

Mr. Juſt.—Mr. Corniſh, Why did you qualifie your ſelf to ſerve with him? for you were not at firſt qualified.

Mr Corniſh. I had been Travelling up and down in the Country.

Mr. Juſt.—At that time to qualifie your ſelf to be an Officer, then you could lay aſide all your Scruples, and receive the Sacrament.

Mr. Corniſh. Joſeph Smart, Eſq;

Mr. Smart. I have known Mr. Corniſh above theſe twenty years, and dealt with him conſiderably, I never knew him but a very fair Dealer.

Mr. Corniſh. Mr. William Crouch.

Mr. Crouch. I have had acquaintance a great while with Mr. Corniſh, and have had ſeveral dealings, I found him a very honeſt Dealer, and a good Pay-maſter.

L. C. J. Jones. What know you of his Loyalty?

Mr. Crouch. For his Loyalty, I took it as the Town did, though I never knew any Diſloyalty from him.

Mr. Corniſh. Mr. James Weſt.

L. C. J. Jones. Do you think you profit your ſelf with this Teſtimony?

Mr. Corniſh. I would not offend you.

L. C. J. Jones. No, no, you don't offend, I would gladly hear you, if there were any thing pertinent to your Defence.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Corniſh, you have this happineſs, that you will be Tried by your fellow Citizens, of very good Quality and Underſtanding, I muſt needs tell you.

Mr. Corniſh. I am ſatisfied I have appeared here with all the Care and Caution that becomes an honeſt Man, I have ſpoke nothing but what I have conſider'd as I have been in Preſence of the great God, I never was at any Meeting, nor never heard any thing of this till the Tryal about my Lord Ruſſel, never heard one Word.

L. C. J. Jones. Gentlemen of the Jury, The Priſoner at the Bar, Mr. Corniſh, is indicted, that knowing that there was an Inſurrection intended to be againſt the late King, of Bleſſed Memory, he did promiſe to be aiding and aſſiſting in it, this is the ſubſtance of the Indictment, there have been two Witneſſes produced, Mr. Rumſey and Mr. Goodenough: Rumſey's Teſtimony (ſo far as I am able to remember, after ſo long a Diſcourſe, and ſo much time that hath been ſpent) was to this purpoſe; That the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Ruſſel, Ferguſon, and others, being in Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, there came at length Mr. Corniſh, and excus'd himſelf for coming late, and ſaid That he was to depart from them very ſpeedily, becauſe he was to go to attend the Buſineſs (as I take it) of the Charter, where the Preſence of an Alderman was neceſſary, and none like to be there but himſelf; That Ferguſon pull'd a Paper out of his Boſom, ſo ſays Mr. Rumſey, and upon the deſire of the Company, it was read to Mr. Corniſh, and Sheppard held the Candle; there were theſe two Points, Rumſey ſays, they had agreed on in that Paper, when the Riſing ſhould be, they would declare for Liberty of Conſcience, and for the Reſtitution of thoſe Lands, Biſhops Lands, and King's Lands, to thoſe Perſons from whom they had been taken after the King's Reſtauration: This Paper being read to Mr. Corniſh, he ſaid, He did like it very well (theſe were the very words of Rumſey) and with that poor intereſt that he had in the World, he would join in the Aſſiſtance of them, for thoſe Ends and Purpoſes that were mentioned in that Declaration. Then comes Goodenough, and he tells you, That he came to him in his Parlour, when he was Sheriff, ſaid Now there was no ſafety, no defence at all by Law, all was gone, there muſt be ſome other Courſe taken, for the Law would not ſufficiently protect them: Why? ſays Mr. Corniſh, I marvel they are ſo ſlow in the City, when they are ſo ready in the Country: Ay, but ſays Goodenough again to him, there hath been ſomething done in the City; this was after the time that the City had been put into ſeveral Diviſions. I don't ſee there is any Teſtimony from Mr. Goodenough, that Mr. Corniſh knew any thing of that, but ſays he, There is ſomething done here, the Tower is to be ſeiz'd, there is the Magazine, and that is to be ſeized upon, and then we ſhall be able to do ſomething: ſays he, I will do what good I can, or ſays he, what I can, he is not confident whether of theſe Expreſſions he did uſe, I will do what good I can or I will do what I can. Afterwards he meets Mr. Corniſh upon the Exchange, here I confeſs, it is not ſo expreſly to be applied to this Purpoſe, that it doth faſten directly upon the point in the Indictment; but ſays he, How do Affairs go? How do our Affairs go? ſays he, very well: This is the Teſtimony given againſt him. If this be true, notwithſtanding Mr. Corniſh's Proteſtations of his innocency, ſure there is nothing doth more plainly prove this Indictment, than this Teſtimony. He ſays it is improbable, very improbable that I in my Circumſtances, that I ſhould ſay ſo, it is improbable, becauſe Mr. Rumſey had Acquaintance with me for fourteen Years together, that I have dealt with him for vaſt Sums, and that I ſhould ſay it in his Preſence never but once, and that Rumſey does ſay, He never heard him ſpeak any thing to that purpoſe, but that one time, and therefore it is mighty improbable I ſhould ſay ſo. But what is the reaſon, ſays he, that this was not diſcover'd before? To this Rumſey gives a poſitive anſwer, Truly, ſays he, Mr. Corniſh, I had more Compaſſion for you, than for my ſelf, I have ſuffer'd for it, you have not ſuffer'd for my ſilence. Then Goodenough ought not to be allowed to be a competent Witneſs, becauſe when Mr. Corniſh and Bethel were choſen Sheriffs of the City, Mr. Corniſh was much againſt receiving Goodenough to be his Deputy, and Goodenough muſt ſay all this maliciouſly againſt him, becauſe he ſo much oppoſed his being Under-Sheriff to him and Bethel. He hath produced ſeveral Witneſſes to that purpoſe, and they ſay there was ſome reluctancy in him to the receiving Goodenough to be his Under Sheriff, but it is plain and clear to you all, Gentlemen, and every body in the City knows that Goodenough was his Under Sheriff, and how well he ſerv'd him, and to what purpoſes I believe many of you very well know. Another improbability is, That he ſhould admit Goodenough to come into his Parlour alone, a Man that he had ſo much diſpleas'd, but if ſo be he was once againſt him, he did afterwards take him not only to be his Under Sheriff, but employ'd him to be his Attorney and then he might very well admit him into his Parlour alone, to diſcourſe of his Buſineſs as an Attorney, and this might fall in among other Diſcourſe: Gentlemen, there are ſeveral other Witneſſes produced concerning the honeſty of his Dealing, and the honeſty of his Converſation, that they have nothing at all to ſay againſt; but Gentlemen in a popular City, where he is, and hath been ſo well known, it is a very eaſie matter to bring Millions of Men to give the very ſame Teſtimony, and certainly he will bring none, having the choice of them, but ſuch as ſhall ſpeak in his Favour; but he ſpeaks in the Preſence of God, he ſpeaks from the bottom of his Heart, that he never had any ſuch diſloyal Thought entred into his Mind: Gentlemen, hath no body any Senſe of the Preſence of God but Mr. Corniſh? Hath not Rumſey call'd God to be a Witneſs to his Oath? and Goodenough hath done the like? Why is it maliciouſly againſt the Life of Mr. Corniſh? for I don't know he does, in the leaſt, object any thing againſt Rumſey, that there was ever any Diſpleaſure between them two: Why ſhould he deliver this Teſtimony if it were not the Teſtimony of his Heart? and that which he ſays himſelf, he had too long concealed out of the Compaſſion he had for him. Gentlemen, if a great many Proteſtations and Aſſeverations ſhould make a Man as innocent as confident, no Man ſhould die by the Sentence of the Law; it is an eaſie matter for any Man to take up the ſame Aſſurance and Confidence that he hath done: And for his being ſuch a Church-man, as he now pretends himſelf to be, for that is one thing by which he would argue the improbability of the thing, and he would have you believe very much of his Loyalty from it. Gentlemen, all the Evidence he hath given, is but of two Years ſtanding, and ſince the Tryal of my Lord Ruſſel; and ſuch a Man as he, and many Men that were conſcious to themſelves of their guilt, did think it very fit to purge themſelves that way, to gain themſelves a good Opinion that they were loyal to the Government: But it is not deny'd by Mr. Corniſh, that before that time he did not frequent the Church, nor receive the Sacrament.

Mr. Corniſh. Theſe ſeven Years, my Lord.

L. C. J. Jones. Who did ſay ſo? Sure no body ſaid ſo yet. I repeat the Evidence truly, all you ſaid of that was out of the Mouth of Dr. Calamy.

Mr. Corniſh. Dr. Calamy came in but lately, and his Predeceſſor Dr. Whitchcot is dead.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Sir, you were not qualified for your Office if you had not took the Sacrament.

L. C. J. Jones. You did lay aſide all your Scruples to qualifie your ſelf to be Sheriff by receiving the Sacrament, which otherwiſe you could not have been. Others that have ſpoken of your Converſation likewiſe ſay, That the report was abroad, that you were not ſo loyal and firm to the Government as you ought to have been. Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence; I have done my endeavour to repeat it faithfully, if you believe that he did Promiſe to aid or join, or agree with that Rebellion or Inſurrection, then you ought to find him guilty of this Indictment.

Mr. Corniſh. I am as innocent as any mortal Man.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after a conſiderable time return'd.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I hope I may have one word.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. No, not till your Verdict.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. No, no, Mr. Corniſh, we can't.

Mr. Corniſh. I had a Witneſs more that was very material, but I would not offend your Lordſhip: Mr. Rumſey ſaid Mr. Sheppard held the Candle.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Why did not you call him? You called a great many impertinent Witneſſes.

Mr. Corniſh. I was not come to him, I would have call'd them in order.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. Why did not you produce him then?

Mr. Corniſh. Becauſe your Lordſhip ſeemed to be angry.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. No, not at all.

Mr. Corniſh. I did forbear purely upon that account. I pray, my Lord, let him be call'd.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. Here were eight Judges and my Lord Chief Juſtice, and now here is only two: Do you think we will defer things of this Nature? It is never asked. Apply your ſelf to the Judges: It is a ſtrange thing.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. This is only to delay time.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. If he does ſo, the Jury muſt go out again.

Mr.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. After the Jury hath been out an Hour, we muſt have new Allegations.

Mr. Corniſh. I was tender of offending.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. That is a Reflection upon the Court; under favour, Mr. Corniſh, I told you my ſelf, over and over to call your Witneſſes.

Clerk. Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy Hand.

Mrs. Gaunt. My Lord, I beſeech you, hear me, you won't take advantage I hope of me.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. I declare my Opinion freely, it ought not to be done.

Recorder. I think ſhe ought to have it as well as t'other.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. You call'd never a Witneſs.

Mrs. Gaunt. No, Sir, I could not tell, I have ſome to call.

Mr Juſt. Withins. I am of that Opinion you ought to take the Verdict.

The Judges came again upon the Bench, and the Jury found Mrs. Gaunt guilty.

L. C. J. Jones. Is Rumſey come in?

Captain Richardſon. I have ſent for him, he will be here preſently.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I muſt pray your Lordſhip, to conſider my Tenderneſs in offending you, which made me omit calling Mr. Sheppard, I had him in my paper, he is in my paper.

L. C. J. Jones. Don't you begin your Preface ſomething untowardly, as though the Court would not do you all the Kindneſs poſſible, half a dozen times you were admoniſh'd to call for pertinent Witneſſes, you did call I am ſure a great many impertinent Witneſſes. Had you Mr. Sheppard's Name in your paper?

Mr. Corniſh. Yes, my Lord, but I was tender of offending; pray, my Lord, be pleaſed to remember Mr. Rumſey's Evidence.

L. C. J. Jones. Is Mr. Rumſey here? Sir, pray hold your Tongue.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would acquaint you, my Lord, I ſent a Subpœna for Mr. Sheppard, but could not find him, but I underſtand that Mr. Corniſh's Son was with him Yeſterday, and he has abſconded; this I will give an account of upon Oath: This my Lord, is a dangerous Practice after Examination, and after the Jury is withdrawn.

Mr. Corniſh. I pray do not aggravate the matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. I muſt do my Duty for the King.

Mr. Corniſh. My Son went to him, and found him at Church.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now Mr. Atterbury is gone. I deſire you ſhould have all your right, but not have Tricks put upon the King's Evidence.

Mr. Corniſh. His Evidence was, Mr. Sheppard's holding the Candle.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. For God's ſake, could you examine ſo many to your Reputation, and forget an evidence that was material; but I muſt tell you, if you will bring Mr. Sheppard to be examined, ſure it is requiſite, that the Witneſs that ſwears what you did there, ſhould be face to face with him, therefore Mr. Rumſey ſhould be here certainly.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is fit to have Atterbury here, to enquire if he did abſcond; if Mr. Corniſh's Son was with him, and he abſconded upon that account, it is very material. This is a meer Trick put upon the King's Evidence.

L. C. Baron. Mr. Corniſh, if you intend to produce Mr. Sheppard for that, to contradict Rumſey's Teſtimony, I wonder that you ſhould miſs him, without you have had ſome notice ſince.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, I was not come to him: my Lord, though I have ſuch a vile Charge, I am perfectly innocent.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Now you may ſee what we have got.

Mr. Corniſh. I beſeech you, my Lord, conſider me, it is as improbable a thing as any in the World.

L. C. J. Jones. This is running over the ſame thing twenty times. Where is Sheppard?

Mr. Corniſh. He was here within this quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Corniſh, Is this fairly done, when you ſaid he was upon the ſpot?

Mr. Att. Gen. He was Subpœna'd by you, he would not be found to be Subpœna'd by the King.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. To make the Court come down, and then to have no notice of the Perſon at all; ſure you may give the Court leave to take notice that they are not civilly dealt with.

L. C. J. Jones. Who told you he was here?

Mr. Corniſh. This Gentleman ſays, he ſaw him. Pray, my Lord, don't be offended.

L. C. J. Jones. I never ſaw ſuch a thing, the time was, you and your Partner would not have allowed it.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he comes, I will give him his Oath.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, here is Major Richardſon can bear Witneſs, I ſaid I muſt Subpœna Mr. Sheppard; I named him before Major Richardſon again and again, and ſaid, I muſt not omit him.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Sir, I tell you what; you han't ſhewed ſo little skill to Day here, but that you could maintain ſo long a Diſcourſe with Mr. Rumſey as you were allow'd to do, and ſhould not offer to call Sheppard to contradict him, you dwelt half an hour upon it.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. And relyed only upon the improbability of the thing.

Mr. Rumſey. There is another Gentleman in the Tower, the late Lord Grey, that was in Company when the Declaration was read.

Mr. Bar. Gregory. Have you been in Company at Sheppard's?

Mr. Corniſh. I have been at Sheppard's very often. Pray, my Lords, don't be offended, my Life will do you no good, I don't know but here is a Gentleman that hath been in my Company forty times over ſince that Buſineſs.

Mr. Rumſey. Pardon me, Mr. Corniſh, not above three times ſince, and then there was other Company.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is impoſſible for any, but thoſe that were Complices with you, to give ſuch Evidence, and, becauſe they were your Complices, now you won't believe them.

L. C. J. Jones. Are you Sub-pœna'd by Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Sheppard. I have a Sub-pœna from the King.

L. C. J. Jones. But were you Sub-pœna'd by Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. When?

Mr. Sheppard. Laſt Night, this Morning I was not at home.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Mr. Corniſh's Son with you Yeſterday in the Afternoon?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what Diſcourſe had you with his Son?

Mr. Sheppard. He was very preſſing and urgent with me to be here to Day, and I told him, I could not tell whether I could or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is there any Account between you and Mr Corniſh?

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. To what Sum?

Mr. Sheppard. We were always Trading.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is very true, you were Trading —— To what Value?

Mr. Sheppard. About one or two Hundred Pounds.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who is Debtor?

Mr. Sheppard. I am Debtor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, ſince when did you Contract that Debt?

Mr. Sheppard. Since when, Sir;

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay.

Mr. Sheppard. I believe it was ſome ſix or eight Months ago.

Mr. Sol. Gen. For what was it? Upon what Accompt?

Mr. Sheppard. For Cloth, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there no Money lent?

Mr. Sheppard. Mony lent me?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, Sir.

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. Is the Debt due to Mr. Corniſh?

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, the Debt is due to him.

L. C. J. Jones. Or ſome body for whom he is a Factor?

Mr. Sheppard. I am indebted to Mr. Corniſh, for whom it is I can't tell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you leave word, whither you went, when you went out Yeſterday?

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Which Sub-pœna was ſerved firſt upon you?

Mr. Sheppard. Mr. Corniſh's Yeſterday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What time was it ſerved upon you?

Mr. Sheppard. Preſently after I came out of Church in the Afternoon, Sir.

L. C. J. Jones. What have you to ſay?

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, Mr. Rumſey was pleaſed to give in his Evidence, that I had been at a Conſult or Meeting at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, where Mr. Ferguſon ſhould pluck out a Declaration out of his Boſom, and ſhould read it by the Candle, and Mr. Sheppard ſhould hold the Candle to him while he read it.

L. C. J. Jones. Do you remember Mr. Corniſh was ever at your Houſe?

Mr. Sheppard. At one of thoſe Meetings that was at my Houſe, Mr. Corniſh came into the Houſe to ſpeak a few Words with the Duke of Monmouth, or ſome other, I can't be poſitive in that, it is ſo many Years ago, and did not ſtay half a quarter of an Hour in the Houſe; I came up Stairs, and went out with him, and there was not one word read, and no Paper ſeen while he was there.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Was Mr. Corniſh in the Room with the Duke of Monmouth and thoſe others?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, Do you remember that the late Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Ruſſel, the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong were there together, and the Declaration read?

Mr. Sheppard. I remember there was a Declaration read, Ferguſon pull'd out a Declaration out of his Shoe, he pull'd off his Shoe, and pull'd it out there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember Mr. Corniſh was by, any time that Night?

Mr. Sheppard. Truly I can't ſay whether it was that Night when the Paper was read, but I do poſitively ſay, that there was no Paper read, for he was not looked upon to be of the Company: Mr. Ferguſon told me poſitively, there is the Duke of Monmouth, my Lord Grey, my Lord Ruſſel, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Col. Rumſey, my ſelf and you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did Mr. Corniſh come to ſpeak with, when he came to your Houſe?

Mr. Sheppard. Truly I don't know whether it was with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Sol. Gen How came Mr. Corniſh to know the Duke of Monmouth was there?

Mr. Sheppard. Truly my Memory will not call it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did his Coach ſtand publickly at your Door?

Mr. Sheppard. Whoſe Coach?

Mr. Sol. Gen. The late Duke of Monmouth's.

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir, they all came private, there was no Coaches at the Door as I ſaw, I let none of them in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was Mr. Corniſh but once there, when the Duke of Monmouth was there?

Mr. Sheppard. But once.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he call the Duke of Monmouth out to him?

Mr. Juſt. Street. How came you to carry him up to the Duke of Monmouth, if he were none of the Company?

Mr. Sheppard. Mr. Corniſh did go up into the Room and ſpake to the Duke of Monmouth, or ſome other Perſon, but I think the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember he was there in Company, when Col. Rumſey was there?

Mr. Sheppard. No I can't remember that.

Mr. Rumſey. My Lord, when I came to Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, Mr. Sheppard came down and fetch'd me up, and I deliver'd my Meſſage I had to the Duke of Monmouth, and to the Company, and indeed I was not a quarter of an Hour there, I believe, but by that time I had ſpoke my Words ſome body knock'd at the Door, and Mr. Sheppard went down, and immediately brought up Mr. Corniſh into the Room, without asking a Queſtion of any body; and when he was come into the Room, Mr. Corniſh ſaid, he could not come ſooner, becauſe he had buſineſs; and could not ſtay, becauſe there was a Committee for the Management of the Charter, to meet that Night, and there was a neceſſity of his being there, becauſe there was never another Alderman in Town, and there muſt be an Alderman there.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, Do you remember any thing of that?

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir, I do not remember it, I'll aſſure you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you let him in at the Door?

Mr. Sheppard. No, Sir, I had word brought me up Stairs, that Alderman Corniſh was below, and I went down, and brought him up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ask for Mr. Corniſh to come up?

Mr. Sheppard. I don't remember I did: When Mr. Corniſh was there, there was not above three Perſons.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who were they?

Mr. Sheppard. There was the Duke of Monmouth, and there was Mr. Ferguſon, and truly I can't tell whether t'other was my Lord Ruſſel or my Lord Grey.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. You acknowledge now, Sir, you did carry the Priſoner up to the Duke of Monmouth and thoſe Perſons. Did you uſe to carry all Perſons up there?

L. C. J. Jones. There was a Cabal of Rebels met together, and you go and bring up this Man to them, without any leave or licence from them, which is incredible certainly, unleſs you knew him to be one of the Company, and equally engaged with them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, you ſay, when Mr. Corniſh came up, there was not half the Company there. Had they been there, or were not they yet come?

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Look you, Sir, it is marvellous how Mr. Corniſh, if he were none of the Parties, ſhould have notice that the Duke of Monmouth was there, who came in privately at the Back-Door, and came to ſpeak with him there.

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, I have no Back-Door.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. He came in privately.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Mr. Sheppard, I think I heard you ſay, they came privately without their Coaches.

Mr. Sheppard. Yes, Sir, they had no Coaches.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. They came privately, I ſuppoſe, that no body ſhould know they were there.

Mr. Sheppard. I ſuppoſe ſo, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. Why then did you carry Mr. Corniſh up? If you were below in the Houſe, he might come about your own buſineſs; but to be carried into the Chamber where they were, looks as if it were about their buſineſs.

Mr. Corniſh. I never heard any thing of the Buſineſs, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. So far, Gentlemen, you remember he confirms what Mr. Rumſey ſays, that Gentleman denyed he was there with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Corniſh. Pray Mr. Attorny don't ſtrain, I have dealings with Mr. Sheppard, and have often been there, but never at any Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. He ſays, you ſpake with the Duke of Monmouth.

Mr. Corniſh. I never ſaw the Declaration, he declares it.

L. C. J. Jones. Had you any dealings upon account with the Duke of Monmouth?

Mr. Corniſh. Never for a Farthing.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. What buſineſs had you with him then?

Mr. Corniſh. I don't know but I might enquire for him in other places.

L. C. J. Jones. Your own Witneſs carried you up.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, if he did, I did not ſtay, he ſays Mr. Sheppard held the Candle.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Corniſh, he confirms great part of what Mr. Rumſey ſays.

Mr. Corniſh. Not one Tittle, for he declares I was not of the Company.

L. C. J. Jones. He ſays no ſuch thing.

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, to my Knowledge, I can ſafely ſay, he knows nothing of it.

L. C. J. Jones. And yet you could bring him up among them.

Mr. Sheppard. My Lord, I declare I never ſpake any thing to him in my Life about the Buſineſs, nor never in any Company.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. It is plain, Mr. Rumſey ſays he was the Man that brought you up; How ſhould Mr. Rumſey know that?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, I will ask you this Queſtion; Had you order from that Company not to bring up any Perſon? Do you remember you ſwore ſo at a former Tryal?

Mr. Sheppard. I remember when I was there, they deſired I would let none of my Servants up, and that I would go down and fetch up what they wanted, and I fetch'd up Wine and what they wanted.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sheppard, Why were none of your Servants to come up?

Mr. Sheppard. Becauſe they were in private, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were Strangers to come up therefore?

Mr. Sheppard. It is ſo long ago, I cannot remember.

Mr. Juſt. Levins. They came privately, without Coaches, becauſe none ſhould know they were there, and you carry Mr. Corniſh up to them.

Mr. Corniſh. I think this Witneſs is confronted.

L. C. J. Jones. Hold your Tongue Sir, he hath not done yet.

Mr. Rumſey. My Lord, as ſoon as Mr. Corniſh had made his excuſe for his not coming ſooner, and that he could not ſtay, I could not make that, and Mr. Corniſh can't ſay I would do any thing maliciouſly or ſpitefully againſt him; my Lord, as ſoon as he had done, all the Company went about him, and ſome Body did tell him, They would tell him what they had done; they told him the Declaration had been read, that Mr. Ferguſon had prepared it, and they ſaid, Look you, Mr. Corniſh, you ſhall hear it read, and with that, this Gentleman, though he denies it, did take the Candle, and held it, they did not come to the Table, but the Company ſtood round while Mr. Ferguſon pull'd it out of his Boſom.

Mr. Juſt. Withins. Mr. Sheppard, you are very forward.

Mr. Att Gen. My Lord, I would ask Mr. Sheppard a Queſtion.

Mr. Rumſey. My Lord, the Declaration was read, and Mr. Corniſh did approve of it, and did ſay, With that ſmall Intereſt, or little Intereſt, or words to that effect, that he had, he would aſſiſt.

Mr. Att.

Mr. Attor. Gen. I wonder why you did not give me notice when you came in the morning. Why did not you give notice?

Mr. Sheppard. I was here attending from Eleven a Clock, till half an hour after three.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Did you ſend in any word?

Mr. Sheppard. I could not tell who to ſend in: I was here expecting to be call'd.

Mr. Juſt. Street. You have had a favour that no Man ever had.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, there hath been a very great indulgence given to the Priſoner, and it is to ſhew you what tenderneſs a Court of Juſtice hath, and always will have, of the lives of the King's Subjects: After a full Evidence, though he had neglected his Defence, yet you were again ſent for into Court, to hear what further Evidence he had to offer to you; I cannot but obſerve, this looks like a ſubtile Contrivance on the Priſoners part; you ſee what endeavours have been made by Mr Attorney General, to have had him here a witneſs for the King, you have obſerved he hath told you he had a Subpœna for him, but he was abſent, in what Company he was abſent yeſterday, he hath told you, With Mr. Corniſh's Son; this morning he was not to be found, after he had received this Subpœna, and a Subpœna from Mr. Corniſh; he ſtays without, and gives no notice, but when you are withdrawn, can ſend intelligence to Mr. Corniſh, that he hath ſomething to ſay, that he hopes will excuſe him; now what that is, I muſt beg you a little to obſerve: Truly I am very glad for the ſatisfaction of all men, that Mr. Sheppard hath now been here, and he is ſo far from invalidating any one part of the Teſtimony, that by all the circumſtances you can collect from this Evidence that is given, it is a corroboration of it: Mr. Corniſh was accuſed of being preſent at Conſultations that have been held againſt the Life of the King, and for raiſing Rebellion at Mr. Sheppard's Houſe; his excuſing his not coming there is a ſufficient Argument to prove he was privy to their Meeting, he hath gone on further, and proved to you the reading the Declaration; now what ſays Sheppard to this Witneſs? Mr. Corniſh, by the way, I muſt obſerve to you, before, did deny his being there; he had been ſometimes in company with Ferguſon, but he did not like the man, he ſays, becauſe of his Morals; now the Witneſs he hath produced hath given you this Teſtimony, that Mr. Corniſh hath been there in that Company, that he came in ſuch a manner, that no man but muſt be ſatisfied he was privy to their Deſigns, and did know of their Meeting, for he comes when the Duke of Monmouth, and the reſt of the Conſpirators, were there met in private, with a direct charge to Mr. Sheppard, that is the Witneſs, that they ſhould be ſo private, that no one Servant ſhould come up into the Room, yet Mr. Sheppard tells you, that when Mr. Corniſh came he carried him up into the Room, without ſo much as acquainting any one of the Company that Mr. Corniſh had a deſire to come, but brings him up as if he were (and I make no doubt but you will imagine, he was) one of the Company; when he comes there, he ſays his buſineſs is with the Duke of Monmouth, the Head of that Conſpiracy, and he himſelf tells you he never had any dealings with the Duke of Monmouth in his life; What can a man imagine of that man that had no dealings with the Duke of Monmouth, to find him out in a place, where no mortal could know, and none was to know, and coming to him at that time and at that place, under thoſe circumſtances of concealment, no man almoſt but out of his own mouth muſt believe that he was privy to that Conſpiracy; therefore though this Witneſs doth ſeem to forget ſome part of the Evidence, the reading the Declaration, and holding the Candle; yet theſe are ſuch circumſtances that in themſelves do carry a proof of the Charge, and do confirm all the reſt that the Witneſs hath ſaid, and this muſt be a great ſatisfaction to you, that he was there preſent and privy to that Deſign. And ſo I leave it to your Conſideration.

Then the Jury withdrew for a ſhort time, and returning, brought Mr. Corniſh in Guilty, and found One Hundred and Forty Pounds for the King in Mr. Sheppard's Hands.

Clerk. Set Elizabeth Gaunt to the Bar, (which was done.)

Cryer. Oyez all manner of Perſons are commanded to keep ſilence, whilſt Judgment is giving, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Clerk. Elizabeth Gaunt, hold up thy Hand, thou ſtandeſt guilty of High-Treaſon, &c.

Recorder. You Elizabeth Gaunt, you have here been indicted for that great Crime of High-Treaſon, and that particular part of it, for Harbouring, and Comforting, and Aſſiſting, and Cheriſhing of Traytors, more eſpecially of one Burton; you have had your Tryal, and a very fair Tryal, and upon that, the Jury have found you Guilty: It is the Duty of my Place to pronounce the Sentence the Law hath provided for ſuch High Crimes as theſe are, and that is no other but this,

That you are to be carried back to the place from whence you came, from thence you are to be Drawn, upon a Hurdle, to the place of Execution, and there you are to be Burnt to death, and the Lord have Mercy upon your Soul.

Mrs. Gaunt. I ſay that this Woman did tell ſeveral Untruths of me.

Recorder. Is that all you have to ſay?

Mrs. Gaunt. I don't underſtand the Law.

Clerk. Bring Henry Corniſh to the Bar.

Henry Corniſh hold up thy Hand, &c.

Mr. Corniſh. My Lord, now the Law hath paſt upon me, I do humbly pray your Lordſhip, and this Honourable Bench, that you will be pleas'd to intercede for me with his Majeſty, I ſhall lead a Peaceable, Quiet, and Dutiful Life: and I hope, when you come to reflect upon what hath been ſaid to Day, that perhaps you will be of another Mind, and have more Charity for me than you had upon my Tryal, for, in the ſimplicity of my Heart, and in the preſence of God, I do declare, I am Innocent, and if your Lordſhip, and this Honourable Bench, intercede with his Majeſty, it will be an Eternal Obligation upon me, and I ſhall live Faithfully, Peaceably, and Loyally as long as I Live. I preſume to beg this, and I promiſe my ſelf, and hope it will ſtir up the Hearts of ſome Perſons, that they will not leave me deſtitute of Friends in ſuch a Caſe as this, having a Wife and ſeveral Children, it will be an Act of Charity.

Recorder.

Recorder. The Court does give you your Requeſt, and if there be any miſery brought upon your Family, it is done by your ſelf.

Clerk. William Ring, hold up thy Hand, &c.

Mr. Ring. I had no notice given me, an't pleaſe your Lordſhip.

Recorder. Where is the Executioner, is he here?

Executioner. Yes.

Recorder. Why don't you do your Duty to Mr. Corniſh?

Clerk. John Fernley, hold up thy Hand; thou ſtandeſt convicted of High Treaſon, for trayterouſly harbouring one James Burton; what canſt thou ſay for thy ſelf? &c.

Mr. Fernley. It is very hard meaſure I have had, I have nothing to ſay, but the King's Mercy.

Recorder. Is that all you have to ſay?

Mr. Fernley. I have nothing but the King's Mercy.

Recorder. Tye him up then, tye him up.

Cryer. Oyez, all manner of Perſons are commanded to keep ſilence, whilſt Judgment is giving, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Recorder. You, the ſeveral Priſoners at the Bar, you have been ſeverally indicted here of the high Crime of Treaſon; for you, Mr. Corniſh, I apply my ſelf firſt to you, your Crime is for Treaſon that was committed in his late Majeſties Life-time, being one of thoſe notorious Conſpirators that deſigned to raiſe Rebellion, and others ſome of them immediately deſigned the Life of his Majeſty that then was, and his preſent Majeſty, that was the deſign of ſome of them; and others they had another part, that was, to raiſe Rebellion, and particularly ſome of them in and about this City, and it was carried on ſome time before it was diſcover'd, may be a Year or more, under colour and pretence of Law: For ſo did they invade the Government firſt of all by packing of Juries, there was the Foundation laid whereby to bring on that buſineſs, which they had at laſt deſign'd, when they could bring it to a ripe Head. Too many Perſons in that buſineſs, I believe, were very buſie, medling with that they had not to do with; clubbing and cabaling how to bring their Deſigns about, in oppoſition to the Government, not to ſupport it in the leaſt, but to overthrow it if it were poſſible: But then, at laſt, then they muſt take another Courſe, for no longer could they carry it on by pretence of Law, as you have heard to Day: Now we muſt take other Meaſures, and take down right Blows. This is the buſineſs, Mr. Corniſh, that you have been indicted for; and, I muſt tell you, whatever Apprehenſions you have to the contrary, and may pleaſe your ſelf in, I am ſorry to ſee ſuch a ſort of pleaſure in your Countenance, as if you had had no favour ſhewed you. I believe the Court hath ſhewed you more favour, and had more patience with you than ever any Man that ſtood in your place had; for calling a Witneſs after the Jury hath been out, is a thing I never ſaw a Precedent for: And I am glad it was done, for I think it hath clear'd the thing beyond all manner of Contradiction, before it looked ſomething dark for want of Shippard, and ſo it is a Happineſs that that Man was called to convince you of many things that you proteſted ſo ſolemnly againſt, which I am ſorry to ſee in you; in this Condition that you are, to make ſuch ſolemn Proteſtations, and afterwards call a Witneſs to confront you in them. For the other two, here is Mr. Ring is very notorious for harbouring a couple of Traytors, knowing from whence they came; and if it were not for ſuch Perſons as theſe are, that do harbour them when they fly, it may be there would not be ſo many bold Attempts to commit ſuch Crimes as theſe are: To provide for them, and nouriſh them, and comfort them, after they have committed their Villanies, this does encourage them to commit their Villanies as they do, and ſo I reckon Harbourers to be worſe than Traytors themſelves, they are like Receivers to Thieves; there would not be ſo many Traytors, if there were no Harbourers: You have been convicted of theſe great Crimes; it is too late, and not fitting to ſpend time any longer, but to pronounce the ſeveral Sentences againſt you, which is this,

You muſt, every one of you, be had back to the place from whence you came, from thence you muſt be drawn to the place of Execution, and there you muſt ſeverally be hanged by the Necks, every one of you by the Neck till you are almoſt dead, and then you muſt be cut down, your Intrails muſt be taken out and burnt before your Faces, your ſeveral Heads to be cut off, and your Bodies divided into four parts, and thoſe to be diſpoſed of at the Pleaſure of the King; and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

The Tryal of Charles Bateman, Chirurgeon, December 9. 1685.

THE Seſſions of Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and Goal Delivery of Newgate, for the City of London and County of Middleſex; beginning at Juſtice-Hall in the Old-Bayly, on the 9th of December, 1685. Charles Bateman, againſt whom an Indictment of High Treaſon had been found, for conſpiring the Death of the late King, &c. was brought in the Cuſtody of the Keeper of Newgate in order to his Arraignment; and being ordered to hold up his hand, he deſired that he might firſt ſay ſomething for himſelf, in order to put off his Tryal, but was told by Mr. Recorder, he muſt plead before he could be heard; whereupon deſiring to know whether he might have the ſame advantage after his pleading as before, as to gain longer time for his Tryal, and being anſwered he might, he held up his Hand, and then the Indictment was read:

Mr. Bateman pleaded not guilty, and deſired his Tryal might be put off, ſaying, He was not prepared to make his Defence, and therefore prayed a longer time, ſaying, He had been cloſe Priſoner for the ſpace of ten Weeks, and was over and above very much indiſpoſed; and farther alledged, He had had no notice nor Pannel of the Jury; as for notice of Tryal, he was anſwered, that it was not uſual to give any in that Court, but that he ought to have expected it, and prepared for it accordingly, and as for the Pannel it was not denyed him; then he prayed a Copy of the Indictment, but was told it could not be allowed; and upon his further alledging his unpreparedneſs and no notice of Tryal, and the like, the King's Council urged that he had Opportunity enough to take notice of his Tryal, for that it was upon an Indictment of the precedent Seſſions: Then he asked what time he might have between his Arraignment and Tryal, and was anſwered, as much as would ſtand with the conveniency of the Court; and after ſeveral Hours reſpit, he a ſecond time was brought to the Bar, and then upon his humble Requeſt, Pen, Ink, and Paper was allowed him, and his Son to aſſiſt him; and then were ſworn to try the Iſſue,

Richard Aley, Eſq;	Edward Rhediſh
Richard Williams	George Lilburn
John Cannum	Daniel Fouls
Patrick Barret	Peter Floyer
John Palmer	Lawrence Cole
James Raynor	John Cooper.

And he making no Exceptions to them, then the Indictment was read.

The Jurors, &c.

'THAT Charles Bateman, late of the Pariſh of St. Dunſtan in the Weſt, in the Ward of Farringdon without, London, Chirurgeon, as a falſe Traytor, againſt the moſt illuſtrious and excellent Prince, Charles the ſecond; late King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and his natural Lord; not having the fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance; but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true due and natural Obedience, which a true and faithful Subject of our late Lord the King, towards him ſhould, and of right ought to bear, altogether withdrawing, and practiſing, and with all his Strength, intending the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom, to diſquiet, and diſturb, and War and Rebellion againſt our late Lord the King, within this Kingdom to ſtir up, move, and procure; and the Government of our late Lord the King, of this Kingdom to ſubvert, and our ſaid late Lord the King, from the Stile, Title, Honour, and Kingly Name, of the Imperial Crown of this Kingdom, to depoſe and deprive, and our ſaid late Lord the King to Death, and final Deſtruction to bring and put, the 30th Day of May, in the 37th Year of his Reign, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as afterwards, at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, falſly, maliciouſly, deviliſhly, and traytorouſly, with divers other Rebels and Traytors to the Jurors unknown, did conſpire, compaſs, imagine, and intend our ſaid late Lord the King, then his ſupream and natural Lord; not only of his Kingly State, Title, Power, and Government of his Kingdom of England, to deprive and depoſe, but alſo our ſaid late Lord the King, to kill, and to Death to bring and put, and the ancient Government of this Kingdom to change, alter, and ſubvert; and a miſerable Slaughter amongſt the Subjects of our ſaid late Lord the King, to cauſe and procure, and Inſurrection and Rebellion, againſt our ſaid late Lord the King to procure and aſſiſt, and the ſame moſt wicked Treaſons and traytorous Conſpiracies, Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid to effect, and bring to paſs: He the ſaid Charles Bateman, as a falſe Traytor, then and there, (to wit) the ſaid 30th Day of May, in the 35th Year aforeſaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as afterwards; at the Pariſh and Ward aforeſaid, falſly, unlawfully, moſt wickedly, and traytorouſly, did promiſe and undertake to the ſaid other falſe Rebels and Traytors then and there being preſent: That he the ſaid Charles Bateman would be aſſiſting and aiding, in the taking and apprehending the Perſon of our ſaid late Lord the King, and in taking and ſeizing the City of London, and the Tower of London, the Savoy, and the Royal Palace of White-Hall, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace, &c. and againſt the Form of the Statute in this Caſe made and provided, &c.

Mr.

Mr. Phipps, Council for the King opened the Nature of it, and was ſeconded by Mr. Serjeant Selby and Mr. Charles Moloy, after which, Mr. Joſias Keeling was ſworn, whoſe Evidence was, That he had been at divers Meetings and Conſults, where the Methods had been propoſed for the Purpoſes aforeſaid; and more particularly one time with Rumbold the Maltſter, ſince executed for High Treaſon, and that then, three papers were produced by Rumbold and opened, containing the Model of the Deſign, to divide the City into twenty Parts, and to raiſe five hundred Men in each Part, to be under one Chief, and nine or ten Subordinates whom he ſhould appoint, the Names of the Lanes and Streets of each Diviſion being likewiſe inſerted therein; and at that time Rumbold propoſed the buſineſs of the Rye-Houſe, ſaying, He had a Houſe very convenient to plant Men in, to ſeize the King in his return from New-Market, but that he ſomewhat boggled about the killing the Poſtillion, which had been propoſed the better to ſtop the Coach, becauſe it looked too much like an Exploit in cold Blood: He further depoſed, that he had been at divers other places where it had been diſcourſed to the ſame Effect, and that Mr. Bateman was looked upon as a Perſon fitting to manage one Diviſion in order to an Inſurrection, to ſeize the Tower, City, &c. This being the Sum of Mr. Keeling's Evidence; Mr. Bateman ſaid, that what he had ſworn, did not affect or charge any Treaſon upon him; and was anſwered by the Court that it did not, and bid the Jury take notice, that what Mr. Keeling had ſworn, was only to the Conſpiracy in general, and did not affect the Priſoner in particular.

Then Thomas Lee was ſworn, and gave Evidence, That he being made acquainted with the Deſign by Mr. Goodenough, &c. and how the City was to be divided into twenty Parts and managed; and being asked who was a fit Man to manage one part, he nominated Mr. Bateman, and thereupon was deſired to go to him, and ſpeak with him about it as from Mr. Goodenough; and when he came to diſcourſe him about that Affair, he apprehended very plainly, that he was no Stranger to it, nor boggled to give his Aſſent, and ſeem much deſirous to ſpeak with Mr. Goodenough about it: That he likewiſe went one Day to the late Duke of Monmouth's Houſe with Mr. Bateman; and Mr. Bateman, after he had had ſome Diſcourſe with one of the Duke's Servants, came to him and told him, the Duke was willing to engage in the Buſineſs, and aſſur'd him, that he had divers Horſes kept in the Country, to be in a readineſs when matters ſhould come to Extremity; and from thence he went with him to the King's Head Tavern, and there had diſcourſe to the ſame Effect; and from thence, they came to the Devil-Tavern within Temple-Bar, where Mr. Bateman propoſed the ſeizing the City, Tower, Savoy, White-Hall, and the Perſon of the late King, and promiſed not to be wanting therein. At another time, he met him at the Half-Moon-Tavern in Alderſgate-ſtreet, where diſcourſing about the Condition the Conſpirators were in, As to the intended Inſurrection, he ſaid, If he could but ſee a Cloud as big as a Man's Hand, he would not be wanting to employ his Intereſt, and that there were other Diſcourſes tending to the Inſurrection, but were broke off by the coming in of one John Allmeger, before whom Mr. Bateman would not diſcourſe, becauſe he knew not of his coming.

Mr. Lee being asked the Deſign of that Meeting, replyed it was upon the account of carrying on the Conſpiracy, and that Mr. Bateman had told him, that he intended to take a Houſe near the Tower, to place men in, in order to ſurprize it, and that he had held divers Conferences with ſome Sea Captains on that Affair; and that he had been with them at Coffee-Houſes, &c. at ſundry other times, but there to prevent diſcovery, they ſpoke of the Deſign at a great diſtance.

To this Evidence, Mr. Bateman objected, that if he had been conſcious of what was laid to his Charge he was fit for Bedlam; ſaying, He wonder'd if he had heard him ſpeak ſuch words, he had not accuſed him ſooner; but was anſwered, that Mr. Goodenough was not to be had till after the Rebellion in the Weſt; and that Lee's ſingle Teſtimony in Caſe of High Treaſon in ſo high a nature was not ſufficient.

Then Mr. Richard Goodenough was called, who being ſworn, depoſed, that being in Company with Mr. Bateman (to the beſt of his Remembrance) at the King's Head Tavern in St. Swithings-Alley near the Royal Exchange, and having ſome Diſcourſe about the intended Inſurrection, and of Wade and others that had engaged to promote it. Mr. Bateman not only approved of the Deſign, but promiſed to uſe his Intereſt in raiſing Men; and not only to be aſſiſting in the Diviſion allotted him, but in ſurpriſing the City, Savoy, &c. and in driving the Guards out of Town. To this he objected, that he was not at the King's-Head with Goodenough, to which Mr. Goodenough replyed, He had not ſworn poſitive to the place, though he verily believed that was the place; but however, as to the Diſcourſe and Words then ſpoken by Mr. Bateman, he was poſitive.

The Evidence being thus full againſt Mr. Bateman, and Liberty granted him to make what Defence he could, he deſired that Sir Robert Adams might be heard, in relation to a falſe Report the ſaid Mr. Lee had raiſed of Sir Robert and others, and Sir Robert being in Court, gave Evidence that there had been a Report abroad, ſaid to be raiſed by Mr. Lee, that he (viz.) Mr. Lee had beaten three Knights, and that Mr. Lee came to him and asked his Pardon, acknowledging the thing in it ſelf was altogether falſe.

To the ſame purpoſe Sir Simon Lewis was called, but appeared not.

Ames Child being called by Mr. Bateman, to teſtifie his Knowledge of Mr. Lee; and being asked what he could ſay againſt him, declared, That he knew nothing to the contrary, but Mr. Lee was an honeſt Man.

One Baker being called by Mr. Bateman, to teſtifie that Mr. Lee would have ſuborned him againſt him to his Prejudice, ſome Years ſince, of which he had made an Affidavit before Sir William Turner, and the ſaid Baker not then appearing in Court, he deſired Sir William Turner to give ſome account of Baker's Examination, which the ſaid Sir William had taken, but it being being about two Years ſince, Sir William declared, He could not charge his Memory with any of the Particulars contained therein.

Mr. Tompkins, Sir William Turner's Clerk, being called and asked what he could ſay concerning any Examination of Baker's taken before Sir William, that related to Lee; he ſaid, there was an Examination taken Anno 1683. wherein Mr. Lee was mentioned; but to the beſt of his Remembrance it was returned before the King and Council, and he could not give any account of the Particulars.

Then Mr. Bateman deſired to know upon what Statute he was Indicted, and was informed by the Court, That the Treaſon wherewith he ſtood charged, was Comprehended within the 25*th.* of Edward the 3*d. and the* 13*th of* Car. 2. by Overt-Act; and having little more to ſay in his own Defence, after a favourable hearing of all he had materially to offer, and his Son having been allowed by the Court to aſſiſt him, in looking over his Notes, and calling his Witneſſes, by reaſon he through ſickneſs pretended himſelf incapable. Then the Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench Sum'd up the Evidence at large, and omitted nothing that might be for the advantage of the Priſoner, whereby the matter was fairly, fully, and clearly left to the Jury; and thereupon Mr. Bateman was taken from the Bar; after which, the other Priſoners being called and Tryed, and the Jury ready to go forth to conſider of their Verdict, Mr. Batcman's Daughter came in and beſought the Court, that Baker, whom ſhe ſaid ſhe had found out, might be heard againſt Mr. Lee, but Mr. Lee being gone, and the Tryal already over, the King's Council oppoſed it, unleſs Mr. Lee could be found (which he could not be at that time) and the Court having deliver'd their Opinion that it was not convenient to examine any Witneſs after the Jury had received their Charge, it being a very ill Preſident and of dangerous Conſequence; yet ſome of the Jury deſiring it, the Court to prevent any Objections that might be made, conſented, and Baker had leave to ſpeak, whoſe Evidence was, that being in Company with Mr. Lee, ſome time in the Year 1683. and diſcourſing about divers matters, he bad him go to the Sign of the Peacock, and to the Angel and Crown, to a Chirurgeon, and a Linnen-Draper whom he named, the former of which he remembred to be the Priſoner, and to inſinuate himſelf into their Company and diſcourſe them; and when he demanded of Mr. Lee to what end he ſhould do it, or about what he ſhould diſcourſe them, he told him it might be about State Affairs, and by that means he would find a way to make him a great man; and when he excuſed his attempting to intrude into ſuch Company as was above him, he being but a Shooe-maker, Mr. Lee told him he knew that he kept Company with ſuch and ſuch men, and why could he not as well do it with thoſe he had mentioned, and of this he ſaid his Examination was taken before Sir William Turner; but this being nothing to the purpoſe, but was rather looked upon as a Deſign Mr. Lee had to make a diſcovery of the Conſpiracy, if he could have procured further Evidence to have corroborated his own, and Baker being looked upon as a broken Fellow and that he lodged near the Seſſions Houſe, and yet came not in before, though often called, the conſideration of the whole matter was left to the Jury, and an Officer being ſworn to attend them went out, and after about half an hours debating that, and what elſe was before them, gave in their Verdict, that Charles Bateman then at the Bar, was Guilty of the High Treaſon as laid in the Indictment, which Verdict was accordingly Recorded, and the Priſoner re-conveyed to Newgate; and being again brought to Juſtice-Hall, on Friday the 11*th.* of December, in order to receive Sentence; and upon holding up his hand, being asked What he could ſay for himſelf, why the Court ſhould not give Judgment againſt him according to the Law: He deſired to know whether Mr. Goodenough was fully pardoned, and was told, that as for the Out-lawry he was pardoned, and that his Pardon hath been allowed and approved of in that Court, and in the Court of King's-Bench, and for any thing elſe he was not Proſecuted: Then he ſaid his Opinion was altogether for Monarchy, and that he hoped he ſhould have an Advocate with the King, but had nothing more material to offer.

Then Mr. Recorder, after having ſpoke ſeveral things in aggravation of that great Crime, whereof, after a fair and favourable Tryal, he was Convicted; adviſed him not to flatter himſelf with hopes of Life, and thereby delay his Repentance neceſſary for his future Happineſs, pronounced the Sentence, which was, That he ſhould return to the place from whence he came, from thence be drawn to the place of Execution, there to be Hang'd by the Neck, and whilſt alive be Cut down, and his Bowels to be taken out and Burnt; his Head to be ſevered from his Body, and his Body divided into four Parts, and that his Head and Quarters be diſpoſed at the pleaſure of the King.

Upon this, he prayed a Divine might have leave to come to him, as likewiſe his Relations, which being allowed, he departed the Court, and was on Friday the 18*th* of December, Executed at Tyburn according to Sentence.

Remarks

Remarks upon the Tryals of Edward Fitzharris, Stephen Colledge, Count Coningſmark, The Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Sidney, Henry Corniſh, and Charles Bateman; As alſo on the Earl of Shaftsbury's Grand Jury, Wilmer's Homine Replegiando, And the Award of Execution againſt Sir Thomas Armſtrong: By Sir John Hawles afterwards Solicitor General.

THE ſtrange Revolution which hath of late happen'd in our Nation, naturally leads one into the Conſideration of the Cauſes of it. The Danger of ſubverting the Eſtabliſh'd Religion, and invading Property, alone could not be the Cauſes. For if it be true, that the ſame Cauſes have generally the ſame Effect: it is plain, that in the Reign of a precedent Monarch, the Subverſion of the Eſtabliſh'd Religion was as much deſign'd, or at leaſt was believ'd to be ſo, as of late; and it is not material whether what was ſuſpected was true, or not; and Property was as much invaded as of late, by impoſing Ship-Money, and other Taxes in the Nation, but more eſpecially Ship-Money: which at firſt was light and eaſy, but in progreſs of time was increas'd, according as it was found the Nation would bear it. And at length it was feared, as there was juſt reaſon ſo to do, that it would become as burdenſome, as what is now impoſed on the French Nation by the French King; and yet when the War broke out, if the Hiſtory of thoſe Times, or the Perſons who liv'd about thoſe Times, are to be believ'd, the Majority of the Nation took part with the King. There was therefore ſome other Reaſons for the Diſaffection of the Nation to the late Government, and they may be rank'd under theſe ſix Heads.

Exorbitant Fines; Cruel and illegal Proſecutions; Outrageous Damages; Seizing the Charters, Diſpenſing with the Teſt and Penal Laws; and undue Proſecutions in Criminal, but more eſpecially in Capital, Matters.

For the firſt I ſhall only obſerve, That when the Houſe of Commons in the Parliament 1680. took that Matter into conſideration, and intended to impeach ſeveral Perſons for the ſame, the higheſt Fine at that time complain'd of, was but 1000*l.* and yet in few Years they were heightned to 10000*l.* 20000*l.* 30000*l.* and 40000*l.*

For the Second, The Puniſhment of Oates, Dangerfield, and Mr. Johnſon; and the cloſe Impriſonment of Mr. Hamden, Sir Samuel Barnardiſton, and of ſeveral other Perſons, as they were againſt the Law, ſo they were without Precedent.

For the Third, Tho the Damages given to Bolſworth were the firſt outrageous Damages given, which were taken notice of, and in truth were ſuch; yet in little time Damages for matters of like kind were quickly improved to 10000*l.* 20000*l.* 40000*l.* nay 100000*l.* The truth of which a great many living Witneſſes to their ſorrow can teſtifie.

For the Fourth, The ſeizing the City and other Charters, upon the pretences they were queſtion'd, was without Example.

For the Fifth, The diſpenſing with the Teſt and Penal Laws, was as miſchievous as it was illegal; it making Perſons capable, who were incapacitated by Law of being in Places, of exerciſing Offices, for whom the Perſons who had Power to confer or beſtow the ſame, had more affection than for the Perſons who at that preſent enjoy'd them: the Conſequences of which was quickly ſeen, in turning out the preſent Poſſeſſors to make Room for others; which was the thing which, as a Scotch Biſhop ſaid of another Matter, ſet the Kiln afire.

Of theſe five Particulars ſomething hereafter may be ſaid; at preſent this Treatiſe is only to conſider, how far the Proceedings in Capital Matters of late Years have been Regular, or Irregular: And as to that I ſhall not at all conſider how far the Perſons hereafter mention'd were guilty of the Crimes of which they were accus'd, but how far the Evidence againſt them was convincing to prove them Guilty, and what Crimes the Facts prov'd againſt them in Law were.

Remarks on Fitzharris's Tryal.

THE firſt Perſon I ſhall begin withal ſhall be Fitzharris; and that it may not be wonder'd, that the Tryal and Condemnation of a Perſon who was confeſſedly an Iriſh Papiſt, ſhould be complain'd of; and one whoſe Crimes were ſuch, that if the Law declar'd had not made Capital, it had been juſt, in reſpect of the Malefactor, for the Legiſlative Power to have enacted, that he ſhould ſuffer the ſevereſt Puniſhment uſually inflicted for the higheſt Crime: yet in reſpect of the Common Good, it had been juſt and fit to have pardon'd him, if he would have confeſs'd who were his Conſpirators and Setters on; for I am apt to think, that if that Matter had been thorowly look'd into, ſome Perſons afterwards Witneſſes in the Lord Ruſſel's, Colonel Sidney's, and Mr. Hamden's Trials, had either never been produc'd, or had not been credited, credited if produc'd; nor would my Lord of Eſſex's Throat have been cut; and my Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney might have worn their Heads on their Shoulders to this Day.

All will agree, that there was a great ſtruggle between the Whigs and Tories, as they were then call'd, for hanging or ſaving that Man: Both agreed he deſerv'd to be Hang'd; the firſt thought it their advantage to ſave him if he would confeſs; the laſt thought it was fit to Hang him for fear he would confeſs. And to explain the Matter, it is fit to go a little higher: It cannot but be remembred, that before the breaking out of the Popiſh Plot, Mr. Claypole was Impriſon'd in the Tower for deſigning to Kill the King, in ſuch place and manner as Oates afterwards diſcover'd the Papiſts intended to do it. In Trinity Term 1678. he had an Habeas Corpus to the King's Bench, and was brought thither in order to be Bail'd, and produced Perſons of Worth to Bail him; but the Penalty of the Bail ſet by the Court was ſo high, and the Court ſo aggravated the Crime for which he was Committed, and the likelyhood of the Truth of it, that the Bail refus'd to ſtand, and Claypole was remanded to the Tower. But the Term after, when the Matter of which he was accus'd appear'd barefac'd to be the Deſign of other People, he was let go, for fear the Examination of it ſhould go further in proving the Popiſh Plot, than any thing at that time diſcover'd. And if it were now diſcover'd, upon whoſe and what Evidence he was committed, it would go a great way in diſcovering the Truth of many Matters as yet in the Dark (but that Deſign miſcarry'd, becauſe the Intrigue was diſcover'd before it took effect, and yet a like Deſign was ſtill carried on; and many of the Clergy of the Church of England had been prevail'd with to cry the Popiſh up as a Fanaticks Plot.) The Papiſts and the Clergy of the Church of England being in the late Times equally Sufferers, and oppreſt by the Fanaticks, they naturally grew to have a Kindneſs for each other, and both join'd in hating the Fanaticks, and therefore pretended at leaſt that they did not believe any thing of the Popiſh Plot, but that Report was given out by the Fanaticks, whilſt they themſelves were deſigning ſomething againſt the Church of England. The Papiſts having ſo great a Part of the Clergy of the Church of England, ready to believe any thing of a Fanatick Plot, which they ſhould forge, and obſerving that that which gave Credit to the Popiſh Plot, was Writings concurring with Oral Teſtimony, which it did; for very little of the Truth of the Popiſh Plot depended on the Credit of Oates, Bedloe, or any other Perſon, moſt of the Facts of that Deſign, when diſcover'd, proving themſelves: To inſtance in one, Oates diſcover'd Coleman had Intelligence with Le Chaiſe of a Deſign on England, and that Coleman had Papers teſtifying as much; when thoſe Papers were ſeiz'd, and own'd by Coleman, and the purport of them was what Oates ſaid they were, it was not material, whether Oates was a Man of Truth or not, the Papers, without Oates his further Evidence, ſufficiently prov'd the Deſign. I ſay, the Papiſts, having obſerv'd what the Evidence was which gave Credit to that Plot, reſolv'd to purſue the ſame Steps, and therefore Dangerfield was made uſe of to leave Papers in Colonel Manſel's Lodging, who was an Acquaintance of my Lord Shaftsbury's, importing a Plot; but that was ſo fooliſhly carried on, and the then Attorney General, who had the Examination of that Matter, not being qualify'd with the Aſſurance his Succeſſor had, to carry on a thing that had neither Senſe nor Honeſty in it, made ſuch a ſcurvy Report of the matter to the King and Council, that they were enforc'd to vote Manſel Innocent, Dangerfield Guilty, and that it was a Deſign of the Papiſts to lay a Plot to the Diſſenters Charge, and a further proof of the Popiſh Plot. But that Attorney General being remov'd to a place of more Honour, tho' of leſs Profit, and another put in his place, the Papiſts reſolv'd to carry on the ſame Deſign, and no Perſon a fitter Inſtrument than Fitzharris, in reſpect of his Religion, and his Acquaintance; but before his Deſign came to Perfection, it was diſcover'd.

He was firſt impriſon'd in Newgate, where ſome Perſons (amongſt whom Mr. Corniſh, as I remember, then Sheriff, was believed to be one, and it was not the leaſt of his Crime, that he endeavour'd to look into that Arcanum) went to Examine him as to the particulars of that Deſign; which was quickly taken notice of, and the Priſoner, in breach of the Habeas Corpus Act, remov'd from thence to the Tower, where he was kept cloſe Priſoner.

The Parliament at Oxford meeting ſoon after Fitzharris his Apprehenſion, and the Houſe of Commons being inform'd of as much of his Deſign as was then diſcovered, they thought themſelves highly concern'd to examine him; but how to do it they knew not; only they reſolv'd (upon a Report which one of their Members made them of one Hubert, who confeſſed himſelf Guilty of Firing the City of London, upon which it was reſolv'd to examine him in the Houſe of Commons the next Morning, but before the Houſe ſat Hubert was Hang'd) that Fitzharris ſhould not be Hang'd without their Knowledge and Conſent; and to effect it, they remember'd a Deſign to try the five Popiſh Lords in the Tower upon Indictments, whereupon if they ſhould be acquitted, it was thought that thoſe Acquittals might be pleadable to Impeachments: to prevent which, the Houſe had exhibited general Impeachments of High Treaſon againſt them in the Houſe of Lords; which had ſuch Succeſs, that the Lords were never, and the Judges gave their Opinion that they could not be, Tried on the Indictments, as long as the Impeachments were in being; for which Reaſon, the Houſe of Commons exhibited a general Impeachment of High Treaſon in the Houſe of Lords againſt Fitzharris, which was receiv'd; after which the Houſe of Lords made an Order, that Fitzharris might or ſhould be try'd in the King's Bench for the ſame Treaſon; ſuddenly after which, that Parliament was diſſolv'd. Whether Fitzharris his Buſineſs was the break-neck of that Parliament, I know not, but it was ſhrewdly ſuſpected it was.

There was at that time a Chief Juſtice in the King's Bench, who was himſelf under an Impeachment of High-Treaſon, and had not for that reaſon ſat in Court for ſome Terms preceeding: and the Tryal of Fitzharris being generally look'd upon to be as Illegal as it was Odious, it was thought convenient to carry it on by a Perſon of better Credit; whereupon one who had been a puiſny Judge of that Court, and had behaved himſelf very plauſibly, and had gained Credit by being turn'd out, was thought to be the firteſt Perſon to undertake it: and accordingly the then preſent Chief Juſtice was remov'd, and the other was preferred to his place.

It being reſolv'd that Fitzharris ſhould be try'd, the buſineſs was how to get Witneſſes to give Evidence to a Jury, and how to get Juries to find the Bill, and to convict the Priſoner, which were difficult Preliminaries.

A Perſon who had been one of the Houſe of Commons which had exhibited the Impeachment, was a principal Witneſs: but if he ſhould give Evidence on the Indictment, he knew not how far he might be hereafter queſtionable and puniſhable for it, when a Parliament ſhould ſit again: but at laſt that Perſon was prevail'd upon to give Evidence, but by what means is beſt known to himſelf. And as for the Juries, Grand and Petty, they were ſatisfy'd with the Direction of the Court, that they not only might, but ought to find the Bill, and Verdict according to their Evidence. And I think the Court was ſo far in the Right.

That matter being adjuſted, a Bill of High-Treaſon was found againſt the Priſoner, whereupon he was preſently arraigned; and after much Conteſt and Declaration of the Court, that they could hear nothing till he had pleaded in chief, (which if he had done, the Plea he afterwards pleaded, which was to the Juriſdiction of the Court, had come too late) he had leave given him to plead the ſpecial matter of the Impeachment, and accordingly Council were aſſign'd him to draw up and argue his Plea put in to the Juriſdiction of the Court; which was, That he was impeached in a Superior Court for the ſame Treaſon.

Great endeavours were uſed to have the Plea over-rul'd, without ſo much as hearing the Priſoner's Council for the maintaining it; the pretences were, that the Priſoner on his Plea ought to have produced the Record of his Impeachment, and that the Plea of the Impeachment for High Treaſon in general was naught, without ſpecifying what the High Treaſon was for which he was impeach'd; for an Impeachment or an Indictment of High Treaſon in general was naught; that the King had power to proceed on an Impeachment or Indictment for the ſame thing at his Election: That the Allegation, that Fitzharris was impeach'd, which Impeachment ſtood in full force, not having mention'd an Impeachment before, was naught. But afterwards the Attorney General demurred, and the Priſoner join'd in the Demurrer. And then a Day was given to argue the Plea till Saturday the 7th of May, at which time the Attorney added to the Exceptions he took to the Plea, whether a Suit in a Superiour Court can take away the Juriſdiction of another inferiour Court, who had an Original Juriſdiction of the Cauſe, of the Perſon, and of the Fact, at the time of the Fact committed?

To maintain the Plea, the Council for the Priſoner alledged, that an Impeachment differ'd from an Indictment; the firſt was at the Suit of the Commons of England, and was like an Appeal, or rather an Appeal reſembl'd an Impeachment; that the proceedings were different in the Tryals: in the firſt, the Tryal is by the Houſe of Lords; in the laſt, of a Commoner, by a Jury of Commons: In the laſt, but little time was allowed for giving or conſidering of the Evidence; in the firſt a much longer time: That this matter was never practiſed before; that the King may pardon a Criminal proſecuted by an Indictment, but not by an Impeachment, no more than if proſecuted by an Appeal: If he ſhould be acquitted on the Indictment, it might be a Queſtion whether that may be pleaded in Bar to the Impeachment; and if not, the Priſoner ſhould be brought twice in jeopardy of his Life for the ſame Crime, contrary the Rule of Law.

To the Objection, that the Plea was not certain, it being pleaded as an Impeachment of High Treaſon, not ſetting forth the High-Treaſon in particular, it was anſwer'd, that an Impeachment differ'd from an Indictment: for by the Cuſtom of Parliament, which is the Law of the Land, ſuch a general Impeachment is good; but by the Law, a general Indictment of High Treaſon, without ſpecifying what, when, where, or how, is not good; and therefore the Plea of an Indictment and an Impeachment is variant.

To the Objection, that there was no Impeachment mention'd before the averment of quæ quidem impetitio, it was frivolous; for it was before mention'd that he was impeach'd, and then by a neceſſary Conſequence there was an Impeachment.

As to the Objection, that the King might, in which Court he would, proſecute for High-Treaſon, it was little to the purpoſe; for the Caſe did not come up to it, the Impeachment being the Suit of the Commons, and not of the King; and that the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall had refus'd to meddle with Matters relating to the Parliament. That though the Impeachment was general, yet it was made certain by the Averment; that it was for the ſame Crime for which the Indictment was: That the Attorney General might have taken Iſſue; that there was no ſuch Impeachment as was pleaded; or elſe he might have ſaid, that the Impeachment was not for the ſame Treaſon, for which he was Indicted; but having Demur'd, he had confeſs'd both to be true: That at Common Law, if an Appeal of Murder had been brought, the King could not proceed on the Indictment, till the Appeal was determin'd; that the Judges, whereof ſome were then in Court, had given their Opinions to the King and Council, concerning the five Popiſh Lords, that they could not be try'd upon Indictments, ſo long as general Impeachments were depending for the ſame Treaſon; and yet their Caſes and this differ'd, there the Indictments were found before the Impeachments prefer'd, and here, after the Impeachment.

In the Reply to vitiate the Plea, it was inſiſted, that it did not conclude ſi curia procedere debeat as well as vult, as was uſual for Pleas of that nature to do; that perhaps this matter, if the Priſoner had been acquitted upon the Impeachment, might have been pleaded in Bar to the Indictment, but it was not pleadable to the Juriſdiction of the Court; that in the Caſe of the five Lords the Indictments were removed into the Houſe of Lords; that Appeals in Treaſon are taken away by the firſt of Henry the 4th; that in the Plea it ought to be aver'd, what Lex & Conſuetudo Parl. are; that till Articles carried up, no Man impeach'd is oblig'd to anſwer; that in all Caſes of Appeals a Man is put twice in jeopardy of his Life, if he be try'd upon an Indictment within a Year.

To

To take a ſhort Review of what hath been recited, it was thought the King's Council run the Court upon a Rock, and it was hard for them to get off. The Court had adviſ'd them to take time to conſider what Courſe they would take; but the King's Council were haſty, as they always were when they were reſolved to carry a matter right or wrong; and having three bad Ways, they choſe the worſt.

If they had taken iſſue on the Record, or the Averment, that the Impeachment and Indictment were not for the ſame Treaſon, they might have pretended that the Journal of the Houſe of Lords was not a Record, or that the Debates in the Houſe of Commons were not good Evidence; or if they had reply'd the Order of the Houſe of Lords, for trying the Priſoner in the King's Bench, to the Plea, they might have inſiſted on the Power of the Houſe ſo to do: but having demur'd, they confeſſed the Truth of all the matter of the Plea, and wav'd the Benefit of that Order, and ſtood upon Points of Law, either conceded by the Court, or reſolv'd by the Judges before, or ſuch neceſſary Inferences from them as were impoſſible to be deny'd.

It could not be deny'd, but a general Impeachment of High Treaſon by the Cuſtom of Parliament was good; it could not be deny'd, but, by the Reſolution of the Judges in the Caſe of the Lords in the Tower, a general Impeachment of High Treaſon ſtopt proceedings upon an Indictment for the ſame matter. It did not differ the Caſe, that the Indictments in the King's Bench againſt the Lords were remov'd into the Houſe of Lords; for every one knows new Indictments might have been prefer'd againſt them for the ſame Crimes. And if that had been the Reaſon of the Judges Reſolution, why did not the Judges then in Court, all or moſt part of whom were Judges at the giving that Opinion, deny the Opinion, or the Reaſon alledg'd? which they did not. It was not a Reaſon to diſallow the Plea, becauſe particular Articles uſe to follow general Impeachments, and the impeacht are not bound to anſwer till the particular Articles were exhibited, which is true; for by the ſame Reaſon, a Defendant cannot plead an Action depending againſt him for the ſame matter in a ſuperior Court, unleſs the Plaintiff hath declar'd againſt him in the ſuperior Court, which is not true. It was not a Reaſon that all Records in inferior Courts muſt be pleaded particularly, as Indictments and the like; becauſe ſuch Records muſt be certain and particular, or elſe they are erroneous, and cannot be pleaded; but an Impeachment may be general.

Where the matter of a Plea is naught, no Form can make it good; tho' where the matter of a Plea is good, an ill Form may ſpoil it. If therefore a general Indictment or Record is naught, as in all the Caſes cited againſt the Plea, it was no ſpecial Averment to reduce it to a certainty; or any Form can make it a good Plea: but a general Impeachment is good, and therefore it may and muſt be pleaded generally; and pleading it ſpecially, would make it falſe, if there were no ſubſequent Articles, as in this Caſe there were not to aſcertain it.

It is to no purpoſe, to run thro' all the Ramble of the Counſel or Court againſt the Plea, when they all ſaid the matter of the Plea was not in queſtion, but the Form; and yet when ſo often ask'd in what of the Form it was defective? they were not able to anſwer. If it be agreed that the matter of a Plea is good but it is defective in Form, they always ſhew how it ought or might have been mended, which in this Caſe was never done: And as this Caſe was new in ſeveral particulars, ſo it is in this, that in reading all the Arguments of this Plea, no Man knows, by what was diſcours'd, what was the point in queſtion.

After the Arguments, the Chief Juſtice, in ſhew at leaſt, very favourably offers the Priſoner's Counſel Liberty to amend the Plea, if they could; which they (apprehending, as they had Reaſon, for I think none can ſhew how it might have been mended, rather a Catch than a Favour) refus'd to do; whereupon the Court took time to conſider of it, and on the 11th of May, there being a great Auditory, rather to hear how the Judges would bring themſelves off, than to know what the Law of the Plea was, the Chief Juſtice, without any Reaſons, deliver'd the Opinion of the Court, upon Conference had with other Judges, that his Brothers Jones, Raymond, and himſelf were of Opinion that the Plea was inſufficient, his Brother Dolben not reſolv'd, but doubting concerning it, and therefore awarded the Priſoner ſhould plead to the Indictment, which he did, Not Guilty; and his Tryal order'd to be the next Term.

I think it would puzzle any Perſon to ſhew, if ever a Court of Weſtminſter Hall thought a matter to be of ſuch difficulty as fit to be argu'd, that they gave their Judgments afterwards without the Reaſons: 'Tis true, that the Courts of Civil Law allow Debates amongſt the Judges to be private among themſelves, but the Proceedings at Common Law always were, and ought to be, in aperta curia. Had this Practice taken place heretofore, as it hath of late (but all ſince this Precedent) no Man could have known what the Law of England was, for the Year Books and Reports are nothing but a Relation of what is ſaid by the Council and Judges in giving Judgment, and contain the Reaſons of the Judgment, which are rarely expreſt in the Record of the Judgment; and it is as much the Duty of a Judge to give the Reaſons why he doubts, as it is of him who is ſatisfied in the Judgment. Men ſometimes will be aſham'd to offer thoſe Reaſons in Publick, which they may pretend ſatisfy them, if conceal'd; beſides, we have a Maxim in Law undeniable, and of great uſe, that any Perſon whatever may rectify or inform a Court or Judge publickly or privately, as amicus curiæ, a Friend to the Court, or a Friend to Juſtice: But can that be done, if the Standers by know not the Reaſon upon which the Court pronounce their Judgment? Had the three Judges, who were clear in their Opinion, given their Reaſons of that Opinion, perhaps ſome of the Standers by might have ſhew'd Reaſons unthought of by them, to have made them ſtagger in, if not alter that Opinion; or if Juſtice Dolben had given the Reaſon of his doubt, perhaps a Stander by might have ſhewn him a Reaſon unthought of by him, which would have made him poſitive, that the Plea was, or was not, a good Plea.

If

If a Man ſwears what is true, not knowing it to be true, tho' it be logically a Truth as it is diſtinguiſh'd, yet it is morally a Lye; and if a Judge give Judgment according to Law, not knowing it to be ſo, as if he did not know the Reaſon of it at that time, but bethought himſelf of a Reaſon for it afterwards, tho' the Judgment be legal, yet the pronouncing of it is unjuſt.

Judges ought to be bound up by the Reaſons given in publick, and not ſatisfy or make good their Judgment by after-thought-of Reaſons. How very ill did it become the Chief Juſtice Popham, a Perſon of Learning and Parts, in the attainting Sir Walter Rawleigh, of which Tryal all ſince that time have complain'd? when he gave his Opinion that the Affidavit of the Lord Cobham, taken in the Abſence of Sir Walter, might be given in Evidence againſt him, without producing the Lord Cobham face to face to Sir Walter (which was deſir'd by him, altho' the Lord Cobham was then forth coming.) When he ſum'd up the Evidence, he ſaid, Juſt then it came into his Mind, why the Accuſer ſhould not come face to face to the Priſoner, becauſe he might diſtract his Evidence, and when he ſhould ſee himſelf muſt dye, he would think it beſt that his Fellow ſhould live to commit the like Treaſon, and ſo in ſome ſort ſeek Revenge. Which beſides that it is againſt the Common Law, and Reaſon, it is againſt the expreſs Statute of E. 6. which takes care that in Treaſon the Witneſs ſhall be brought face to face of the Perſon accus'd.

Did it become a juſt Man to give his Opinion, and bethink himſelf of a Reaſon afterwards? And I am miſtaken if it will not herein appear, that many Perſons complained of, have been guilty of the ſame Weakneſs or Injuſtice, call it which you will; ſo fooliſh are the beſt Lawyers and plauſible Speakers, when they reſolve to carry a Point, whether juſt or not: However they may deceive the Ignorant, yet they talk and argue very abſurdly, to the apprehenſion of the Majority of Mankind. And they had been ſooner diſcover'd, but that the Diſcoverers were quickly ſuppreſt and cruſhed, as Scandalizers of the Juſtice of the Nation: And I think this may be juſtly called the firſt mute Judgment given in Weſtminſter-Hall.

But to return to Fitzharris's Tryal, which came on the 9th of June; and then the King's Council made uſe of their Arts in managing the Jury. And firſt, there were a great many Perſons for Jurors, to whom Mr. Attorny had no Stomach; ſome challenged for Cauſe, for that they were no Freeholders, as John Kent, Giles Shute, Nathaniel Grantham, and ſeveral others; and the Challenge allow'd to be a good Challenge by all the Court; for tho' the Chief Juſtice only ſpoke, yet all the Court aſſent to what one Judge ſays, if they do not ſhew their Diſſent. I do not take notice of this, as complaining of it, for I think it is a good Cauſe of Challenge in Treaſon; but then I cannot but wonder at the Aſſurance of the ſame King's Council, who denied it to be a good Cauſe of Challenge in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal. It is true, that was a Tryal in the City; but that matter had no Conſideration in the Judgment: for after the Lord Ruſſel's Council had been heard, all the Judges deliver'd their Opinions, That at Common Law, No Freehold was no Challenge in Treaſon; and that the 1. & 2. Phil. & Mar. had reſtor'd the Tryal in Treaſon to be what it was at Common Law: of which number of Judges, Sir Francis Pemberton and Sir Thomas Jones were two; nay, Sir Francis Pemberton ask'd Mr. Pollexfen, Whether he found any Reſolution at Common Law, that no Freehold was a Challenge in Treaſon. And that Judgment is afterwards cited in Colonel Sidney's Tryal, fol. 63. as the Opinion of all the Judges of England, That no Freehold was no Challenge to a Juror in Treaſon at Common Law; and Colonel Sidney's Tryal was in a County at large.

But if it was not a Challenge at Common Law, I would know how it came to be a Challenge in Fitzharris's Caſe? There was no intervening Act of Parliament to alter the Law between the two Tryals that I know of.

Another Art us'd, was to challenge for the King without Cauſe, where no Cauſe could be ſhewn, ſuch Jurors as they did not like.

The Priſoner was troubled at this, and appeals to the Court, whether the Attorney General was not oblig'd to ſhew his Cauſe of Challenge; but is anſwered by the Court, that he need not till all the Pannel was gone thro', or the reſt of the Jurors challeng'd, which is true; but had the Priſoner been adviſ'd to challenge the reſt of the Jury, as he would have been if he had had Council, the Attorny muſt have wav'd his Challenge, or put off the Trial. And ſince he was not allowed Council, why ſhould not the Court, according to their Duty, as they have ſaid it is, have adviſ'd him ſo to do? I am ſure in Count Coningsmark's Tryal, when Sir Francis Winnington challenged a Juror without Cauſe for the King, the Court preſently ask'd the Cauſe; and ſuch Anſwer was made by the Proſecutor's Council as was made to Fitzharris: Whereupon the Court told the Count, that the way to make them ſhew their Cauſe of Challenge, was to challenge all the reſt of the Jury; and thereupon the Challenge was waved. They were different Practices, tending to different Ends; and accordingly it ſucceeded, Fitzharris was convicted, and the Count acquitted.

Upon the Tryal the Evidence was this, Fitzharris was the 21*ſt* Day of February, 1681. with Everard, and gave him Heads by word of Mouth, to write the Pamphlet in the Indictment mentioned, to ſcandalize the King, raiſe Rebellion, alienate the Hearts of the People, and ſet them together by the Ears; the Libel was to be preſented to the French Ambaſſador's Confeſſor, and he was to preſent it to the French Ambaſſador, and it was to ſet theſe People together by the Ears, and keep them claſhing and miſtruſting one another, whilſt the French ſhould gain Flanders, and then they would make no Bones of England: For which Libel Everard was to have forty Guineas, and a monthly Penſion, which ſhould be ſome thouſands of Pounds; Everard was to be brought into the Cabal, where ſeveral Proteſtants and Parliament Men came, to give an account to the Ambaſſador how things were tranſacted. Everard asked what would be the uſe of the Libels? Fitzharris ſaid, we ſhall diſperſe them we know how; they were to be drawn in the name of the Nonconformiſts, and to be put and fathered upon them: This was the ſum of Everard's Evidence.

Mr.

Mr. Smith prov'd Fitzharris's giving Inſtructions to Everard; and Sir William Waller and others prov'd the Libel, and the Diſcourſe about gaining Flanders and England: Other Witneſſes were examin'd to prove Fitzharris's Hand. For the Priſoner, Dr. Oates ſaid, Everard told him the Libel was to be printed, and to be ſent about by the Penny-Poſt to the proteſting Lords and leading Men of the Houſe of Commons, who were to be taken up as ſoon as they had it, and ſearched, and to have it found about them. He ſaid the Court had an hand in it, and the King had given Fitzharris Money for it already, and would give him more if it had Succeſs.

Mr. Corniſh ſaid, when he came from Newgate to the King, to give him an account in what Diſpoſition he found the Priſoner to make a Diſcovery, the King ſaid he had had him often before him and his Secretaries, and could make nothing of what he did diſcover; that he had for near three Months acquainted the King he was in purſuit of a Plot, of a matter that related much to his Perſon and Government, and that in as much as he made Proteſtations of Zeal for his Service, he did countenance and give him ſome Money; that the King ſaid he came to him three Months before he appeared at the Council-Table.

Colonel Manſel ſaid, that Sir William Waller gave him an account of the buſineſs in the Preſence of Mr. Hunt, and ſeveral others, and ſaid, that when he had acquainted the King with it, the King ſaid he had done him the greateſt piece of ſervice that ever he had done him in his Life, and gave him a great many thanks: But he was no ſooner gone, but two Gentlemen told him, the King ſaid he had broken all his Meaſures, and the King would have him taken off one way or other, and ſaid that the Deſign was againſt the Proteſtant Lords, and Proteſtant Party. Mr. Hunt confirm'd the ſame thing, and added, that he ſaid the Deſign was to contrive thoſe Papers into the Hands of the People, and make them Evidences of Rebellion; and appealed to Sir William Waller who was preſent, whether what he ſaid was not true. Mr. Bethel ſaid, Everard before he had ſeen Bethel, or heard him ſpeak a word, put in an Information of Treaſon againſt him, at the Inſtigation of Bethel's mortal Enemy; which Information was ſo groundleſs, that tho' it was three Years before, yet he never heard a word of it till the Friday before.

Mrs. Wall ſaid, Fitzharris had 250 l. 200 l. or 150 l. for bringing in the Lord Howard of Eſcrick; ſhe added, that Fitzharris was looked upon to be a Roman Catholick, and upon that account it was ſaid to be dangerous to let him go near the King, that he never was admitted to the King.

The Lord Conway ſaid, that the King had declared in Council, that Fitzharris had been employed by him in ſome trifling buſineſſes, and that he had got Money of him; but added, as of his own Knowledge, that the King never ſpoke with him till after he was taken, which was the 28th of February laſt.

All the Evidence being over, it was ſum'd up by the Council, That upon all the Circumſtances of it, Fitzharris was the Contriver and Director of the Libel; that it was a treaſonable Libel, and a Jeſuitical Deſign; that the Excuſe he made, as if Everard drew him into it, or trepanned him into it, was vain, nothing of that being prov'd. That Everard could do nothing alone, and therefore Sir William Waller muſt be in the Contrivance; but that was unlikely: That the Priſoner would inſinuate that the King hir'd him to do it, becauſe the King gave him Money, but that was out of Charity; and therefore concluded, with a great many words, that an Engliſh Proteſtant Jury of twelve ſubſtantial Men, could not but find the Priſoner guilty.

The Court added, that tho' Dr. Oates ſaid, Everard ſaid it was a Deſign of the Court, and was to be put on ſome Lords, and into ſome Parliament Men's Pockets; yet Everard was there upon Oath, and teſtified no ſuch thing in the World; and for the Impeachment in the Lords Houſe, they were not to take notice of it.

After which the Jury inform'd the Court, that they heard there was a Vote in the Houſe of Commons, that the Priſoner ſhould not be try'd in any inferior Court: To which the Chief Juſtice ſaid, That that Vote could not alter the Law, and that the Judges of that Court had Conference with all the other Judges concerning that matter; and it was the Opinion of all the Judges of England, that that Court had a Juriſdiction to try that Man. After which, Juſtice Jones was of Opinion, that if he were acquitted on that Indictment, it might be pleaded in Bar to the Impeachment; and Juſtice Raymond deliver'd his Opinion to the ſame purpoſe. It is ſtrange that all the Judges ſhould be of that Opinion; yet before it was ſaid, Juſtice Dolben doubted. It is more ſtrange, that if Juſtice Dolben was not of that Opinion, he would hear it ſaid he was, and not contradict it. It is moſt ſtrange, that if the Judges of that Court were of that Opinion, they had not declar'd ſo, in the arguing or giving Judgment on the Plea; for that was the matter of it, being pleaded to the Juriſdiction of the Court, that they had not power to try the Priſoner for that Crime, ſo circumſtanced.

If the Plea had been over-rul'd as to the matter, none would have been ſo impertinent, as to go about to maintain the form of it.

Now to ſay truth in behalf of the Publick, and not on behalf of Fitzharris, the Evidence was unfairly ſummed up; for Everard never pretended Fitzharris drew him in, or was to trepan him: It is true, he ask'd Fitzharris what the deſign of the Pamphlet was, and whether he was not put upon it to trepan others? who anſwer'd, he was not. But afterwards being too nearly preſt by the Attorny General, he ſaid, Fitzharris told him the uſe of the Libels was to diſperſe them he knew how; that they were to be drawn in the Name of the Nonconformiſts, and put upon them. And Oates ſaid, Everard ſaid the Libels were to be printed, and ſent abroad by the Penny-Poſt to the proteſting Lords, and leading Men of the Houſe of Commons, and the Perſons ſeiz'd with them in their Pockets; which is all ſtrong Evidence that the Libel was deſign'd to trepan others, and that was all along the import of Fitzharris his Queſtions, tho' cunningly not anſwer'd by ſome of the Witneſſes, neſſes, and as cunningly omitted in ſumming up the Evidence.

It is true, the Chief Juſtice ſaid, Everard ſaid no ſuch thing as Oates had ſaid; but why was not Everard, who was then preſent, ask'd whether he ſaid what Oates had given in Evidence?

There cannot be ſhewn any Precedent where a Witneſs contradicts, or ſays more or leſs than a Witneſs that went before him, by the hearſay of that Witneſs; but the firſt Witneſs is ask'd, what he ſays to it? Why was not Sir William Waller, who was alſo preſent, ask'd what he ſaid to the Evidence of Mr. Manſell and Mr. Hunt? and who it was that inform'd Sir William what the King ſaid? It was no way in proof, nor pretended by Fitzharris, that any Perſon was concern'd in that matter, but Everard and Fitzharris, tho' it was ſhrewdly ſuſpected by the Houſe of Commons; and no Man that reads the Tryal, but believes there were many more concern'd, not yet diſcover'd: but the Council might have brought in any Judge of the Court by the Head and Shoulders to be a Confederate, as well as Sir William Waller, who was a Jack a-lent of their own ſetting up, in order to knock him down again.

It was not pretended by Fitzharris that the King gave him any Money to frame that, or any other Libel; there was Evidence, that he had got Money of the King for ſome little matters he was imployed in, perhaps for bringing in Libels diſperſed abroad, or diſcovering Plots.

Upon the whole Evidence, it was plain that Fitzharris was an Iriſh Papiſt; it was plain he was the only viſible Contriver of the Libel; who were behind the Curtain, is not plain, and to know them, was the deſign of the Impeachment.

It was plain it was a deviliſh Jeſuitical Deſign, as the Court and Council, in ſumming up the Evidence, agreed it to be; it was plain, that the Libel was ſuch, that if diſperſt with intention to ſtir up the King's Subjects againſt him, it had been High Treaſon within the Statute of the 13*th* of the King: but what the Intention of the contriving the Libel was, was not very certain; and therefore, conſequently what the Crime of it was, was uncertain.

To take the Evidence all the ways, as to the Deſign of the contriving of the Libel, it is capable of being interpreted; the eaſieſt Conſtruction is to ſay, he fram'd a Libel with intention to pretend to the King, that he had intercepted a Libel privately diſperſed; and to make it more likely, it ſhould be framed in the Nonconformiſts Names, to make his Report the more credible (for of Papiſts or Churchmen it could not be believed) to get more Money of the King; and that matter, by all his Queſtions to the Witneſſes, he moſt drove at; and that would at moſt be but a Cheat.

A more criminal, but leſs credible Conſtruction, is to believe he deſign'd to diſperſe them, to excite and prevail upon the diſcontented to take up Arms.

For what effect had that Pamphlet, when it was, for it was afterwards, diſperſed, upon the Minds of the People? or what effect could any Man of Senſe think it could have? for tho' it was a virulent, yet it was as fooliſh a contriv'd Libel as ever was writ; yet I own if it had been writ and diſperſed with that Deſign, it had been High Treaſon within the Statute of E. 3.

But the moſt natural Conſtruction of the worſt Deſign of it, was to trepan the Parliament Men, and make the Libels Evidences of a rebellious Conſpiracy: This Everard confeſſes Fitzharris told him was the uſe to be made of them; and Everard could not know the Deſign of them, but by what Fitzharris told him. And Oates well explains what Everard meant by the Words, in his Evidence, put the Libel on the Nonconformiſts, by what Everard told him.

But yet even that, tho' in it ſelf the higheſt Crime a Man can be guilty of, next to putting it in Execution, is but a Conſpiracy, which was mildly puniſh'd in Lane and Knox their Caſe, tho' this exceeded that; that being a deſign only againſt one Perſon, this againſt many.

Yet tho' this was of no higher Crime by the Law as now eſtabliſh'd than a Miſdemeanor, it was fit for the Legiſlative Power to have puniſh'd it in the manner it was puniſh'd, which yet the Legiſlative Power ought to reſent as an Injury, for an inferior Court's ſnatching the Exerciſe of that Power out of their Hands, which only belongs to the ſupream Authority.

That this Crime, upon Conſtruction of the Evidence taken in the beſt Senſe, is no Treaſon: tho' the Libel ſhould in all probability incite the Subject to levy War, which it was not likely to do, or in Fact it had been the cauſe of a Rebellion, yet if it was not deſigned by the Contriver to that purpoſe, it was not Treaſon by the Statute of Edward the Third, or Charles the Second; for in the laſt Statute it is deſigning to levy War, and in the Statute of Edward the Third, it is a ſtrained Conſtruction, to make deſigning to levy War Treaſon; yet none ever pretended to ſtrain the Senſe of that Statute farther than deſigning to do it.

If the ill Effects the Libel did, or might produce, made it Treaſon, then Sir Samuel Aſtrey, who read it in Court at the Tryal, and the Printer, that afterwards printed and publiſh'd it, and Sir William Waller, who read it to Mr. Hunt and others, were guilty of Treaſon; for the Libel carried no Venom or Charm with it the more, for being fram'd by Fitzharris or Everard, or for being publiſhed by either of them, than if publiſh'd by another Perſon.

The difference is, Aſtrey read it aloud, as his Duty; the Printer printed and publiſhed it for gain; Sir William Waller publiſh'd it as a Novelty; and if Fitzharris contriv'd it to put it upon the Nonconformiſts or Parliament Men, and not to ſtir up a Rebellion, tho' it tended to all the ill Conſequences mention'd in his Indictment, yet it was not Treaſon.

But it will be urged, how ſhall Fitzharris's Intention be proved? It was a Queſtion which made a mighty ſputter in arguing the Plea. How ſhall it be proved, that the Impeachment was for the ſame Treaſon for which the Indictment was? But in the Tryal of Fitzharris, that Queſtion was fully cleared; for it was proved there, that the very Libel then produced in Court, was the ſame Libel read in the Houſe of Commons, upon which the Impeachment was voted.

And to ſay Truth, nothing can be put in Iſſue, but is capable of Trial: Quo animo a thing is done in all overt Acts of a deſign, is one of the main queſtions; or to ſpeak in Law Phraſe, whether done proditorie or not, an Adverb of great uſe and ſenſe, tho heretofore ſlighted; and under which I believe a great many Perſons will be enforc'd to ſhelter themſelves from being puniſhed by the Law eſtabliſh'd.

No man will pretend, that Libel did any Man miſchief but the Contriver, nor in probability could have done, if not uſed to the purpoſe Everard ſaid to Oates. Yet other Perſons have been guilty of as illegal Acts, of worſe Conſequences in proſpect, and much worſe in effect, and it did not amount to Treaſon I dare ſay, the Allegation, that they diſturb'd the Kingdom by their Acts, and War caus'd to be mov'd againſt the King, is true of them, and they are guilty of all the Aggravations us'd in Indictments of Treaſon.

To inſtance in ſome of many, did it not make a mighty heart-burning in the City againſt the Government, and rais'd great Jealouſies between the King and People, when the Sheriffs North and Rich were impos'd on the City? Did not the taking away the City's right of Electing Sheriffs, and the ſuſpicions for what end it was done, beſides the Illegalities that followed? If what Sir Edward Herbert ſays in his late Vindication, fol. 16. be Law, as it hath an Aſpect as if it were, that Grand Juries return'd by ſuch as are Sheriffs in Fact, but not in Right, are illegal, and Convictions on their Preſentments are illegal and void, give great diſturbance, and that Opinion ſeems to be countenanc'd by my Lord Coke's 3*d Inſtit. Fol.* 32. in his Comment on the 11*th* of Henry the 4*th*, and conſequently my Lord Ruſſel's and other Attainders void? Did it not add to the heart-burning, the puniſhing thoſe Citizens as Rioters, who were at Guildhall innocently conteſting their right of Electing? Was it not an increaſe of the miſchief, the bringing the Quo Warranto againſt the City, whereby the Credit of the City was loſt, and many Orphans ſtarved, and more impoveriſhed, beyond the poſſibility of recovery? And it was yet heightned by the Judgment given in the higheſt Caſe that ever came into Weſtminſter-Hall, by two Judges only, and that without one word of Reaſon given at the pronouncing, according to the pattern of Fitzharris his Caſe, and was the ſecond mute Judgment? Did it not fright all honeſt Men from being on Criminal Juries, when Wilmer was ſo illegally proſecuted for not giving a Verdict againſt his Conſcience, by an homine replegiando and Information? And did not that make all Merchants, who had Tranſactions beyond Sea, afraid to ſend their Servants thither, for fear they might be laid by the heels till they fetch'd them back again? Did it not ſtartle the Lords and the Leading Men of the Houſe of Commons mention'd ſo often in Fitzharris his Trial, when the Earl of Eſſex, Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Sidney, Mr. Hamden, and ſeveral others were clapt up cloſe Priſoners in the Tower? Did it not deter any honeſt Man from appearing to witneſs the Truth, when Sir Patience Ward was convicted of Perjury? Did it not provoke two Great and Noble Families, when the Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney were ſo illegally and unhandſomly dealt withal, as ſhall be hereafter declar'd? Did it not provoke all the Nation, except the Clergy and Soldiery, when all the Charters of England were ſeiz'd, and not regranted, but at exceſſive Rates, to the ſtarving the Poor, who ſhould have been fed with the Mony which went to purchaſe the new Charters, and reſerving the Diſpoſition of all the places of Profit and Power, within the new Corporations, to the King, but which indeed the Confederates ſhar'd amongſt themſelves? Nay the very Election of Burgeſſes, the freeneſs of which is the great Fundamental of the Government, was monopoliz'd, and put into a few hands. Did not the unreaſonable Fines, and cruel Puniſhments inflicted, oppreſs many, terrify all, and conſequently made the Government odious to the Subject? Did not the Cruelties acted in the Weſt, enrage above a third part of the Nation? Did not the turning out many of the Soldiery and Clergy, without any reaſon; and for that purpoſe erecting Arbitrary Courts, and granting Diſpenſations to Perſons by Law diſabled, to enable them to have and enjoy the Places and Offices of ſuch as were illegally turn'd out, and of all who ſhould be in like manner turn'd out? And was it not ſeen what the Conſequences of thoſe things would be, by all who did not wink their Eyes, or who were not blinded by the Profit they made of ſuch illegal and cruel Acts? Was not the King at laſt ſenſible, that the Conſequence of what is before recited would be what afterwards happen'd? And did he not in leſs than a Months time, when too late, throw down all that Babel of Confuſion which had been ſo long a building, and did all in his Power, and would have done more if he could, to have ſet things as right as they were before the Parliament of Oxon; for from thence the Extravagances may be dated. But alas! more miſchief can be and was done by weak Brains, than the beſt Wits can retrieve; thoſe that were dead could not be brought to Life; the Reſtitution of the Cities Charters was but in ſhew a Relief. How ſhall all thoſe defend themſelves who have acted under all the illegal Sheriffs conſtituted and not elected? How ſhall thoſe defend themſelves, who have acted under Officers appointed by the new Charters, which by the Reſtitution are gone as if they never had been? How ſhall Sheriffs, Goalers, and other Officers, who have had, or now have Cuſtody of Priſoners; and having not taken the Teſt, truſt to the validity of a Diſpence, behave themſelves? Shall they continue to keep their Priſoners in Cuſtody, or let them go? If the laſt, they are ſubject to Actions of Eſcape; if the firſt, they are liable to falſe Impriſonment. Theſe and a great many more Miſchiefs, not yet ſeen, are the natural reſults of theſe illegal Actions.

I never reflect on theſe things, but I remember Tully in his Offices lays down as a Rule, that nothing is Profitable but what is Honeſt, and gives many Reaſons for it; but nothing ſo convincing, as the Examples he brings in publick and private Matters: and tho the Empire was vaſt, and he bore a great Figure in it, and was very knowing, and was well read in the Greek and Roman Hiſtories, yet he was not able to bring a 100*th* part of Examples, to prove his Poſition, as have been in this little Iſland in the ſpace of eight Years. And the Perſons, by whoſe advice theſe things were tranſacted, are the more inexcuſable, if it be true what a certain Nobleman (who bore a conſiderable Character in the two late Kings Council) once ſaid to me was true. He was complaining that the King was miſled by the Advice of his Lawyers.

I ask'd him whether the King put his Judges and Council upon doing what was done, without conſidering whether it was Legal; as the common Vogue was he did; or that his Lawyers firſt adviſ'd what to be done, was Law? He anſwer'd me, on his Honor, the King's Council at Law firſt adviſ'd the King might do by Law what he would have done, before he commanded them to do it.

Yet I agree, none of thoſe matters, tho ſo inconvenient and grievous, are Treaſon by the Statutes of E. 3. or C. 2.

For Profit in ſome Caſes, Revenge in others, the endeavoring means to eſcape Puniſhment, and a natural propenſity to Cruelty in many, were the rrue ends driven at, and not the bringing their Prince into the hatred of his Subjects, tho that was a neceſſary conſequent of all recited and of many more matters omitted: And let Fitzharris his Crime, and thoſe recited, be but examin'd, his was but a Peccadillo to the leaſt of thoſe; tho this was acted by an Iriſh Papiſt, and theſe by Engliſh Proteſtants, Sons of the Church of England as by Law eſtabliſh'd, as they call themſelves; tho I doubt, not ſincere Proteſtants, as my Lord Ruſſel ſaid; words which were matter of Laughter to thoſe who brought him to the Block.

But, tho neither Fitzharris his Crime, taken in the laſt Senſe, nor the above Crimes were High Treaſon by any Statute; and the Judges have not Power to puniſh any other Treaſons: yet in all times the Parliaments have practiſed, and it is neceſſarily incident to all Supreme Powers, in all Governments, to enact or declare extravagant Crimes to be greater than by the eſtabliſhed Law they are declared to be, not by vertue of the Clauſe in the Statute of Edward the 3*d.* whereby ſome have, by miſtake, thought that a Power was reſerved to the Parliament to declare other matters Treaſon, than what is therein expreſt: for admit that Clauſe had been omitted, there are none can doubt, but in point of Power, the Parliament could (how far in Juſtice they might, is another Queſtion) have declar'd any other matter to be Treaſon; and the words of that Clauſe are very improper Expreſſions, either to veſt or reſerve a Power in the Parliament; for the words are only prohibitory to the Judges, to adjudg any other Matters Treaſon, than thoſe expreſt in the Act, tho they were ſomewhat like thoſe expreſs'd, and therefore might be ſuppos'd Treaſons; and it is a ſort of monition to Offenders, that they ſhould not preſume to be guilty of Enormous Crimes upon preſumption that they were not Treaſons within that Act. For in the Preamble 'tis ſaid, becauſe many other like Caſes of Treaſon (which in Senſe are Caſes like Treaſon declared in that Act) may happen in time to come, which could not be thought of or declared at that preſent; therefore if any ſuch ſhould happen before any Juſtice, the Juſtice ſhould tarry, and not proceed to give Judgment of Treaſon on it, till it ſhould be judg'd in Parliament, Treaſon or Felony. How well the Judges in late days have obſerved this prohibitory Law, let the World judg; and moſt certainly the Parliament might have declar'd in Fitzharris his Caſe, as they may in thoſe other, that the Crimes were Treaſon, Felony, Miſpriſion of Treaſon, Treſpaſs or what other Crime known in the Law, and inflict what Puniſhment they thought fit; and it is no injuſtice for the Supreme Power to puniſh a Fact in a higher manner than by Law eſtabliſh'd, if the Fact in its nature is a Crime, and the Circumſtances make it much more heinous than ordinarily ſuch Crimes are. It was not injuſtice in the Parliament of the ſecond and third of Philip and Mary to enact, that Smith and others, who were ſuppos'd to be guilty as Acceſſaries to a barbarous Murder, and were equally if not more guilty than the Principal, to enact, as they did, that if they ſhould be found guilty as Acceſſaries, they ſhould not have their Clergys, which at the time of committing the Fact Acceſſaries to Murder were allow'd to have. It is true, to declare or enact a Fact, after it is committed, to be a Crime, which when committed was in it ſelf none, ſuch as tranſporting Wool beyond Sea, and the like, would be high Injuſtice.

Remarks upon Colledge's Tryal.

BUT to return whence I have digreſt, Fitzharris being Executed according to his Sentence, though there was great grumbling amongſt the Proteſtants, that thoſe who ſet him on Work were conceal'd, and never like to be diſcover'd now he was Dead; yet all was quiet, and the Conſpirators, who reſolv'd, though Fitzharris miſcarried in his Deſign, yet the Plot ſhould go on, but what it ſhould be, or where the Scene of it ſhould be laid, or who the Plotters ſhould be, they were not well reſolv'd.

Great noiſe of Warrants being iſſu'd out there was, but at laſt all center'd in an inconſiderable Fellow, one Stephen Colledge, a Joyner by Trade, who for his Honour, as a Priſoner of State, was committed to the Tower for High Treaſon. At firſt it was deſign'd to lay the Scene in London, and accordingly a Bill of Indictment of High Treaſon was exhibited to the Grand Jury (whereof Wilmer was Foreman) at the Seſſions Houſe: But the Buſineſs of Fitzharris was ſo new, and ſmelt ſo Rank, that the Bill could not be digeſted, but was ſpew'd out with an Ignoramus; for which Wilmer was afterwards forc'd to fly his Country.

Then it was reſolved the Scene ſhould be at Oxford, and accordingly the King's Council, with Iriſh Witneſſes, at the Aſſizes, poſt thither, and prevail with the Grand Jury to find the Bill; but by what Arts is not known, for he was privately ſhut up with them: and I ſhould wonder, if he, who frequently in the hearing of thoſe who underſtood better than himſelf, had Aſſurance enough to impoſe upon the Courts, ſhould ſcruple in private to impoſe any thing on an ignorant Jury.

I know not how long the Practice in that Matter of admitting Council to a Grand Jury hath been; I am ſure it is a very unjuſtifiable and unſufferable one. If the Grand Jury have a Doubt in Point of Law, they ought to have recourſe to the Court, and that publickly and not privately, and not rely upon the private Opinion of Council, eſpecially of the King's Council, who are, or at leaſt behave themſelves as if they were Parties.

It is true, it is ſaid they are upon their Oaths; and though it be not expreſt in their Oaths, that they ſhould do right between the King and Subjects, yet that is imply'd in the Oath I agree. But have they behav'd themſelves as if they were under an Oath? beſides, all Men are not capable of giving Advice to be rely'd on in ſo great a Matter as Life; but the Manner of doing it being in private, can never be juſtify'd. I know in Fitzharris's Caſe, the King's Council were cajoling the Grand Jury in private for ſome Hours: but I did not think fit to take notice of it in that Tryal, becauſe I think both the Grand and Petty Jury did very well, they acted according to the beſt of their Underſtanding, which is all that God or Man requir'd of them; they ask'd pertinent Queſtions, they were over-rul'd in ſome, not fully anſwer'd in others: not that I think either of them gave a Verdict according to Law upon the Fact, as it appear'd upon the Evidence; but that was not the Fault of the Jury, but of the King's Council, and of the Court who miſled the Jury. I thought it more proper to take noce of it in this Trial, wherein the firſt Bill was rejected by an underſtanding Jury; and all Men wonder'd how the ſecond came to be found Billa Vera; and for that reaſon one of the King's Council boaſted at Court of his Service and cunning Management in the Matter.

The Bill being found, the next Matter was to bring the Priſoner to his Tryal: and as he had more Honour than what uſually is beſtow'd on ſo mean a Man to be committed to the Tower, though in truth it was to keep him from all means of Defence; ſo to carry the Matter on, he was allow'd to have, by order of the King and Council, a Council and Sollicitor to come to him, and adviſe him for his Defence at all Events; a Favour deny'd to Fitzharris, for his Council was to adviſe to the Matter of the Plea only: but that Favour in ſhew was only to betray him, as ſhall be ſhewn. And a third Favour he had, which no Man of his Quality ever had; there were then three of the King's Council ſent from London, and all the Council that could be pick'd up upon the Spot, which were three more, and no leſs than four Judges to proſecute and try him; but that was to make ſure Work of him.

The 17*th* of Auguſt, 1681. he came to his Tryal: his Indictment, as to part, was in common Form for Treaſon, but particularly for deſigning to ſeize the King's Perſon at Oxford, mixt with Words he ſhould ſay, as, That there was no good to be expected from the King, he minded nothing but Beaſtlineſs, and that he endeavour'd to eſtabliſh Arbitrary Power and Popery. To which being requir'd to plead, he deſir'd a Copy of the Indictment, a Copy of the Jury, to know upon what Statute he was Indicted, and Council to adviſe him whether he had any thing pleadable in Bar, all which were deny'd him. Then he deſir'd he might have his Papers, which were taken from him after he was brought from the Priſon, and before he came into Court, at an Houſe over againſt the Court; for ſo it ſeems the King's Council had order'd the Matter, that the Goaler Murrel, and the Meſſenger Sawel, after they had him out of the Priſon, ſhould run him into an Houſe, and take away all his Papers, which they believ'd were the Inſtructions, as in truth they were, of the Council aſſign'd him when in the Tower, and bring the Papers to them, whereby they would not only diſable him of his Defence, but they could be better inſtructed how to proceed in a way for which he had not provided himſelf of any Defence.

Murrel and Sawel did as the King's Council directed them; much wrangle there was whether he ſhould have his Papers or not, all the Court agreed he ſhould not have them till he had pleaded Guilty or not Guilty; and afterwards he ſhould have the Uſe of ſome, and not of others, becauſe they did not appear to be written by himſelf, but by ſome Council or Sollicitor; and as they ſaid, none is allowed in Treaſon, unleſs aſſign'd by the Court. The Chief Juſtice North ſaid they were not taken away by him; but ſays Colledge, they were taken away by the Keeper under pretence of bringing them to his Lordſhip. The Court ſaid they knew not what Papers he meant, and knew nothing of it; he ſaid the Indictment mention'd ſomething of Miſdemeanor as well as Treaſon, but he knew not how to make his Exceptions without his Papers. I have thought fit to mention all theſe things, becauſe this Tryal was the inlet to all that follow'd, and gave Encouragement to ſpill nobler Blood. The Injuſtice of the Violence us'd to the Priſoner, muſt be meaſur'd from the Reaſons given for it, that the Papers were Inſtructions from Council and Sollicitors, and none in Law was allow'd in Treaſon. 'Tis true, no Council are allow'd for the Priſoner in a Tryal upon an Indictment of any Capital Matter; but in an Appeal for Capital Matters, Council are allow'd even on the Trial. The reaſon given, that the Indictment is the Suit of the King, and no Council or Witneſs is allowable in a Capital Matter againſt the King, is fooliſh, as ſhall be hereafter ſhown; and as vain is the Reaſon that the Judges are Council for the Priſoner, which they ought to be: but I doubt it will be ſuſpected, that in this Caſe and many others, they did not make the beſt of their Clients Caſe; nay generally have betray'd their poor Client, to pleaſe, as they apprehended, their better Client, the King; for ſo they ſay, they are to be Council likewiſe for the King in Indictments, that is to ſay, they are to be indifferent and upright between both, ſo certainly they are to be in Appeals; therefore that is not the Reaſon why no Council is allowed the Priſoner in the Indictment, but the true Reaſon in probability is, that the Priſoners in Indictments are generally ſo very poor that they could not be at the Charge of having Council, and ſo Non-uſage gave Colour of a Law.

The other Reaſon my Lord Coke gives for it, viz. that much of the Truth may be diſcern'd by the Priſoner's Behaviour, or Anſwers, which would be conceal'd if he ſpoke by another, is not ſatisfactory; for the ſame is to be ſaid in an Appeal. As to the publick, it is not material whether a Man is proſecuted and puniſht by an Indictment, or an Appeal; and that Appeals are leſs frequent than Indictments, is only that the firſt is more chargeable than the laſt, for though we hear not of late of any Appeals but in Murder, yet they lie in Robbery, Burglary, Felony, and in all Crimes at Common Law puniſhable by loſs of Life or Member: but though the Rule in Indictments is, That no Council is allow'd, yet it is confin'd to the Tryal; no Law, Common or Statute, nor any Uſage ſays, a Priſoner ſhall not have Council to adviſe him before or after the Tryal; and in Murder and all other Crimes, it is always admitted; and why not in Treaſon?

and

In Treaſon ſay ſome, 'tis Criminal for one to Adviſe or Sollicite for the Priſoner; and the King's Council ſaid, he had known one indicted for being a Sollicitor for one in High Treaſon; and ſays the Court, it is Criminal for one to be Sollicitor or Council in Caſes of High Treaſon, unleſs aſſign'd by the Court: and whether it be ſo or no is worth Inquiry.

Firſt, No Law Book as to this Matter makes any difference between Treaſon, and other Crimes; and Adviſing and Solliciting is ſpoken of in general Terms, which being reduc'd to Particulars, will ſhew the Abſurdity of it.

Suppoſe I obſerving the Indictment on which the Priſoner was arraign'd, was erroneous, and ſhould therefore adviſe him to move and quaſh it for that Error: for, ſay I, if you ſhould be try'd on this Indictment, and found guilty, unleſs you move in Arreſt of Judgment, you will be attainted, and then you can take no Advantage of that Error; and if you be acquitted you may be indicted again, and try'd again, becauſe the firſt Indictment was erroneous.

If this be Law, as none can deny it, is it not lawful to adviſe him? and is it not fit for the Court to quaſh the Indictment faulty, notwithſtanding all the Cant of Dilatories, Subterfuges, and defending himſelf by plain Matter of Fact? Or ſuppoſe I adviſe in Fact that I hear that ſuch a Witneſs is to come againſt him, I know he is hired to do the Job, and I will prove it on him if call'd. Or ſuppoſe I tell him, I know ſuch a Witneſs is convict of Perjury, and if he will call me, I will produce the Records of his Conviction; can any Lawyer ſay theſe things are Criminal? but if I ſhould adviſe a Priſoner to eſcape out of Priſon, ſhewing him the Way of doing it, it is criminal.

In all Caſes comforting a Traytor is Treaſon, but it is meant where you do it to keep him from Juſtice; for elſe feeding a Traytor in Priſon is Treaſon, which none will affirm. So that reducing general Words to particular Facts, clears the Sophiſtry of them; nor is it criminal to be a Sollicitor in Treaſon, for where there is no poſitive Law, as in this Caſe there is not, natural Reaſon muſt take place; and better Reaſon cannot be given than what the Priſoner in this Caſe gave: If a Man be coop'd up and not ſuffer'd to go about his Buſineſs himſelf, and no Friend muſt be employ'd to do it for him, how is it poſſible for him to make his Defence? I know it is ſaid his Innocency muſt defend him, but the Folly of that ſaying ſhall be ſhewn in another place. But ſay they, The Court ſhall aſſign him a Council and Sollicitor; but when, and for what? only for a Point of Law. May not a Priſoner want a Sollicitor for a Matter of Fact? Suppoſe he had occaſion for a Witneſs which he could not readily find, or occaſion for a Copy of Record, for want of which Mr. Corniſh ſuffer'd; was it not reaſonable for him to have a Sollicitor? And when ſhall the Court aſſign him a Sollicitor? only when the Priſoner comes upon his Tryal, and then it is too late to have any uſe of him; as Colledge was arraign'd at twelve, and try'd at two a Clock the ſame Day, and as was Mr. Corniſh's Caſe. But, ſay the King's Council, they had known one indicted for High Treaſon for being a Sollicitor in ſuch a Caſe; tho' I do not believe it, yet that Authority goes no farther to prove the Matter, than an Indictment I knew againſt a Perſon once, for ſtealing an Acre of Land; and againſt another for wickedly and deviliſhly breaking an Award, whereby two unjuſt Arbitrators directed the Priſoner to convey his Land to a certain Lord, without any Satisfaction or Recompence, prov'd thoſe Matters to be Felonies.

But tho' a Priſoner may be adviſ'd, yet that Advice muſt not be reduc'd to writing. Then ſuppoſe one Man's Memory be good, and can bear all the Advice given him, and another Man's Memory bad, and cannot do it: Is not the laſt hang'd for having a bad Memory, rather than for his Crime? But tho' it may be reduc'd to writing, yet it muſt be his own Hand writing, and not another's; how ridiculous is the Diſtinction? Suppoſe the Priſoner cannot write, then is he hang'd for his Parents Fault or Misfortune, for not educating him, or for not being able to educate him better.

Which is ſomewhat of kin to the late practice in the Weſt, where many Men were hang'd for having old Jewiſh Names, as Obadiah, or the like, with a Jeſt, that their Godfathers hang'd them. But ſuppoſe it is not lawful in general to be a Council or Sollicitor, with, or to a Priſoner committed for High Treaſon; yet the Proſecution being the King's, he may give a Privilege which the Law of Courts doth not allow, and in this Caſe it was ſo done; for, to the Confuſion of thoſe who did this Injury, and of thoſe Judges who would not do the Priſoner Right, they have printed the Orders of the King and Council, which appointed Mr. Weſt and Aaron Smith to be his Council and Sollicitor.

If it was lawful for the Priſoner to have Council, and to have Advice in writing; it was very unlawful, and as high a Miſdemeanour in the King's Council to order his Papers to be taken away, as they were capable of being guilty of, both the Priſoner and the Matters of his Defence being under the Protection of the Court.

It is not an ancient Practice the ſeizing of Papers, tho' of late us'd; it began, I believe, upon my Lord Coke, whoſe Papers were ſeiz'd and carry'd to the Secretaries Office, upon the like Pretences as of late, and when return'd, were gelt of many Bonds and other Securities, to a great many thouſand Pounds value, which never came to Light. It was afterwards practis'd upon ſome Members of Parliament, and, as I remember, voted Illegal, as undoubtedly it is: for tho' ſometimes you may meet with Papers which may be evidence againſt the Priſoner; yet it is poſſible that other Papers than the Priſoner's may be mix'd with his to make good an Accuſation; nay, which is worſe, ſome of the Papers may be withdrawn, which may be the only Matter of his Defence, and that hath been often practis'd. And I cannot but remember a Story about this Matter: When Sir William Jones died, it was ſaid, that one from Whitehall offer'd Sir William Jones his Servant a great Sum of Money but to let him ſearch his Maſter's Study, to find a Paper which would diſcover great Matters. A certain Perſon diſcourſing with a Privy-Counſellor about it, the Privy-Counſellor ſaid, It was not true; for, ſays he, if we had a mind to have done it, could we not ſend a Meſſenger on pretence of ſearching for treaſonable Papers, and bring all the Study to Whiteball, and keep what we would of them?

But tho' that hath been often practis'd, yet this was the firſt time that ever a Priſoner had the Inſtructions for his Defence taken away from him; and the manner was worſe than the thing, it being done juſt as he was coming to his Tryal, relying upon his Writing, not his Memory, for his Defence; beſides the Agony ſo great an Injury put him in, when he had ſo great a Concern upon him, as the Tryal for his Life, and he could not but know by all that Preparation, that it was more than ten to one againſt him: all which is well ſeen in his Tryal, where he ſo pathetically and ſenſibly preſs'd the Court for Juſtice in this Matter, which they excus'd with ſuch mean Anſwers, that all Mankind muſt ſee they were ſatisfy'd of the Injuſtice, and were reſolv'd not to do him Right: They knew not which way he came by the Papers, they knew not but he may be criminal who brought them him; they knew nothing of his Papers, they knew not what Papers he meant; that his Lordſhip did not take them away, and ſuch like ſtuff: as if it was not the Duty of the Court to relieve the Priſoner againſt the Oppreſſion of any ſuch Perſons but themſelves; elſe why did they not ask Murrel and Sawel who ſtood by, and were charged with taking them, for the Papers, and have ſatisfy'd themſelves of them? but in truth they knew before what they were. And Colledge was a true Prophet, when finding his Life ſo beſet, he ſaid, This was a horrid Conſpiracy to take his Life: but it would not ſtop there, for it was againſt all the Proteſtants in England. And the Rule the Court made at laſt was as unjuſt, That he ſhould have the uſe of ſome of his Papers after he had pleaded not Guilty, but not before; for ſuppoſe there was Matter in them which could not be made uſe of after ſuch Plea, as a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court, a Pardon, otherwiſe acquitted, and the like, could not be pleaded, or advantage taken of them after not Guilty pleaded; altho' there was not ſuch, yet there might have been ſuch Pleas for ought the Court knew. How unjuſt then was it for him to plead not Guilty before he ſhould have the uſe of his Papers? but there was Matter in them for quaſhing the Indictment; and he hinted ſo much to the Court, as that the Indictment contain'd Crimes of different nature, as Treaſon and Miſdemeanour, and I think it was good Cauſe to quaſh the Indictment.

In all Civil Matters, two Matters of different Natures cannot be put into one Action, as Debt and Treſpaſs; two Capital Crimes of different Natures cannot be join'd in one Indictment, as Murder and Robbery: and for the ſame, and another Reaſon, Treaſon and Miſdemeanour cannot be join'd in one Indictment; for the Jury may obſerve that one part of the Indictment, which in it ſelf is but Miſdemeanour, as that he ſaid, The King minded nothing but Beaſtlineſs, &c. tho' charg'd in the Indictment as Treaſon, was prov'd, and not the material Parts of the Indictment, as deſigning to ſeize the King's Perſon, &c. and finding ſome part of the Indictment prov'd, might find him guilty generally, which extends to every Article of the Indictment, and ſo the Jury deceiv'd, and the Priſoner in danger; or ſuppoſe he was acquitted of ſuch an Indictment, if it ought to have been quaſh'd, whether the Priſoner ſhew the Error or not, he may be try'd again upon another good Indictment for the ſame Treaſon. If therefore what he offer'd was an Error, or but like an Error in the Indictment, by the Law which favours Life, and the jeopardy on Life, the Court ought not to have try'd him on that Indictment, but have directed another Indictment to have been found. It is a vain Objection to have ſaid, That that would have been troubleſom. Is the Miſchief of that comparable to that of putting a Man twice in jeopardy of his Life for the ſame thing? but it would have been a delay. I ſay none; for there was a Grand Jury in Court, and within the two hours time the Court adjourn'd (to give the King's Council Opportunity of viewing the Priſoner's Papers which were taken from him, and to conſider of the Method of his Proſecution by them, which they did, and alter'd it from what they at firſt deſign'd it) the King's Council might have had a new Bill found; but peradventure they could not prevail with that Grand Jury to have found a new Bill; they remembred they had ill luck with the firſt Bill at London, which I believe was the true reaſon: but I'll do the Court no Injury, in ſuppoſing that to be the Cauſe of the Adjournment which was not; 'tis true, in the printed Tryal 'tis pretended they adjourn'd in order to dine; yet thoſe that knew the Adjournment was by the Direction of the King's Council, and overheard their whiſpering with the Chief Juſtice (which is both an indecent and an unjuſt thing, and is neither better nor worſe than a Plaintiff or Defendant's whiſpering a Judge while his Caſe is before him trying) and I know that the Judges had breakfaſted but a little before, and had no great ſtomach to their Dinners, and therefore believe, that that before aſſign'd, and not what was pretended, was the true Cauſe. They might better have put off their Dinner to their Supper, than their Supper to their Breakfaſt, as they did, the Tryal laſting till early next Morning.

But becauſe all Irregularities of Court and Council, in all theſe Matters, are ſhifted off and excus'd by two Sayings not underſtood generally; the firſt whereof is, That the Court is to act for the King, and the Council are for the King, and no Perſon muſt come near the Priſoner to the Prejudice of the King, as in Fitzharris's Caſe was often ſaid; a Witneſs was permitted to go on in an impertinent Story, of a Tranſaction between him and my Lord Shaftsbury, in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, of which the Priſoner complain'd that it was deſign'd to incenſe the Jury; and tho' the Chief Juſtice declar'd it was not Evidence, yet a great while afterward he went on in a like manner; nay, the Council in ſumming up the Evidence, repeated the ſame Matter, which was permitted becauſe it was for the King; and yet when the Earl of Angleſey began to ſay what the Lady Chaworth told him, he was ſnub'd, and cut ſhort; and Mr. Edward Howard was ſerv'd the ſame Sauce, becauſe it was againſt the King: It is fit therefore to know what is meant in Law by thoſe words. No body doubts what the Courts or King's Council of late Days meant; but in Law they are not ſo meant, for tho' many things are ſaid to be the King's as the Protector of his People, and more concern'd in their Welfare than any private Perſons; yet they are ſo in Preſervation, and not in Property or Intereſt. The Highways are the King's, in preſervation for the Paſſage of his Subjects; and whoever obſtructs them wrongs the King, as he is hurt when his Subjects are hurt: but in Property the Soil generally belongs to private Perſons. The King is hurt when his Subjects are oppreſt by Force, becauſe he has engag'd to defend them; and therefore the Offender is puniſh'd by the King, to deter the Offenders and others from committing the ſame Offences, which is for the benefit of the Publick. But as a Man may be oppreſt by open Force, ſo he may be oppreſt by private Inſinuations and falſe Accuſations, and the King has engag'd to defend his Subjects from ſuch; not that it is poſſible to prevent them but by Conſequence, that is, by puniſhing ſuch as ſhall be found guilty of thoſe Crimes, which heretofore were puniſh'd with the higheſt arbitrary Puniſhments we read of: The Conſequence is, That it is for the King to puniſh Offenders, to acquit the falſe accus'd, and to puniſh the falſe Accuſers; that is to ſay, In all Caſes to do right according to Law and Truth.

Surely Queen Elizabeth gave the beſt Explanation of the Words, when the Lord Burleigh, ſeeing Sir Edward Coke, the then Attorney General coming towards her, he ſaid, Madam, here is your Attorney General, Qui pro domina Regina ſequitur. Nay (ſays ſhe) I'll have the words alter'd, for it ſhould be, Qui pro Domina Veritate ſequitur.

For the King and for Truth, they are ſynonymous words; for the King againſt the Truth is a Contradiction. And the Judges and King's Council having taken an Oath to adviſe the King according to the beſt of their cunning, which is according to Law and Truth; if therefore the King's Council uſe Means, and the Court permit them ſo to do, to ſuppreſs Truth, or to diſable the Priſoner from making his Innocence appear, as in Colledge's Caſe was done; if they urge things as Evidence of the Crime whereof the Priſoner is accus'd, which by Law are not Evidence, as in this Caſe, in the Lord Ruſſel's Caſe, Col. Sidney's Caſe, Mr. Hamden's and Mr. Corniſh's Caſe, and in many more they did, and as in ſome of them ſhall be hereafter ſhewn, If they inſinuate any Fact as Evidence, which is not prov'd, as in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, That my Lord of Eſſex kill'd himſelf; if they wreſt as Evidence of the Fact, what in Senſe is not ſo, as in Colonel Sidney's Caſe, the writing his Book (nay, for any thing appear'd, it was writ before King Charles the Second came to the Crown) they are Council againſt the King, being againſt Truth as well as againſt the Priſoner.

I think no Man will deny the truth of this Propoſition. That it is as much the King's Intereſt to have an Innocent accus'd of Treaſon, acquitted, as it is to have a Nocent accus'd of Treaſon, convicted. If that be true, then let any one ſhew me a reaſon if he can; for there is no Law againſt it, why he may not have the ſame Liberty of clearing his Innocence, as the Proſecutor hath of convicting him; I mean by free and private acceſs of all Perſons to the Priſoner, as is us'd in all other capital Matters. If it be ſaid he may get ſome to corrupt the Witneſſes againſt him, or ſuborn others for him, the ſame may be ſaid in all other Matters; but in Treaſon that is not a likely matter, for generally the Priſoner never knows what he is accus'd of, and conſequently cannot know his Accuſer, nor how to provide a Counter-Evidence, till he comes to be arraign'd, and then it is too late: for generally he is preſently tried after his Arraignment, as was the Caſe of Colledge, and my Lord Ruſſel, and Mr. Corniſh; and Perſons committed for Treaſon are ſo much the leſs able to corrupt or ſuborn Witneſſes than any other Criminals, that they generally, according to the late Practice, have no Accuſer brought face to face to them on their Commitment as all other Criminals have, who always are committed upon an Accuſation made upon Oath in their hearing, and their Defence heard before their Mittimus made; and whatever the Pretence may be, yet in Experience, it is found that more Perjuries are committed in Proſecutions for Treaſon by the Accuſers, than by the Witneſſes for the Priſoner.

One reaſon is, A Witneſs in Treaſon is more difficultly convicted than in any other Crime: for Treaſon is an Ignis fatuus, 'tis here and there, as Colledge was firſt in London, then in Oxford; it is not confin'd to place or time, as all other Crimes are; in all other Crimes, as Murder, Robbery, or the like, it muſt be prov'd to be within the County where laid; it muſt be of the Perſon named in the Indictment, which are Evidences of Fact, which in ſome ſort prove themſelves. And there was but one that I remember (for Oates I do not count one) was ever juſtly convicted of Perjury in Treaſon, and that too was for want of cunning, for he fooliſhly ſwore to Time as well as Place, which a Witneſs in Mr. Hamden's Tryal would never be brought to do: Beſides, Malice and Revenge, which in Proſecutors and Accuſers in Treaſon are generally the Motives, go farther than Money or Kindneſs, which if us'd in any Caſe, are the Motives of falſe Witneſſes for the Priſoner.

Now as for the King and for the Truth are the ſame, ſo for the King and for the Law are the ſame. The Laws are the King's, as he is to ſee the Execution and Preſervation of them; ſo for the King againſt the Law is a Contradiction.

Therefore to try a Priſoner upon a vicious Indictment, as was done in Colledge's and Colonel Sidney's Caſes, is againſt the King as it is againſt Law, for by that means he is in danger to be hang'd if convicted; or tried twice, if acquitted, which is againſt Law.

It is no Salve of the Matter what the Judges ſaid in Colledge's Caſe, that the Evidence of Miſdemeanour is no Evidence of Treaſon; for the ſame may be ſaid in an Indictment of Murder and Robbery; nor that the Judges would take care to inform the Jury which was Evidence of Treaſon, which of Miſdemeanour, which they promis'd to do, but were not as good as their Words, as ſhall be ſhewn; for the Court may forget ſo to do, and the Jury may forget what the Court ſaid to them of that Matter.

But notwithſtanding all this, if the Priſoner was innocent, there could be no harm done to him, for his Innocence would defend him: This was a Saying, and as mortal it was to Fitzharris, to Colledge, to Colonel Sidney, to Mr. Corniſh, and ſeveral others, as was the Letter ⊖ amongſt the Greeks. It is true, my Lord Coke us'd the Expreſſion, but in another Senſe than that of late practis'd. I would fain know what they meant by the Expreſſion; Is it, that no Man will or ever did ſwear falſely againſt a Priſoner in Treaſon? If that be true, how came the ſame Perſons to be ſo violent againſt Oates for what he ſwore againſt Ireland? Or do they mean, that, let an Accuſer ſwear never ſo violently and circumſtantially againſt a Priſoner, yet if he be innocent it will do him no harm? If that be true, I would fain know how the Priſoner ſhall eſcape; is it that his Innocence ſhall appear in his Forehead, or an Angel come from Heaven and diſprove the Accuſer? Neither of which we have obſerv'd, tho' all have ſaid, and I believe, that ſome Perſons have been very innocently executed. Or ſhall the Accuſer be detected by the bare Queſtions of the Priſoner? that I think will not be neither; and therefore to inſtance in the only Perſon who hath of late eſcap'd in a Tryal of Treaſon, where there was a Deſign againſt his Life, which was my Lord Delamere, if he had not had Witneſſes to have prov'd the Perſons mention'd to have been with him at the place and time ſworn againſt him to be in other places, it was not his denial had ſerv'd his turn, but he would have run the ſame Fate with my Lord Brandon. Nay, I am apt to think had he been tried by a Jury of Commoners pack'd, as at that time they uſually were, he had not eſcap'd.

The truth is, when I conſider the Practice of late times, and the manner of Uſage of the Priſoners, it is ſo very much like or rather worſe than the Practice of the Inquiſition, as I have read it, that I ſometimes think it was in order to introduce Popery, and make the Inquiſition, which is the moſt terrible thing in that Religion, and which all Nations dread, ſeem eaſy in reſpect of it. I will therefore recount ſome undeniable Circumſtances of the late Practice: A Man is by a Meſſenger, without any Indictment precedent, which by the Common Law ought to precede, or any Accuſer or Accuſation that he knows of, clapt up in cloſe Priſon, and neither Friend or Relation muſt come to him; he muſt have neither Pen, Ink or Paper, or know of what, or by whom he is accus'd; he muſt divine all, and provide himſelf a Counter-evidence, without knowing what the Evidence is againſt him. If any Perſon adviſe or ſollicite for him, unleſs aſſign'd by the Court by which he is try'd, they are puniſhable: He is try'd as ſoon as he comes into the Court, and therefore of a Sollicitor there is no occaſion or uſe; if the Priſoner deſires Council upon a point of Law, as was done in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, the Council nam'd muſt be ready to argue preſently, and the Court deliver their Judgment preſently, without any Conſideration. The Priſoner indeed hath liberty to except to thirty five of the Jury peremptorily, and as many more as he hath cauſe to except to, but he muſt not know beforehand who the Jury are; but the King's Council muſt have a Copy of them: He muſt hear all the Witneſſes produc'd to prove him guilty together, without anſwering each as he comes, for that is breaking in upon the King's Evidence, as it is call'd; tho' it hold many hours, as it happen'd in moſt of the Tryals: he muſt not have any Perſon to mind him what hath been ſworn againſt him, and forgotten by him to anſwer; for if that were allow'd, the Priſoner perhaps may eſcape hanging, and that is againſt the King: There is a Proclamation to call in all Perſons to ſwear againſt him, none is permitted to ſwear for him; all the impertinent Evidence that can be given is permitted againſt him, none for him; as many Council as can be hir'd are allow'd to be againſt him, none for him. Let any Perſon conſider truly theſe Circumſtances, and it is a wonder how any Perſon eſcapes; it is downright tying a Man's Hands behind him, and baiting him to death, as in truth was practis'd in all theſe Caſes. The Tryal of Ordeal, of walking between hot Iron Bars blindfold, which was aboliſh'd for the Unreaſonableneſs of it, tho' it had its Saying for it too, That God would lead the Blind ſo as not to be burnt if he were innocent, was a much more advantageous Tryal for the ſuſpected than what of late was practis'd, where it was ten to one that the accus'd did not eſcape. If any of theſe things have been legally practis'd, I have nothing to ſay againſt it, but I have never read any thing of Common or Statute-Law for it. And I can with better aſſurance ſay than any Perſon who hath practis'd theſe things that no Law in England warrants them; and if not, then conſider the unreaſonableneſs of theſe Methods.

There is yet one Objection to be anſwer'd, which being a very great Hardſhip upon the Priſoner, gives ſome colour of impoſing other Hardſhips upon him, to wit, That a Witneſs cannot be examin'd for the Priſoner on his Oath in a Tryal upon an Indictment of a capital Matter. It is not becauſe the Matter is Capital, for then no Witneſſes ought to be examin'd upon Oath for the Appellee in a capital Matter: Neither is it becauſe it is againſt the King, for then no Witneſs ought to be examin'd on Oath for the Defendant in a Tryal upon an Indictment of any criminal Matter; yet in Indictments of all criminal Matters, not capital, 'tis permitted to the Priſoner.

To ſay Truth, never any reaſon was yet given for it, or I think can be, if you believe my Lord Coke, 3*d Inſtit. fol.* 79. of which Opinion my Lord Hales is, in his Pleas of the Crown, that that Practice is not warranted by any Act of Parliament, Book Caſe, or ancient Record, and that there is not ſo much as ſcintilla Juris for it; for he ſays, when the Fault is deny'd, Truth cannot appear without Witneſſes. As for what is pretended, that it is ſwearing againſt the King, and therefore it is not allow'd of; 'tis a canting Reaſon, which put into ſenſible Engliſh, a Man will be aſham'd to own. And as ſlight is the Reaſon, that it being a matter of ſo high moment as a Man's Life, the Priſoner will be the more violent and eager, and the Witneſſes may be more prevail'd upon to ſwear falſly, more than they would be in a matter of leſs moment: The Weakneſs of that Reaſon hath been in part, and ſhall be further ſhewn. I think none will deny, but the end of Tryals in any matters Capital, Criminal, or Civil is the diſcovery of Truth: Next, 'tis as neceſſary for the Priſoner to have Witneſſes to prove his Innocence, as it is for the King to have Witneſſes to convict him of the Crime; which Propoſition is agreed by the Practice, it being always permitted, that the Priſoner ſhall produce what Witneſſes he can, but they are not to be upon Oath. In the laſt place, ſince Truth cannot appear but by the Confeſſion of the Party, or Teſtimony of Witneſſes of both ſides, it is neceſſary to put all the engagement as well on the Witneſſes of part of the Priſoner, as of part of the King, to ſay the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth, as the nature of the Matter will bear: and as yet no better means has been found out than an Oath; which if deny'd to the Priſoner's Witneſſes, either he is allow'd too great an advantage to acquit himſelf, or he is not allow'd enough.

If all that his Witneſſes ſay without Oath, ſhall have equal credit as if they ſwore it, then he hath too much advantage; for Men may be found who will ſay falſly what they will not ſwear, as is plain enough. How often doth a Defendant ſay in a Plea at Law, that a Deed is not his, which yet in an Anſwer in Chancery he will confeſs to be his? If his Witneſſes ſhall not have Credit becauſe not ſworn, to what purpoſe then is it permitted him to produce them? If they ſhall have Credit, but not ſo much as if ſworn, I ask how much Credit ſhall be given? Is it two, three or ten Witneſſes without Oath ſhall be equivalent to one upon Oath? And beſides, that Queſtion never was or can be anſwered, what Credit ſhall be given them? There is an unreaſonable Diſadvantage put on the Priſoner, that a Witneſs produc'd on his part, of equal Credit with the Witneſs againſt him, ſhall not have equal Credit given him, becauſe he is not on his Oath; whereas he is ready to deliver the ſame things on his Oath, if the Court would adminiſter it to him, and yet that difference was taken in Fitzharris's Caſe, as to the Credibility of Everard and Oates, the firſt being upon his Oath, the laſt not.

I do not offer this as any Reflection upon the late Proceedings, but as a reaſon why matters in capital Proceedings ought not to have been carried further than heretofore they were, againſt the Priſoner, by example of ſo unreaſonable a Practice.

But to return to the Trial of Colledge, which came on in the Afternoon, when the Attorny inſiſted that the King's Witneſſes ought not to be examin'd out of the hearing of each other; in which he was over ruled, but the Rule not obſerv'd, nor was it material: for the King's Council having the Priſoner's Writings, and by them obſerv'd how he intended to make the Witneſſes againſt him contradict themſelves, they did not produce ſuch Witneſſes as were not inſtructed to concur in the Evidence of the ſame matter, but produc'd only ſuch as were inſtructed to give Evidence of diſtinct matters. And therefore Dugdale was firſt produc'd, who gave Evidence of vilifying words ſpoke of the King at ſeveral times at Oxford and London, by the Priſoner to himſelf alone; that he ſhew'd the Witneſs ſeveral ſcandalous Libels and Pictures, and ſaid he was the Author of them; that he had a ſilk Armour, a brace of Horſe Piſtols, and a Pocket Piſtol and Sword; that he ſaid, he had ſeveral ſtout men to ſtand by him, and that he would make uſe of them for the defence of the Proteſtant Religion; he ſaid the King's Party was but an handful to his Party. Stevens ſwore the finding of the Original of the Raree Show in the Priſoner's Chambers. John Smith ſwore his ſpeaking ſcandalous Words of the King, and of his having his Armour, and that when he ſhew'd it the Witneſs, he ſaid, Theſe are things that will deſtroy the pitiful Guards of Rowley; that he ſaid, he expected the King would ſeize ſome of the Members of Parliament at Oxford; which if done, he would be one ſhould ſeize the King; that he ſaid, Fitzgerald at Oxon had made his Noſe bleed, but before long he hop'd to ſee a great deal more Bloodſhed for the Cauſe; that if any, nay if Rowley himſelf, came to diſarm the City, he would be the Death of him. Haynes ſwore he ſaid, Unleſs the King would let the Parliament ſit at Oxon, they would ſeize him, and bring him to the Block; and that he ſaid, the City had one thouſand five hundred Barrels of Powder, and one hundred thouſand men ready at an hours warning. Turbervile ſwore, he ſaid at Oxford, that he wiſh'd the King would begin; if he did not, they would begin with him, and ſeize him; and ſaid, he came to Oxford for that purpoſe.

Mr. Maſters ſwore, That in diſcourſe between him and the Priſoner, he juſtified the Proceedings of the Parliament in 1640. at which the Witneſs wondred, and ſaid, how could he juſtify that Parliament that raiſ'd the Rebellion, and cut off the King's Head? to which the Priſoner reply'd, That that Parliament had done nothing but what they had juſt Cauſe for, and that the Parliament which ſat laſt at Weſtminſter was of the ſame Opinion; that he call'd the Priſoner Colonel in mockery, who reply'd, Mock not, I may be one in a little time.

Sir William Jennings ſwore as to the Fighting with Fitz Gerald, and the words about his bleeding.

For the Priſoner.

Hickman ſaid he heard Haynes ſwear God damn him, he car'd not what he ſwore, nor whom he ſwore againſt, for it was his Trade to get Mony by ſwearing. Mrs Oliver ſaid, Haynes writ a Letter in her Father's Name, unknown to her Father. Mrs. Hall ſaid ſhe heard Haynes own that he was employ'd to put a Plot on the Diſſenting Proteſtants. Mrs. Richards ſaid, ſhe heard him ſay the ſame thing. Whaley ſaid, Haynes ſtole a Silver Tankard from him. Lun ſaid, Haynes ſaid the Parliament were a Company of Rogues for not giving the King Mony, but he would help the King to Mony enough out of the Phanaticks Eſtates. Oates ſaid, Turberville ſaid a little before the Witneſſes were ſworn at the Old Baily, that he was not a Witneſs againſt the Priſoner, nor could give any Evidence againſt him: And after he came from Oxford, he ſaid he had been ſworn before the Grand Jury againſt the Priſoner, and ſaid the Proteſtant Citizens had deſerted him, and God damn him he would not ſtarve: That John Smith ſaid, God damn him he would have Colledge's Blood: That he heard Dugdale ſay, that he knew nothing againſt any Proteſtant in England; and being taxt that he had gone againſt his Conſcience in his Evidence, he ſaid it was long of Colonel Warcup, for he could get no Mony elſe; that he had given out that he had been poiſon'd, whereas in truth it was a Clap. Blake ſaid, that Smith told him Haynes his Diſcovery was a ſham Plot, a Meal Tub Plot.

Bolron ſaid, Smith would have had him given Evidence againſt Sir John Brooks, that Sir John ſhould ſay there would be cutting of Throats at Oxford, and that the Parliament-men went provided with four, five, ſix, or ten Men apiece; and that there was a Conſult at Grantham, wherein it was reſolv'd, that it was better to ſeize the King than to let him go, whereas he knew of no ſuch thing; that he would have Bolron to be a Witneſs againſt Colledge, and told him what he ſhould ſay, leſt they ſhould diſagree in their Evidence; that he heard Haynes ſay he knew nothing of a Popiſh or Presbyterian Plot, but if he were to be an Evidence, he car'd not what he ſwore, but would ſwear any thing to get Mony. Mowbray ſaid, Smith tempted him to be a Witneſs againſt Colledge, and was inquiſitive to know what diſcourſe paſſed betwixt him and my Lord Fairfax, Sir John Hewly, and Mr. Stern on the Road; and ſaid, that if the Parliament would not give the King Mony, and ſtood on the Bill of Excluſion, that was Pretence enough to ſwear a Deſign to ſeize the King at Oxford.

Everard ſaid, Smith told him he knew of no Presbyterian or Proteſtant Plot, and ſaid, Juſtice Warcup would have perſuaded him to ſwear againſt ſome Lords, a Presbyterian Plot, but he knew of none; he ſaid, Haynes told him it was Neceſſity and hard Pay drove him to ſpeak any thing againſt the Proteſtants; and being queſtion'd how his Teſtimony agreed with what he formerly ſaid? anſwer'd he would not ſay much to excuſe himſelf, his Wife was reduc'd to that neceſſity, that ſhe begg'd at Rouſe's Door, and mere neceſſity drove him to it, and ſelf-preſervation, for he was brought in Guilty when he was taken up, and was oblig'd to do ſomething to ſave his Life, and that it was a Judgment upon the King or People; the Iriſhmens ſwearing againſt them was juſtly fall'n on them, for outing the Iriſh of their Eſtates.

Parkhurſt and Symons ſaid, they had ſeen at Colledge his Houſe his Arms, about the latter end of November. Yates ſaid, Dugdale beſpoke a Piſtol of him for Colledge, which he promis'd to give Colledge. And upon Diſcourſe ſometime after the Oxford Parliament, Yates ſaid Colledge was a very honeſt Man, and ſtood up for the good of the King and Government. Yes, ſaid Dugdale, I believe he does, and I know nothing to the contrary. Deacon and Whitaker ſaid they knew Colledge was bred a Proteſtant, and went to Church, and never to a Conventicle that they knew of, and thought him an honeſt Man. Neal, Rimington, Janner and Norris to the ſame purpoſe; and Norris, that Smith (in company where was diſcourſe of the Parliament Mens being agreed to go to Oxford) ſaid, he hop'd they would be well provided to go, if they did go. El. Hunt ſaid, a Porter in her Maſter's abſence brought the Prints taken in Colledge's Houſe eight Weeks before: and ſaid, Dugdale told her, after her Maſter was in Priſon, he did not believe Colledge had any more hand in any Conſpiracy againſt his Majeſty than the Child unborn, and he had as lieve have given an hundred pounds he had never ſpoke what he had, and that he had nothing to ſay againſt her Maſter, which would touch his Life.

Having ſummed up all the material part of the Evidence in the order it was given, for or againſt the Priſoner, let us ſee whether upon the whole, an honeſt underſtanding Jury could, with a good Conſcience, have given the Verdict the then Jury did; or whether an upright Court could, with a good Conſcience, have declar'd they were well ſatisfied in the Verdict given, as all the four Judges in that Caſe did, tho the Chief Juſtice North only ſpoke the words. And tho it is too late to advantage the deceaſed, yet it will do right to the Memory of the Man, to whoſe dexterous management on his Trial many now alive owe the continuance of their Lives to this Day: it was not their Innocence protected the Lord Fairfax, Sir John Brooks, and many others before mention'd, and many not named in the Tryal, but Colledge's baffling that Crew of Witneſſes, and ſo plainly detecting their falſhood, that the King's Council never durſt play them at any other Perſon but the Earl of Shaftsbury, as ſhall be ſhewn; and failing there, they were paid off, and vaniſht, and never did more harm viſibly; what under hand Practices they might be afterwards guilty of, I know not.

Who could believe any one of thoſe four Witneſſes, Dugdale, Haynes, Turbervile, and Smith, if it were for no other reaſon than the improbability of the thing; for (as Colledge ſaid) was it probable he ſhould truſt things of that nature with Papiſts, who had broke their Faith with their own Party, who could lay greater Obligations of ſecrecy upon them than he was able to do? That he, a Proteſtant, ſhould truſt People who had been employed to cut Proteſtants Throats? And neither of them ever diſcovered any of the things they ſwore, till after the Oxford Parliament, tho moſt of them were pretended to be tranſacted and ſpoken before.

Who could believe Dugdale in any of his Evidence againſt the Priſoner, when Oates teſtified againſt him, that he ſaid he knew nothing againſt any Proteſtants in England? And being taxt by Oates, that he had gone againſt his Conſcience in his Evidence againſt Colledge to the Grand Jury at London, he ſaid, it was long of Colonel Warcup, for he could get no Mony elſe; which was a plain Confeſſion he had ſworn wrong, and of the Cauſe for which he did it, and of the Perſon who induced him to do it? That he had given out that he was poiſon'd, whereas his diſeaſe was a Clap; which was an ill thing in him, as it imply'd a Charge of poiſoning him on other Perſons? And when Elizabeth Hunt teſtified againſt him, that he ſaid, after Colledge was in priſon, that he did not believe Colledge had any more hand in any Conſpiracy againſt the King, than the Child unborn; and that he had as lieve have given an 100*l.* he had never ſpoken what he had, and that he had nothing to ſay againſt Colledge which could touch his Life? And when Yates teſtify'd againſt him, that when Yates ſaid Colledge was an honeſt Man, and ſtood up for the good of the King and Government; Yes, ſaid Dugdale, I believe he does, and I know nothing to the contrary?

Who could believe Haynes in any part of his Evidence againſt the Priſoner, when Mrs. Hall and Mrs. Richards ſaid, he own'd he was employ'd to put a Plot upon the Diſſenting Proteſtants? when Whaley teſtified againſt him that he was a Thief, and had ſtole Whaley's Tankard? when Lun teſtify'd that Haynes ſaid the Parliament were a Company of Rogues, for not giving the King Mony, but he would help the King to Mony enough out of the Phanaticks Eſtates? when Hickman teſtified againſt him he heard him ſay, God damn him he car'd not what he ſwore, nor againſt whom he ſwore, for 'twas his Trade to get Mony by ſwearing? when Mrs. Oliver ſaid that he had writ a Letter in her Father's name, without her Father's knowledg? when Bolron teſtified againſt him, that he ſaid he knew nothing of a Popiſh or a Presbyterian-Plot, but if he were to be an Evidence, he cared not what he ſwore, but would ſwear any thing to get Mony? when Everard teſtified againſt him, that he ſaid Neceſſity and hard Pay drove him to ſay any thing againſt the Proteſtants; and being taxt that his Evidence againſt Colledge agreed not with what he had formerly ſaid, he ſaid, he could not excuſe it, but his Poverty and ſelf-Preſervation drove him to it? which was a plain Confeſſion of the falſhood of his Evidence, and of the reaſon of it? and added, it was a Judgment upon the King or People, the Iriſh Mens ſwearing againſt them, for outing the Iriſh of their Eſtates: which can have no other ſence, than the Iriſhmens forſwearing themſelves againſt the Engliſh was a Judgment, &c.

How could Turbervile be believed in any part of his Evidence againſt Colledge, when Oates teſtified againſt him, that he ſaid a little before the Witneſſes were ſworn againſt Colledge at the Old-baily, that he was not a Witneſs againſt him, nor could give any Evidence againſt him: and yet afterwards at Oxon Turbervile told him he had ſworn againſt Colledge to the Grand Jury, and ſaid the Proteſtant Citizens had deſerted him, and God damn him he would not ſtarve: which words I think need no explanation.

And laſtly, how could Smith be believed in any part of his Evidence againſt the Priſoner, when it was teſtified againſt him by Blake, that he ſaid Haynes his diſcovery was a Sham Plot, a Meal-Tub-Plot; The meaning of the words I think are well known. That he would have had Bolron ſwear againſt Sir John Brooks, the Lord Shaftesbury, and Colledge, things of which he knew nothing, and told him what he ſhould ſwear, leſt they ſhould diſagree in their Evidence. When it was teſtified againſt him by Oates, that he ſaid God damn him he would have Colledge's Blood? when it was teſtified againſt him by Mowbray, that he tempted Mowbray to be a Witneſs againſt Colledge, and Sir John Brooks, and was very inquiſitive to know what diſcourſe he had with the Lord Fairfax, Sir John Hewly, and Mr. Stern on the Road to Oxon; and ſaid, if the Parliament did not give the King Mony, but ſtood on the Bill of Excluſion, that was pretence enough to ſwear a deſign to ſecure the King at Oxon? when Everard, and many others teſtified he ſaid he knew of no Presbyterian or Proteſtant Plot. Now if Colledge his Witneſſes were credited, it was impoſſible the King's Witneſſes could be credited, that was agreed by the Court to be true upon the Trial. The anſwer on the Trial was, that the King's Witneſſes were on their Oaths, the Priſoner's were not; which was a Reaſon but in Words and not in Senſe.

And ſurely what Colledge ſaid on that matter, without any knowledg in the Law, cannot be anſwer'd. It is not fair dealing, ſaid he, with a Man for his Life, becauſe the Witneſſes againſt him upon their Oaths deny the things the Witneſſes for him prove, therefore the Witneſſes againſt him muſt be believed and the Witneſſes for him disbelieved, when yet the Witneſſes for him were ready on their Oaths to maintain what they ſaid for him.

Nor is the Law ſo: for taking the Law to be, that a Witneſs for the Priſoner ſhall not be ſworn, which is only made good by practice; the ſame Law, that is to ſay Practice, is, that a Witneſs without Oath for the Priſoner, is of equal Credit with the Witneſs againſt him upon Oath, and none can ſhew the contrary till of late days.

To give one Example of many, where it was neceſſary for the Priſoner to produce a Witneſs to prove his Innocency, and where the Witneſs for him was as much believed as the Witneſs againſt him. There was a Perſon, whoſe name I do not remember, arraign'd (at the ſame time that an Indictment of High Treaſon was endeavour'd to be found againſt the Lord Shaftesbury) for robbing another of Mony and of a hired Horſe, of which likewiſe the Perſon was rob'd; the robbing of the Mony and a Horſe was prov'd by himſelf and ſeveral others, but that the Priſoner was the Perſon that committed the Robbery, none poſitively ſwore but the Perſon rob'd, who likewiſe ſwore that the Horſe on which the Priſoner was taken, was the Horſe taken from him; againſt which the Priſoner prov'd, by the Perſon of whom the Horſe was agreed to be hired, that the Horſe the Priſoner was taken upon was not the Horſe he let to hire to the Perſon rob'd: whereupon the Priſoner was acquitted; and yet the Priſoner's Witneſs was not on his Oath, and the Perſon robbed was on his Oath: which, beſides that it proves the matter for which it is brought, ſhews the Folly as well as Injuſtice of the Practice of impriſoning Men without letting them know for what, and without confronting them with the Witneſſes againſt them, upon the Commitment. For how could this Man have known what Witneſſes to produce, unleſs he had known what in particular he was indicted for? and how could he have ſent to ſuch Witneſſes, unleſs he had had the liberty of ſending to the Perſons who were to be Witneſſes for him? And it ſhews the Folly of thoſe ſayings, that a Man's Innocence muſt defend him, and that the Evidence againſt the Priſoner muſt be as clear as the Sun at noon Day: All will agree that the Priſoner in this Caſe was innocent, and yet that alone, without producing a Witneſs to prove his Innocence, would have ſtood him but in little ſtead; and how could he have known what ſort of Evidence to have ready, unleſs he knew what he was accus'd of?

I do not mean what Crime he was accus'd of, as Treaſon, Murder, Robbery, Theft, or any other Crime; but unleſs he knew the Perſon robbed, when, where, and other Circumſtances: which, ſay ſome, is not to be permitted in Proſecutions of High Treaſon; for if ſo, then no Man ſhall be hanged for High Treaſon; unleſs there was as ſtrong proof againſt him, as is requir'd in any Indictment of any Capital matter; and that, they ſay, is not to be expected in Treaſon; for no Man will call two Witneſſes to be Evidences of his Words or Actions, being Overt Acts of his Deſign of High Treaſon. The Objection is too fooliſh to be anſwer'd; for it is neither better nor worſe, than that if a Man ſhall not be hang'd for Treaſon without Evidence, he ſhall never be hang'd for Treaſon; for no Evidence, and Evidence which the Law rejects, is the ſame in ſence, tho different in words; and as the intent of the mind is difficult to prove on the part of the King, ſo is the Priſoner's part of producing Counter-Evidence much more difficult: and therefore the Law hath taken care by the Statute of Edward the 3*d*, that the Intent ſhall be prov'd by an Overt Act; and by the Statute of Edward the 6th, that that Overt Act ſhall be proved by two Witneſſes. And therefore, ſince the Law hath taken care that there ſhall be a ſtricter proof in High Treaſon than in any other Crime, for the Judges to ſay a leſs proof may be admitted to convict one of High Treaſon than of any other Crime, is very ridiculous; unleſs they will at the ſame time ſay, that the Parliament who made thoſe Statutes, were Men of little Underſtanding, and not to be regarded. And certainly it was a good Counter-evidence, which was given in behalf of the Priſoner by ſome Witneſſes, tho' ſlighted by the Court, and not permitted by the Court to be given by others, that there were great endeavours to ſet up ſham-Plots, and charge the Proteſtants with them: For let any one ſhew me a Reaſon, why the Evidence of ſham-Plots, tho' they do not immediately concern the Priſoner, is not as good Evidence for him, as the Evidence of a real Plot, in which he was not concerned, is againſt him. The laſt was permitted to be given in Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel, Colonel Sidney, and others; tho' the firſt was not permitted to many Witneſſes in this Tryal, and it was a material Objection which Colledge made, That there was no proof of any Perſons being concerned with him in the Deſign of ſeizing the King.

It was an unadviſed anſwer the Court gave, that he alone might be ſo vain as to deſign it alone: For if from thence an Inference is made, as was inſinuated by the Court to the Jury, that therefore he did alone deſign it, it was an Evidence of his being a Mad-man, not a Traytor. Had the Evidence been of the miſchiefing the King by means which a ſingle Perſon is capable of uſing, as Stabbing, Shooting, and the like, the matter is not impoſſible; but it being by means which it is impoſſible for a ſingle Perſon to execute, it carries ſuch disbelief with it, that it is impoſſible to find a Man in his Senſes at the ſame time guilty of it: And a Man that is non compos mentis, if my Lords Coke and Hales are to be believ'd, cannot be guilty of High Treaſon within that Branch of the Statute, Compaſſing, and imagining, &c.

It is true, a Mad-man may be guilty of Treaſon, in attempting the King's Perſon; but for that he is no more ſaid to be puniſh'd, than Beaſts of Prey are when kill'd, which are more properly ſaid to be deſtroy'd than puniſh'd for the publick good. But if ſo good a Counter-proof in Colledge's Caſe was not made, as ought to have been, ſome Allowances ought to be made for the Priſoner's ignorance of what he was accus'd of, his uſage and ſtrict Impriſonment before his Tryal, the ruffling him juſt before his Tryal in the manner before declar'd, the depriving him of his Notes, the giving an Evidence of many Hours long againſt him, before he was permitted to anſwer any part of it. And the uſe of Pen, Ink and Paper, was but of little advantage to him; for a Man that hath not been uſed to do it, cannot take Notes of any uſe. And in Truth, he complain'd he had not taken Notes of half ſaid, but relied on the Court to do him Juſtice in ſumming up the Evidences, which they promiſed to do, but broke their Words.

It muſt likewiſe be conſider'd, that the concern a Man hath upon him, when he is upon Tryal for his Life, is ſo far from fortifying that it weakens his Memory: Beſides, the foul Practice, without any remorſe, put upon him and his Witneſſes; ſome of them impriſon'd, that he could not have them at the Tryal; others ſo threaten'd, that they durſt not appear for him, and the Cry of the Auditory againſt him and his Witneſſes, were mighty Diſcouragements. All theſe things being conſider'd, how could any underſtanding Jury take it on their Oaths, That the Evidence againſt the Priſoner, of a Deſign to ſeize the King, &c. was as clear as the Sun at noon Day?

As for the Evidence which Mr. Maſters gave, if it were true, it was no Evidence of Treaſon; an erroneous Opinion may make an Heretick, but not a Traytor: it is a very diſtant Conſequence, that becauſe he affirm'd that the Parliament in Forty had done nothing but what was juſt in reſpect of King Charles the Firſt, therefore the Priſoner was guilty of a Deſign againſt King Charles the Second: beſides, that in all probability, tho' Mr. Maſters might inveigh againſt the Parliament, Colledge might only juſtify them, by throwing the ill things done in that time upon the Papiſts, as Colledge in his Defence ſays; and Mr. Maſters, after much pumping, recollected himſelf, and ſaid he thought the Priſoner ſaid, the Papiſts had a Hand in thoſe things; which prov'd the Truth of Colledge's Aſſertion.

As for the Evidence of Colledge's ſaying he might be a Colonel in time; if he hop'd for what he ſaid, it was no Crime, or Proof of a Crime, 'tis no more than what every private Soldier hopes for, and he himſelf had been one.

As for the Evidence of Atterbury, Sawel, and Stevens, of their ſeizing the Pictures; admit they ſwore true, it did not amount to the Proof of the Treaſon in the Indictment, or of any ſort of Treaſon: And yet if Colledge's Maid ſaid true, it looks as if the Finders or ſome other Perſon ſent them to Colledge's Houſe, in order to find them there.

Of all ſorts of Evidence, the finding Papers in a Perſon's Poſſeſſion is the weakeſt, becauſe no Perſon can ſecure himſelf againſt Deſigns upon him in that kind. And after Dangerfield's Deſign upon Colonel Manſel, and the Evidence in Fitzharris's Tryal, that the Deſign of that Pamphlet was to convey Copies of it into ſome Members of Parliaments Pockets, and then ſeize them, that piece of Evidence ought to have been ſpar'd, till thoſe and other Practices of like kind had been forgotten.

The laſt Witneſs was Sir William Jennings, of Colledge's ſaying he had loſt the firſt Blood in the Cauſe, but it would not be long before more would be loſt; what was that more, than that he thought more would be loſt in the Cauſe, which he interpreted the Proteſtant Cauſe? Suppoſe he thought ſo without Reaſon, and was miſtaken, where was the Crime? But if he thought ſo upon good Reaſon, and good Reaſon he had to think ſo, there was no pretence of a Crime in it. I believe moſt Men thought as Colledge did, from the time of the Buſineſs of Fitzharris; and what Imputation was it to him? Why were not all the Expreſſions he us'd in his Tryal as good Evidence againſt him as that Saying? For he then ſaid it was an horrid Conſpiracy to take away his Life, and would not ſtop at him, for it was againſt all the Proteſtants of England, and the like; which was his Opinion, and after times ſhewed him a true Prophet.

One

One thing was very diſhoneſtly inſinuated, that the Priſoner was a Papiſt, which was only to incenſe the Jury againſt him, and it had its Effect; whereas it was very plain that he was a Proteſtant, tho' perhaps a Diſſenter, and therefore had not lately come to the publick Church; and under that notion the Papiſts and ſome Proteſtants were contented that Diſſenters ſhould be puniſh'd as Papiſts; yet if they could have prov'd him a Papiſt, no doubt they would have done it; for the Deſtruction of the Man was the Deſign of the Proſecution, and it matter'd not for what Treaſon he was convicted, ſo he was convicted. And he himſelf gave a pretty ſort of Evidence againſt himſelf, if they could have prov'd him a Papiſt: he prov'd, and confeſs'd, he was educated a Proteſtant; and if they could have prov'd him reconcil'd to the Popiſh Religion, which was Treaſon, he helpt them a great deal in their Proofs: It was therefore very diſingenuous in the Chief Juſtice to reproach him at his Condemnation, that he had not made that Proof of his Religion as it was expected, when his Religion was not the Matter of which he was indicted; that was ſlily inſinuated to exaſperate, and no Proof pretended to be made of his being a Papiſt. But he had more Reaſon to complain of the Injuſtice of the Court in ſumming up the Evidence, who did it in ſuch a manner, that if they had been Council for the Priſoner, as they pretended, they would have been juſtly ſuſpected to have taken a Fee of the other ſide to betray their Client.

For, as Colledge readily ſaid, if the Chief Juſtice had looked on his Notes, he would have found more Evidence againſt Turbervile and Dugdale than he had repeated And it was a lame Excuſe for the Chief Juſtice to ſay, he refer'd it to the Memory of the Jury, for he could not remember more; when as I dare ſay, after about thirteen Hours Evidence, the Jury remember'd no more than that they were to find him Guilty.

The Truth is, upon the whole, what Colledge ſaid was true; they took away all helps from him for defending himſelf, and therefore they had as good have condemned him without a Tryal. Notwithſtanding all which, the Courage of the Man never fainted, but after he was condemn'd, boldly ask'd, when he was to be executed? To which the Lord Chief Juſtice reply'd, it depended on the King's Pleaſure; but ſmoothly ſaid, in thoſe Caſes of High-Treaſon they did not uſe to precipitate the Execution, it ſhould not be ſo ſudden but that he ſhould have Notice to prepare himſelf. And in truth he had from the eighteenth, on which he was condemn'd, to prepare himſelf, to the one and thirtieth of Auguſt 1681, on which he was executed; a much longer time than was allow'd my Lord Ruſſel, or Mr. Corniſh, and many others. And the true Reaſon of ſo long a Reprieve, was to ſee how the Nation would digeſt the matter, and whether the Man by the Terror of Death could be prevail'd upon to become a Tool to deſtroy other Innocents: but when it was found that the People were quiet, and that the Priſoner could not be prevail'd upon to do an ill thing to ſave his Life, his Execution was order'd; yet, as a ſhew of Mercy, his Quarters were permitted to be bury'd; a Favour he ſlighted, with ſaying that he car'd not whether he was eaten up with Flies or Worms. The ſame Favour was likewiſe ſhew'd Fitzharris, but the true Reaſon of both was, That they had a mind that the Tryals and pretended Crimes for which Fitzharris and Colledge were condemn'd, ſhould be forgotten; which would not be ſo ſoon done, if their Quarters were always expos'd to view. But tho' all People were quiet, yet there was great grumbling, and moſt honeſt Men were afraid; and the conſtancy of Colledge at his Execution was ſuch, that it made the moſt violent againſt him relent.

Remarks on the Earl of Shaftsbury's Grand Jury.

THE next Perſon queſtion'd was the Earl of Shaftsbury, againſt whom a Bill of High Treaſon was prefer'd to the Grand Jury, at the Seſſions Houſe, on the 24*th* Day of November 1681. The Evidence was publickly given in Court, and was this; Mr. Blathwaite ſwore he found the Papers then produc'd in a Velvet Bag in the great Trunk, which was taken by Mr. Gwynne in the Lord Shaftsbury's Houſe. Mr. Gwynne ſwore, all the Papers in the Velvet Bag, when he deliver'd them to Mr. Blathwaite, were taken by him in the Lord Shaftsbury's Houſe: Sir Leoline Jenkins ſwore, the Paper produc'd was the Paper deliver'd him by Mr. Blathwaite, and it was unalter'd. Then the Paper was read, the Effect of which was a Project of an Aſſociation ſign'd by no Perſon, and whoſe Hand-writing it was none knew. John Booth ſwore, that he was engag'd to Captain Wilkinſon, who pretended to have a Commiſſion from the Lord Shaftsbury and ſeveral others to go for Carolina; he was about that time introduc'd into the Earl's Acquaintance by the Captain, where was a Diſcourſe about Carolina Buſineſs; he was four or five times between Chriſtmas and March, with the Earl and the Captain: that the Captain told him he was to command fifty Men to be the Earl's Guard at Oxon, and would have had him to be one: That if the King did not conſent to ſeveral Acts of Parliament and other things, they were to purge the Guards and Court of ſeveral Perſons; and tho' the Captain told him that firſt, afterwards he heard the Earl ſay the ſame things, particularly about a Week or ten Days before the Parliament ſat at Oxon, he gave ſome Intimation of this to Walter Banes, and then writ it down, and ſent it to the Council ſealed in a Cover. Turberville ſwore, that the Lord Shaftsbury ſaid about February, there was but little good to be done with the King as long as his Guards were about him. Smith teſtify'd a great deal of Diſcourſe between him and the Lord Shaftsbury of ſomething ſaid reflecting on the King; and that he ſhould ſay, that if the King ſhould offer any Violence to the Parliament at Oxford, he would meet with a ſtrong Oppoſition, for that the Gentlemen, who came out of the Country, came well provided with Horſe and Arms to oppoſe, and that they might lawfully do it, if he offer'd any Violence to them whilſt they ſat. Haynes ſwore, that the Earl ſaid if the King did not give Haynes his Pardon, he and others would raiſe the Kingdom againſt him; that Haynes gave the Earl an exact account of Tranſactions ſince King Charles the Firſt's coming to the Crown, and that the Earl ſaid the Duke of Buckingham had as much Right to the Crown as any Stuart in England. John Macnamarra ſaid, the Earl ſaid, the King was popiſhly affected, and took the ſame Methods his Father did, which brought his Father's Head to the Block, and they would bring his thither; and this was ſaid in the Preſence of Ivey, and he thought of his Brother; and ſaid, the King deſerv'd to be depos'd as much as King Richard the IId. Dennis Macnamarra likewiſe teſtify'd the laſt Words, and that it was the latter end of March, or beginning of April. Ivey ſaid, the Earl ſaid, if the King deny'd Haynes a Pardon, they would riſe upon him and force him to give one, and that they deſign'd to depoſe him and ſet up another in his ſtead. Bernard Dennis ſaid, he had a great deal of Diſcourſe with the Earl, who bid him ſpeak to his Friends in Ireland to be in a readineſs to aſſiſt the Commonwealth of England; for they intended to have England under a Commonwealth, and extirpate the King and his Family.

and

Then the Court told the Jury the Indictment was grounded on the Statute of King Charles the IId, but they ought to conſider of that Statute, as alſo the 25th of Edward the IIId.

The Queſtion is, whether the Grand Jury ought to have found the Bill on this Evidence. Firſt it ought to be conſider'd, what the Duty of a Grand Jury is; and I think it is not what the Chief Juſtice ſaid, to conſider only whether there be probable ground for the King to call the Perſon accus'd to an account, much leſs do I think that the reaſon of finding a Bill by the Grand Jury was for the Honour of the King, or Decency of the Matter, leſt Perſons accus'd ſhould be call'd to an account by the King, where there is no kind of Suſpicion of the Crime committed by them, as the Court ſaid (which laſt Matter was never aſſign'd as a Reaſon of finding a Bill by the Grand Jury before) but I take the Reaſon of a Grand Jury to be this, that no Man for a capital Matter ſhall ever be queſtion'd by the King, unleſs a Grand Jury take it on their Oaths that they believe the Matter of the Accuſation true; I put an Emphaſis on the Words queſtion'd by the King.

It is true, it is generally ſaid, that the Buſineſs of a Grand Jury, in capital Matters, is in favorem vitæ; but that taken ſimply is not true, for then what Reaſon can be aſſign'd, why a Man ſhall be arraign'd on an Appeal of Murder, Robbery or the like, which touches his Life, as much as an Indictment of thoſe Crimes, without having the Matter of the Appeal firſt found to be true by a Grand Jury? But the true Reaſon of a Grand Jury is the vaſt Inequality of the Plaintiff and Defendant, which in an Indictment is always between the King and his Subjects; and that doth not hold in an Appeal, which is always between Subject and Subject: and therefore the Law in an Indictment hath given a Privilege to the Defendant, which it hath done in no other Proſecution, on purpoſe, if it were poſſible, to make them equal in the Proſecutions and Defence, that equal Juſtice may be done between both. It conſiders the Judges, Witneſſes and Jury are more likely to be influenc'd by the King than the Defendant; the Judges as having been made by him, and as it is in his Power to turn them out, puniſh, to prefer or reward them higher; and tho' there are no juſt Cauſes for them to ſtrain the Law, yet they are ſuch Cauſes, which in all Ages have taken place, and probably always will. This was the Reaſon of running Prerogative ſo high in their Judgment of High Treaſon before the Stat. of Ed. III. that no Man, as that Statute ſays, knew what was not High Treaſon: This was the Reaſon of expounding that Statute oftentimes between the making of it, and the making of the Statute of Queen Mary, that People were at as great a loſs, till the laſt Statute, as they were before the making of the firſt; and even ſince the Statute of Queen Mary, the Expoſition on the Statute of Ed. III. has been ſo extravagant and various, that People are at this Day as much at a loſs to know what is not High Treaſon, as they were before the Statute of Ed. III. Nor was it, nor is it poſſible, but that the great Power of enriching, honouring, rewarding and puniſhing lodg'd in the King, always had, and yet muſt have an Influence on the Witneſſes and Jury; and therefore it is that the Law has order'd, that at the King's Proſecution no Man ſhall be criminally queſtion'd, unleſs a Grand Jury, upon their own Knowledge, or upon the Evidence given them, ſhall give a Verdict, that they really believe the Accuſation is true.

I own of late Days, they have ſaid the Duty of the Grand Jury is to find, whether the Accuſation be probable or no, But that Saying is warranted by no poſitive Law, or ancient Authority; and therefore the Duty of the Grand Jury muſt be founded in the Oath adminiſter'd to them, which is as ſtrict as the Oath adminiſter'd to the Petit Jury: and to ſay Truth, the Verdict of the Petit Jury takes credit from the Verdict of the Grand Jury; which is not only the Reaſon of the difference in the Names of the two Juries, but is likewiſe the Reaſon why an Attaint for a falſe Verdict doth not lie againſt a Petit Jury.

The Oath of the Grand Jury is, To preſent the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth: The Oath of the Petit Jury is, well and truly to try, and true Deliverance make, between the King and the Priſoner at the Bar, &c. which ſignifies the ſame thing as to preſent the Truth, &c. It is true, ſome Reaſons have been offer'd, which if conſider'd, are Words without Senſe; as that the Preſentment of the Grand Jury is but in order to bring the Priſoner to his Tryal, and he is not before the Grand Jury to make his Defence himſelf: but that can be no Reaſon why Probabilities ſhould ſatisfy the Jury, becauſe it doth not anſwer the Deſign of the Law, which will have a Man convicted by the poſitive Oaths of two Juries, conſiſting of more than twenty four, in all Indictments.

Next, why is a Grand Jury compos'd of more ſubſtantial and underſtanding Men than a Petit Jury, if their Buſineſs be mere Formality, or a Matter of leſs weight than the buſineſs of a Petit Jury? In the laſt place, why is leſs Evidence requir'd to convict a Man in his abſence, than is requir'd to convict him if preſent? It is far from an Argument, that leſs Evidence is requir'd to convict one if abſent than if preſent, that it ſeems to me that more Evidence ſhould be requir'd to do it. Men may, and often do make very fair Stories in the abſence of a Perſon accus'd, that when preſent, he eaſily anſwers; and there being no poſitive Law for the Direction of a Grand Jury in that Matter, a Grand Juryman is excuſable, nay, it is his Duty to give a Verdict according to the plain underſtanding of the Words of his Oath, which is to preſent the Truth, as far as he is convict of it; and that Truth muſt be found according to his Knowledge, or as it is repreſented to him by Witneſſes.

And as for the Witneſſes, they muſt be Perſons of Credit; and all Perſons are ſuppos'd to be ſo, unleſs the Grand Jury know the contrary, or have been ſo credibly inform'd. 'Tis true, a Grand Jury ought not to believe Coffee-houſe Stories, or light Stories; but common Fame by credible Perſons, which is vox Populi, ought to prejudice them againſt a Witneſs, ſo as to disbelieve him: and it is no Anſwer to ſay, as the Chief Juſtice in this Caſe ſaid, that the Credibility of the Witneſs is not to be conſider'd by the Grand Jury, becauſe the King is not preſent to defend the Credit of his Witneſſes; tho' the Fact in that Caſe was not true, for the King's Attorney, Sollicitor and Council were preſent, and I think the King is no otherwiſe preſent at any Criminal Proſecution; and the Jury knew by Colledge's Tryal and by Wilkinſon's Depoſitions before the King, that the Evidence of all the Witneſſes produc'd, except what were to the Paper, was queſtion'd, but even that was afterwards quitted by the Court when it would not be ſwallow'd by the Grand Jury; for afterwards the Court told them, that if they of their own Knowledge, knew any thing againſt the Witneſſes, they might conſider of it, but not of what they were credibly inform'd by others: and beſides the Credibility of the Witneſſes, the Poſſibility or Probability of the thing ſworn is to be conſider'd by the Grand Jury; an impoſſible thing they ought not to believe, tho' ſworn by never ſo many credible Witneſſes, and a very improbable thing they cannot poſitively on their Oaths ſwear they believe.

And not only the Fact, but what the Crime of the Fact alledg'd in the Bill of Indictment, the Grand Jury as far as they are capable of judging Matter of Law, ought to conſider; ſo they were told in the Charge given them. 'Tis true, if they were ignorant in the Law, and the Court in their Directions miſled them, as if the Court ſhould tell them ſtealing a Horſe is High Treaſon, and the Grand Jury find it accordingly, it is excuſable in the Grand Jury, tho' puniſhable in the Court. But wrong Directions by the Court in finding a Fact where there is no Evidence, do not excuſe the Jury.

Now to examine the Matter in hand by theſe Rules, could any Perſon who knew my Lord Shaftsbury, or that had heard of, or believ'd his Character to be what it was, believe that it was poſſible for him to diſcourſe with the Witneſſes at the rate they ſwore, to ſome of them at the firſt, to others of them the ſecond time he ſaw them; to diſcourſe of Matters of Policy, with Booth at one time, and afterwards with Haynes, and afterwards with Macnamarra, Fellows of ſo little Senſe, that he would have been aſham'd to have entertain'd them in the meaneſt Office about him; and yet as they pretended, he makes them his Privadoes in the Secret, of not ſo much what he would have had them, but of what he intended himſelf to do?

Who could believe any thing, Turberville, Smith or Haynes ſhould ſay, where there was ſo much of their Falſhood and of their Deſigns to ſwear falſly, prov'd againſt them in Colledge's Tryal? or of Ivey and the three Macnamarras after that Tryal, who tho' they were not produc'd at it, becauſe the King's Council by Colledge's Notes ſaw he was able to falſify them, yet ſome Witneſſes in that Tryal prov'd their Deſign of ſwearing falſly?

Who could believe Booth's Story of liſting ſo many Men under Wilkinſon, to be at my Lord Shaftsbury's diſpoſe at Oxon, after Colledge's Tryal, and after what Wilkinſon had teſtify'd to the King and Council, tho' not then prov'd to the Grand Jury?

A Judge indeed cannot take notice of any thing not prov'd (tho' he may and ought to be a Witneſs, if he knew any thing material of the Matter try'd before him and others) but a Grand Jury may take notice of any thing they know or believe. The Paſſages at Colledge's Tryal were pretty notorious, being authentically publiſh'd by Fra. North, and the Examination of Wilkinſon by as authentick a Paper.

It was unaccountable, that the Witneſſes conceal'd what they heard the Earl ſpeak ſo long, of which none of them pretended to give any Reaſon; nor was it any Excuſe to thoſe who ſign'd a Petition to the City, in which they ſuggeſted they were tempted to ſwear againſt their Conſciences, to ſay they knew not what was in the Petition: he that ſets his Hand to a thing as if he aſſented to it, but doth not, is a Man of Falſhood. Suppoſe one ſets his Hand to a Bond, ſaid to be ſeal'd and deliver'd, not having ſeen it ſeal'd and deliver'd, is not he guilty of little leſs than Forgery? But admitting thoſe Witneſſes had ſworn Truth, yet the Jury ought not to have found the Bill; for they ought to find the Bill true according to all the material Circumſtances of it, as well as the Subſtance of it, which was High Treaſon: One material Circumſtance of it was, that it was ſaid to be High Treaſon within the Statute of Charles IId. And that made another Circumſtance of the Indictment material, which was the time when that Treaſon was committed; becauſe by that Statute the Proſecutions of Treaſon on that Statute ought to be within ſix Months after it is committed, and the Indictment ought to be within three Months after the Proſecution: and he being impriſon'd in July, and the Bill ſuggeſting that the ſuppos'd Treaſon was committed the 18th of March before, and divers other times both before and after, which might be interpreted to have been after the Priſoner's Commitment; had the Jury found the Bill as laid, they had found the Treaſon to have been committed, not only within the time the Proſecution by that Statute ought to be, but alſo within the time the Indictment ought to have been prefer'd; whereas in truth the the Earl had been impriſon'd above three months before the Indictment prefer'd, and there was no Evidence of any Treaſon committed by him after his Impriſonment: and therefore the finding the Bill as laid had been injurious, to bring a Man in queſtion for his Life on that Statute, whereas by Law he ought not to have been.

For it was reſolv'd in Colledge's Caſe, that the Proſecution for Treaſon on that Statute ought to be within ſix Months, and the Indictment within three Months, tho' the Court was of another Opinion in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal.

And that this Indictment was on that Statute, was expreſly ſaid to the Grand Jury, and upon good Reaſon; for the Court in their Charge ſaid, that the Intention of levying War, or deſigning to impriſon the King, was not Treaſon, till the Statute of Charles the Second; tho' in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal it was held to be Treaſon by the Statute of Ed. 3. and therefore the Time of the Treaſon committed was material to be found by the Jury.

As for the Writing found in the Earl's Study, it was no manner of Evidence of Treaſon, admitting what the Witneſſes ſwore as to the finding it to be true; becauſe it was not prov'd that it was proſecuted or compos'd by the Earl of Shaftsbury, or by his Order, and that piece of Evidence was in that particular a meer Original.

In Fitzharris's Caſe, it was prov'd the Libel was compos'd by his Direction; Colonel Sidney's Book was prov'd to be like his Hand; it was pretended that Colledge ſaid he was the Author of the Raree-ſhow, and no Example of this Evidence was ever made uſe of before.

Neither was it Evidence of Treaſon as to the Matter, for there was not one word againſt the preſent King, but his Succeſſor, if he ſhould be ſuch a Perſon.

It is true, one of the King's Council ſaid that one Paſſage in it was, that they would join to deſtroy the Mercenary Forces about London, and thence infer'd it was down right levying War againſt the King and his Guards; whereas there is not any ſuch word or thing in the Paper as he pretended to cite: and if it had been in the Paper, it would have been but Evidence of a Treaſon within the Statute of the late King. And then the time of writing it ought to have appear'd; and if that had been clear'd, yet for the above Reaſons it was no Evidence; and the Grand Jury, tho' ſome of them afterwards ſmarted for it upon other Pretences, did like honeſt underſtanding Gentlemen; and had they done otherwiſe, to avoid the Ignominy of being call'd, tho' in truth it was an honour to be, an Ignoramus Jury, they had juſtly deſerv'd the Reproach which ſince have lighted on other Juries, ſuch as Mr. Corniſh's, and the like. And having ſpoken of this Ignoramus Jury, for which two of them, if not more, were afterwards upon other Pretences ſeverely handled; I think fit to ſay ſomething of the Sufferings of one, for being in a preceding Ignoramus Jury, becauſe it was a meer Novelty, and that was Mr. Wilmer.

Remarks on Mr. Wilmer's Homine Replegiando.

HIS Proſecution, tho' it was but Criminal and not Capital, did as much Miſchief, as it ſtruck a Terror into all Grand Juries, as any the before mention'd Matters; and it was by the Homine Replegiando iſſued out againſt him. As for the Information againſt him I ſhall ſay nothing, becauſe the Injuſtice of both will appear in the Diſcourſe of the firſt. Mr. Wilmer had ſent a Boy beyond Sea by Agreement, as Mr. Wilmer ſaid, whether true or not as to this Matter is not material; a Homine Replegiando is granted againſt Mr. Wilmer for this, at whoſe Proſecution is not material: for any Perſon upon Suggeſtion, back'd by an Affidavit, may have it granted. The Sheriff would have return'd on the Writ, that the Boy was ſent by his own Agreement and Conſent with Mr. Wilmer; which Return was not allow'd, and the Sheriffs were told that they muſt either return they had replevied the Boy, and they muſt have him in Court, or elſe they would be laid by the Heels; or elſe they muſt return that Mr. Wilmer had Eſſoigned him, which is carrying him away, where the Sheriff could not find him; and then a Withernam would iſſue againſt Mr. Wilmer, upon which he would be taken and kept in Priſon till he produc'd the Boy: and no other Return ſhould be allow'd than one of thoſe two, and if they did not make one of thoſe two Returns, they ſhould be committed. Now if the Law be ſo, the Court were innocent, but the Law ought then to be reform'd in that Particular; but if the Law was not ſo, as I think it is not, I think Mr. Wilmer and the Nation had great Injuſtice done them; for it was quickly ſeen what the miſchief of that Judgment was, and therefore it was endeavour'd to be reform'd by an Act of King and Council afterwards: Firſt, I ſay, it is lawful for a Maſter to covenant with a Servant to ſerve him beyond Sea; in the next place it is lawful for a Maſter to ſend his Servant beyond Sea according to ſuch Agreement. And if both theſe Propoſitions be true, as I think no Man will ſay they are not, it is a natural Conſequence to ſay, that the Law hath provided a Return upon a Writ of Homine Replegiando, if it ſhould be ſued out againſt ſuch Maſter for a Servant ſo ſent beyond Sea, which may indemnify the Maſter in ſo doing; and that Return can be no other than the ſpecial Matter, which in this Caſe was refuſed to be accepted. 'Tis no Argument that no ſuch Return is ever read of in any Book: For the Law hath determin'd, that ſome Returns are good, and others bad; yet it hath not ſaid what are all the good Returns which may be made on an Homine Replegiando, and the Sheriff is no more confin'd to Returns, than a Man in the pleading of his Caſe, which my Lord Coke ſays may vary according to the nature of his Caſe; and yet the Law hath ſaid what is a good Plea, and what a bad one, but hath not expreſt all

all the good or bad Pleas. And therefore it is no Argument againſt ſuch a Return, that no Precedent of it can be found, 'tis enough that no Judgment can be produc'd againſt it; and the reaſon of both may be, that the Caſe never happen'd before, that is to ſay, that never any Perſon was ſo malicious before, as to ſue out an Homine Replegiando againſt a Maſter for a Servant ſent by Agreement beyond Sea: and Returns muſt be vary'd according to the Caſe. Perhaps no Precedent can be found of a Return on that Writ, that the Perſon ſought for is dead; yet all Perſons will agree it is a good Return, it is ſo in Replevin of Cattel, and even that Example falſifies the Doctrine of the Court, that there are but two Returns on that Writ allowable by Law. It is not an Argument for diſallowing the Return, that the Perſon ſent beyond Sea was a Child not capable of making ſuch a Contract (tho' I believe if the Matter were look'd into, he was of Age ſo do) for nothing of that doth, or can appear in the Writ or Return: It ſtands therefore ſimply upon this, whether the Sheriff may on an Homine Replegiando return, that the Perſon ſuppos'd to be in Cuſtody, being of full Age, was by mutual Agreement ſent beyond ea by the Perſon in whoſe Cuſtody by the Writ he is ſuppos'd to be, which I think is far from a Doubt. But notwithſtanding all theſe Hardſhips on Juries, it was ſeen to be plainly impoſſible to procure any Bills of Indictment for High Treaſon, much leſs any Perſons to be convicted on the like Evidence except in London, where are ſome of the beſt as well as the worſt of Men in the Nation; and even there it was not to be done as long as the Juries were ſenſible and honeſt Men, which would be as long as the Election of Sheriffs was in the Citizens; and to the honour of the City, it was ſeen that they choſe only honeſt Men to be their Sheriffs, and that when they ſaw the Publick Safety depend on honeſt Officers, tho' at other times they had rather pay a Fine, than undergo the trouble and charges of that Office, yet at that time no Man legally choſen refus'd to ſtand, tho' they were reproach'd and puniſh'd for it; and if Mr. Box refus'd, it was becauſe he would not join with North who was impos'd on the City, for which reaſon it was reſolv'd to take from the City the Right of chuſing Sheriffs, but by what means was not preſently reſolv'd on.

That the City might forfeit their right of Electing, there was no great doubt; as if the Sheriffs were dead, and new ones were not choſen in a convenient time, ſo that there was a defect of Juſtice or the like: but nothing of that kind could be laid to their Charge, and therefore a new unheard of Matter was thought on and ſet a foot, which was to make the City forfeit their being a Corporation, and being annihilated, the Grants made to them by the Crown, as the Right of Electing Sheriffs was, would revert to the Crown again.

A Quo Warranto was therefore brought againſt the City in Hilary Term 1681. to ſhew by what Warrant they pretended to be a Corporation, and to have the Privileges mention'd in the Writ, to which the City pleaded and ſet forth their Right; and the King reply'd, and ſet forth ſeveral Matters done by them, contrary to the Duty of a Corporation: upon which there was a Demurrer, of which Judgment was not given till Trinity Term 1683. I will ſay nothing of the Right of the Proceeding, it having been largely and learnedly argu'd for the City; but if the Matter were ſo clear a Caſe, as the King's Council and Court would have it to be, how came it to paſs that in Henry the Eighth's Time, when the King was ſo earneſtly bent to diſſolve the Religious Corporations, in which the publick Inclination join'd with him, the doing it by Quo Warranto was not thought of? It was very plain, that thoſe pretended Religious did not obſerve the Rules, nor perform the Ends for which they were incorporated; and certainly their Miſdemeanours againſt the intent of their being incorporated were better Cauſes of Forfeiture than was the Cities petitioning for a Parliament, &c. Yet that King took other Methods, he had formal Conveyances of their Lands from moſt of thoſe Corporations, and formal Surrenders of their Corporations ſign'd by every Individual of the Corporations, and thoſe afterwards confirm'd by Act of Parliament. And ſure the late King had as much Right to bring a Quo Warranto againſt Maudlin College for refuſing, contrary to their Duty, to admit the Preſident the King nominated, if the King had a Right to nominate the Preſident (as ſome Judges aſſerted he had) as King Charles the Second had againſt the City: and it was once in debate, whether the Proceeding againſt that College ſhould be by Quo Warranto, or before the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners; the laſt was reſolv'd on, not as more legal or effectual, but as more expeditious, in the one the Proceedings being de die in diem in the other from Term to Term. This only I will obſerve, that when the Judgment againſt the City was given, which was of the greateſt Concern to the Nation ever conteſted in any Court of Weſtminſter-Hall, it was done by two Judges only, and no reaſon of that Judgment rendred, whereof Withins, who was one, I think, heard but one Argument in the Caſe. It is true, they ſaid Raymond, when alive, was of the ſame Opinion, and ſaid Saunders who was then paſt his Senſes was of the ſame Opinion, tho' I was told by one who was preſent, when the two Juſtices came to ask his Opinion in the Matter, he had only Senſe enough to reproach them for troubling him about the Matter, when they were ſenſible he had loſt his Memory. And to ſay truth, the delivering the Senſe of an abſent Judge, tho' it hath been ſometimes practis'd, is not allowable; for ſometimes they deliver another Opinion than what the abſent Judge is of. Judge Withens did ſo in ſeveral Caſes, when he deliver'd the Opinion of Sir Edward Herbert, which Sir Edward Herbert afterwards in open Court diſown'd: Judge Holloway ſerv'd Judge Powel the ſame Trick, if the laſt ſaid true. The long depending of the Quo Warranto had alarm'd all the Nation, who yet were quiet, hoping that Judgment would be given for the City, as ſome of the Judges and of the King's Council had given out it would; but the contrary was reſolv'd on, and therefore the Nation at the time of the giving the Judgment muſt be amus'd with ſomewhat elſe, and nothing ſo proper as a Plot: but there was difficulty in that alſo, for if the pretended Plotters ſhould be acquitted, it would make the Matter worſe; and nothing would ſecure that, but impoſing what Sheriffs they pleas'd on the City, and accordingly North and Rich being pitch'd on, the one by a ſhameleſs Trick, and the other by open Force, were impos'd on the City.

Having gain'd that Point, the Proceedings in the Quo Warranto were much quicker than before, and two Arguments were only permitted in it of each ſide, the one in Hilary Term, the other in Eaſter Term; and ſo the Caſe was ripe for Judgment in Trinity Term following, but muſt be, and was uſher'd in with the diſcovery of a pretended Plot, which ſo amaz'd the Nation, that tho' Judgment in the Quo Warranto was given two days after the pretended Diſcovery, no body took any notice of it for ſeveral Months after it was given. The truth was, no body durſt mutter againſt it, or queſtion the legality of it; it was enough to have brought any Perſon into the Plot to have done it, it would have been call'd flying in the Face of the Government, queſtioning the Juſtice of the Nation, and ſuch like Cant.

Remarks on the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal.

THE Plot being nois'd abroad, the Perſons before hand reſolv'd on were ſeiz'd on, and the Lord Ruſſel and others were clapt up cloſe Priſoners.

The Lord Ruſſel having been for ſome few Weeks a cloſe Priſoner in the Tower, was the 13*th* of July, 1683. brought to the Old Baily, and arraign'd for High-Treaſon, in deſigning to raiſe a Rebellion, &c. and the ſame Morning was try'd. He deſir'd he might not be try'd that Day, for he had ſome Witneſſes which would not be in Town till Night: Which being deny'd, then he deſir'd that the Tryal might be put off till the Afternoon; which was likewiſe deny'd. He ask'd whether he might not make uſe of any Papers he had? which was allow'd. He deſir'd he might have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury that was to paſs on him; he was told he had a Copy deliver'd to his Servant ſome days before.

The Jury being call'd, he challeng'd the Foreman for being no Freeholder in London. To argue which, Council were aſſign'd him; who preſently came into the Court, and having excus'd their not ſpeaking more to the Matter for want of time to conſider of it, argu'd, That it was a good Challenge, becauſe at Common Law every Juryman ought to be a Freeholder; that the Statute of 2 Hen. 5. provides none ſhall be a Juryman in capital Matters, but a Freeholder of forty Shillings yearly: That there is no difference between a City and County, and a County at large at Common Law, nor by that Statute 7 Hen. 7. which takes away the Challenge of no Freehold in the Ward in London, and ſhews it was a good Challenge in London before that time: the 4th Hen. 8. which likewiſe takes away the Challenge of no Freehold in London, ſhews it was a good Challenge before that time, and the ſame was infer'd from the 23*d* of Henry the 8th: But tho' none of thoſe Statutes extended to Treaſon, yet if it was a good Challenge in Treaſon in London before thoſe Statutes, it was ſo ſtill.

The King's Council ſaid, at Common Law it was not neceſſary that a Juryman in Treaſon ſhould be a Freeholder; and tho' Treaſon is within the 2*d* of Henry the 5*th*, yet by the Statute of Queen Mary, the Statute of the 2d of Henry the Fifth, as to Treaſon, was repeal'd; that it was a Point they would not have loſt to the City of London; that if the Priſoner ſhould peremptorily challenge thirty five, as by Law he might, there would ſcarce be found thirty five more Freeholders in the City, the Inheritance of the City being moſtly in the Nobility and Corporations, and conſequently Treaſons may be committed in the City, and there would not be enough to try it; and in the Caſe of the City of Worceſter, in a Quo Warranto brought againſt them, that Challenge was taken and over-rul'd by the King's-Bench, by Advice of the Judges of the Common-Pleas; that the Venire mentions no Freehold, but only Probos & Legales Homines de Vicineto.

Then the Chief Juſtice ask'd Mr. Pollexfen, Whether he did find any Judgment in Treaſon at Common Law, that no Freehold was a Challenge? who anſwer'd, He did not. Whereupon the Chief Juſtice reply'd, That then he did not ſpeak ad idem; for he took it in Caſe of Treaſon and Felony, at Common Law it was no Challenge; and the Statute of Henry the Fifth in that Point was introductive of a new Law, and that Statute as to Treaſon was repeal'd by that of Queen Mary; and that a Caſe cannot be found of ſuch a Challenge in Treaſon ſince the Statute of Queen Mary, but it was a buſineſs of great Importance.

The Chief Baron was of the ſame Opinion; for the ſame reaſon Juſtice Windham and Juſtice Jones were of the ſame Opinion; the laſt added, the rather becauſe the Priſoner is allow'd to challenge thirty five peremptorily: and Juſtice Charlton was of the ſame Opinion. and the rather becauſe no Precedent had been offer'd of ſuch a Challenge before: Juſtice Levins was of the ſame Opinion, for the ſame Reaſon: Juſtice Street was of the ſame Opinion, for the ſame Reaſons, and thought they had been very nice when the Life of the King lay at ſtake, and all the Cuſtoms and Privileges of the City of London ſeem'd to be level'd at in that Point: Juſtice Withens was of the ſame Opinion.

Then the Chief Juſtice told the Priſoner, the Court over-rul'd his Challenge; but that he had no hardſhip put upon him, for the Reaſon of Law for Freeholders was, that no ſlight Perſons ſhould be put upon the Jury, but in his Caſe there were Perſons of Quality and Subſtance put upon the Jury, which was the ſame in ſubſtance with a Jury of Freeholders.

Theſe being the Reaſons of over ruling that Challenge, they may be ranked under theſe Heads. There was no ſuch Challenge at Common Law; if there were, yet not in Treaſon. And if it were a Challenge in Treaſon, where the Tryal is in a County at large, yet not where it is in a City and County; and if in a City and County, yet not in London.

The aſſigning many Reaſons for one and the ſame thing, makes the Judgment juſtly ſuſpected: for if when two Witneſſes to one Fact varying in the Circumſtances of it, are juſtly ſuſpected in point of Truth, ſeveral Reaſons for the ſame Judg-

Judgment make the Knowledg or Integrity of the Judges juſtly ſuſpected; every Caſe in Law, as my Lords Coke and Hales ſay, ſtanding upon its own particular Reaſon: and therefore when many Reaſons are given, it looks as if the Judges were hunting about for Reaſons to make good what before hand they are reſolv'd to vent for Law, rather than that their Judgment is the Reſult of thoſe Reaſons.

But to conſider them ſingly, I do indeed think there is no expreſs Reſolution, that at Common Law, in any Caſe of any capital Matter, it was a good Challenge (except the Caſe of Fitzharris, already taken notice of) but in civil matters my Lord Coke is expreſs, that at Common Law it was a good Challenge; and with him Sir John Forteſcue ſeems to concur, who in his Expoſition on the Statute of Henry the 5th ſays, if the Debts or Damages be under forty Marks, the Juryman ſhall have Land to a competent Value, according to the Diſcretion of the Juſtices. My Lord Coke ſaith, in ſuch Caſe any Freehold ſufficeth; now how can that be true, if it were not neceſſary at Common Law to have ſome Freehold? for the Statute makes no Proviſion for Debt or Damages under forty Marks. It muſt therefore be by Common Law, that ſome Freehold was neceſſary, and that any Freehold ſhall ſuffice. And ſurely, if in civil Matters it was neceſſary for a Juror to have a Freehold, much more in capital Matters, and moſtly in Treaſon. It is very plain, that at Common Law no Man was thought to be a ſufficient Man but a Freeholder; and tho now, and for ſome time paſt, the Value of Trade is equal to that of Land, yet heretofore it was not ſo, and by what was heretofore, the Common Law is to be known.

The matter of Trade was heretofore ſo inconſiderable, and the Traders themſelves for that reaſon ſo vile, that it was a Diſparagement for a Freeholder to marry with a Tradeſman, as is to be ſeen by the Statute of Wharton: and therefore mere Tradeſmen, and not Freeholders, were not to be truſted with the concern of a Tryal in a civil Matter, and much leſs in a capital, and leaſt of all in a Tryal of High-Treaſon.

The Chief Juſtice Pemberton ſays, that the reaſon of Freeholders was, that no ſlight Perſons ſhould be put upon a Jury where the Life of a Man, or his Eſtate is in queſtion; it is plain therefore, the Concern of the thing to be tryed, is the meaſure of the ſubſtance of the Jury-man. If that be true, the Tryal in Treaſon is of the higheſt concern: How then is it true, as ſome of the Judges concluded, that tho Freehold might be requiſite in ſome Caſes at Common Law, yet in Treaſon certainly not? it is indeed a Paradox to me.

And the peremptory Challenge of thirty five allowed the Priſoner, is no Reaſon againſt the Challenge of no Freehold; for that is only a Privilege allowed the Priſoner in favorem Vitæ; and it might as well be argued, that no Challenge at all to the petty Jury ſhall be allow'd the Priſoner, becauſe he had a Grand Jury paſt upon him before, which is alſo in favorem Vitæ; that no Man at the King's Suit ſhall be ſo much as queſtion'd for his Life, till above the number of twelve ſubſtantial Men have on their Oaths ſaid they think the Accuſation true; and after that, he is allow'd to challenge peremptorily thirty five, and with Cauſe without number. To affirm therefore that no Freehold is not a cauſe of Challenge, becauſe he may challenge peremptorily thirty five, is a non ſequitur: and tho Non-uſage, that is to ſay, that this Challenge was never taken in Treaſon, was then us'd as an Argument, yet it is the weakeſt of Arguments, which is to be found in Littleton; tho even that Fact was not true, for the Challenge was taken and allow'd before, unleſs you will diſtinguiſh and ſay, that in that Caſe it was taken by the King, and therefore good, and in this by the Priſoner, and therefore bad. I'm ſure that difference cannot be warranted, either by Authority or Reaſon; and what tho Cook and the other Regicides and other Perſons did not take that Challenge is it an Argument that they could not, or that they thought they could not? perhaps they had forgotten to do it, as much as the Judges in this Caſe had forgotten their Reſolution in Fitzharris's Caſe; or perhaps they could not take it, their Jury being Freeholders; or perhaps it was to no purpoſe, they being tried in Middleſex, where a Jury of Freeholders would quickly be found. Nor is it an Argument that no Caſe of this Challenge at Common Law is to be found in the Books; for ſince the Statute of Henry the 5th to the time of Queen Mary, it could never be a Caſe, and from that time to this it could never be a Caſe in Felony: and the Law being ſo very plain, that if the Fact were with the Priſoner it was always allowed, if againſt the Priſoner it was diſallowed, not as not good in point of Law, but as not true in point of Fact; therefore the Challenge perhaps was not taken notice of in the Books, which only report Difficulties.

It is true of late, and it is but of late Practice, the whole Tranſactions of a Tryal are publiſhed for the benefit of the Publiſher, rather than for the common Good; and that indeed was the Motive of publiſhing Fitzharris's Tryal ſigned by Fra. Pemberton, and of Colledge's Tryal ſigned by Fra. North, and of my Lord Ruſſel's ſigned by William Pritchard Mayor, and Col. Sidney's Tryal ſigned by George Jefferies, and Mr. Corniſh's Tryal ſigned by Th mas Jones. And that is the reaſon, why ſince that Statute we find no Caſe of ſuch a Challenge in capital Matters, and before that Statute the Year-Books go but a little way.

It is enough there was no Reſolution that it was not a good Challenge, for it will be of the King's ſide to ſhew why that ſhould not be a good Challenge in Treaſon, which was in moſt if not in all other Caſes.

It is pretty to obſerve what ſteps were made in over-ruling this Challenge, ſome were of Opinion that it was no Challenge in any Caſe at Common Law; ſo ſaid the Attorney and Sollicitor General, the Chief Baron, Juſtice Windham, and Baron Street. The Chief Juſtice thought it no Challenge at Common Law in Treaſon or Felony only, but that the Statute of Henry the 5th made it a Challenge in Treaſon and Felony, but whether the Statute of Henry the 5th made it a Challenge in Treaſon, the Chief Baron and Juſtice Windham doubted. Juſtice Jones thought it no Challenge at Common Law in Treaſon; Juſtice Levins would not determine whether it was a good Challenge in any Caſe at Common Law, but he and Baron Street were clearly of Opinion it was not a good Challenge in London. The Chief Juſtice thought it a buſineſs of great Conſequence, not only for the Priſoner, but for all other Perſons: Baron Street thought the Judges had been very nice in the Matter, which in the Phraſe of the Law is giving themſelves a great deal of trouble in a matter very clear, or of no moment.

But tho they differ'd in their Reaſons, yet all agreed in this, and in this only, that tryed he ſhould be, and that preſently.

Then as for the Cuſtom of the City of London, to try without Freeholders, how did it appear to the Judges that there was any ſuch Cuſtom? Did they ever read of any ſuch Cuſtom in the City of London? Nay, were not the Statutes which were cited, where no Freehold was made no Challenge in London in particular Caſes, as ſo many expreſs Reſolutions, that there was no ſuch Cuſtom in the City? for if there had been ſuch Cuſtom, what need thoſe Statutes? To which the Judges never vouchſafed any Anſwer, becauſe in truth they could make no Anſwer.

But it was objected, there was the Reſolution in the City of Worceſter's Caſe, which I agree was of as good Authority, and of no better than the Judgment in the principal Matter of the Quo Warranto. And it was likewiſe objected, there would be a Failure of Juſtice in Cities, if the Challenge were good for want of Freeholders.

I ask, would it have been a Failure of Juſtice at Common Law, or by reaſon of ſomewhat which hath happened of late Times? There is none who pretends to know any thing of the Hiſtory of England, that will ſay, that heretofore the Cities were not inhabited moſtly by the Gentry, and eſpecially the City of London; partly for Luxury, partly for their Security; and then there was no want of Freeholders in the Cities, but when matters became more quiet, and Trade encreaſed, and made Houſes in the Cities more valuable, then were Houſes of equal Convenience, and leſs Price, ſituate in the Suburbs, or in the Country; the Gentry by degrees parted with their Houſes in the Cities to Tradeſmen for Profit, and remov'd themſelves to other Places. And I believe it may be remembred, that even the Strand, in the memory of Man, could have furniſh'd the County of Middleſex with a ſufficient number of Freeholders; and yet now, for the above Reaſons, you can hardly find a Jury of Freeholders there.

Beſides it muſt be remembered, that London heretofore had many of the King's Palaces in it, and the Countries did not then, as now, take up with Lodgings, but were Inhabitants of Houſes: and if the Failure of Juſtice happen by the above means, I am ſure it is againſt the Oath of the Judges to ſupply that Defect with their Reſolution; but it ought to have been ſupplied by an Act of the Legiſlative Power.

If the Neceſſity of the thing warrants the Judgment, how unlearned were the Judges in Henry the 7th and Henry the 8ths Times, that they did not ſupply the defect in Law in the City of London, and other Cities by their Reſolutions? How vain were the Parliaments in thoſe Times, who ſupplied thoſe defects in Law, mentioned in the Acts cited by thoſe Statutes, which were Works of time and trouble, if they had thought the Judges by their Reſolutions had Power to do it? for if they had Power to do it, they could have done it extempore, as in this Caſe.

For the laſt Objection, that the Writ mentions only Probos & Legales Homines, and ſpeaks nothing of Freeholders; Legales may be very well interpreted, to imply Men qualify'd by Law; but I take it, that Homines implies it, for by Homines de Comitatu are meant Freeholders of that County; and all others, in point of Truſt, are not conſider'd in Law. My Lord Coke in his Comment upon the 28th of Eliz. 1. cap. 8. which gives the Election of Sheriffs to the People of the County where the Sheriffwick is not in Fee, ſays, People there means Freeholders of the County; and the ſame is underſtood by Writs to the Counties to chooſe Coroners, Verderers and the like, tho' the Writ ſays per communitatem Comitatus, & de aſſenſu Comitatus.

And tho' the Writs of Venire in civil Matters, of late days, mention what Freehold each Juror ſhall have, yet that is by the Statute of the 35th of Hen. 8. cap. 6. which expreſly commands the Writ ſhall ſo expreſs it, in all Iſſues join'd in Weſtminſter, to be tried between Party and Party: before which time it is plain, the Venire, even in civil Matters, did not expreſs any Freehold, and that Statute doth not extend to iſſues join'd on Indictments.

Now if upon all which hath been ſaid, it is not plain, that the Challenge ought to have been allow'd, yet ſure it was doubtful; and if ſo, and a matter of great Conſequence, as the Chief Juſtice ſaid it was, why might not the Council for the Priſoner have had a little more time to have conſider'd of the Challenge before they had argu'd it, or the Judges have taken a little time to conſider the matter before they had given their Judgement? I dare ſay, none of them could remember any poſitive Reſolutions one way or other, nor upon a ſudden was it expected they ſhould; and therefore for their own ſakes, if not for the Priſoner's, they might have taken the Morning, if not the Day. The Priſoner deſir'd his Tryal to be put off, for to have conſider'd of it; in that time perhaps ſome of them might have remembred, or others might have put them in mind of their Reſolutions in Fitzharris's Caſe; they might have conſider'd how to diſtinguiſh between that Caſe and this, and not run away with it, that that Challenge was never made in Treaſon, as all the Judges affirm'd. But my Lord Ruſſel was told by the Court, that they always tried the Priſoner in Treaſon the Day he was arraign'd, and could not put off the Tryal for a Morning without the Attorny General's Conſent; but ſurely that is not true, Plunket and Fitzharris were try'd the Term after they were arraign'd, tho' the Attorny General oppos'd it. It is true, he ſubmitted to the Rule, as it was as much his Duty to do as the Priſoner's; but if there be a difference between an Arraignment at Weſtminſter and the Old-Baily, as to the ſpeeding the Tryal, the Place will not vary the reaſon of the thing, if there be not any Law for it, as there is not; but even at the Old-Baily, the Tryal in Treaſon hath been put off to another Seſſions, it was done in Whitebread's Caſe, and in many other Caſes. If it be ſaid that was by the Attorny General's Conſent, I ſay that makes no difference, for the Judge is to be indifferent between the Attorny General and the Priſoner. If the Court muſt order nothing but what the Attorny aſſents to, why is not the Priſoner try'd and judg'd by the Attorny alone? or what needs all the Formality of a Tryal? If it be ſaid that that Tryal was put off, becauſe the King's Witneſſes were not ready; I ſay there is the ſame Reaſon to put off a Tryal, becauſe cauſe the Priſoner's Witneſſes are not ready, and that was the pretended, tho' not the true Reaſon of putting off Fitzharris's Tryal to another Term, and there is no Law to the contrary.

It is totally in the Diſcretion of the Judges to put off a Tryal, which Diſcretion ought to be govern'd by Reaſon.

But indeed this was extraordinary and without any Precedent: it can never be ſhewn in the Caſe of the greateſt or meaneſt Perſons, being accus'd of the greateſt or leaſt Crime, that ever the delay of a Day, much leſs of a Morning, for his Tryal was denied, where he ſhew'd but any Colour for what he ſaid, when the Seſſions were to continue after the time he deſir'd, as in this Caſe it did. Fitzharris ſaid his Witneſſes were in Holland, and tho' he nam'd no Perſons, yet his Tryal was put off to the next Term; my Lord Ruſſel ſaid his Witneſſes could not be in Town till that Night, yet the Reſpite till next Day was deny'd: all Perſons agreed, that there was ſome extraordinary Reaſon for it, and before the Tryal was over the Riddle was out.

My Lord of Eſſex was kill'd, or to be kill'd that Morning; as to this Matter, it is not material whether by his own or another's Hand: they were ſenſible the Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel was very defective, and that Accident was to help it out, but that would not avail unleſs it were a ſurprizing matter upon the Jury; ſhould the Jury have had a Days or but a Mornings time to conſider of it, People might have been talking with the Jury. It was very material to ask, what influence that Accident would have on my Ruſſel's Tryal, whether it was any Evidence againſt him: they might have been told what was true, that no Perſon kill'd was in Law ſuppos'd to have kill'd himſelf, till a Coroner's Inqueſt had ſat upon the view of his Body, and found it ſo; and if it had been ſo found, yet even that had been no Evidence againſt another, becauſe the Coroner's Inqueſt never found the reaſon why a Man kill'd himſelf; and if they ſhould find the reaſon, yet even that was no Evidence againſt another, becauſe that other was never call'd before the Coroner's Inqueſt to make his Defence. They might have been told a great many Circumſtances of the Improbability of the killing himſelf; they might have obſerv'd that the King's Council were ſo far ſenſible, that it was no Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel, that they never attempted to prove the Earl of Eſſex was dead or kill'd himſelf: it was only ſlily inſinuated, together with the reaſon of it, which had its Effect, if the Report be true of ſome of the Jurymen's ſaying it went farther with them than all the Evidence of the Witneſſes produc'd; and if that be true, there was a reaſon, tho' not a juſt one, for ſpeeding that Tryal beyond the ordinary Methods of Tryals at the Old Baily.

But tho' my Lord Ruſſel had ſeemingly leſs favour in that Matter than any other Perſon, even than Colledge, who had the reſpite of two or three hours between his Arraignment and Tryal, (tho' that was not in favour to Colledge, but only to examine his Papers which they took from him, and inſtruct their Witneſſes accordingly) yet in other things he had more Favour or Juſtice done him: his Papers were not taken from him; it was agreed to be his Right to uſe them without queſtioning from whom he had them, what they were, or the like, as in Colledge's Caſe was done; he had a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury, even before his Arraignment, given him; and the Chief Juſtice ſaid it was never denied in Caſe of Life that he knew of, which was denied Colledge before he pleaded; becauſe then 'twas pretended there was no Iſſue join'd, till Plea pleaded, after which the Venire is awarded; tho' all Men know, that the Sheriff ſummons the Jury before the Arraignment, and even after Iſſue join'd. Colledge was denied a Copy of the Pannel, only he was told, he ſhould look every Juryman in the Face before he was ſworn; and as far as the Looks of a Man betrays him, he ſhould be ſatisfy'd whether he was honeſt or not, which is an ill way of judging; for I think the Perſon that gave that Rule, would have deceiv'd any Man by his Countenance, who had known his Practices.

But ſays the Attorny General, in my Lord Ruſſel's Caſe it was matter of Favour, and not of Right, therefore no Injuſtice to Colledge. I confeſs of all Men who ever came to the Bar, he hath laid down the moſt Rules, which depend totally upon the Authority of his own ſaying; in Colledge's Caſe he affirm'd, that the King's Witneſſes ought not to be kept out of the hearing of each other, when they gave their Evidence (a method us'd in civil Matters, the reaſon of which is well known, and none can ſhow any Law or Reaſon why it ſhould not be us'd in capital Matters) with as much Reaſon and Authority as what now ſaid.

Firſt, I do affirm there is no Authority in Law, which ſays a Priſoner ſhall not have a Copy of the Pannel; in the next place I affirm, that after a Jury ſtruck in a civil Matter, each Party ought to have a Copy of the Pannel, in order to provide himſelf of a Challenge, if there be any Cauſe: In the laſt place, I affirm, that by Law more Favour is allow'd a Defendant in a capital Matter to defend himſelf, than in a Civil. And if theſe Propoſitions be true, let any Perſon if he can make out the Law, or Reaſon of the above Aſſertions.

Of a like Stamp was the Saying, when my Lord deſir'd a Copy of the Matter of Fact laid againſt him, of the Attorny that he had notice of it; for Queſtions were put to him about it, and he was with his Lordſhip himſelf, and examin'd him upon thoſe Queſtions, which was a Favour to him, that he might know what the Matter was he was accus'd of.

I do not affirm that ever it was practis'd, to give the Priſoner a Note of the Fact, to be given in Evidence againſt him, proving Treaſon, or that it was ever denied till then, nor do I know of any Law pro or con in the Caſe; but if one would judge by Reaſon or Practice in parallel Caſes, I think it ought not to be deny'd.

I know not at preſent of more than two ſorts of general Indictments, and thoſe are of Treaſon and Barretry; the laſt is a general Indictment, for ſtirring up Suits without Reaſon, and without mentioning any Suit in particular: and therefore if by the Rule of the Court the Defendant was not help'd, which obliges the Proſecutor to give the Defendant, ſome reaſonable time before the Tryal, a Note of what Suits he intends to give in Evidence againſt him, it was impoſſible for the Defendant to eſcape, if it had been his Misfortune to have had five or ſix Suits.

For

For I never yet ſaw a Witneſs produc'd againſt the indicted, but he would ſwear the indicted brought an Action againſt him without Reaſon; and yet I have often ſeen, that the indicted having had notice, that that was one of the Suits he was intended to be charg'd with, hath been able to prove that he had good, or at leaſt probable Cauſe of Suit, which he could not have done if he had not notice. And in Treaſon, for deſigning to kill the King, there have been ſo many Interpretations of Facts tending that way, that it is almoſt impoſſible for an Innocent to defend himſelf, unleſs he had notice of the Fact intended to be inſiſted on at the Tryal.

There are yet ſome Expreſſions which mightily puzzle me: the King's Council ſaid in the Argument of the Challenge, that they would not have the Point of being a Juryman, tho' not a Freeholder, loſt to the City of London; and one of the Judges ſaid, 'twas the Privileges of the City were ſtruck at in that Point. If by thoſe Expreſſions be meant, that it is for the benefit of the Publick that there ſhould be no failure of Juſtice, I agree to it; but if it be meant that it is for the benefit of the Citizens to be Jurymen, I deny it: and I think nothing ſhews it plainer, than that it is a Privilege that a Citizen ſhall not be drawn out of the City to be a Juryman; that a Nobleman ſhall not be on a Jury; that it is a Matter of Prerogative in the King, and Favour to a particular Perſon, to grant a Charter of Exemption from being on a Jury. So that if I conſider the Law, I know what is meant by thoſe Expreſſions; if I conſider allow'd Practice, it is true, a Juryman may earn his Eight-pence for a Tryal; but that is too inconſiderable pay for Perſons of Subſtance, as the Jurymen in this Caſe were ſaid to be, to be fond of the Employ, or to account it a Privilege. Yet even that was but in civil Matters; in criminal Matters, not Capital, the Jury were heretofore paid if they acquitted the Defendant, but not if they found him guilty; tho' of late it hath been practis'd to give them more, and treat them higher if they convicted the Defendant, than if they acquitted him: But in capital Matters, as the Caſe in queſtion was, it was never allow'd, or at leaſt own'd to pay the Jury, be the Verdict which way it would.

Having ſpoken to the Preliminaries, I proceed to the Tryal, wherein Colonel Rumſey was firſt produc'd: he ſaid, he was ſent by my Lord Shaftsbury about the end of October, or beginning of November; who told him, he ſhould meet at one Sheppard's the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Ruſſel, Lord Gray, Sir Thomas Armſtrong and Mr. Ferguſon, to know of them what Reſolution they were come to about the Riſing of Taunton: Sheppard carry'd him where they were, and anſwer was made, Mr. Trenchard had fail'd them, and there would be no more done in the Matter at that time; thereupon the Lord Shaftsbury took a Reſolution to be gone: Mr. Ferguſon ſpoke moſt of the Meſſage, and he thought the Lord Gray ſpoke ſomething to the ſame purpoſe; he did not know how often he had been at that Houſe, he was there more than once, or elſe he heard Mr. Ferguſon make a Report of another Meeting to the Lord Shaftsbury, my Lord Ruſſel was in the Room, and that was all they ſaid at that time that he remembred, he was not there above a quarter of an hour. There was ſome Diſcourſe about ſeeing in what poſture the Guards at the Mews and Savoy were in by all the Company, to know how to ſurprize them if the Riſing had gone on; Sir Thomas Armſtrong and Mr. Ferguſon began, all debated it; he thought the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Gray, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong were ſent to view them; the Riſing was appointed to be the 19th of November; he was ſpoke to by the Lord Shaftsbury to go to Briſtol if the Riſing had gone on, but in what Quality was not determin'd: The Lord Ruſſel agreed to the Debate. Being ask'd if my Lord Ruſſel ſaid any thing there, and what; he anſwer'd, My Lord Ruſſel ſpoke about the Riſing at Taunton: Being ask'd what my Lord Ruſſel ſaid, he anſwer'd, My Lord Ruſſel diſcourſed of the Riſing; being ask'd if my Lord gave his Conſent to the Riſing, he ſaid he did.

The next Witneſs was Mr. Sheppard, who ſaid, In October laſt Mr. Ferguſon came to him in the Duke of Monmouth's Name, and deſir'd the conveniency of his Houſe for himſelf and ſome Perſons of Quality, which he granted. In the Evening the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Gray, Lord Ruſſel, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Colonel Rumſey, and Mr. Ferguſon came, not all together, but the one after the other. Sir Thomas Armſtrong deſir'd, that none of his Servants might come up, and that they might be private; ſo what they wanted he went down for, a Bottle of Wine, or ſo: the ſubſtance of the Diſcourſe was, to ſurprize the King's Guards; and in order to it, the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Gray, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, went one Night, as he remembred, to the Mews, or thereabouts, to ſee the Guards; and the next time they came to his Houſe, he heard Sir Thomas Armſtrong ſay, the Guards were very remiſs in their places, and not like Soldiers, and the thing was feaſible if they had but ſtrength to do it: he remembred but two Meetings there; they came in the Evening; he neither heard nor ſaw any Coaches at his Door: When they came in, as he remembred, the Lord Ruſſel was both times there; he had no buſineſs with the Lord Ruſſel, nor the Lord Ruſſel with him at that time, but ſince he had: He did not remember Colonel Rumſey diſcours'd the Lord Ruſſel about any private Buſineſs, nor remember'd any farther Diſcourſe; he remember'd no Writings nor Papers read at that time: upon recollection he remember'd one Paper read by Mr. Ferguſon in the nature of a Declaration, ſetting forth the Grievances of the Nation, the Particulars he could not tell; it was a pretty large Paper, it was ſhew'd for Approbation as he ſuppos'd, when to be ſet out was not diſcours'd; 'twas ſhew'd to Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and as he remember'd the Duke of Monmouth was preſent, and he thought Colonel Rumſey was preſent: Colonel Rumſey ſaid, he was not preſent, it was done before he came. Mr. Sheppard went on and ſaid, the deſign of the Paper was in order to a Riſing, as he ſuppos'd by the Purport of it; he would not ſay the Lord Ruſſel was there when that Paper was read, but he was there when the talk was about ſeizing the Guards; he could not be poſitive as to the times of thoſe Meetings, but it was when the Lord Shaftsbury was abſent from his Houſe, he abſented about Michaelmas Day; he could not be poſitive that my Lord Ruſſel was at both Meetings; he thought he was at both, he was ſure he was at one.

The

The laſt Witneſs was the Lord Howard. He ſaid he brought Captain Walcot acquainted with the Lord Shaftsbury; and upon his account Captain Walcot ſoon gain'd a confidence with the Lord Shaftsbury: Walcot told him, the People were ſenſible all their Intereſt was going to be loſt by the Violence offer'd to the City in the Election of Sheriffs, and that they were reſolv'd to take ſome courſe to put a ſtop to it: that there were ſeveral meetings about it, and ſome Perſons began to prepare to act; that ſome had good Horſes, and kept them in private Stables, and he reſolv'd to be one in it: He having an Eſtate in Ireland, he diſpatch'd his Son thither, and order'd his Son to turn his Stock into Mony; the Son went about Auguſt: that the 30*th* of September, Walcot din'd with him; told him, that the Lord Shaftsbury was ſecreted, and deſir'd to ſpeak with him: Walcot brought him to the Lord Shaftsbury, who complain'd of the Duke of Monmouth and the Lord Ruſſel for deſerting him; but there was ſuch preparation made in London, that now he was able to do it of himſelf, and intended to do it ſuddenly; he had above 10000 briſk Boys ready to follow him when he held up his Finger, they would poſſeſs themſelves of the Gates, and in twenty four hours they would multiply to five times the number, and would be able to poſſeſs Whitehall by beating the Guards. The Lord Howard went to the Duke of Monmouth, told him the Lord Shaftsbury's Complaint, who ſaid, the Lord Ruſſel and he told the Lord Shaftsbury from the beginning, that there was nothing to be done by them in the Country at that time. The Matter of the Diſcourſe between him and the Duke of Monmouth, him and the Lord Shaftsbury, and him and Walcot, is too tedious to relate, and as little to the purpoſe, if the Jury had underſtood Matter of Law which they did not; in it he takes care to ſhew what Confidence my Lord Shaftsbury had in him, more than in the Duke of Monmouth or the Lord Ruſſel; how very cautious he was, and how precipitate the Lord Shaftsbury was, and that what he told the Duke of Monmouth the Duke told the Lord Ruſſel; and he heard the Lord Ruſſel had been with the Lord Shaftsbury, and put off the intended Riſing. At which the Lord Ruſſel interrupted him, and ſaid, he thought he had very hard meaſure, there was a great deal of Evidence given by hearſay only: Whereupon the Chief Juſtice ſaid, it was nothing againſt the Priſoner; he declar'd it to the Jury, but the Attorny General bid the Lord Howard go on in the method of Time, and that it was nothing againſt the Priſoner, but the Witneſſes were coming to it if his Lordſhip would have patience, he aſſur'd him ſo. The Lord Howard went on where he left off, with a ſtory between him and Walcot of an intended Riſing, and of ſome dark Sayings let fall by Walcot and the Lord Gray, importing a Deſign upon the King's Perſon; but the Lord Howard was very careful to put all off, but at laſt it was reſolv'd to riſe on the 17*th* of November: But the Lord Howard fearing it had been diſcover'd, becauſe he ſaw a Proclamation a little before forbidding Bonefires without the Lord Mayor's leave, that of the 17*th* of November was alſo diſappointed, and the Lord Shaftsbury went away and died; but conſidering they had gone ſo far that it was not ſafe to retreat, and likewiſe that ſo great an Affair as that, conſiſting of ſuch infinite Particulars, was to be manag'd with ſo much fineneſs, they erected a Cabal of ſix Perſons, the Duke of Monmouth, Lord of Eſſex, Lord Ruſſel, Mr. Hamden, Algernon Sidney, and himſelf, about the middle of January laſt; and about that time they met at Mr. Hamden's Houſe, where it was conſider'd whether the Inſurrection ſhould be in London, or in a place diſtant; what Countries and Towns were fitteſt and moſt diſpos'd to Action; what Arms neceſſary to be provided; how to raiſe twenty five or thirty thouſand Pounds, and how they might ſo order it as to draw Scotland into a Conſent with them.

About ten days after they met at the Lord Ruſſel's Houſe, and reſolv'd to ſend ſome Perſons into Scotland to the Lord Argyle, to invite ſome Perſons hither to give an Account of that Kingdom; the Perſons to be invited were Sir Jo. Cockram, Lord Melvil, Sir Campbel; that Matter was refer'd to Col. Sidney, who told him he had ſent Aaron Smith; they agreed not to meet again till the return of the Meſſenger: The Meſſenger was gone about a month, it was ſix Weeks or more before he return'd, and then his Lordſhip was forc'd to go into Eſſex, where he had a ſmall Concern; there he ſtaid three weeks, and when he return'd, he was inform'd Sir John Cockram was come to Town, and afterwards he was forced to go to the Bath, where he ſpent five weeks; and from that time to this was five weeks, all which time was a Parentheſis to him; and that he and the five mention'd erected themſelves by mutual Agreement into that Society.

Atterbury ſwore Campbel was in his Cuſtody: then Col. Rumſey was ask'd, whether my Lord Ruſſel heard him when he deliver'd his Meſſage to the Company, and in what place of the Room the Company were: who anſwer'd, that when he came in, they were ſtanding by the Fire-ſide, but all came from thence to hear him; and when my Lord Ruſſel ſaid, Col. Rumſey was there when he came in, Rumſey ſaid, No, the Duke of Monmouth and Lord Ruſſel went away together.

Then in behalf of my Lord Ruſſel the Earl of Angleſey was examin'd, who ſaid, that viſiting the Earl of Bedford, the Lord Howard came in, and told the Earl of Bedford, that his Son could not be in ſuch a Plot, or ſuſpected of it; and that he knew nothing againſt the Lord Ruſſel, or any body elſe, of ſuch a barbarous Deſign: And he was going on again with what the Lady Chaworth had told him, but was interrupted by the King's Council, telling him, as the Court would not permit them to give Hear ſay in Evidence againſt the Priſoner, ſo they muſt not permit his Lordſhip to give Hear-ſay in Evidence for the Priſoner.

Mr. Howard ſaid, that the Lord Howard took it upon his Honour, and his Faith, he knew nothing of any Perſon concern'd in that Buſineſs, and not only thought my Lord Ruſſel unjuſtly ſuffer'd, but he took God and Man to witneſs, he thought my Lord Ruſſel the worthieſt Man in the World.

Dr. Burnet ſaid, the Lord Howard was with him, and he did then, as he had done before, with Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven, declare, he knew nothing of any Plot, nor believ'd any, and treated it with great Scorn and Contempt.

The Lord Cavendiſh teſtify'd as to the Life and Converſation of the Lord Ruſſel, and thence concluded, it was not likely he ſhould be guilty of any

any ſuch Matter, and heard the Lord Ruſſel ſpeak of Rumſey, as if he had an ill Opinion of him, and therefore it was not likely he ſhould truſt him. Dr. Tillotſon ſpoke of his Converſation. Dr. Burnet and Dr. Cox ſpoke of his Converſation, and of his Averſneſs to all Riſings. Dr. Cox teſtify'd, that my Lord Ruſſel ſaid the Lord Howard was a Man of luxuriant Parts, but he had the luck not to be truſted by any Party. The Duke of Somerſet ſpoke of the Lord Ruſſel's Converſation. The Lord Clifford, Mr. Leveſon Gore, Mr. Spencer, and Dr. Fitzwilliams ſpoke of the Lord Ruſſel's Converſation. The Lord Howard being ask'd by the Jury what he ſaid to the Earl of Angleſey's Evidence, own'd what the Earl ſaid, but he did it to outface the Matter; and if he ſaid untrue, he ought not to be believ'd on his Oath, and inſinuated, that he meant what he ſaid to be meant of a Deſign of murdering the King, which he did not believe the Duke of Monmouth or the Lord Ruſſel guilty of.

This being the ſum of the Evidence given againſt, or for my Lord Ruſſel, let us conſider how far it will juſtify the Verdict given againſt him: firſt conſider the Improbability of Rumſey's Evidence, if my Lord Cavendiſh ſaid true, that he ſhould truſt Rumſey to hear the debate about ſeizing the Gards, when the Lord Ruſſel had an ill Opinion of Rumſey. As for Rumſey's delivering the Meſſage, there was no great Matter in that, it is impoſſible to hinder Peoples ſpeaking, and it is not Treaſon to conceal what's ſaid; beſides it was well known, it was Rumſey's way to talk extravagantly, in order to accuſe thoſe that heard him, if they did not diſcover it. But beſides the Improbability of the Evidence in reſpect of the Perſon, the manner of delivering the Evidence, and the Evidence it ſelf was ſuch as carry'd no Colour of Truth with it: he ſaid he deliver'd his Meſſage, and had an Anſwer to it, and being ask'd what the Company ſaid further, anſwer'd, that was all that was ſaid at that time that he remember'd, and gives a very good Reaſon for it, for he ſtay'd not above a quarter of an hour, and added that he was not certain whether he then heard ſomething of a Declaration there, or whether Mr. Ferguſon reported it to my Lord Shaftsbury, that they had debated it; and yet when Sheppard ſaid Rumſey was there when the Declaration was read, he deny'd it, and ſaid it was read before he came in. Being ask'd to what the Declaration tended, he anſwer'd to another Matter, viz. that there was ſome diſcourſe about ſeeing what Poſture the Guards were in, and ſaid that all the the Company debated it; and being drawn on by Queſtions, ſaid it was in order to ſeize the Guards, if the Riſing had gone on. Now how doth that Part of the Evidence agree with what he ſaid before, that there was nothing more ſaid than the delivering his Meſſage, and the Anſwer to it? and how doth it agree with the time he ſaid he ſtay'd, which was not above a quarter of an hour? whereas that debate, if all the Perſons preſent being ſix debated it, as he ſaid they did, it would certainly have taken up a larger time. How does the firſt and laſt part of his Evidence agree, when he ſaid, my Lord Ruſſel agreed to the Anſwer of his Meſſage? and being ask'd whether and what he ſpoke to it, ſaid, he ſpoke about the riſing at Taunton, but doth not ſay what; and yet in the firſt part of his Evidence he ſaid, when ask'd who ſent the Meſſage back, Mr. Ferguſon deliver'd the Anſwer, the Duke of Monmouth and the Lord Ruſſel were preſent, and he thought the Lord Gray ſaid ſomething to the ſame purpoſe. But what Credit could be given to any part of a Man's Evidence, whoſe Memory was ſo ſhallow, that he could not remember whether he was at two Meetings, or whether Mr. Ferguſon related one of them to the Lord Shaftsbury? yet both were ſuppos'd to be within the Compaſs of a year, whereas a Man of Senſe is ſuppos'd to remember all his own Acts for ſeven years paſt, which is the Reaſon why the Chancery obliges a Man to anſwer as to his own Acts poſitively for ſeven years, without ſaying as he believeth, or as he remembreth, or the like. What Credit is to be given to a Witneſs who teſtifieth what was ſaid in company, and by whom, when his Memory doth not ſerve to anſwer poſitively, whether he was in the Company, or whether another told him what was there ſaid? he might as well have ſaid he was there, or dreamt he was there, or that he heard the Diſcourſe or dreamt of it, which had carry'd equal Credit with it.

It was plain, the Man was not of ſane Memory enough to make a Will, much leſs to be a Witneſs in the Tryal of a Man's Life; and nothing can be ſaid for him, but that he was a Witneſs for the King, that is to ſay, a mad Man may be a Witneſs to take away a Man's Life, which is as good Law as a great deal of other Cant vented as a part of the Prerogative.

It is true one of the King's Council recommends Rumſey to the Jury, as a very credible Witneſs under the notion of an unwilling Witneſs: but had the ſame Perſon been a Council for the Priſoner, he would have call'd Rumſey a dancing Witneſs, for he ſaid backwards and forwards; and an amaz'd Witneſs, for being ask'd one thing, he anſwer'd another; being ask'd as to the Declaration, he anſwer'd to the ſeizing of the Guards; being ask'd whether my Lord Ruſſel aſſented to the Anſwer of the Meſſage, he reply'd, yes, becauſe he talk'd of the Riſing, &c. which might be as well againſt as for it.

Sheppard's Evidence was to the Deſign of ſeizing the Guards, and as to the Declaration, he remember'd but two Meetings, at both which he ſaid, as he remember'd, my Lord Ruſſel was preſent, but he could not be poſitive in that, and the times of the Meetings he did not remember: he ſaid, the ſubſtance of the Diſcourſe was, how to ſurprize the King's Guards, and that the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Gray and Sir Tho. Armſtrong went to ſee the Guards, as he remember'd; and the next time they came to the Houſe, Sir Tho. Armſtrong ſaid the Guards were very remiſs, &c. Taking this Evidence by it ſelf, without tacking Rumſey's Evidence to it, it was ſo far from being Evidence of Treaſon, that it was no Crime; for he doth not ſay, it was intended to be put in practice, notwithſtanding all ſaid by him; both the Diſcourſes and the Perſons viewing the Guards (which laſt was not Evidence, nor ought to have been given in Evidence) might be a Matter to try each others Judgments, as well as an Evidence of a thing deſign'd: and if it be capable of two Interpretations, the Law hath ſaid, it ſhall be taken in mitiore ſenſu, in favour of Life; that diſtinction was taken by the Chief Juſtice in Plague's Caſe, the day after this Tryal, where the Evidence againſt him was a Diſcourſe about taking the Tower, as high a Crime as ſeizing the Guards; and upon that Blague was acquitted. It is true Rumſey ſaid it was in order to be put in practice, when the Riſing ſhould be in the Country, but that he did not ſay at firſt; but was afterwards led to it by queſtions; nor did he ſpeak it as a thing at that or at any other time determin'd, but as his own ſurmiſe or gueſs, becauſe he knew of an intended Riſing. Yet how fooliſhly did he contradict himſelf? for ſays Rumſey it was to have been put in practice, if the intended Riſing had gone on, and yet at the ſame Meeting he had ſaid before, the Riſing was put off: how contradictory therefore is it to ſay they made Preparations for a thing they had laid aſide before? And it is plain Sheppard ſpeaks of the ſame time; for both agree, Rumſey was at that Meeting, tho they do not agree how ſoon he came: beſides, how could Sheppard ſpeak poſitively of the Diſcourſe, or of the Deſign of it, when he owns he did not hear all their Diſcourſe, and gives a very good Reaſon for it? for he ſaid he went ſeveral times down to fetch Wine, Sugar and Nutmeg, and did not know what was ſaid in his Abſence: he ſaid he heard nothing about a Riſing, nor heard any further diſcourſe; but on recollection, he heard ſomething about a Declaration of Grievances in order to a Riſing, as he ſuppos'd; the Particulars he could not tell. Now what ſort of Evidence was that? In all civil matters, a Witneſs ſhall not be permitted to give Evidence of the Content of a Deed or Writing without producing the Deed or Writing it ſelf, or a true Copy of it, and upon very good Reaſon? for he may make an untrue Conſtruction of it. I remember a Witneſs who ſwore to the Content of a Deed of Intail, and being ask'd whether he knew a Deed of Intail, and by what he knew the Deed he ſpoke of to be a Deed of Intail, anſwer'd he knew a tailed Deed very well, and he knew the Deed to be a tailed Deed, becauſe it had a Tail half as long as his Arm, meaning the Label of the Deed. And if this be the Practice and the Reaſon of the Practice in civil Matters, ſhew me any Authority or Reaſon any thing ſhould be permitted to be given in Evidence in Treaſon, which is not permitted to be given in Evidence in the Tryal of any civil Matter.

If you ſay, as Juſtice Levins ſaid in a like Caſe in Colledge's Tryal, that it would be the difficulteſt thing in the World to prove Treaſon againſt a Man, if the Law were not ſo, and the King would in no ſort be ſafe; on the other hand I ſay as Colledge there ſaid, if the Law ſhould be ſo, no private Perſon is ſafe: and if there be Miſchief of either hand, the Law is and muſt be Judg, which hath taken care (tho to no purpoſe, becauſe it hath not been obſerv'd) that there ſhall be a ſtricter Proof in Treaſon than in any civil Matter, or in any other Crime: and how the Judges came to permit that looſe Evidence in Treaſon to be given, which of late years they have done, no juſt or honeſt Account can be given.

The laſt material Witneſs againſt my Lord Ruſſel was my Lord Howard (as for Atterbury's Evidence, it ought not to have been permitted to be given, as ſhall be ſhewn, nor was it material) to no part of whoſe Evidence any Credit ought to be given, even by his own Confeſſion: he was ſurely in the right, when he ſaid that the Religion of an Oath is not ty'd to a Place; and I'll add, not to a Form, but receives its Obligation from the Appeal therein made to God; and therefore if he ſaid (tho I own he was not bound to ſay it) to the Earl of Bedford, Mr. Howard and Dr. Burnet, what was teſtify'd againſt him, he ought not to be believ'd in any part of his Evidence. Did he ſay true to my Lord Bedford, when unſent for and unask'd (for ought appears after my Lord Ruſſel was clapt into the Tower) that ſure his Son could never be in any ſuch Plot as that, or ſuſpected for it, and that he knew nothing againſt him, or any body elſe, of ſuch a barbarous Deſign; and yet he knew if he ſwore true that my Lord Ruſſel was guilty of ſuch a barbarous Deſign, that nothing but the Lord Howard's Duty to God, the King and the Country, could prevail with him to give it in Evidence againſt a Perſon for whom he had ſo great an Affection as he had for my Lord Ruſſel. How was it conſiſtent with the truth of his Evidence what he ſaid to Mr. Howard, that he knew nothing of any Man's being concern'd in that buſineſs, and particularly of my Lord Ruſſel, whom he highly commended, and ſaid he thought the Lord Ruſſel unjuſtly ſuffer'd; or with what he ſaid to Dr. Burnet with Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven, which is as much an Appeal to God as may be, that he knew nothing of any Plot, nor believ'd any? It was an idle Evaſion to ſay, when he ſpoke of my Lord Ruſſel, he meant my Lord Ruſſel was not guilty of the Deſign of murdering the King (for which that Man, as he ſaid, was committed, meaning Walcot, the Lord Ruſſel, or any other Perſon) for he is ſtill at liberty to explain himſelf, and I am apt to think they were all committed by Warrants of the ſame Form. I know not how dextrous he is at paring an Apple, but he muſt be an excellent Logician that can reconcile the truth of his Evidence and Sayings. The truth is, a Man that has thoſe Niceties in his Head ought to have no Credit; for no Man knows whether he underſtands what he ſays aright, and I am apt to think his Lordſhip could ſhew, that he did not intend what he ſaid at my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal in the Senſe it was underſtood by the Court or Jury. To ſay, that he was to outface the thing for himſelf and his Party, was as vain (for beſides that I think he was of no Party, becauſe, as my Lord Ruſſel ſaid, he had the luck to be truſted by none) Where was the Senſe of making thoſe Proteſtations to Perſons who could do him no good, and would do him no harm, both which my Lord Pemberton could; and therefore 'twas not alike? It is true, the Attorny General commends the Lord Howard as a Perſon of great Credit amongſt the Party, and inſinuates the Lord Gray was left out of the Cabal for his Immorality, and the Lord Howard was taken in his place. But to paſs from the General of his Evidence to the Particulars of it, for about two leaves in the Print of it; it is a diſcourſe between my Lord Shaftsbury and him, wherein he makes my Lord Shaftsbury have a wondrous Confidence in him, and diſcovers all the Deſign to him, and what number of Men he had at Command; but who they were, or what they were, was never yet diſcover'd, and yet the Lord Howard had not at that time been concern'd in the Matter, nor did then aſſent: he very prudently was reſolv'd to ſee whether it was likely to take effect or not before he would enter on it. It was indeed a Matter of great Wonder to thoſe who knew my Lord Shaftsbury, and knew what Opinion he had of the Lord Howard from the time he diſcover'd that the Lord Howard frequented the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, which was before Fitzharris his Tryal (tho after that Tryal the Matter was publickly own'd, which was before ſuſpected by moſt known to the Lord Shaftsbury) that he ſhould ſo readily truſt the Lord Howard with the ſecret, who was unconcern'd in the management before, as he ſays himſelf, and yet ſecreted himſelf from the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Ruſſel, who were equally guilty, if what was ſworn was true. I cannot but obſerve that in all the time of the Lord Shaftsbury, the Lord Howard was no otherwiſe concern'd in the pretended Deſign, but in raiſing Difficulties, and being in great fear leſt there ſhould be a Riſing or an Attempt upon the King's Perſon: and if he ſaid true, he was the Man that put off the intended Riſings, and likewiſe the intended Deſign on the King's Perſon, inſomuch that I think he was ſo far from ſtanding in need of a Pardon for Treaſon, that he deſerv'd a conſiderable Reward, if it were for nothing elſe than for his fearing the Deſign was diſcover'd by the Proclamation againſt Bonefires, which, as he ſaid, put off the Riſing intended to be the 17*th* of November; and yet he and others being afraid, the middle of January they erected themſelves into a Cabal of ſix Perſons, of which there is but one Perſon in all his Narrative he pretends to have ſpoken to about that Matter before, which is the Duke of Monmouth, and but one more he pretends even by hearſay to be concern'd in it before, which is my Lord Ruſſel. How improbable therefore was it, that thoſe ſix Perſons ſhould, as it were on ſight, put themſelves upon ſuch a dangerous Deſign, eſpecially conſidering the Reaſon he gives for it, which was their Fears, that what had been tranſacted was, or might be diſcover'd? This likewiſe is obſervable, that from the 30*th* of September, the time the Sheriffs entred upon their Office, to the 17*th* of November following, he is very exact as to the time of each Matter, when there was no Perſon could contradict him; for my Lord Shaftsbury was dead, Walcot was convicted, and the Duke of Monmouth was gone, who are all the Perſons mention'd to be concern'd in that time: yet when he comes to ſpeak of the Matter in which my Lord Ruſſel was concern'd, then he ſays it was about the middle of January, about ten days after, about ſix weeks after, about three weeks and five weeks; for had he been preciſe in the times, he might have been diſprov'd in the Meetings he gave Evidence of: and it is much his Memory was ſo very good as to the former times, to be ſo very preciſe in them as he was, and ſo very defective in the latter times; and yet thoſe times do not make up the ſpace between the middle of January, and the time of the Tryal by many weeks, unleſs you will give large Allowances to the word about; an Exception which was taken to Mowbray's Evidence, tho he rectify'd it by his Account in his Almanack; but it would not be admitted, tho Colledge very ſenſibly deſir'd of the Court for Juſtice ſake to look on the Almanack, to ſee whether it was newly writ, as if done for that purpoſe.

Beſides the Improbability, if ſuch a thing was in hand, as the Lord Howard pretended, for him to run into the Country, and then to the Bath, when the Matter was juſt come to a Criſis as it were, ſhews him, if he ſwore true, rather a Madman than a Traitor.

But the Uſage of the King's Council and the Court toward the Priſoner was very unjuſt and unfair; they permitted the Lord Howard to go on with a long Story of him and my Lord Shaftsbury, at which when my Lord Ruſſel took Exceptions, the Chief Juſtice it is true ſaid it was no Evidence; yet the Attorny General bidding him go on in the Method of time, he went on where he left off, intermixing Stories of Deſigns and of Attempts by other Perſons upon the King's Perſon to exaſperate the Jury, as my Lord Ruſſel ſaid rightly againſt him; a thing which no Council durſt have done, and no Court would have ſuffer'd in any other Caſe, nor even in that would the Court or Council ſuffer it for the Priſoner. How was my Lord Angleſey checkt when he began to tell what my Lady Chaworth ſaid, and Mr. Edward Howard when he did not ſpeak of his own Knowledge? How unjuſt was it for the King's Council to repeat all the Evidence the Lord Howard gave, when they ſum'd it up, even that which the Court told them before was not Evidence! How unjuſt was the inſinuating of the Death of my Lord of Eſſex, as Evidence againſt my Lord Ruſſel! And why did not the Court in ſumming up the Evidence take notice of the Liberty the Witneſſes and Council had taken, and have told them what was not Evidence? No other Reaſon can be given than what Colledge ſaid at his Tryal upon his Obſervation of Fitzharris's buſineſs and his own, That the Matter was not to ſtop at him.

Remarks on Colonel Sidney's Tryal.

THE Lord Ruſſel being executed, and the ſame day, what was called his Speech being publiſhed, than which nothing in Print was ſo eagerly accepted or ſought after, which ſhewed the Inclination of the People, there was ſome reſpite for quieting the Minds of the People; but it was not to ſtop there, as Colledge ſaid, and therefore Colonel Sidney (who was talk'd to Death under the Notion of a Commonwealthsman) was the 17th of November, 1683. brought to Weſtminſter to be arraign'd on an Indictment of High-Treaſon. The Indictment at the time he came to the Hall, was ſo far from being found by the Grand Jury, that it was was not ſo much as preſented to them; but the King's Council, who had packt the Jury, knew well enough that it would be accepted, that is, found upon ſight by the Jury, without any Conſideration, which was accordingly done, and Colonel Sidney thereupon arraign'd. The Indictment was for deſigning to depoſe the King, and to perſwade the King's Subjects to rebel; and that he did write a certain Libel wherein it was contain'd, that he (meaning King Charles the Second) is ſubject to the Law of God as he is a Man, to the People who made him ſuch, as a King, &c. To which Indictment he would have put in ſome Exceptions, expreſt in a Parchment in his Hand, but was told by the Court, he muſt either plead or demur, and upon no other Terms Exceptions could or ought to be admitted; after which he pleaded Not guilty.

The 21ſt of November he was try'd, at which time he inſiſted to have a Copy of his Indictment, as he had done when he was arraign'd; but was both times denied. The firſt Witneſs againſt the Priſoner was Mr. Weſt, againſt whom Colonel Sidney objected, becauſe he was not pardon'd; but it was anſwer'd by the Court, that he was a good Witneſs in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, and therefore ſhould be in that. Then Colonel Sidney deſired Mr. Weſt might ſpeak nothing but what he knew of Colonel Sidney, but was anſwer'd by the Court, he might give Evidence of a Plot in general, tho' Colonel Sidney was not concern'd in it, and it was call'd Sir William Jones's Law. Then Mr. Weſt went on, and gave Evidence of what Colonel Rumſey, Mr. Nelthorp, and Mr. Ferguſon told him of Colonel Sidney, but of his own Knowledge he could not ſay any thing of the Priſoner. Rumſey give a like Evidence he had done an my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, with an Addition of what Mr. Weſt and Mr. Goodenough told him. Keeling gave Evidence of what Goodenough told him, all which the Court agreed was no Evidence againſt the Priſoner. Then the Lord Howard gave the like Evidence from the middle of January to that time, as he had done in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, ſaving that he ſaid the Earl of Salisbury was brought into the Cabal, who was not mention'd before, and ſave that he ſaid the meeting at my Lord Ruſſel's was about a Fortnight or three Weeks after the meeting at Mr. Hamden's; whereas in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, he ſays it was about ten days after the meeting at Mr. Hamden's Houſe: and here he makes two notable Speeches for Mr. Hamden at the opening of the Conſult, both which he had forgotten at my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, nor could remember at Mr. Hamden's Tryal, tho' in the laſt he was led by a great many Queſtions to put him in mind of them. After his Evidence given, Colonel Sidney was ask'd whether he would ask the Witneſs any Queſtions, who anſwer'd, he had no Queſtions to ask him; whereupon the Attorny General ſaid ſilence——You know the Proverb.

The Record of the Lord Ruſſel's Conviction and Attainder was given in Evidence. Sir Andrew Foſter ſwore Sir John Cockram and the two Campbells came to London. Sir Philip Floyd proved the ſeizing of ſome Papers in the Priſoner's Houſe, and he did believe the Papers ſhewn in Court to be ſome of them. Sheppard, Cary, and Cook ſwore the Writing produced was like the Priſoner's Hand-writing; the Attorny General deſired ſome part of the Writing ſhould be read; the Priſoner deſired all of it might be read, but was anſwer'd by the Court, that the Attorny muſt have what Part of it he would to be read, and afterwards the Priſoner ſhould have what Part of it he would to be read; but he perſiſted to deſire all of it ſhould be read; then the Writing was read, (which was plainly an anſwer to a Book, but what Book was not mention'd) in which the Right of the People was aſſerted. The Earl of Angleſey gave the ſame Evidence for the Priſoner, of the Lord Howard's ſpeaking of my Lord Ruſſel and the Plot, as he had done in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal. The Earl of Clare ſaid that the Lord Howard, after Colonel Sidney's Impriſonment, ſaid, if he was queſtioned again, he would never plead; the quickeſt Diſpatch was the beſt, he was ſure they would have his Life; and ſpeaking of the Primate of Armagh's Prophecy, he ſaid, the Perſecution was begun, and he believed it would be very ſharp, but hoped it would be ſhort; and ſaid, he thought Colonel Sidney as innocent as any Man breathing, gave him great Encomiums, and bemoaned his Misfortune; and as for Colonel Sidney's Papers, he ſaid he was ſure they could make nothing of them. Mr. Philip Howard ſaid, the Lord Howard ſaid it was a Sham-Plot; Dr. Burnet gave the ſame Evidence as he did in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal: Mr. Ducas gave Evidence, that the Lord Howard ſaid he knew nothing of Colonel Sidney's being in any Plot. The Lord Paget gave Evidence to the ſame purpoſe. Mr. Edward Howard gave Evidence to the ſame purpoſe. Tracy and Penwick gave Evidence to the ſame purpoſe. Mr. Blake teſtified, that the Lord Howard ſaid he had not his Pardon, and could not aſcribe it to any other reaſon, than that he muſt not have it till the Drudgery of ſwearing was over. Now to review what hath been ſaid, it is ſtrange to ſee what a Progreſs was made in the Reſolutions of Points of Law, to take away a Man's Life; to ſay it in Colonel Sidney's Words, as if the Court and Council thought it their Duty to take away a Man's Life any how. Mr. Weſt and ſeveral others are admitted to give Evidence by hearſay againſt the Priſoner, and their Evidence ſummed up and urged as Evidence to the Jury; and the reaſon given for it was, that he was admitted a good Witneſs of a like matter, in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, which beſides that it was not true, for it was rejected in that Tryal, as it appears it was in the Print; yet if he had been admitted, of no Authority, as Colonel Sidney ſaid, becauſe perhaps he was not excepted to. Of a like ſtamp is the Evidence of the Conviction of the Lord Ruſſel, tho' I agree the Lord Ruſſel's Conviction was as good Evidence againſt Colonel Sidney, as the Earl of Eſſex's Murder was againſt my Lord Ruſſel, and no better. The ſame may be ſaid of Rumſey, Keeling, Foſter and Atterbury's Evidence. Againſt the Lord Howard's Evidence there were the ſame Objections, as in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, with the addition of ſeveral other Perſons teſtifying, he ſaid he knew not, nor believed any thing of the matter; and that he could not have his Pardon, till he ſwore others out of their Lives, which in truth was the Senſe of his Expreſſions.

The King's Council indeed had thought of ſomething ſince the Tryal of my Lord Ruſſel to palliate the matter of the Lord Howard's ſayings (for they lean'd hard upon his Reputation, and lookt as if he would perjure himſelf at the expence of ſome Perſons Lives, as his Words are in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal) Would you, ſay they, have had him confeſt the matter to thoſe Perſons to whom he had denied it?

I think there is a difference between confeſſing and denying: Who ask'd him the Queſtion? What did it avail him to deny it to the Perſons teſtifying againſt him? and therefore when he voluntarily ſaid a thing untrue, unasked, not provoked or compelled to do it, and which could do him no good, it was good Evidence of his Untruth, and that no Credit ought to be given to what he ſwore.

As for the laſt part of the Evidence, which was about the Writing, both the Indictment and the Evidence was defective.

As for the Evidence, if the Subject Matter of the Writing had been Evidence of Treaſon, the Indictment ought to have expreſt that he publiſhed it, which the Indictment in this Caſe did not; and upon good reaſon, which was, that the Jury might be put in mind, that the Publiſhing of it was neceſſary to make it known; whereas they very well knew that the Evidence would not, nor did come up to it. This was the firſt Indictment of High-Treaſon, upon which any Man loſt his Life, for writing any thing without publiſhing it; for in Fitzharris's Indictment, he was charged with publiſhing his Libel; and ſo in all other Indictments for Writing, and upon good reaſon: for this being made an overt Act of Treaſon, it muſt be an Evidence of a Deſign to kill or depoſe the King, or the like; and as the Conſequence of what the Writing contain'd, which was that the Power was in the People, &c. being in its nature no other, nor urged by the King's Council to any other intent than to corrupt the Subjects minds, could not be Evidence of ſuch matter, unleſs proved he had writ and publiſhed it, whereof the laſt was not pretended to be proved.

That it was neceſſary to be expreſt in the Indictment, and proved at the Tryal, appears by the Reſolution of all the Judges of England in Hugh Pines Caſe, reported in Cro. Car. Fol. 89. at a time when Prerogative run pretty high; wherein beſides the reſolution that no Words charging the King with any perſonal Vice, was Treaſon, there is the Caſe of one Peacham, in 33*d* of Henry the 8*th*, cited, who was indicted for Treaſon, for Treaſonable Paſſages in a Sermon never preached, nor intended to be preached, but found in writing in his Study; he was found guilty, but never executed; for many Judges at that time were of Opinion it was not Treaſon, as the Book ſays: which I think, according to the Evidence here given, was the expreſs Caſe of Col. Sidney, admitting he writ the Book produced, and that the Paſſages in it were Treaſonable.

And as this Indictment was an Original in the particular before mentioned, ſo it was a ſecond of an Innuendo Indictment of Treaſon, Fitzharris was the firſt. The Proſecution againſt Car, as I remember, was an Information, and Judgment arreſted after a Verdict, becauſe it was by Innuendo, of which no Precedent could be produc'd; and altho in Actions for Words it was permitted, yet in Criminal Matters being Penal, it was reſolv'd it ought not to be permitted, and certainly much leſs in Treaſon: and as this Indictment was an Original in one part, and a Second in another, the Evidence on it was an Original in another part, which was proving the Book produc'd to be Col. Sidney's Writing, becauſe the Hand was like what ſome of the Witneſſes had ſeen him write; and Evidence never permitted in a criminal Matter before. The Caſe of the Lady Carre was well cited by Col. Sidney, againſt whom there was an Indictment or Information of Perjury, in which it was reſolv'd that Compariſon of hands was no Evidence in any criminal Proſecution: and it muſt be own'd that at that time, beſides Keeling and Twiſden, there then ſat in that Court Sir Wadham Windham, whom all will own to have been the ſecond beſt Judg which ſat in Weſtminſter-Hall ſince the King's Reſtoration: and if it be not Evidence in a Proſecution of Miſdemeanor, much leſs in Treaſon, as Col. Sidney ſaid; which Inference, beſides the reaſon of the thing, is backt by the Authority of my Lord Coke.

But admitting Col. Sidney wrote that Book, and publiſhed it; yet if it were not done with a deſign to ſtir the Subjects up into a Rebellion, but was writ and publiſhed only diſputandi gratia, as the import of the Book ſhews plainly it was, it was no more Treaſon than the diſcourſe between Blague and Mate Lee about taking the Tower was. And ſuppoſe it was wrote with that deſign, yet it not appearing when it was writ, how could a Jury upon their Oaths ſay it was done with a deſign to raiſe Rebellion againſt King Charles the Second, when for ought appeared it was writ before he was King or thought of? It might for ought appeared be writ in King Charles the Firſt his time, or Cromwel's time, and deſign'd againſt either of them, or any Foreign Prince, and therefore could not be Treaſon againſt King Charles the Second.

The Evidence was an Original in this Particulr; alſo it was the firſt time that ever a particular Expreſſion in a Writing was given in Evidence againſt a Man in Treaſon without reading the whole Writing, and for a very good reaſon given by the Jury in Fitzharris his Caſe, which was, that there might be ſomething in the Writing not expreſſed in the Indictment, which may explain the Clauſes in the Indictment, ſo that they may bear another conſtruction: and in that Tryal it was agreed, the whole Writing ought to be read, and was read accordingly; and it was the duty of the Court to have ordered it, whether the Priſoner or Jury had deſired it or not, as they are upon their Oaths to do right: but in Col. Sidney's Caſe, when preſſed by him, it was denied; only ſome particular Paſſages he might have read if he would, which he did not accept, upon a very good reaſon which he gave, which was, that he knew not the Paſſages of the Book, or at leaſt he did not remember them, and therefore could not call for them. 'Tis true that Practice in Civil Matters is allowed to ſave time, where the miſchief is not very great: becauſe of a Paſſage in a Deed or Writing material for either Party omitted in reading, the Matter may be brought about again; but in Criminal, much leſs in Capital Proſecutions, they cannot be, unleſs a way can be found to bring a Man to Life again.

Almoſt

Almoſt all the Circumſtances of this Tryal are Originals; the ſumming up of the Evidence againſt him was barbarous, being Invectives and no Conſequences. It was ſaid he was not only guilty of the Practices he was accuſed of, but that he could not have been otherwiſe, becauſe his Principles led him to it; and it might with as good reaſon have been urged, that he not only was become, but was born a Traitor. The laſt Matter remarkable in the Tryal was that of an Overt Act, of which the Court ſaid it was reſolved by all the Judges of England, that if I buy a Knife of J. S. to kill the King, and one Witneſs prove I bought a Knife, and another prove I bought it for that purpoſe, it is two Witneſſes of an Overt Act within the Statute of Edward 6th.

It were fit to know who the Judges were who gave that Reſolution, if it were but for the Authority of the Caſe; for I doubt the reaſon of it will convince no Man: they might as well have reſolved that eating or drinking, or the moſt ordinary Acts of a Man's Life, is an Overt Act of High Treaſon.

The Law hath taken that care for the Evidence of High Treaſon, which it hath not done in any other Caſe, that it muſt be proved by an Overt Act, proved by two Witneſſes. One would think at firſt ſight of the Statute that there ſhould be two Witneſſes to the ſame Fact; but that hath been adjudged otherwiſe, yet ſtill it was reſolved there muſt be two Witneſſes: but if this Reſolution be Law, it is plain there needs but one. Tis true, if a Man does an Act for which he can give no reaſon, as placing a Mine of Powder in a Place the King uſually paſſeth over, or planting a piece of Cannon to ſhoot at a place the King uſually paſſeth by, if he cannot give a credible reaſon why he did it, and another ſwears the purpoſe of the thing, it is two good Witneſſes within the Act.

It hath been ſaid, if a Man be bound to his good behavior, and wears a Sword, it is a breach of the good behaviour; and perhaps heretofore when Swords were not uſually worn but by Soldiers, it might be ſo, becauſe it ſtruck a Terror in other People as much as a Blunderbuſs, or the like unuſual Weapon, or the going armed in a Coat of Mail for any Perſon but a Soldier doth at this day. Yet no Man will ſay that now Swords are uſually worn by all ſorts of People, it is a breach of the good behaviour; and ſo that which heretofore was a Crime, by Cuſtom now is become none. It is therefore the unuſualneſs and the unaccountableneſs of the Circumſtance make it an Evidence, which cannot be aſſigned as a reaſon in the Overt Act mentioned.

The laſt thing I take notice of is, that Col. Sidney refuſed to ask the Lord Howard any Queſtions, from whence was inferred that he aſſented to the truth of the Matter ſworn: but it is well known, 'tis no Prudence to ask a thorow-pac'd Witneſs a queſtion; in Mr. Hamden's Tryal, his Council refuſed ſo to do for that Reaſon.

The next who fell a Sacrifice, according to Colledge's Prophecy, was James Holloway; he was outlawed and taken beyond Sea; and being induced with promiſes of Life to accuſe himſelf of things (whether Guilty or not) enough to make good an Indictment of High Treaſon againſt him, it was indeed generouſly offered him that his Outlawry ſhould be ſet aſide, and he have the liberty to be tried, and defend himſelf as well as he could: but knowing that what he had ſaid ſince he was taken would be brought in Evidence againſt him, he refuſed his Tryal; and becauſe he would not purchaſe his Pardon at the expence of innocent Mens Blood, by accuſing others, of what he did not know they were guilty (if his dying Speech is to be believed) he was executed.

I ſhould not have mention'd this, but for the ſake of the next Perſon's Caſe, which was Sir Thomas Armſtrong's, who was outlawed for High Treaſon; when he was beyond Sea, he was taken and brought to the Kings-Bench-Bar.

Remarks upon the Award of Execution againſt Sir Thomas Armſtrong.

AT Common Law, if a Perſon was beyond Sea when an Outlawry was pronounc'd againſt him, it was an Error in Fact, for which the Outlawry was to be revers'd; and it is an Error in all Outlawrys but for High Treaſon to this day. By the 6th of Edward VI. that Error is taken away in High-Treaſon, but there is a Proviſo in that Statute, that if the Perſon outlaw'd ſhall within a Year after the Outlawry pronounc'd, yield himſelf to the Chief Juſtice of the Kings-Bench, and offer to traverſe his Indictment, and on his Tryal ſhall be acquitted, he ſhall be diſcharg'd of the Outlawry. Upon the Conſtruction of this Statute, no Judgment was ever given that I knew of; and the reaſon is, no Man outlaw'd was ever deny'd a Tryal till this time, if he was taken within a competent Time. The reaſon of making that Statute was this; Men would commit Treaſon, and preſently fly beyond Sea, and ſtay there till the Witneſſes who ſhould prove the Treaſon were dead; then return, and reverſe the Outlawry for the Error of their being beyond Sea; and the Witneſſes being dead, they were ſafe: and therefore this Statute takes away that Error in part, tho not in the whole, and doth in effect ſay, that the Perſon outlaw'd ſhall not have advantage of that Error, unleſs he comes and takes his Tryal within a competent time, which that Statute limits to a Year after the Outlawry pronounc'd.

This being plainly the Senſe of the Statute, it was Injuſtice to deny the Favour or Right of a Tryal to Sir Thomas Armſtrong, which was never deny'd any Perſon before nor ſince, where it was agreed that all the Witneſſes againſt the Perſon accus'd were alive, as in Sir Thomas Armſtrong's Caſe they were, barely upon the quibble of the word render, which in no Caſe that ever I read was differenc'd from taken, but in one Caſe, which is Smith and Aſhes Caſe in Cro. Car. 42. in an Outlawry for Debt againſt Husband and Wife, which will not extend to, or warrant the Judgment in this Caſe: and if there were but a Doubt in the Caſe, as it cannot be deny'd there was, the Outlawry ought to have been wav'd, or at leaſt Council for the Priſoner heard as to the Point.

was

It was a vain and unjuſt Reaſon (and only tending to incenſe the thing) aſſign'd by the Attorny, That the Priſoner was one who actually engag'd to go, upon the King's haſty coming to Town, to deſtroy him by the way; whereas the Priſoner offer'd to prove his Innocence in that and other Matters of which he was accus'd: and even that Objection againſt him was an Invention of the Attorny's for any thing appears; but then it was reſolv'd to ſtop at nothing, and Succeſs had made them fearleſs. Fitzharris and Colledge 'twas own'd had hard meaſure, and that their Caſes might be forgotten, their Quarters were buried; but Sir Thomas Armſtrong's were expos'd, tho the Proceedings againſt him were equally as unjuſtifiable as in the other two Caſes.

Remarks on the Tryal of Count Conningſmark.

I Think fit to remember in the ſame Reign, tho before this time, one Caſe, to ſhew how the Courts of Juſtice were remiſs or violent, according to the ſubject Matter.

All will agree, that the Murder of Mr. Thynne was one of the moſt barbarous and impudent Murders that ever was committed; and of that Murder Count Conningſmark, tho he eſcap'd Puniſhment, was the moſt Guilty.

I do not complain that in that Tryal the Chief Juſtice directed the Priſoner the way to make the King's Council ſhew the Cauſe of Challenge againſt the Perſons call'd on the Jury, and challeng'd for the King, without any Reaſon. It was his Duty ſo to do; and he ought to have directed Fitzharris the ſame Method, which he did not: but he was blameable that he did not ask the Lieutenant and Polander what they had to ſay for themſelves, which was always done before and ſince that time, and ought to be, which was an Injuſtice; and therefore two of the Priſoners at the time of their Sentences ſaid, they were never try'd, tho I believe no great Injury to them, becauſe they had little or nothing to have ſaid for themſelves.

But if they had been askt, they would have ſaid as they did before their Tryals to the Juſtice of Peace who committed them, and as they did after their Condemnations, that Count Conningſmark put them upon doing what they did, which might have influenc'd the Jury to have found the Count guilty, which was contrary to the Deſign of the Court; and it was for the ſame Reaſon the Chief Juſtice would not permit the Juſtice of Peace to read the Examination of Stern and Borosky.

I do agree, that what they ſaid before the Juſtice of Peace was not Evidence againſt the Count; I agree that the Count being indicted and try'd as Acceſſory, at the ſame time the Principals were indicted and try'd, the Principals could not be good Witneſſes againſt the Count, becauſe properly a Principal ought to be convicted before the Acceſſory be try'd: and therefore tho for Expedition both are try'd together, yet the Verdict always is and ought to be given againſt the Principal, before that of the Acceſſory.

But I deny what was in that Tryal laid down for Law, that the Acceſſory being in the ſame Indictment with the Principal, muſt be try'd at the ſame time. It is true, the Count deſir'd his Tryal might be put off for two or three days, which the Court knowing what was beſt for the Count deny'd, and not for the above pretended Reaſons; for an Indictment againſt many may be joint, and yet the Tryals may be ſeveral: the truth is, in ſuch Caſes the Indictment is joint and ſeveral.

Suppoſe the Acceſſory, at the Tryals of the Principals, had not been in Cuſtody; will any Perſon ſay, that if afterwards he was taken, he can't be try'd upon that Indictment in which he was join'd with the Principals?

But beſides a hundred Precedents not printed, there is the Caſe of George Salisbury & al. in Plowden Fol. 100. where it was reſolv'd, that tho an Indictment againſt many is joint, yet the Venire may be ſeveral againſt each Perſon, and conſequently the Tryals may be ſeveral; and if ſo, then the times of the Tryals may be ſeveral: but that which is to be complain'd of is, that the Count in the Opinion of all Mankind at that time and ſince was the moſt guilty Man, yet the care taken to puniſh the leſs guilty, as Sterne and Borosky, was in order to let the moſt guilty eſcape; for I think both Sterne and Borosky might, and would have been good Witneſſes againſt the Count if the Court would have permitted it: the Count might have been indicted as Acceſſory to Wratts only; for the Acceſſory to all the Principals is Acceſſory to every of them ſeverally: and when the Court in their private Conſciences were ſatisfy'd the Count was moſt guilty, they ought to have been cunning, aſtuti, as my Ld Hobart calls it, to have brought him to Puniſhment. But 'twas ſaid, Sterne and Borosky being indicted of the ſame Crime with the Count, they could not be good Witneſſes againſt him, which I think is no more Law than Truth: Truth it was not, for the Count was indicted as Acceſſory, the reſt as Principals. But taking it that all were indicted and try'd as Principals for the ſame Fact at the ſame time, why is not the Evidence of the one good againſt the other?

First,

Firſt, I think there is no expreſs Reſolution for that Point of Law, but a late Rule given at Kingſton Aſſizes upon the Tryal of a Maid and one Saterwaite for burning of an Houſe; and therefore there is a liberty to examine by Reaſon how the Law is. I agree, if a Man is indicted and try'd for killing another, he ſhall not be admitted to ſay, B. did it by himſelf; but I think he may be a good Witneſs to prove that he and B. did it, that is to ſay, he ſhall not give any Evidence againſt another, which tends to acquit himſelf as well as accuſe another; and I think he may give Evidence which accuſes another of the ſame Crime whereof he is indicted, if it doth not tend to acquit himſelf.

For it is agreed on all hands, that being guilty of the ſame Crime, doth not diſable a Witneſs; for then Rumſey and ſeveral Perſons in the Lord Ruſſel's Plot, as it was call'd, had not been good Witneſſes. In the next place, the Circumſtances of an Indictment againſt the Witneſſes for the ſame thing he teſtifies againſt another, do not diſable him; Widdrington was indicted for the ſame things, of which he gave Evidence againſt ſeveral others as his Complices in Robberies. Nay, the Law hath given ſomewhat more credit to the Evidence of a Perſon indicted, as a Witneſs of the ſame things againſt others, than it does to a Perſon not indicted; as in the Caſe of an Approver, which, as Stamford ſays, was a Perſon in Priſon (not at large) for the Fact for which he was indicted, arraign'd upon an Indictment, or an Appeal of Felony, who before a Coroner aſſign'd by the Court, confeſſes himſelf guilty of the Felony of which he is indicted, and not of any other, and confeſſes other Perſons naming them as Coadjutors with him in committing the Crime of which he is indicted, and not of any other Crime; ſo much Credit ſhall be given to that Confeſſion, that Proceſs ſhall be made out againſt the Perſon peach'd, who, if taken, ſhall be arraign'd on that Approvement, as if an Indictment by a Grand Jury had been found againſt him: and if the Law gives ſo much Credit to an Approver, I think no Perſon can ſhew me a Reaſon why a Perſon indicted is not a good Witneſs againſt another for the ſame Crime.

It is true, Stamford ſays, if a King gives an Approver a Pardon, he is a good Witneſs; which implies, that otherwiſe he is not: But it muſt be conſider'd, that the reaſon of that is, that an Approver being indicted, as he always is, and confeſſing the Indictment, is convicted. and a Perſon convicted of Felony cannot be a Witneſs till pardon'd. But it will be no Argument why Sterne or Borosky had not been good Witneſſes againſt the Count before they were convicted; and it was a like Piece of Juſtice, that whereas the Count was the moſt guilty, he was acquitted.

Wrats being the next greateſt Offender, was honourably interr'd. and Sterne and the Polander, who were the leaſt Offenders in that Matter, were hang'd in Chains.

It was ſomewhat like the New England Law, remember'd by Hudibraſs, of hanging an uſeleſs innocent Weaver for an uſeful guilty Cobler.

Remarks upon Mr. Corniſh's Tryal.

THERE yet remain two Perſons Proſecutions to ſpeak of; the one is Mr. Corniſh, who was taken the —— of October 1685. and was arraign'd on an Indictment of High-Treaſon the Monday after, for conſpiring to kill the late King Charles the Second; and knowing James Duke of Monmouth, William Ruſſel, Eſq; and Sir Thomas Armſtrong to be Rebels and Traitors, promis'd to be aſſiſting to them in their Treaſons: To which he pleaded Not Guilty. He deſir'd to put off his Tryal, becauſe he had no notice till the Saturday before at twelve a Clock, and he could get no Friend to come to him till eight a Clock at Night, and then he was permitted to ſpeak with no body but in the preſence of the Goaler; he had been allow'd no Pen, Ink, or Paper. He was told by the Court he ought not to have it, without leave given on a Petition prefer'd by him, and that he was taken Tueſday before, which to that time was almoſt a Week. He ſaid his Children had petition'd the King the Night before to put off his Tryal, and it was refer'd to the Judges; he did not know whether he was committed for High-Treaſon againſt the preſent, or the former King, and he had a material Witneſs an hundred and forty Miles off; but was told by the Court, they had no Power to put off his Tryal. It is true, they ſaid the Lord Ruſſels Tryal was put off till the Afternoon (which was true) but that was a Favour which could not be challeng'd by another Perſon as a Right. He complain'd he had not a Copy of the Pannel, but was anſwer'd it was not his Right to have it. Then the Attorny ſaid, he had not deſerv'd ſo well of the Government as to have his Tryal delay'd, and therefore he was preſently try'd.

Rumſey ſwore, that about the latter end of October, or beginning of November, the Earl of Shaftsbury deſir'd him to go to Mr. Sheppard's Houſe, where was a Meeting of the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Ruſſel, Lord Gray, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Mr. Ferguſon, and Mr. Sheppard; he came late, and they were juſt on going away; he deliver'd his Meſſage, and they told him that Mr. Trenchard had diſappointed them: he had not been there above a quarter of an hour, but Mr. Sheppard was call'd down, and brought up Mr. Corniſh, and told them Mr. Corniſh was come, who came into the Room, and excus'd his not coming ſooner, and that he could not ſtay, for he was to meet about the Charter; whereupon Mr Ferguſon open'd his Boſom, and under his Stomacher pull'd out a Paper: they told Mr. Corniſh they had had it read, and deſir'd to read it to him: Mr. Ferguſon read it, Mr. Sheppard held the Candle while it was reading, and afterwards they ask'd Mr. Corniſh how he lik'd it; who ſaid, he lik'd it very well: he remember'd two Points in it very well, the one was for Liberty of Conſcience, ſcience, the other was, that all who would aſſiſt in that Inſurrection, who had Church or Kings-Lands in the late War, ſhould have them reſtor'd to them. He did not hear all the Paper, and obſerv'd only theſe two Points, it was a Declaration on a Riſing, and when the Riſing was to have been, it was to have been diſperſed abroad; there was a Riſing intended at that time, and Mr. Corniſh ſaid, he lik'd the Declaration, and what poor Intereſt he had he would join with it. He had great dealings with Mr. Corniſh, and Mr. Corniſh was a very honeſt Man, it was out of Compaſſion he had not accus'd Mr. Corniſh before.

Mr. Goodenough ſaid there was a Deſign to riſe in London, and for that Purpoſe to divide the City into twenty parts, and to raiſe five hundred Men out of each part, to take the Tower, and to drive the Guards out of Town. Before that was agreed on, he being by chance at Mr. Corniſh's Houſe, ſaid, the Law will not defend us; ſome other way was to be thought on. Mr. Corniſh ſaid, he wondred the City was ſo unready, and the Country ſo ready: Mr. Goodenough reply'd, there is ſomething thought of to be done here, but in the firſt place the Tower muſt be ſeiz'd, where the Magazine is; Mr. Corniſh paus'd a little, and ſaid, I will do what good I can, or what I can, or to that purpoſe, he ſaid.

He afterwards met Mr. Corniſh on the Exchange, who ask'd him how Affairs went, and this was in Eaſter Term 1683. He had ſome Matters with Mr. Corniſh about managing the Riot, which was brought againſt him, Mr. Corniſh, and others: He came to Mr. Corniſh's Houſe about the buſineſs of the Riot, and no Perſon was by at the diſcourſe. Mr. Gosfright teſtify'd for Mr. Corniſh, that he oppos'd Mr. Goodenough's being Under-Sheriff, and ſaid he would not truſt an Hair of his Head with him, he was an ill Man, obnoxious to the Government, and had done ill things, and he would not truſt his Eſtate and Reputation in the Hands of ſuch an Under-Sheriff; and he believ'd Mr. Goodenough and Mr. Corniſh were never reconcil'd. Mr. Love, Mr. Jekil and Sir. William Turner teſtify'd to the ſame purpoſe; Mr. Lane ſpoke out of the printed Tryal of my Lord Ruſſel, and ſaid Rumſey in that Tryal ſaid he did not hear the Declaration read, for it was read before he came. Dr. Callamy ſaid, Mr. Corniſh did often come to Church, and receive the Sacrament; Mr. Sheppard ſaid he was ſubpœna'd by the King, and by Mr. Corniſh the Night before; and that Mr. Corniſh his Son was with him the Afternoon of the day before, who preſt him to be at the Tryal the next day; that there were Accounts depending between him and Mr. Corniſh, whereon there was about one or two hundred Pounds due to Mr. Corniſh, and Mr. Corniſh's Subpœna was ſerv'd firſt upon him. At one of thoſe Meetings at his Houſe, Mr. Corniſh came to ſpeak a few Words with the Duke of Monmouth or ſome other, he could not be poſitive in that, it was many years ago; he did not ſtay above half a quarter of an Hour in the Houſe; Sheppard came up Stairs, and went out with Mr. Corniſh, and there was not one Word read, nor no Paper ſeen while Mr. Corniſh was there: he remembered there was a Declaration read, Ferguſon pull'd it out of his Shoo: he could not tell whether Mr. Corniſh was at his Houſe the Night the Declaration was read, but he was poſitive no Paper was read while Mr. Corniſh was there, for Mr. Corniſh was not look'd on to be one of the Company: he did not know who Mr. Corniſh came to ſpeak with, when he came to his Houſe; Mr. Corniſh was but once at his Houſe when the Duke of Monmouth was there: he did not remember that Mr. Corniſh was in the Company when Mr. Rumſey was there; he ſaid, he had attended the Court from eleven a Clock till half an Hour paſt three.

This being the Sum of the Evidence given in the Tryal for and againſt the Priſoner, let us ſee whether thoſe Inferences could be made from it as were made by the Court and Council: and whether on the whole an honeſt Jury, tho but of little underſtanding, could have found him guilty of the Treaſon in the Indictment.

It is agreed on all hands, that a petty Jury may and muſt conſider the Credibility of a Witneſs (tho in the Lord Shafsbury's Caſe it was ſaid a Grand Jury ought not ſo to do) and if ſo, ſurely Rumſey was not a credible, tho he was not a diſabled Witneſs, no more than a Man who owns himſelf to be a Man of Falſhood, a profligate Wretch, and perjur'd by his own Confeſſion, tho not convicted of it; he had notoriouſly confeſſed himſelf guilty of High-Treaſon, and of being in the Deſign of an intended barbarous Murder; he had ſworn in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, he had nam'd all the Perſons at the Meeting he ſpoke of, of which Mr. Corniſh was none; and being taxt in this Tryal with it, he excuſes his Perjury with Compaſſion to the Priſoner, which was mean, fooliſh and contradictory: he perjur'd himſelf to ſave the Priſoner, and then ſwore Truth to hang him. He had not preſence of mind enough to excuſe himſelf in the manner a Witneſs in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal did, that his God, his King and his Country put him unwillingly to act that part: beſides that in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, Rumſey ſwore he was not at the reading the Declaration, and contradicted Sheppard, who ſwore he thought he was there.

But that paſſage was prov'd only by a Witneſs who had read it in the Tryal, which I confeſs in ſtrictneſs of Law is not Evidence; nor if the Witneſs had ſaid, he heard Rumſey ſwear ſo at the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, it had not been Evidence, unleſs a Record of that Tryal had been produc'd in Court, which was not done. But all thoſe things being but mere Circumſtances, ſhew the Injuſtice of ſpeeding his Tryal, and denying him Council: Would not any Council have told him that in ſtrictneſs of Law a Paſſage in a printed Tryal was not Evidence, and was it not eaſy for him to have got a Witneſs to have ſaid that he had heard Rumſey ſwear ſo at that Tryal? were not all the Judges who ſat upon him, and all the King's Council who were againſt him, preſent at the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, and perfectly remembred what Rumſey then ſwore as to the pretended Declaration, and might he not have ſubpœna'd them to have teſtify'd that Matter? Nay, was it not their Duty to have done it even without a Subpœna?

To ſay it was againſt the King, and therefore they could not do it; or they were in the Commiſſion to try him, and therefore they could not do it, is neither Law nor Reaſon. Every Man knows that a Judg in a civil Matter try'd before him, and a Council even againſt his Client, has been enforc't to give Evidence (provided it be not of a Secret communicated to him by his Client) for in that particular a Judg ceaſes to be a Judg, and is a Witneſs; of whoſe Evidence the Jury are the Judges, tho he after re-aſſume his Authority, and is afterwards a Judge of the Juries Verdict.

A Judge may ſue, and muſt be ſued in his Court, but in that Caſe he ceaſes to be a Judge and is a Suitor, tho' he re-aſſumes his Authority in all other Matters: and if it be ſo in civil Matters, let any Man ſhew me a Reaſon why the Law is not ſo in criminal Matters; there is no expreſs Law againſt it, and it will be abſurd in reaſon to ſay the Law is not ſo; for at that rate the King may put any Witneſs, he knows the Priſoner intends to produce for himſelf, into the Commiſſion for trying him, and ſo deprive the Priſoner of the benefit of his Evidence; as in this Caſe Sheppard, whoſe Evidence ought to have been of great uſe (as ſhall be ſhewn) tho' it was not of any avail to the Priſoner, might have been put into the Commiſſion to have try'd Mr. Corniſh, for he was as much qualify'd for it, as Sir James Smith then Lord Mayor, or any Judge upon the Bench: and if they might have been Witneſſes for the Priſoner, if ſubpœna'd, they might have been Witneſſes for him even without asking; and it was a Duty incumbent on them, tho' not as Judges, yet as Chriſtian Men, ſo to be.

Humanity commands the Diſcovery of Truths, which prevent the ſhedding innocent Blood; and Chriſtianity commands a Man to do as he would be done by. I think the Queſtion need not be ask'd what they would have had done, if it had been their Caſe.

The reaſon that all matters of Law are, or ought to be tranſacted publickly, is, That any Perſon, unconcern'd as well as concern'd, may, as amicus Curiæ, inform the Court better, if he thinks they are in an Error, that Juſtice may be done: and the reaſon that all Tryals are publick, is, That any Perſon may inform in point of Fact, tho' not ſubpœna'd, that truth may be diſcover'd in civil as well as criminal Matters.

There is an Invitation to all Perſons, who can inform the Court concerning the matter to be try'd, to come into the Court, and they ſhall be heard. It is true, if the Judges or any Perſon had teſtify'd what Rumſey ſaid at my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, it had not been Evidence without the Record of the Tryal; and it is as true, that neither the Record, nor a true Copy of it could have been procur'd between Mr. Corniſh's Commitment, if it were on Friday (as I have heard it was) tho' the Court ſaid it was on Tueſday, much leſs between the notice of his Tryal which was Saturday-noon, and the time of his Tryal which was Monday-morning.

But then what Juſtice was there in ſpeeding his Tryal, ſo as to deprive him of the Circumſtances of his Defence? for that was but a Circumſtance, and not an eſſential Matter. And what account can be given why the Court, when they were well ſatisfy'd that it was in the Priſoner's power to procure ſuch a Witneſs, and ſuch a Record, did not ſtay till he did it? or if it would be too long in doing, why ſhould they not have put off the Tryal for that time, and given the Priſoner a convenient time to do it?

The firſt in civil Matters hath been frequently done, when a Deed or Witneſs hath been wanting, if it could be done in a convenient time, and a Tryal has been put off before it came on, tho' after it came on they have not done it, becauſe there is no great Miſchief in that, for either Party hath Power to bring it about again; but not ſo in capital Matters, and therefore Juries in capital Matters have been frequently diſcharg'd after ſworn, where the Evidence hath been defective.

It is true, my Lord Coke ſaith that a Jury once charg'd with a Priſoner cannot be diſcharg'd but muſt give their Verdict; but it is as true that he ſays ſo in favour of the Priſoner, that when the Evidence againſt him appears defective, he ſhall not be continued a Priſoner till more Evidence can be found, or procur'd againſt him, tho' the Practice of late days hath been quite contrary, viz. to diſcharge the Jury where the Evidence againſt the Priſoner hath been defective, but enforce them to give a Verdict where the Priſoner's Defence hath been defective, tho to their Knowledge if he had longer time to do it, he had been able to produce the Witneſſes who could clear him, but by what Law or Reaſon I am to ſeek. Yet I confeſs, if Rumſey's owning his Perjury in the Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, in the very point ſworn againſt the Priſoner, and ſo frivolouſly excuſing it, would not diſcredit him, I know nor that any Record, Witneſs, or Evidence would have avail'd Mr. Corniſh.

And add to Rumſey's contradicting himſelf, that Sheppard, who never contradicted himſelf, and had been a Witneſs in both Tryals, agrees, that what Rumſey had ſworn in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal as to Mr. Corniſh's not being there, was true.

But admitting Rumſey had never perjur'd himſelf, but was of equal Credit with Sheppard, yet when they contradicted each other in a point, which carried no probability or improbability with it; in a capital Matter the Jury ought to believe in favorem vitæ; for it makes the matter at leaſt doubtful: and therefore the Jury ought to have acquitted the Priſoner, for a reaſon in Law, and which was given in Colonel Sidney's Tryal (tho' ſhewiſhly) by the Court, viz. that it is better that twenty Nocents ſhould eſcape than one innocent ſuffer.

But to paſs from the credibility of the Witneſs to the matter of his Evidence, this was the ſecond time that this ſort of Evidence in any Caſe criminal or civil was permitted to be given in Evidence; and there are the ſame Exceptions to it, as are above aſſign'd to the Evidence of Sheppard. As to the Declaration in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, if a true Copy of part of a Deed or Writing was never yet permitted to be given in Evidence, much leſs hath or ought the purport of part of a Writing be given in Evidence, eſpecially when ſuch a reaſon is given why the Witneſs remembred but part of it, as is given by Sheppard in my Lord Ruſſel's Tryal, and by Rumſey in this Tryal, viz. that he did not hear all the Paper read.

And ſurely Goodenough could no way fortify Rumſey's Evidence, being clearly of another matter, and that ſo very uncertain that no heed ought to have been given to it. When Goodenough told Mr. Corniſh ſomething ought to be done in the City, but in the firſt place the Tower ought to be ſeized, to which he anſwer'd he would do what he could, or what good he could, theſe words may as well relate to Goodenough's preſent Diſcourſe, where he complains that the Law would not defend them tho' innocent, as well as to the ſeizing the Tower; and if they ſhould refer to the laſt, yet they may well enough be interpreted, that he would do what he could, or what good he could, to prevent the ſeizing the Tower: and if they are capable of two Senſes, they ought to be interpreted in the beſt for the Priſoner.

Beſides, the Words are ſpoken not as a thing deſigned, but as a matter without which all other matters were in vain, and might be meer matter of Diſcourſe, as was that between Blague and Mate Lee about taking the Tower: and if there was ſuch a Deſign on foot, it doth not appear that Mr. Corniſh was ever acquainted with it. The ſame may be ſaid as to what he asked Goodenough, when he ask'd how Matters went: may not thoſe words well enough be applied to the buſineſs of the Riot, Goodenough managed for Mr. Corniſh and others? And if what Goodenough ſaid was Evidence of a Deſign of ſeizing the Tower, that, as well as the Treaſon againſt the Guards, was Treaſon by the Act of the late King, and not by the 25*th* of Edward the Third, if it be true Doctrine which was laid down in the Charge to the Earl of Shaftsbury's Grand Jury: and if ſo, he ought to have been proſecuted for it within ſix Months, and indicted within three Months, if the Doctrine in Colledge's Tryal be true; and yet this Deſign, if true, was in Eaſter Term 1683. and the Proſecution not till October 1685.

There was yet one piece of Evidence urged againſt him, viz. of his own Witneſs Sheppard, who poſitively teſtify'd for him as to the main, yet in a Circumſtance ſeem'd to teſtify againſt him, which was Mr. Corniſh's being at his Houſe when the Duke of Monmouth and the reſt were there, when the Declaration was read; and upon that piece of Evidence, as if it had contradicted what Mr. Corniſh ſaid before, there was a mighty Triumph: whereas, the moſt that could have been made of it was, that Mr. Corniſh in part of his Defence was guilty of an untruth, and even that was not ſo in Fact; for being charged to have been at Sheppard's the Night the Declaration was read, he anſwered he was never at a Conſult in his Life, he never was at Sheppard's in any Conſult, he never was there with my Lord Ruſſel, as he remembred; he had been at Sheppard's ſeveral times, but never liked Ferguſon for his Morals, and therefore never liked to be in his Company, and he did not know but that he might enquire for the Duke of Monmouth in other Places, and this is all Mr. Corniſh ſays to that matter.

Sheppard ſays, Mr. Corniſh came into his Houſe at one of the Meetings to ſpeak with the Duke of Monmouth or ſome other, he could not be poſitive in that, it was ſo many Years ago, and did not ſtay half a quarter of an hour; he could not ſay it was the Night the Declaration was read; he did not know whether Mr. Corniſh came to ſpeak with the Duke of Monmouth or not; he could not remember whether Mr. Corniſh was there in Company when Rumſey was there; there were not above three Perſons there when Mr. Corniſh came, which was the Duke of Monmouth, Mr. Ferguſon, and he could not tell whether the other was the Lord Ruſſel, or the Lord Gray.

Now it would be hard to find out the Contradiction between Mr. Corniſh's Sayings and Sheppard's Evidence; both agree that Mr. Corniſh hath been often at Sheppard's Houſe, and neither denies or affirms that he was or was not there the Night the Declaration was read, for a good reaſon, which was, that Mr. Corniſh knew nothing of it, and Sheppard knew not which of the Nights he was there: Mr. Corniſh ſaid he was not there with my Lord Ruſſel as he remembred, and Sheppard doth not affirm he was there with the Lord Ruſſel; Sheppard ſays that he was there when the Duke of Monmouth was there, and Mr. Corniſh doth not ſay that he was not there with the Duke of Monmouth; Sheppard ſaid, he ſpoke to the Duke of Monmouth, or ſome other Perſon, but he thought it was the Duke of Monmouth, which is no direct Affirmation that he ſpoke to the Duke; and Mr. Corniſh doth not ſay, he did not ſpeak to the Duke of Monmouth. So that if the account of the Tryal, ſet out by the Authority of, and ſigned by Thomas Jones, be true, I cannot ſee any manner of Contradiction between Mr. Corniſh and Sheppard: and therefore, as the Court and King's Council did infer, that Sheppard's Evidence, who poſitively denies the Truth of Rumſey's Evidence, was ſo far from invalidating, that it corroborated Rumſey's Evidence, and cleared the thing which was before ſomewhat dark, beyond all manner of Contradiction, is a piece of effrontery; ſo admitting Sheppard had ſaid Mr. Corniſh was at his Houſe the night the Declaration was read, and had contradicted Mr Corniſh, is it a neceſſary Conſequence, that he heard the Declaration read, and promiſed his aſſiſtance to it? which muſt be the Inference, if it muſt ſupport Rumſey's Evidence.

If it be not a neceſſary Conſequence, but a probable one, that ought not to weigh with a Jury, to convict a Perſon of a capital Crime, eſpecially not of Treaſon. The Statute of Edward the Third ſays, probably Convict, that is, ſays my Lord Coke, convicted upon direct and manifeſt Proof, not upon probable conjectural Preſumptions, or Inferences, or Strains of Wit: And to ſay truth, when Verdicts have been given on ſuch Evidence, they have been often faulty.

To give ſome Inſtances of many, it is remembred in our time where Perſons were convicted of the Murder of a Perſon abſent, but not dead, barely by Inferences upon the Evidence of fooliſh Words and Actions; but the Judge before whom it was tried, was ſo unſatisfy'd in the Matter, becauſe the Body of the Perſon ſuppoſed to be murdered was not to be found, that he reprieved the Perſons condemned; yet in a Circuit afterwards, a certain unwary Judge, without inquiring into the Reaſons of the Reprieve, ordered Execution, and the Perſons to be hanged in Chains, which was done accordingly, and afterwards, to his Reproach, the Perſons ſuppoſed to be murdered appeared alive.

My Lord Coke relates a Story in his Time, of an Uncle who beat his Niece that had an Eſtate, which on her Death would deſcend to him; the Girl was heard to cry, good Uncle do not kill me; after which ſhe run away, and conceal'd herſelf ſome few Miles from London: the Girl being miſſing, and the Neighbours remembring the Cry of the Girl, and tacking it to the Probability that the Uncle might be induced, for his Advantage, to murder his Niece, apprehends him, and he was indicted for it at the Seſſions; and the Judges being unſatisfy'd in the Evidence, by reaſon the Body of the ſuppoſed murdered Girl did not appear, the Uncle ſaying that ſhe was run away, they gave him time to the next Seſſions to find her out, which he being not able to do, thought to defend himſelf by producing another Girl very like his own Niece, which he did accordingly; and being detected, it increaſed the Suſpicion, and by Inferences from all thoſe Circumſtances, he was convicted, and afterwards executed.

Some Years after which the Girl appeared, and claimed her Eſtate: and therefore it is a moſt dangerous and unwarrantable thing for a Jury, in capital Matters, eſpecially in Treaſon, to convict a Perſon upon the Evidence of Probabilities.

As the Evidence in this Caſe againſt the Priſoner was weaker than in any of the precedent Caſes, ſo the uſage of the Priſoner was more rigorous than in any of them: in all the other Caſes, the Priſoners had more Weeks allowed them to prepare for their Tryals, than this Perſon had Days; all the other Perſons, after notice of their Tryal, were permitted to have Friends, nay Council, freely to come to them, and confer with them in private, without the Preſence of a Goaler, which was denied this Perſon; all the others, except Colonel Sidney, had ſoft Words given them on their Tryals; but this Perſon was rudely handled.

How often was he ſnub'd and bid hold his Tongue? How often did he beg the Patience of the Court, to hear him and his Witneſſes? and when he was heard, how was all he ſaid ridicul'd? and if he ſaid he was innocent, he was bid remember my Lord Ruſſel ſaid ſo to his Death, when he ſaid he was as innocent as any Perſon in the Court, he was told for all his Confidence few believed him. If he ſaid the Matter ſworn againſt him was improbable (which hath been taken for a pretty good Topick for the disbelief of a Matter teſtify'd) how is it ridicul'd by Improbability, Improbability, Improbability? If he go to prove he is an honeſt Man, he is told that is all Appearance. If he ſays he employed Goodenough about the Riot, he is told that is a Branch of the Plot. If he call Mr. Goſpright as a Witneſs for him, the Witneſs is reproached with having helpt the Priſoner in packing Juries; if he call one to prove he received the Sacrament, he is told, that was in order to qualifie himſelf to be a Sheriff, and as ſuch his uſage before, and at the Tryal, ſuch was it afterwards, to order him to be ty'd when he was ſentenc'd, was an Indignity not uſed to Perſons of his Quality, a thing indeed permitted, not commanded to be uſed, on boiſtrous Criminals, who may be ſuſpected to do a ſudden Miſchief, if their Arms were at liberty.

Of like kind was the Reproaching him with the Chearfulneſs of his Countenance at his Condemnation, and that it might be all of a Strain, his Quarters were expoſed, a Severity us'd to none abovementioned, but Sir Thomas Armſtrong; and in all theſe Tryals, Colledge made the beſt Defence, and perhaps, Circumſtances conſidered, the beſt Defence ever made upon an Indictment of a Capital Matter, and Mr. Corniſh's was the weakeſt, though it ſignified nothing; for I believe that none who reads his Tryal, but will plainly ſee he was ſo beſet, that the Defence he, or any for him could make, would have availed him nothing, and no account can be given for the Proceedings againſt Mr. Corniſh, in the above manner, but that ſome of the Judges, whereof three of them on the Bench, had newly come out of the Weſt, where they had been ſo fluſht and hardned, that nothing ſeem to them rigorous or cruel, and the reſt ſeemed to vie with them in the Practice.

Remarks on the Tryal of Charles Bateman.

THE laſt Perſon which concluded the Tragedy, was one Charles Bateman a Chyrurgeon, his Demerits were, that he had been, or at leaſt was reputed to have been, Chyrurgeon to the Earl of Shaftsbury, and one whom his Lordſhip had a Kindneſs for, and therefore according to the Cant of the Time, he was called a factious Fellow; and he had reviv'd the Memory of his Demerits, by attending when Oates came from his Whipping, and letting him Blood; whether either of thoſe Circumſtances were true or not, I know not, but they were believed: And therefore the 9th of December 1685. he was indicted and try'd for High Treaſon. On his Tryal he ſeemed to be diſtracted, and therefore out of abundance of Charity, the Court appointed his Son to make his Defence for him.

The Witneſſes againſt him were Keeling, who only ſpoke of a Deſign in general, without mentioning Bateman to be concern'd in it. Thomas Lee and Richard Goodenough ſwore, at ſeveral times and places, his Diſcourſe to them ſeverally, of ſeizing the Tower, City and Savoy. Baker for the Priſoner ſaid, Lee in the Year 1683. would have had him inſinuated himſelf into the Priſoners Company, and diſcourſe about State Affairs, and by that he would find a way to make Baker a great Man: upon the Evidence the Priſoner was found guilty. Againſt Goodenough's Evidence, there is only this to be ſaid, that he was pardon'd but ſo far only, as to qualifie him to be a Witneſs, though not a very credible one, not only the Guilt ſticking to him, but even the Puniſhment of what he had then lately done, hanging over his Head; and what was ſaid for ſome time, of all the Witneſſes for the King, at that time, and for ſome time before, was true, they hunted like Cormorants with Halters about their Necks, though even that matter by one of the Kings Council was boaſted to the Jury, as a circumſtance of more credibility; for he aſſured them there was not a Witneſs which he produced had a Pardon, as the Witneſſes in the Popiſh Plot had. 'Tis true, in the Popiſh Plot, upon very good reaſon the Witneſſes having confeſſed what they pretended to know, of matters in which they had an hand, it was not thought proper to uſe them as Witneſſes, though they had uſed them as Informers, till they were pardon'd, leaſt it might happen to be, or at leaſt it would have been ſuſpected, that the terror of the Puniſhment of the Crimes confeſs'd might influence them to ſwear falſly to the jeopardy of other Mens Lives, to ſave their own, which as the Lord Howard truly ſaid, was the drudgery of Swearing. But to Lee's Evidence, beſides the Evidence of Baker againſt him, that he would have procured Baker to have been a Witneſs againſt the Priſoner, and enticed him with the promiſe of making him a great Man, and beſides that it appears in Rouſe his Tryal, that Rouſe and he were upon the Trepan with each other, to bring each other into the pretence of a Plot, in order to make ſome advantageous diſcovery of it, of which Lee got the ſtart of Rouſe; the objection which was made to his Evidence, why Lee had not accuſed the Priſoner ſooner, there being near three Years between the pretended deſign, and the diſcovery of it, was never ſatisfactorily anſwered. It was a fooliſh ſtory to ſay Goodenough could not be had before, and a ſingle Teſtimony in High-Treaſon was not ſufficient; every one knows, that though a ſingle Witneſs is not enough to convict a Man of High-Treaſon, yet a ſingle Perſons Teſtimony is enough to commit a Perſon accuſed, and upon Conviction on the Teſtimony of a ſingle Witneſs, to make him a Priſoner for his life, witneſs Mr. Hamden and others, beſides the ſubjecting him to other Corporal puniſhments, inflicted at diſcretion, witneſs Mr. Johnſon and Oates; and in 1683. when the words were pretended to be ſpoken, Bateman had not been ſpared if accuſed; and though it be a good reaſon for the Court to have given, why they did not proceed againſt the Priſoner till that time, becauſe there were not two Witneſſes againſt him, yet it was no reaſon for Lee, why he did not accuſe the Priſoner before that time, eſpecially he having been ſeveral times before that time examined, not only of what he knew, but of what Perſons he knew concerned: but to ſay truth, Lee in the Tryal did not pretend to anſwer the Objection, but the Court in the manner before endeavoured to anſwer it for him.

The laſt Matter obſervable in this Tryal, was the permitting Bateman's Son to make his Father's Defence, which was an extraordinary unparallel'd favour, it was the firſt and laſt time that, or any thing like it, had been done; the Lord Ruſſel's Lady indeed was permitted to take Notes at the Tryal for her Lord, but he only was permitted to make uſe of them. Fitzharris his Wife when ſhe but whiſper'd her Husband, or but told him what Jurors he ſhould challenge, and what not, was ſeverely corrected, and threatned to be thruſt out of Court, for doing it in prejudice of the King. In Colledge's Tryal, he was told that Perſons that adviſ'd a Priſoner in Treaſon, even before a Tryal, were guilty of a high Miſdemeanour; nay, a Sollicitor had been indicted of High-Treaſon for it: and therefore nothing can excuſe the allowing the Priſoner Council in matter of Fact, as was done in this Caſe (it is not material, whether the Son was a Barriſter at Law or not) but the weakneſs of the Priſoner, who to all appearance was mop'd mad.

But the Court by excuſing their Favour upon that account incurred a worſe Cenſure; for nothing is more certain in Law, than that a Perſon who falls mad after a Crime ſuppos'd to be committed, ſhall not be try'd for it; and if he fall mad after Judgment, he ſhall not be executed: tho I do not think the reaſon given for the Law in that Point will maintain it, which is, that the End of Puniſhment is the ſtriking a Terror into others, but the execution of a Madman had not that effect; which is not true, for the Terror to the living is equal, whether the Perſon be mad or in his Senſes; and that is the reaſon of breaking the Perſon executed for Treaſon, and expoſing his Quarters, which is done rather to deter the living, than for puniſhing the dead. But the true reaſon of the Law I think to be this, a Perſon of non ſana Memoria, and a Lunatick during his Lunacy, is by an Act of God (for ſo it is call'd, tho the means may be humane, be it violent, as hard Impriſonment, terror of Death, or natural, as Sickneſs) diſabled to make his juſt Defence, there may be Circumſtances lying in his private Knowledg, which would prove his Innocency, of which he can have no advantage, becauſe not known to the Perſons who ſhall take upon them his Defence; and that is the reaſon many civil Actions die with the Perſons againſt whom they lay in their Life-times, and that is the reaſon why in criminal Matters, Perſons by ordinary courſe of Law cannot be convicted after their deaths.

For in all civil Actions there is as much reaſon for the Perſon injur'd, to have ſatisfaction out of the Eſtate of the Perſon who injur'd him, in the hands of his Heir or Executor after his death, as there was to have it out of the Eſtate of the Injurer in his own hands in his Life time: and there is as much reaſon that the Heir or Executor of a Perſon who hath committed a Crime, which by Law would have forfeited his Eſtate, if in his Life-time he had been attainted of the ſame, ſhould forfeit the Eſtates they claim from him, as if he had been attainted in his Life-time, which had prevented the ſaid Eſtates veſting in them. And it hath been ſometimes practis'd, where the Crimes of the Perſons deceas'd have been notorious, and without any doubt; as was the Caſe of ſeveral Perſons mention'd in the Act of Pains and Penalties, which Act had example from many other Acts of Parliament in other Reigns, where the Perſons were dead before Puniſhment overtook them.

And tho of late Years it hath been pretended, that the King's Safety depends upon the ſpeedy Tryal and Execution of a Perſon guilty of High-Treaſon; yet this was never thought ſo heretofore, nor in truth in it ſelf is ſo: for it is plain, in Reaſon as well as Experience, that what is ſaid of Witches is true of all Malefactors when once they are in Cuſtody, their Power of doing Miſchief ceaſes.

The King is therefore no otherwiſe benefited by the deſtruction of his Subjects, than that the Example deters others from committing the like Crimes; and there being ſo many to be made Examples of, beſides thoſe on whom the misfortunes fortunes of Madneſs fall, it is inconſiſtent with humanity to make Examples of them; it is inconſiſtent with Religion, as being againſt Chriſtian Charity to ſend a great Offender quick, as it is ſtil'd, into another World, when he is not of a capacity to fit himſelf for it. But whatever the reaſon of the Law is, it is plain the Law is ſo; and for remedying it in High-Treaſon, was the 33*d* of Henry the Eighth made, whereby it is enacted, That if a Man fall mad after he hath committed High-Treaſon, he ſhall notwithſtanding be try'd in his abſence; and if a man fall mad after he is attainted of High-Treaſon, he ſhall notwithſtanding be executed. Which Statute extending only to High-Treaſon, the Law continu'd, and yet is as it was at Common Law in all other capital Matters; and even that Statute was call'd a cruel and inhumane Law, and therefore liv'd not long, for it was afterwards repeal'd: ſo that the Law as to this Matter when this Man was try'd and executed, was as it was at Common Law; and therefore if he was of non ſana Memoria, he ought not to have been try'd, much leſs executed.

I know it will be objected, that if this Matter of non ſana Memoria ſhould be permitted, to put off a Tryal or ſtay Execution, all Malefactors will pretend to be ſo: But I ſay there is a great difference between Pretences and Realities, and ſana and non ſana Memoria hath been often try'd in capital Matters, and the Priſoners have reap'd ſo little benefit by their Pretences, it being always diſcover'd, that we rarely hear of it. In this Caſe the Priſoner might have been try'd as well abſent as preſent, according to that repeal'd Statute, for any advantage he did or could reap by being preſent: and it ſeems very probable the Court thought him diſtemper'd; for if he was of ſane Memory, his Son ought not to have been permitted to make his Father's Defence; if he was diſtemper'd, he ought not to have been try'd, much leſs executed. And this Perſon being the laſt Man, as far as I can remember, or can find by the printed Tryals, who ſuffer'd for the Plot of High-Treaſon firſt ſet on foot by Fitzharris, and carry'd on againſt Colledge, and the other Perſons herein mention'd; and the Deſign ſtopping here, I think fit to end my Remarks on the Proceedings of all Capital Matters with him. But I think it is fit for me to make ſome Apology for the thing, and for my ſelf, for taking on me to cenſure the Opinions and Actions of Perſons whoſe Characters carry'd Authority with them. I confeſs I never thought that either the great Seal or a Garment added to a Man's Senſe, Learning or Honeſty; but he remain'd juſt ſuch as to thoſe Qualities after his preferment as he was before: and as to many of the Perſons reflected on in theſe Remarks, the Cenſure of Col. Sidney was true; and for the beſt of them, it is plain they not only vary'd from one another in their Opinions, but even from themſelves in the Judgment of the ſame Caſe, but always tending to the deſtruction of the Perſon try'd for his Life, witneſs the Opinion of the Court in the Challenge of Jurors not having a Freehold and the deſigning to levy War not Treaſon within the Statute of Ed. 3: and forty other Matters. And that not only gives a liberty to enquire, but naturally puts one upon the enquiry which of the two Opinions is right; tho it is impoſſible for one not to think meanly of the Perſon, who in ſo great a Concern as a Man's Life, ſhould be ſo raſh as to give his Opinion without Conſideration, or ſo unſteady as to give different Opinions in the ſame Caſe: for if the Truth of a Man who tells Hiſtory backward and forward, is juſtly ſuſpected in point of Truth, the knowledge and ſincerity of a Man, who gives different Opinions in the ſame Caſe, is juſtly ſuſpected in point of Law, which together with the fulſom, but injurious ſtuff vented for Crown-Law, was the firſt Matter which put me on conſidering and writing what I have done.

And for my ſelf, if Tully thought it a Reproach to his Son if he did not abound with Philoſophy, having heard Cratippus for the ſpace of a whole Year, and that at Athens; ſurely one who hath had his Education at one of the three great Schools for ſome Years, and afterwards at the Univerſity, and laſtly twenty five Years conſtant Reſidence in an Inn of Court, and twenty Years attendance at Weſtminſter-Hall, and not diverted by the uſual Employs of a Solicitor or Attorney, may be allow'd without the imputation of Confidence to give his Cenſure, upon Conſideration, on the extempore Judgments or Opinions of Perſons, tho' of greater Standing and Character than himſelf.

The Tryal of John Hambden, Gent. on the 30*th* of December, 1 Jac. II. 1685.

THIS Day being appointed for the Tryal of Mr. Hamden, after the Judges came to the Court, and the Court was called, the Officer was commanded to proceed to call over the Jury whilſt Mr. Hamden was bringing down.

Cryer. O Yez, you good Men of the County of Middleſex, ſummon'd to appear here this Day, to try the Iſſue which ſhall be between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Priſoner that ſhall be call'd to the Bar, anſwer to your Names as they ſhall be call'd, every one at the firſt call, upon Pain, and Peril that ſhall fall thereon.

' King, and againſt our Lord the King that now
' is, their Crown and Dignity, and againſt the ' Form of the Statutes in that Caſe made and
' provided, &c.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I perceive that I am here indicted for a Fact, for which I was indicted above two Years ago, and I was convicted of it, and did ſuffer Impriſonment in Execution upon the Judgment that was given againſt me, and am ſtill under Execution for the Fine that was ſet upon me by way of Puniſhment for that Fact. I think, my Lord, I have as much to ſay in point of Law for my ſelf, as any Priſoner that ever came before your Lordſhip upon ſuch an account, twice tried, twice convicted, and twice puniſhed, for the ſame Fact muſt be very extraordinary, but, my my Lord, I do paſs by all Pleas whatſoever, and caſt my ſelf wholly upon the King's Mercy; that is my Reſolution, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then you muſt plead Guilty or not Guilty. But you ſay you have been tried twice for the ſame Fact, were you ever tried for High-Treaſon before? The very Puniſhment that you alledge to be inflicted upon you for it, is a plain Proof that you were not tried for High-Treaſon, for that is not uſually puniſhed by Fine and Impriſonment.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord I only inſinuate that the Fact is the ſame.

L. C. J. You muſt plead Guilty or not Guilty.

Clerk. Are you Guilty or not Guilty of the High-Treaſon, whereof you ſtand indicted, John Hambden?

L. C. J. You muſt plead directly; ſay you are Guilty, or you are not Guilty.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I do plead Guilty to the Indictment.

Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to hear me: My Lord, I do confeſs my offence againſt the King is very great, I am very ſorrowful for it. My Lord, I know the King is the Fountain of Mercy as well as Juſtice, an inexhauſtible Fountain of Mercy, and if I may be ſo happy to obtain your Lordſhips interceſſion to his Majeſty on my behalf; I doubt not but that Grace and Goodneſs which hath been extended to others, may be beſtowed upon me.

L. C. J. Mr. Hambden, as the King is the Fountain of Mercy, ſo it comes freely from him. I confeſs as the circumſtances of your Caſe are, you have pleaded the beſt plea to find Mercy, but how far the pleading guilty when there is full Evidence to prove you ſo, may move the King to have Mercy upon you I don't know; you muſt apply your ſelf to the King.

Mr. Hambden. I humbly beg your Lordſhip's interceſſion, I know none can do it better than your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. You muſt record the Plea.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I humbly beg your Lordſhip that you would be pleaſed to repreſent to his Majeſty what my paſt ſufferings have been, and how ſorrowful I am for having offended his Majeſty, and that your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to beg his Majeſties gracious Pardon in my behalf, I humbly beſeech your Lordſhip to do it, and it ſhall be the endeavour of all my Life to behave my ſelf as Dutiful and Loyal Subject as any the King hath.

L. C. J. The King ſhall have an account of what you ſay.

Mr. Hambden: My Lord, there is one thing I would humbly beg the Liberty for; there are words in the Indictment concerning the death of the King, my Lord, what conſtruction the Law may put upon ſuch an Action I am ignorant of, but for any direct intention of taking away the Life of the King, no Man does abominate and abhor more than I have done.

L. C. J. Mr. Hambden, it is but a neceſſary conſtruction that the Law puts upon it, it is a conſtruction confirm'd by woful Experience. We ſee that Rebellion, let the beginning be what it will, never ſtops, unleſs by God's great Mercy and the Juſtice of the King's Cauſe, but it will end in the Death of the King, it hath a natural tendency that way, but however you are underſtood that you had not any thoughts of killing the King, but only to raiſe Rebellion within the Kingdom, which muſt neceſſarily end in the Death of the King.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, no Man doth abhor that more than I do.

L. C. J. You may ask Mr. Hambden if he hath any thing to ſay why Sentence of Death ſhould not paſs upon him.

Clerk. John Hambden, hold up thy Hand. Thou ſtandeſt Convicted of High Treaſon by your own Confeſſion, what can you ſay for your ſelf why Sentence ſhould not paſs upon you?

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I humbly caſt my ſelf upon the Kings Mercy. My Lord, I would humbly humbly move your Lordſhip in one thing, that I may have the liberty of my Friends and Relations to come to me in Priſon as they did before.

L. C. J. You muſt apply your ſelf to the King.

Mr. Hambden. Will your Lordſhip be pleaſed to order it, my Lord; I had two or three of my own Relations the King was pleaſed to grant to come to me.

L. C. J. It is eaſie for you Mr. Hambden, to make your Application to the King, it will be better for you: I direct it as the better way to apply your ſelf to the King.

Mr. Hambden. I only beg it my Lord.

L. C. J. In the preſence of a Keeper I don't know why his Relations ſhould not come to him, but I think it had been better to apply your ſelf to the King.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I have two or three near Relations allowed to be without the preſence of a Keeper.

L. C. J. Mr. Hambden, that we cannot do, that was an extraordinary favour, and as that came from the King, ſo you muſt apply your ſelf to the King again, but in the preſence of a Keeper we grant it, we cannot grant it without a Keeper, if you will apply your ſelf to the King for that you may.

Cryer. Gentlemen of Middleſex, that have been Summon'd upon the Kings Service this Day, the Court diſcharges you.

Then after the Judges did withdraw, the Clerk was commanded to proceed.

Clerk. John Hambden, hold up thy Hand. You ſtand Convicted of High Treaſon by your own Confeſſion, what can you ſay for your ſelf, why the Court ſhould not pronounce Sentence upon you?

Mr. Hambden. I only plead the Kings Mercy. I rely upon no other thing.

Cryer. Oyez, all manner of Perſons are commanded to keep ſilence whilſt Judgment is giving upon pain of impriſonment.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Hambden, you have been Indicted for High Treaſon, and the Indictment hath been read to you, and whereupon according as the Law doth require, it hath been demanded of you, that you ſhould plead to it, and thereupon you have pleaded Guilty to this Indictment, which is recorded accordingly; and therefore I need not ſay any thing for to let you know the heinouſneſs of this Crime, for I perceive you are ſenſible enough of it your ſelf, and I do verily believe you have taken a very wiſe and diſcreet Courſe to confeſs the truth, for you were brought hither to be Tryed for this Crime in caſe you had pleaded not Guilty to this Indictment, which now you have prevented by this your candid Confeſſion. However it is the Duty of my Place to pronounce the Judgment that the Law hath provided for ſuch Crimes as theſe are, and that is this,

You muſt be had to the place from whence you came, and from thence you muſt be drawn to the place of Execution, and there you are to be hang'd by the Neck, and whilſt you are alive you muſt be cut down, and your Entrails be taken out, and Burnt before you, and your Head muſt be cut off, and your Body quartered, and your Head and your Quarters to be diſpoſed of at the Kings pleaſure, and the Lord have mercy upon your Soul.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I hope I ſhall have your Lordſhips interceſſion with his Majeſty.

Mr. Recorder. I don't doubt, Mr. Hambden, but you have uſed the beſt means to obtain ſo great a Favour, and as it is the Duty of my place to give an account of this to His Majeſty, ſo I ſhall truly and faithfully repreſent it with the advantages your Demeanour this day hath deſerv'd.

Mr. Hambden. My Lord, I humbly beg the Favour that my Wife may come to me without the preſence of a Keeper.

Mr Recorder. Mr. Hambden, 'tis too late for us to give any directions in this matter, becauſe you ask'd this while the Judges were here, but I don't doubt upon your Application to His Majeſty, but you will have all things that you can reaſonably deſire, if you pleaſe to apply your ſelf to him for this and what elſe you ſhall be adviſed may be fitting and convenient for you to beg.

The Tryal of Henry Lord Delamere.

1 Jac. 2. 1685.

Cl. of Cr. SErgeant at Arms, Make Proclamation.

Serj. at Arms. Oyez, O yez, Oyez. My Lord High Steward of England his Grace doth ſtraightly charge and command all manner of perſons to keep ſilence, and to give ear to the King's Majeſty's Commiſſion to his Grace my Lord High Steward of England, upon pain of Impriſonment.

Then the Commiſſion was read, his Grace and all the Peers ſtanding up bare headed.

Then the Staff being carried between Garter King at Arms, and the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, was with three Reverences delivered upon the knee to his Grace, and by him redelivered to the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, to hold during the Service.

Cl. of Cr. Serjeant at Arms, Make Proclamation.

Serg. at Arm. Oyez, His Grace my Lord High Steward of England doth ſtraightly charge and command all manner of perſons here preſent, except Peers, Privy Councellors, and the reverend Judges now aſſiſtant, to be uncovered.

Cl. of Cr. Make Proclamation.

Serg. at Arms. Oyez. My Lord High Steward of England his Grace ſtraightly chargeth and commandeth all Juſtices, Commiſſioners, and all and every other perſon and perſons to whom any

Then Sir Edward Lutwich, one of his Majeſty's Sergeants at Law, and Chief Juſtice of Cheſter delivered in his Writ and Return at the Clerks Table.

The Writ of Certiorari and the Return thereof were read in hæc verba.

L. H. Steward. Call the Lieutenant of the Tower to return his Precept, and bring his Priſoner to the Bar.

Cl. of Cr. Make proclamation.

Serg. at Arms. Lieutenant of the Tower of London, return thy Writ and Precept to thee directed, together with the Body of Henry Baron of Delamere, thy Priſoner, forthwith, upon Pain and Peril ſhall fall thereon.

The Priſoner was brought to the Bar by the Lieutenant of the Tower: The Writ and Return thereof, together with his Grace's Precept, and the Return thereof were read in hæc verba.

Cl. of Cr. Make proclamation.

Serg. at Arms. Sir Roger Harſnet Knight, Sergeant at Arms to our Sovereign Lord the King, return the Precept to thee directed, together with the Names of all the Lords and Noblemen of this Realm of England, Peers of Henry Baron of Delamere, by thee ſummoned, forthwith, upon Pain and Peril ſhall fall thereon.

The Sergeant at Arms delivered in his Precept and Return at the Clerks Table.

L. H. Steward. Read the Precept and the Return.

They were read in hæc verba.

Cl. of Cr. Make an O Yez.

Serg. at Arms. O Yez. All Dukes, Earls, Viſcounts, and Barons of this Realm of England, Peers of Henry Baron of Delamere, who, by Commandment of my Lord High Steward of England His Grace, were ſummoned to appear here this Day, and are now preſent in Court, anſwer to your Names, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

The Peers ſummoned were called over, and thoſe that appeared, ſtanding up uncovered, anſwered to their Names, each making a Reverence to the Lord High Steward.

Then his Grace the Lord High Steward addreſſed himſelf to the Lord Delamere the Priſoner at the Bar in this manner.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, the King being acquainted that you ſtand accuſed of High Treaſon, not by common Report or Hearſay, but by a Bill of Indictment found againſt you by Gentlemen of great Quality, and known Integrity within the County Palatine of Cheſter, the place of your Reſidence, has thought it neceſſary in Tenderneſs to you, as well as Juſtice to himſelf, to order you a ſpeedy Tryal.

My Lord, if you know your ſelf innocent, in the name of God, do not deſpond, for you may be aſſured of a fair and patient hearing, and in your proper time a free Liberty to make your full Defence: and I am ſure you cannot but be well convinced, that my Noble Lords that are here your Peers to try you, will be as deſirous and ready to acquit you, if you appear to be innocent, as they will to convict you if you be guilty.

But, my Lord, if you are conſcious to your ſelf that you are guilty of this heinous Crime, give Glory to God, make amends to his Vicegerent the King by a plain and full diſcovery of your Guilt, and do not, by an obſtinate perſiſting in the Denial of it, provoke the juſt indignation of your Prince, who has made it appear to the World, that his Inclinations are rather to ſhew Mercy than inflict Puniſhments. My Lord, attend with patience, and hear the Bill of Indictment that hath been found againſt you read. Read the Bill of Indictment to my Lord.

Cl. of Cr. Henry Baron of Delamere, Hold up thy hand.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly beg your Grace would pleaſe to anſwer me one Queſtion, whether a Peer of England be obliged by the Laws of this Land to hold up his hand at the Bar, as a Commoner muſt do; and I ask your Grace this queſtion the rather, becauſe in my Lord Stafford's Caſe it was allowed to be the priviledge of the Peers not to hold up their hands.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, this being a matter of the priviledge of the Peerage, it is not fit for me to determine it one way or the other; but I think I may acquaint your Lordſhips, that in point of Law, if you are ſatisfied this is the Perſon indicted, the holding, or not holding up of the hand is but a Formality, which does not ſignifie much either way.

L. Delamere. I humbly pray your Grace's direction in one thing farther, whether I muſt addreſs my ſelf to your Grace when I would ſpeak, or to your Grace with the reſt of theſe Noble Lords my Peers.

L. H. Steward. You muſt direct what you have to ſay to me, my Lord.

L. Delamere. I beg your Grace would pleaſe to ſatisfie me, whether your Grace be one of my Judges in concurrence with the reſt of the Lords?

L. H. Steward. No, my Lord. I am Judge of the Court, but I am none of your Tryers. Go on.

'Cl. of Cr. HEnry Baron of Delamere, thou ſtandeſt Indicted in the County Palatine of Cheſter by the Name of Henry Baron of Delamere of Mere in the ſaid County of Cheſter, For that thou as a falſe Traytor againſt the moſt Illuſtrious and moſt Excellent Prince James the Second, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, thy natural Lord, not having the fear of God in thy Heart, nor weighing the duty of thy Allegiance, but being moved and ſeduced by the Inſtigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience which a true and faithful Subject of our ſaid Lord the King, ſhould and of right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing; and contriving, practiſing, and with all thy might intending, the Peace and common Tranquillity of this Kingdom of England to diſquiet, moleſt, and diſturb; and War and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to ſtir up, move, and procure, and the Government of our ſaid Lord the King of this Kingdom of England to ſubvert, change and alter, and our ſaid Lord the King from the Title, Honour, and Kingly Name of the Imperial Crown of his Kingdom of England to depoſe and deprive, and our ſaid Lord the King to Death and final Deſtruction to bring and put; the fourteenth day of April in the firſt Yeat of the Reign of our ſaid Lord James the Second now King of England, &c. and divers other Days and times as well before as after, at Mere in the County of Cheſter aforeſaid, falſly, malicioufly, deviliſhly, and traiterouſly, with divers other falſe Traytors and Rebels, to the Jurors unknown, didſt conſpire, compaſs, imagine, and intend our ſaid Lord the King, thy ſupreme, true and natural Lord, not only from the Kingly State, Title, Power and Government of his Kingdom of England to deprive and caſt down, but alſo the ſame our Lord the King to Kill, and to Death to bring and put, and the antient Government of this Kingdom of England to change, alter, and wholly to ſubvert, and a miſerable Slaughter among the Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King throughout his whole Kindgom of England, to cauſe and procure, and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King within this Kingdom of England to procure and aſſiſt, and the ſame thy moſt wicked, moſt impious, and deviliſh Treaſons and traiterous Compaſſings Imaginations and Purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil and bring to effect, thou the ſaid Henry Baron of Delamere, as a falſe Traytor then and there, to wit, the ſaid fourteenth day of April in the firſt Year aboveſaid, and divers other days and times as well before as after, at Mere aforeſaid, in the County aforeſaid, falſly, unlawfully, wickedly, and traiterouſly with Charles Gerrard, Eſq; and other falſe Traytors to the Jurors unknown, didſt aſſemble thy ſelf, gather together, conſult, and agree to raiſe and procure divers great Sums of Money, and a great number of armed Men, War and Rebellion within this Kingdon of England to levy and make, and the City of Cheſter in the County of the ſame City, as alſo the Caſtle of our ſaid Lord the King of Cheſter at Cheſter in the County of Cheſter aforeſaid, and all the Magazines in the ſame Caſtle then being, to enter, take, ſeize, and ſurpriſe, and into thy poſſeſſion and power to obtain; and that thou the ſaid Henry Baron of Delamere afterwards, to wit, the 27*th* day of May in the firſt Year aboveſaid, falſly, unlawfully, wickedly, and traiterouſly didſt take a Journey from the City of London unto Mere aforeſaid, in the County of Cheſter aforeſaid, thy traiterous purpoſes aforeſaid to fulfil and perfect: And that thou the ſaid Henry Baron of Delamere, afterwards, to wit, the fourth day of June, in the firſt Year aboveſaid, at Mere aforeſaid, in the County of Cheſter aforeſaid, in further proſecution of thy unlawful, moſt wicked and traiterous purpoſes aforeſaid, divers Liege People and Subjects of our ſaid Lord the King, to the Jurors unknown, with thee the ſaid Henry Baron of Delamere, and the aforeſaid other falſe Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, falſely, unlawfully, and traiterouſly, in the War and Rebellion aforeſaid, and in thy traiterous purpoſes aforeſaid, to join and adhere didſt excite, animate, and perſwade, againſt the duty of thy Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our ſaid Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the form of the Statute in that caſe made and provided. How ſay'ſt thou Henry Baron of Delamere, art thou Guilty of this High Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and haſt been now Arraign'd, or not Guilty?

L. Delamere.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly beg the Indictment may be read again.

L. H. Steward. Let it be read again. (Which was done).

L. Delamere May it pleaſe your Grace, I humbly beg the favour to be heard a few words before I plead to this Indictment.

L H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I am very unwilling to give your Lordſhip any interruption, but according to the Methods of Law, which muſt be obſerved in your Caſe, as well as all others, You muſt plead to the Indictment before you be heard to any thing elſe.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, I have ſomething to offer to your Grace's and their Lordſhips conſideration which is a matter of Law.

L. H. Steward. I know not what matter of Law you have to offer: If you have a mind to demur to the Indictment, you may.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace pleaſe to hear what I have to ſay? and then I ſhall ſubmit it to your Grace's Judgment.

L. H. Steward. I would hear what you have to ſay, my Lord, with all my heart, if I could: But I muſt then paſs by all the Forms and uſual Methods of proceeding, and that without any advantage to you too, and that I ſuppoſe your Lordſhip will not deſire of me. Ask my Lord, Whether he be guilty, or not guilty?

Cl. of Cr. How ſayſt thou, Henry Baron of Delamere, Art thou guilty of this High-Treaſon whereof thou haſt been indicted, or not guilty?

L. Delamere. I beſeech your Grace to hear me what I have to ſay; I ſhall not detain your Grace very long, but I beg your Grace to hear me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I muſt keep you to the known Rules and Methods of Law: This is not your time to ſpeak but to plead; in your proper time you ſhall be fully heard whatſoever you have to ſay.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I have ſomething to ſay which concerns all the Peers of England in point of Right.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you muſt either plead, or demur to this Indictment, that is the uſual Practice before any thing elſe can be done.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I have a Plea to offer to your Grace and my Lords; and it is with reference to the Priviledg and Right of the Peers of England.

L. H. Steward. If you have any Plea to offer, it muſt be received, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord, amidſt the hardſhips I have lain under by my frequent Impriſonments and cloſe Confinement——

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, You muſt keep up to the Legal Method of Proceedings: In Caſes of this nature I would, as far is poſſible for me to do, indulge a Perſon of your Quality, and in your condition; but withal I muſt do right to the Court, and not permit any Breach to be made upon the Legal Courſe of Proceedings. You muſt plead, or demurr to the Indictment before you are heard to ſay any thing.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace be pleaſed to hear me tell you my Reaſons why I offer you a Plea of this nature to the Indictment.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if you have any Plea, put it in.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace be pleas'd to accept it as I have done it? It may be it is not ſo formal, becauſe I have had no Council allowed me to peruſe and ſign it. But as it is, I here offer it to your Grace's conſideration.

L. H. Steward. Ay, put it in.

Then it was delivered to the Clerk.

L. H. Steward. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. The humble Plea of Henry Lord Delamere, to the Indictment of High Treaſon againſt him, now to be tryed by the Lord High Steward and Peers here aſſembled.

THE ſaid Lord Delamere ſaving to himſelf all benefit of Advantage of any further or other matter of exception to the Generality, Incertainty or Inſufficience of the ſaid Indictment, and all matters and things which do or may concern the ſame, for Plea hereunto ſaith,

That he was by His Majeſty's Writ Summoned to this preſent Parliament which began the Nineteenth Day of May laſt, and attended his Duty there as a Peer of this Realm.

That for High Treaſon ſuppoſed to be committed by him, during the Sitting of the ſame Parliament; he was the Twenty ſixth Day of July laſt, committed, by Warrant of the Earl of Sunderland one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State, to the Tower of London.

That the Peers in Parliament aſſembled, taking Notice by his Petition of the Ninth of November laſt, of his being abſent from his Attendance in Parliament, ſent a Meſſage to His Majeſty to know the reaſon why he the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere, a Peer of that Houſe, was abſent from his Attendance there.

Upon the Tenth Day of November laſt the Lord Treaſurer reported His Majeſty's Anſwer to the ſaid Meſſage, viz. That the ſaid Lord Delamere was abſent from his Attendance in Parliament, becauſe he ſtood committed for High Treaſon, for levying War againſt the King this laſt Summer, teſtifyed upon Oath, and that his Majeſty had given directions that he ſhould be proceeded againſt with all ſpeed according to Law.

The Houſe of Peers not being ſatisfied with this Anſwer, the Debate thereof was adjourn'd till the Monday morning following.

On which Day the Lords reſuming the Debate concerning the Lord Delamere and the King's Meſſage; after ſome Debate, the Lord Chancellour, by His Majeſty's Command, gave the Houſe an account what Proceedings had been againſt the Lord Delamere ſince his Majeſty's Anſwer to their Addreſs concerning his abſence from the Houſe, which was to this Effect:

That the King had given Order for a ſpeedy Proſecution of him: That the Treaſon whereof he was accuſed was committed in Cheſhire; and that being a County Palatine, the Proſecution ought to be there, and not in the King's Bench; as it might be if the Treaſon had been committed in another County: and that therefore his Majeſty had given Order for a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer into Cheſhire, in order to the finding of an Indictment againſt him for the ſaid Treaſon: And that accordingly a Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer was already ſealed; and if the Indictment be not found before the end of the Term, the ſaid Lord Delamere's Prayer being entred in the Kings Bench, he ſhould be Bailed.

All which Proceedings do more fully appear in the Journals of the ſaid Houſe of Peers; to which the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere doth refer himſelf.

Afterwards, that is to ſay, upon the Day of the ſaid Parliament was Prorogued by His Majeſty unto the Tenth Day of February next, as by the ſaid Journals it doth appear.

Upon all which Matters the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere doth humbly tender this his Plea to the Juriſdiction of your Lordſhips in this Cauſe, and doth humbly conceive your Lordſhips ought not to proceed in the Tryal of him upon the Indictment of High Treaſon now before you: And that for theſe following Reaſons.

Firſt, Inaſmuch as it appears by the ſaid Petition of the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere, and the ſeveral Orders of the Lords, and the King's Anſwers to the Meſſage of the Lords thereupon, That the ſaid Houſe are already poſſeſſed of his ſaid Cauſe, which is the ſame ſuppoſed Treaſon for which he was at firſt committed, and which is the ſame Treaſon for which he now ſtands indicted before your Lordſhips. And for this Reaſon your Lordſhips, as he humbly conceives, by the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, which is part of the Law and Cuſtom of the Land, ought not to proceed againſt him upon the ſaid Indictment; but his ſaid Cauſe ought wholly to be determined and adjudged in the ſaid Houſe of Peers, and not elſewhere, as in like Caſes has been formerly done.

Secondly, Whereas it is the Right and Privilege of the Peerage of this Realm, That no Peer thereof ought to be Tryed or proceeded againſt for High Treaſon during the continuance of the Parliament, except in the ſaid Houſe of Peers, and before the whole Body of the Peers there. And whereas the aforeſaid Parliament is now continuing by Prorogation until the tenth day of February next aboveſaid, the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere humbly conceives that by the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament hitherto uſed, which is part of the Law and Cuſtom of the Realm, he ought not, nor can be Tryed before your Lordſhips for the ſaid Treaſons, becauſe the ſaid Parliament is ſtill continuing, and not diſſolved.

And laſtly, The ſaid Henry Lord Delamere doth further ſay, That he is the ſame Henry Lord Delamere mentioned in the Commitment, Petitions, Meſſages, Anſwers and Indictment now read unto him, and the ſaid Treaſon for which he was Committed is the ſame Treaſon mentioned in the Commitment, Petition, Meſſages, Anſwers, and Indictment, as aforeſaid.

To which ſaid Indictment he humbly conceives he is not bound by Law to make any further or other Anſwer.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, and you my Noble Lords, I do not offer this Plea out of any diffidence or diſtruſt in my Cauſe, nor out of any diſlike I have to any of your Lordſhips that are here Summoned to be my Tryers; I cannot hope to ſtand before any more juſt and noble, nor can I wiſh to ſtand before any others; but your Grace and my Lords will pardon me if I inſiſt upon it, becauſe I apprehend it a Right and Priviledge due to all the Peerage of England; which, as it is againſt the Duty of every Peer to betray or forego, ſo it is not in the power of any One, or more, to wave it, or give it up without the conſent of the whole Body of the Peers, every one of them being equally intereſted.

This, my Lord, I humbly demand as my Right and Priviledge as a Peer of England, and ſubmit to the direction of your Grace and my Noble Lords.

L. H. Steward. What ſay you to it, Mr. Attorny?

L. H. Steward. May it pleaſe your Grace; This Plea that is here offered by this Noble Lord, is a Plea to the Juriſdiction, but, with ſubmiſſion, it needs very little Anſwer, for it has very little in it: The Force of the Plea is, That he ought to be Tryed by the whole Body of the Houſe of Peers in Parliament, becauſe the Parliament is ſtill continuing, being under a Prorogation and not diſſolved; and becauſe there was ſome agitation of the matter concerning this Proſecution, upon his Petition, in the Houſe of Lords; and therefore it concludes, That he ought not to be Tryed by your Grace and theſe Noble Lords upon this Commiſſion, but by all the Lords in Parliament. With ſubmiſſion, my Lord, This is contrary to all the ancient Precedents, and againſt the known Rules of Law; for the Law is, If the King pleaſes to try a Peer in Parliament, then the Record may be brought into the Houſe, and there they proceed as in other Caſes, and all the Peers are Judges. Thus it is in the time of a Seſſion of Parliament; but if the Parliament be Prorogued, there are many inſtances (and indeed none to the contrary) that after a Prorogation, the Proceedings are before the High Steward by Commiſſion. And as to the other part of the Caſe, I have this to ſay to it, That there is nothing at all depending in the Houſe of Lords that can out this Court of the Juriſdiction; for there was not ſo much as any Indictment returned there, no, nor ſo much as found during the Seſſion of Parliament. All the agitation was only upon my Lords Petition, and the King's Anſwer; that he intended as ſpeedy a Proſecution as could be: Beſides, my Lord, your Grace ſees it is a Plea in Paper and in Engliſh, without any Council's Hand, and therefore I hope your Grace does not expect that I ſhould formally Demur to a Plea in this Form, and that contains no more of Subſtance in it. But I muſt deſire your Grace to over-rule it, and that the Priſoner may plead in chief.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly pray that I may have Council aſſigned me, to put my Plea into Form, and to argue the matter of it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I am ſure I ought and ever ſhall be as tender of the Priviledges of the Peers of England, as any other Perſon whatſoever: For I am concerned, as well in intereſt as inclination ſo to be, having the Honour to be one my ſelf: But I know your Lordſhip will not think the Priviledge of the Peers is concerned in this matter; nor will your Lordſhip, I dare ſay, inſiſt upon matters that are purely dilatory, if your Lordſhip be ſatisfied that they are ſo: And therefore give me leave, my Lord, to mind you of a few things, whereby your Lordſhip will eaſily ſee, That the chief things on which you inſiſt are grounded upon miſtakes: Firſt, You ſay, The Houſe of Peers was poſſeſſed of the Cauſe; which could not be, and I will tell you why: Becauſe there was no Indictment ever removed thither or lodged there. Which plainly proves that the Lords were never poſſeſſed of the Cauſe. Nor indeed was the Bill found, upon which you are now arraigned, till after the Prorogation of the Parliament.

So

So that they could never come to be poſſeſſed of this matter. Theſe are miſtakes in Point of Fact, and your Lordſhip cannot but well know them to be ſo.

And there is as great a miſtake in the Law, That during the continuance of a Parliament (though it were Prorogued, yet if not Diſſolved) a Peer cannot be tryed but by the Houſe of Lords. This certainly is a very ſtrange Doctrine, and is not only againſt the reaſon and methods of Law, but contrary even to your Lordſhips own Experience. For your Lordſhip cannot but very well remember, that during the continuance of the Parliament, after a Prorogation, the Lord Cornwallis was tryed before the High Steward, and ſuch a number of Peers as were then Summoned, upon ſuch a Commiſſion as I now ſit here by. But indeed during the Sitting of the Parliament, then all the Peers are both Tryers and Judges, as was in the Caſes of my Lord Stafford, and my Lord of Pembroke; they being a Court of Judicature, then actually ſitting; and therefore this Plea is grounded as upon miſtake in Fact, ſo, upon a miſtake in point of Law. So that though, as I ſaid at firſt, it is both my duty and intereſt to preſerve the priviledges of the Peers, yet I muſt take care that no injury be done the Law, and truly I take this Plea to be altogether dilatory, and I ſuppoſe your Lordſhip is ſatisfied of it, and will not inſiſt upon it.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, It was alledged and agreed in the Caſe of my Lord of Briſtol, that the Cauſe of a Peer in time of Parliament properly belong'd only to the Houſe of Lords; And that which poſſeſſed the Houſe of Lords of his Caſe, was, as I apprehend, no more than is in my Caſe, a Petition upon the account of being abſent; and there the Lords claim the cognizance of the whole Cauſe, and nothing was done but in the Houſe of Lords. And as to the Inſtances your Grace has mentioned of my Lord Cornwallis, (and there was another of them, my Lord Morley) this Queſtion was never under Debate in thoſe Caſes; therefore I ſuppoſe they cannot be admitted as Precedents.

L. H. Steward. But, my Lord, it would have been an Error in the whole Proceedings, if this Court had not Juriſdiction: And ſure the Judges, who are always called to aſſiſt in ſuch Caſes: and who, in matters of Life, even in the Caſes of common Perſons, are ſo tender and careful, that there be no irregularity in the Proceedings, would not have let things paſs in that manner, had they been erroneous.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I think no other Precedents are produced but thoſe two, and there the Queſtion was never debated.

L. H. Steward. I only put you in mind of thoſe that were lately within Memory; but no queſtion of it there are a great many more Inſtances to be given.

Mr. Attor. Gen. I pray your Grace's Judgment to over-rule the Plea, and that my Lord may plead in chief.

L. Delamere. I hope your Grace will be pleaſed to aſſign me Council to put my Plea in Form; and that I may have time for it, that they may be heard to make a ſolemn Argument in Law.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if you inſiſt upon it, and think it worth the while to have Council heard, we will hear them.

L. Delamere. I ſubmit it to your Grace, I only offer it that I may not be wanting to the ſupport of the Peers Privileges; I aſſure your Grace, I ſpeak not to put off the Cauſe, for I am willing to come to my Tryal, and I have reaſon ſo to be, for I queſtion not but to make my innocence appear.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I tell you what my opinion of the Plea is, but if you inſiſt upon it to have your Council heard, I will hear them.

L. Delamere. I have no Council here, if your Grace pleaſe to give me time to ſend for them, and that they may prepare to argue it.

Mr. Attor. Gen. No, my Lord. If your Grace will hear Council, I for the King muſt pray that it may be done preſently; for a Plea to the Juriſdiction is never favoured, nor is the party to be allowed time to maintain it, but he muſt be ready at the time it is offered.

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, how was it done in the Caſe of Fitzharris? His Plea was a Plea to the Juriſdiction, and he had four days allowed him to put his Plea in form, and to inſtruct his Council.

L. H. Steward. I am not able at preſent to remember what was done in ſuch or ſuch a particular Caſe: But according to the general method and courſe of Law, the Plea to the Juriſdiction is not favoured, nor time allowed to it, but the party muſt be ready to maintain it preſently.

Mr. Attor. Gen. But, with Submiſſion, my Lord, that Caſe of Fitzharris is nothing to this noble Lord's Caſe neither: There was a formal Plea put in Writing, and drawn up in Latin, and a formal Demurrer joined; and thereupon I did take time to ſpeak to it. But, with your Grace's favour, by the Law, the Priſoner muſt be always ready to make good his Plea, if he will ouſt the Court of their Juriſdiction.

L. H. Steward. Mr. Attorney, if my Lord Delamere does inſiſt upon having his Council heard, it is not fit for me to refuſe hearing what they can ſay.

Mr. Attor. Gen. But that muſt be preſently then, my Lord.

L. Delamere. It is my Duty, my Lord, to ſubmit to what your Grace and my noble Lords ſhall determine: I would inſiſt upon nothing that ſhould offend your Grace or them.

Mr. Attor. Gen. If your Grace pleaſes, you are the only Judge in this Caſe in Matters of Law: For theſe noble Lords, the Peers, are only Tryers of the Fact. Therefore, I appeal to your Grace's Judgment, and pray for the King, that this Plea may be over-ruled; it being vitious and naught, both in Form and Subſtance.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I muſt acquaint you, That according to the Conſtitution of this Court, Matters of Law are determined by me, as the ſole Judge, while I have the Honour to act under this Commiſſion: But if your Lordſhip inſiſt upon it, to have your Council heard, God forbid that I ſhould deny it You: I will hear what your Council will ſay; and afterwards I will, according to the beſt of my Underſtanding, deliver my Judgment.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I have never had any Council aſſigned me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if you have any Council ready, we will hear them.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe to aſſign me Council, and give me Time to ſend for them, and them Time to prepare, I will obey your Grace's Directions; but I could have none here ready, becauſe none were aſſigned me.

and

L. H. Steward. My Lord, You cannot, by the Courſe of Law, have Council allowed You in the Caſe of a Capital Crime, till ſuch time as the Court, where You are called to Anſwer, is apprized, that there is ſome matter of Law in your Caſe, that may need Council to be heard, to inform their Judgment, and which they may think convenient to hear Council to: For if in caſe any Priſoner at the Bar ſhall before-hand be allowed to have Council to ſtart frivolous Objections, ſuch as this (and we all know, that there are ſome, who will be eaſily prevailed with to endeavour to pick Holes where there are none) and to offer Matters foreign from the things whereof the Party ſtands accuſed; and upon the Priſoner's bare Requeſt, Council muſt be heard to every trivial Point, the Courts of Law would never be at an end in any Tryal; but ſome dilatory Matter or other would be found to retard the Proceedings: But it does not conſiſt with the Grandeur of the Court, nor your Lordſhip's Intereſt, to let ſuch a frivolous Plea interrupt your Lordſhip's Tryal. However, if your Lordſhip has Council ready, I will not refuſe to hear them.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I hope the Priviledge of the Peers of England, is not frivolous. I aſſure your Grace, I do not offer this Matter, as if I thought it more conducing to my Intereſt, than my Tryal now. No, my Lord, it is not for my ſelf, but for the whole Body of Peers, of which I have the Honour to be a Member: And if my Lords here are ſatisfied it is not the Right and Priviledge of the Peers, I acquieſce.

L. H. Steward. Pray, good my Lord, do not think that I ſhould ſay any ſuch thing, that the Priviledge of the Peers is frivolous; for you do not hear me ſay, That this is one of their Priviledges. As I would not willingly miſtake You; ſo I deſire your Lordſhip would not miſapprehend or miſrepreſent Me. I ſpoke not at all of the Peers Priviledge, but of your Plea: I tell your Lordſhip, I think your Plea is not a good Plea, to Ouſt this Court of the Juriſdiction of your Cauſe. But if your Lordſhip have a mind to have your Council heard to it, in Gods Name, let them come; they ſhall be heard: And when that is done, to ſatisfie you the more, I will adviſe with my Lords the Judges, that are there to aſſiſt, what they take to be the Law in the Caſe; and, upon the whole, I will deliver my Judgment as well as I can.

L. Delamere. I hope, your Grace will be pleas'd to adviſe with my Lords the Peers here preſent; it being upon a Point of Priviledge.

L. H. Steward. Good my Lord, I hope You that are a Priſoner at the Bar, are not to give Me direction, who I ſhould adviſe with, or how I ſhould demean my ſelf here.

L. Delamere. I beg your Grace's Pardon; I did not intend to give your Grace any Direction.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I ſhall take care to perform that Duty that is incumbent upon me, and that with all Tenderneſs to your Lordſhip: And, I aſſure your Lordſhip, I will have as much care that I do not injure You, as I will that I do not wrong my own Conſcience; and I will endeavour to diſcharge my Duty to both, with the utmoſt Fidelity.

L. Delamere. I humbly thank your Grace; I queſtion it not: But if your Grace pleaſe——

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you muſt pardon Me; I can enter into no further Interlocutions with your Lordſhip. If your Lordſhip have any mind to have Council heard, and your Council be ready, we will hear them.

L. Delamere. If your Grace require of Me to produce Council preſently, and they to argue it immediately, I muſt acquaint your Grace, I cannot do it: For I have none here.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I cannot tell how to help it; the Plea muſt then be over-ruled and rejected.

Clerk of the Crown. Henry, Baron of Delamere, Art thou Guilty of the High-Treaſon whereof thou ſtandeſt Indicted, and haſt been now Arraign'd, or Not Guilty?

L. Delamere. Not Guilty.

Clerk of the Crown. Culprit, How wilt thou be Tryed?

L. Delamere. By God, and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God ſend thee a good Deliverance. Sergeant at Arms, Make Proclamation.

Sergeant at Arms. Oyez. If any one will give Evidence on behalf of our Soveraign Lord the King, againſt Henry, Baron of Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, concerning the High Treaſon whereof he ſtands Indicted, let them come forth, and they ſhall be Heard; for now he ſtands at the Bar, upon his Deliverance.

Then His Grace gave the Charge to the Peers Tryers in this manner:

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I know You cannot but well remember, what unjuſt and inſolent Attempts were made upon the rightful and unalterable Succeſſion to the Imperial Crown of theſe Realms, under the pretence of That, which has been ſo often found to be the Occaſion of Rebellion, I mean, the ſpecious Pretence of Religion; by the fierce, froward, and Phanatical Zeal of ſome Members of the Houſe of Commons, in the laſt Parliaments under the late King, CHARLES the Second, of ever Bleſſed Memory.

Which, by the wonderful Providence of Almighty God, not prevailing, the Chief Contrivers of that horrid Villany, conſulted together how to gain that Advantage upon the Monarchy by open Force, which they could not obtain by a pretended Courſe of Law.

And in order thereto, it is too well known, how they had ſeveral Treaſonable Meetings, made bold and riotous Progreſſes into ſeveral Parts of the King's Dominions; thereby endeavouring to debauch the Minds of the well-meaning, though unwary and ignorant, Part of the King's Subjects.

But theſe their evil Purpoſes, it pleaſed God alſo to fruſtrate, by bringing to Light that curſed Conſpiracy againſt the Life of His Sacred Majeſty, King CHARLES the Second; as alſo, againſt That of our dread Sovereign, that now is, whom God long preſerve.

Theſe Helliſh and damnable Plots one would have thought, could not have ſurvived the juſt Condemnation and Execution of ſome of the chief Contrivers of them; eſpecially conſidering, that after it had pleaſed Almighty God, to take to Himſelf our late Merciful and dread Sove-

Soveraign; no ſooner was his Sacred Majeſty, that now is, Seated in the Royal Throne of his Anceſtors, but he made it his utmoſt Endeavours, not only to convince the World, that he had quite forgot thoſe impudent and abominable Indignities that had been put upon him, only for being the beſt of Subjects, and the beſt of Brothers: but did alſo give forth the moſt Benign Aſſurances imaginable to all his loving People, that he would approve himſelf to be the beſt of Kings.

And further to evince the reality of theſe his Gracious and Heroick Reſolutions, he immediately called a Parliament; and therein repeated, and ſolemnly Confirmed his former Royal Declarations of having a particular Care of maintaining our Eſtabliſh'd Laws and Religion: With which that Wiſe, Great, and Loyal Aſſembly, were ſo fully and perfectly ſatisfied, that they thought they could not make ſufficient Returns of Gratitude for ſuch Gracious and Princely Condeſcenſions.

And yet, my Lords, while the King and the Parliament were thus, as I may ſay, endeavouring to out do each other in Expreſſions of Kindneſs, that wicked and unnatural Rebellion broke out; and thereupon the Arch-Traytor, Monmouth, was, by a Bill brought into the Lower Houſe, and paſs'd by the general Conſent of Both Houſes, (and I could wiſh, my Lords, for the ſake of that Noble Lord at the Bar, that I could ſay, it had Paſs'd the Conſent of every particular Member of each Houſe) juſtly Attainted of High-Treaſon.

My Lords, What ſhare my Lord at the Bar had in thoſe other Matters, I muſt acquaint You, is not within the Compaſs of this Indictment, for which you are to try him, as his Peers; For That is for a Treaſon alledged to have been Committed by him, in his Majeſty's Reign that now is.

Give me Leave, my Lords, to detain You but with a Word or two more on this Occaſion; and that is, To let You know, That as my Lord at the Bar may, with great Safety and Security to himſelf, rely upon your Lordſhips Candor and Integrity, that You will be tenderly careful, and ready to acquit him of the Treaſon whereof he is accuſed, if upon the Evidence that ſhall be given You, You ſhall find him Innocent: So I muſt tell You, the King has an entire Confidence in your Reſolution, Fidelity, and good Affections to Him, that you will not, by reaſon of the Priſoner's Quality, and nearneſs to You, as being a Peer of this Realm, acquit him if he ſhall appear to be Guilty.

My Lords, I have one thing further to mind your Lordſhips of, That, according to the uſual Forms of Proceedings in theſe Caſes, if your Lordſhips have any Queſtions to propound, wherein you would be ſatisfied as to any Matter either of Fact or Law, your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to put thoſe Queſtions to Me, and I ſhall take care to give your Lordſhip the beſt Satisfaction I can.

L. Delamere. My Lord High Steward, I beg the Favour of your Grace, I may have One to write for me.

L. H. Steward. Ay, by all means. Let my Lord have whom he pleaſes to write for him.

Then Sir Thomas Jenner, One of His Majeſty's Serjeants at Law, and Recorder of the City of London, opened the Indictment thus:

Mr. Recorder. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, and You my Noble Lords, the Peers of the Priſoner at the Bar: Henry Baron of Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, ſtands indicted for that 'He, as a Falſe Traytor againſt 'the moſt Illuſtrious and moſt Excellent Prince, 'our Soveraign Lord the King that now is; not 'having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, the Fourteenth 'Day of April laſt, at Meer, in the County of Cheſter, did maliciouſly Conſpire, with other 'Falſe Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, the 'Death and Depoſing of the King: And for the 'better, and more effectual fulfilling of thoſe 'his Treaſons, the ſaid Fourteenth Day of April, 'at Meer aforeſaid, did Maliciouſly and Traytero'uſly Aſſemble, Conſult, and Agree with 'Charles Gerrard, Eſq; and other Falſe Traytors, 'to Raiſe great Summs of Money, and procure 'Numbers of Armed Men, to make a Rebellion 'againſt the King, and the City and Caſtle of 'Cheſter to ſeize, with the Magazines there: 'And that afterwards, the Twenty Seventh Day 'of May laſt, he took a Journey from London to 'Meer aforeſaid, to accompliſh his Treaſonable 'Intentions. And further, That upon the Fourth 'Day of June, in further Proſecution of his 'Trayterous Purpoſes at Meer aforeſaid, he did 'encite divers Subjects of our Lord the King, 'to joyn with him, and other falſe Traytors, in 'his Treaſon:' And this is laid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, againſt the Peace of our Soveraign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and againſt the Form of the Statute in that Caſe made and provided. To this Indictment, may it pleaſe your Grace, and the reſt of theſe Noble Lords, my Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, has pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Tryal has put himſelf upon his Peers. We ſhall therefore call our Witneſſes for the King; and if We prove him Guilty, We do not queſtion, but your Lordſhips will find him ſo.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Lord High Steward of England, and You my Noble Lords the Peers: My Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Barr, ſtands Indicted for Conſpiring the Death of His Majeſty, and in order thereunto to Raiſe a Rebellion in the Kingdom.

My Lords, In proving this Charge upon him, we crave Leave to give your Grace, and your Lordſhips, ſome ſhort Account by Witneſſes, that we have here, of a former Deſign that was previous to this Matter, for which this Noble Lord ſtands here accuſed: And We ſhall not trouble your Grace, and your Lordſhips, with any long Evidence, becauſe it has received many ſolemn and repeated Tryals; and, as to the Proof of it, has been Confirmed by as many Verdicts. But We do it rather, to give ſome Account as an Introduction to a Material Evidence, by ſhewing, That Cheſhire, which was the Province of this Noble Lord, was One of the Stages, where that Rebellion was principally to be acted; and that, preparatory to it, great Riotous Aſſemblies, and Tumultuous Gatherings of the People, were ſet on foot by the Conſpirators.

We

We ſhall then ſhew, my Lords, That after the late Duke of Monmouth, (the Head of the Conſpiracy) went beyond Sea, (eſpecially after the Death of the late King) frequent Meſſages, and Intercourſe of Correſpondency, were ſent and held between him, and the reſt of his Accomplices abroad, and their Fellow-Conſpirators here at home.

And particularly, We ſhall prove, That a little before the Rebels came over laſt Summer into the Weſt, the Duke of Monmouth did diſpatch one Jones (who was one of the moſt conſiderable Agents in this Contrivance) to come from Holland into England, to let his Friends know, that though he had intended to go into Scotland, and begin his Work there; yet now his Reſolutions were for England; where he hoped, his Friends would be prepared for him. And with this Meſſage, and Reſolution of his, Jones was to acquaint ſome Lords, (who they were, the Witneſs will tell your Lordſhips; but) among others, this Noble Lord, the Priſoner, was one: And to acquaint them beſides, That he would immediately ſet ſail for England, whither he would come ſo ſoon as he could get. That he had a Deſign to have Landed in Cheſhire, where he expected to be moſt readily receiv'd; but finding That inconvenient, they ſhould have notice Four or Five Days before-hand, of the Place of his Landing; which he intended, ſhould be in the Weſt. And among the Directions that Jones had to give to thoſe Lords, one was, That they ſhould immediately repair into Cheſhire, there to wait for the News.

Theſe Inſtructions Jones had given him in Writing; but Sealed up with an Injunction, not to open them till he came to Sea; and then he was to peruſe that Writing, and deliver his Meſſage according to his Inſtructions: And in that Writing was the Name of this Noble Lord, as one that was principally relyed on, to carry on the Rebellion in Cheſhire. And We ſhall give You an Account, That the late Duke of Monmouth did look upon Cheſhire, as one of his main Supports; and upon my Lord Delamere, as a Principal Aſſiſtant There.

My Lords, This Meſſage was Jones to communicate to Captain Mathews, and Captain Mathews was to tranſmit it to this Noble Lord, and the other Perſons that were concern'd with him. Jones arrived with this Meſſage here in England, upon the Twenty Seventh of May; [And I muſt beg your Lordſhips, to obſerve the Time particularly:] But Captain Mathews, to whom he was directed, was not to be found; nor Major Wildman, to whom, in the Abſence of Captain Mathews, he was to apply himſelf, as You will hear more fully from the Witneſs's own Mouth: Thereupon he ſends for one Diſney, (a Name which your Lordſhips cannot but know, he being ſince Executed for Treaſon) and one Brand, whom your Lordſhips will likewiſe hear of; and they meet with this ſame Jones, who communicates his Meſſage to them, and they undertake to deliver it to the Perſons concern'd; Captain Mathews being out of Town, and Major Wildman not to be found.

That very Night, my Lords, this ſame Brand and Diſney they meet this Noble Lord, my Lord Delamere at the Coffee-Houſe, and give him an Account of the Meſſages: And as ſoon as ever he had received the Meſſage, upon that Twenty Seventh of May, at Ten of the Clock at Night, does my Lord Delamere diſpatch out of Town, with only one Servant to attend him, and two other Friends that he had pickt up, or appointed to meet him, and go with him.

With all theſe Badges of Plot and Deſign, does my Lord Delamere ſet out that Night. It was the ſame Night that Jones came to Town: It was late at Night. He changed his Name, and went by the Name of Brown. He choſe to go all the By-Roads, and would not keep the High-Common-Road; and went with great ſpeed, as We cannot but preſume according to the Meſſage delivered by Jones, on purpoſe to repair into Cheſhire.

And if your Lordſhips pleaſe to obſerve, You will find ſeveral remarkable Inſtances of Plot and Contrivance in the matter: Firſt, That a Nobleman, and one of ſo conſiderable a Character in his Country, as my Lord Delamere, ſhould make ſuch haſt out of Town with ſo ſmall an Equpage, as but one Servant; Then, that he ſhould go ſo late at Night: Again, that he ſhould change his Name; and That ſhould prove to be a Name not caſually taken up, as the firſt Name he could think of next his own; but a Name of diſtinction, that he was known by among all his own Party: For all the Communications between the Confederates and him, were managed, as to him, under the Name of Brown: By that Name, ſeveral of the late Duke of Monmouth's Trayterous Declarations were ſent for; which were to be ſent to him, or by him, into Cheſhire: And that alone, with Submiſſion, my Lords, would be a ſhrewd Circumſtance of Suſpicion, that a Noble Lord, ſuch an one as my Lord Delamere, ſhould aſſume the Name of a Commoner, and poſt out of Town ſo ill accompanied in a Diſguiſe at that time of Night; eſpecially the Parliament being then Sitting, as really it was.

But beſides all this Circumſtantial Evidence, We ſhall prove, by Poſitive Teſtimony, what the haſty Buſineſs was, that made my Lord undertake this Journey in this manner: For, having notice of the Duke of Monmouth's Intention to Land ſpeedily in England, when he comes into Cheſhire, he actually ſets about the Work to put that County in a forwardneſs to aſſiſt in the Rebellion, endeavours to ſtir up the People to joyn with him; and acquaints One that he imployed in that Affair, with the whole Deſign, that he was engaged to raiſe ſo many Thouſand Men, and ſo much Money, to be ready by ſuch a Day.

Nor does my Lord reſt here: But, after the Duke of Monmouth was Landed in the Weſt, to corrupt the Minds of the People, We ſhall prove what Diſcourſes he had, (and theſe will teſtifie his Inclinations to the Cauſe) concerning the great Victories he had obtained over the King's Forces, and how he applauded his Conqueſts.

My Lords, We ſhall plainly ſhew You all this that I have opened in plain Proof; And then, We ſhall ſubmit it to your Lordſhips Judgments, Whether this Noble Peer be Not Guilty, as he has Pleaded to his Indictment.

L. H. Steward. Call your Witneſſes, Mr. Attorney; Who do you begin with?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Howard of Eſcrick: We deſire he may be firſt ſworn.

(Which was done.)

L. H. Steward. Well, what do you ask my Lord Howard?

Mr.

Mr. Att Gen. My Lord, I call You to give an Account what You know of a Design of an Insurrection that was to have been; and in what Parts; and what share Cheshire was to have had in it, in the late King's Time.

Lord H. Steward. You hear the Question; What say you to it, my Lord?

Lord Howard. My Lord I am to direct my self to speak to what was done in the late King's Time: For as to that Noble Lord at the Bar, I have nothing to say against him.

Lord H. Steward. My Lord Howard, if I apprehend Mr. Attorney aright, You are not called as a particular Witness against my Lord Delamere; but only to give an Account, what was agreed upon in any Consultations, where You were present, in the late KING's Time, about a Conspiracy for an Insurrection?

Lord Howard. If so, my Lord, then I am called, not to be an Evidence against my Lord Delamere, but, against my Self; that is to repeat what I have often delivered at several Tryals, in the Courts of Justice; and which I must always repeat with Shame and Confusion for my Guilt, as I cannot but always reflect upon it with Sorrow and Horror. But if it be for the Service of his Majesty, and this Honourable Court, for me so to do, I shall endeavour to comply with it, and repeat it as well as I can, by the Assistance of a broken Memory; it being an Account of things done several Years past, and from a Memory interrupted by such Accidents as are very well known, and as have disabled me to make a more distinct and particular Relation before so great an Auditory.

My Lords, I suppose, it will be expected, I should begin my Account with the Occasion and Ground, and the Time when those Things happened.

L. H. Steward. Take your own Method, my Lord.

L. Howard. Truly, my Lord, I am not able to fix the particular Time, unless you will give me leave to reckon the Years by the Sheriffs of London, as the Romans used to do theirs by their Consuls; for I have no other means of computing the exact Time.

L. H. Steward. Pray, my Lord, tell the Times as near as you can, and use what helps for your Memory you think best.

Lord Howard. My Lords, It was in that Year, when Mr. Shute and Mr. Pilkington were Sheriffs for the City of London: And at that time, it is well known how great Heats did arise upon the Contests that were in the City, about Election of Officers for the Year ensuing,——

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Grace, My Lord Delamere seems to be faint with standing: If your Grace please, a Chair may be provided, for my Lord to sit in.

L. H. Steward. Ay, by all means: Let a Chair be provided for my Lord to sit down. Go on, my Lord.

Lord Howard. My Lord, I was saying, that the Contest about the disputed Election of Sheriffs, had occasioned such heats in the City of London, and other Places, that it was even beyond the common expressions of discontent: I knew nothing of any particular Design there was in hand till about six Weeks after, when Captain Walcot came to me, a Person I had known some time before, and upon discourse, acquainted me, that he had found out that there were some Persons engaged in a considerable Action that was near its Execution, and that in order to it, he had had notice given him to make preparation, and thereupon he had thought fit, for that reason, to withdraw from the place where he did at that time lodge, (which was in Red-Lyon Court in Fleet-street, as I remember) and betake himself to a private Lodging, that he might be the readier for Action; and to put himself into a better Equipage for joyning in the Enterprise, he had bought himself a Horse, and sent his Son into Ireland to turn all he could into ready Money, and return it, that he might be the better able to go through with the Undertaking. My Lords, this was a great surprize to me; for though I knew, as all the rest of the World did, that there were great discontents, yet, till then, I never had any intimation of any particular design: I told him I was going into the Country, but should be glad to know how things went, and desired him to write to me, and gave him a little Cabala or Cypher to disguise the matter he was to write about: and when I was in the Country, I did receive several Letters which intimated something of a design that was going on, and at last he writ, with some warmth to me, of a necessity we were under to enter into Action; and of the readiness of my Correspondents; (for the Style of the Letters was that of Merchants, for so was the Cant that I had given him): But truly I was not over-hasty in my return to London, because I rather chose to see what would be the issue of what was then projected, before I did intermeddle in such an Affair, and so made use of all the delays I could to retard my return, and came not to Town till that Week which determined the long continued Controversy in London; Nay, and then also avoided meeting with any body in any set-way, till I could better see how things were managed, and what event they would probably come to; thereupon I would not go to my own House, but took up my Lodging at Mile-end, and lay there three or four Days, till the Day came for confirming the new elected Sheriffs, and the election of a new Lord Mayor, which, as I take it, is on the day before Michaelmas-day, and Michaelmas-day: When that day was over, I could not find there was any intention of entring into any sort of Action; I found indeed there were great murmurings in the Mouths of all sorts of People, and very angry warm speeches, and nothing else: So I thought the business was over for that time, and thereupon away I went to my own House. This, my Lords, was upon the Saturday as I remember: Upon the Monday Morning, Captain Walcot came to me, and desired that he might have some private discourse with me in my Garden; and there he told me, My Lord Shaftsbury had withdrawn himself, and that he did believe things were in a great Preparation for Action: I desired him to tell me what it was; he answered me, That he desired to be excused in that, for I must go to my Lord Shaftsbury, who would give me an account of the whole; and withall he told me, my Lord Shaftsbury had been much deserted and ill used by those Lords upon whose concurrence he had rely'd, and that was the reason why he had withdrawn himself, and kept himself so private: I told him, I did not know my Lord Shaftsbury had any desire to speak with me; yes he said ſaid he had, for he had ſent him to me on purpoſe, and he was to bring back my anſwer, whether I would joyn or no. I told him, if my Lord deſired to ſpeak with me, I would wait upon him, and thereupon I went with him, and he carried me to a place where my Lord Shaftsbury was retired in the City, ſomewhere about Foſter-Lane or Wood-Street, at the houſe of one Watſon: When I came there, after Salutation, my Lord Shaftsbury began to make great reflections upon the miſery and badneſs of the times, particularly, upon the iſſue of that great Affair, the election of the Sheriffs, which had ended ſo unfortunately to the terror of all good men: For whereas before, the great and ſure reſort of innocency was to the Integrity of our Juries, when returned by fair and equal Sheriffs, they looked upon the eagerneſs of getting thoſe Perſons ſworn that were then in Office to be a deſign to intrap the innocent, the elected Sheriffs being eſteemed perſons that would accommodate themſelves to the humour of the Court; and now every man muſt be run down for crimes that he was no way guilty of, if the finger of the Court did but point him out to deſtruction. The apprehenſion of this, he ſaid, had made him withdraw himſelf, not knowing how ſoon he might be ſeiz'd, ſhould he have remain'd in publick; and he thought the danger was as imminent upon, and likely to reach to others, as well as to him; and particularly to my ſelf, and therefore, he ſaid, the ſence of this danger ought to put every Engliſhman that had a value for his Country, and any thing that was dear to him in it, upon uſing his utmoſt endeavours to give ſome prevention to thoſe calamities which were impendent over us, and which threatned the deſtruction of all men that ſtood up for the rights of the people; and this, he ſaid, was his reſolution.

My Lord, In order to this, he declared to me, what Preparations had been made for the Raiſing of Force for this purpoſe; he ſaid, there were eight or ten Thouſand Men (I cannot fix the particular number) that he was well aſſured to have ready in the City; That there had been divers Horſe (I think about Fourſcore or an Hundred he named) that about a Fortnight before, had been, by parcels, drawn into the Town, without being obſerved; and theſe were in daily expectation to go into Action; but through the unhandſome Diſappointment of the Duke of Monmouth, and the other Lords that adhered to him, who were to have joyned in the Action, and have ſet the Wheels at work in other Parts, he was left alone to do the whole in his Province of London, they being not ready to concur according to their Engagement: But as he ſhould have the greater Danger, ſo he ſhould have the greater Glory; and he reſolved to go through with the Attempt, or Periſh in the Execution. To all this Diſcourſe, I gave ſuch an Anſwer as the nature of the thing required: I told my Lord Shaftsbury, I could not deny all thoſe things to be true, as he had repreſented them in his Diſcourſe; and that I would not diſtruſt his Judgment ſo much, as to ſuppoſe, he would enter upon ſuch an Affair, without due deliberation of all the Circumſtances requiſite to it; and ſo I would not queſtion, but there was ſuch Preparations, and that he had aſſurance of ſuch a Force, as he had ſpoke of, whenever they ſhould begin any Action: But I told him ſomething ſtuck with me, and troubled me very much, That, in a time of ſuch difficulty, when the convenient Help of the Nation was all little enough to joyn in the Work, he ſhould ſtand by himſelf, and engage in ſuch an Enterprize, in Separation from thoſe other Lords, of whoſe Help there would be ſo much need: He ſaid, he could not help it, they had appointed this time and that, but now, when it came to the puſh, they were not ready to do their parts; but the People were now in ſuch expectation of ſomething to be done, eſpecially in London, that it was impoſſible to reſtrain them, and as impoſſible to get thoſe Lords ready to joyn with them: I told him, I was altogether unacquainted with the proceedings in this Affair, and that all of it was wholly new to me: But pray, My Lord, ſaid I, give me leave to act that part in this buſineſs, that, I think, will moſt conduce to the Succeſsful Iſſue of it, which is, to be a Mediator between You; and let me deſire you to let things reſt as they are, till I have endeavoured to create a better Underſtanding between your Lordſhip, and thoſe Lords, of whoſe Tergiverſation you ſeem to complain. Upon this, my Lord was in a great heat, and expreſs'd himſelf with great warmth; but at laſt, with much ado, he gave me Permiſſion to go to the Duke of Monmouth, and aſſure him, and the reſt of the Lords that were concern'd, and tell them from him, That, if they would be ready to take the Poſts that were aſſign'd them, according to their own former Agreement, and immediately enter upon Action, he would joyn with them; but if not, he was reſolved to go on alone. This was, as I remember, upon Tueſday, the Second of October; upon the Wedneſday Morning, I went to find out the Duke of Monmouth, but coming to his Lodgings, he was gone to Moor-Park, where, when I came, I found ſeveral Perſons with him, but after a little time, I ſeparated him from the Company, and whiſpering to him, I gave him to underſtand, how great a Diſorder I found my Lord Shaftsbury in, and how great a Complaint he made of his being deſerted by him, and the other Lords engaged with him, and what Reſolution he had taken to ſet upon the Work alone: "My ' Lord, ſays he, I think the Man is Mad, his Fear ' makes him loſe his Underſtanding; I do not ' know why he hides himſelf from his Friends, ' that no body can tell where he is; but as to ' that which he ſpeaks of, of our forſaking him, ' and breach of Faith, he is miſtaken; For, 'tis ' true indeed, we are about doing the Thing, ' that he is ſo eager for, but we are not for doing ' it ſo haſtily, as his Fears precipitate him to do; ' and he muſt excuſe us, if we comply not with ' his Humour, to hazard the whole Undertaking ' by a raſh beginning. Upon that, I ſaid to him, My Lord, I ſhall not diſcourſe the Particularities of the buſineſs with your Grace; but this is all that I at preſent addreſs to your Grace for, to be a means, if I can, with your Grace, as I have been with him, to procure a Meeting between you, that you may ſettle it with one another. ' With all my heart, ſays the Duke, ' pray let it be ſo; for, though my Lord Shafts- ' bury is angry without a cauſe, yet I would not ' have him loſe himſelf in a temerarious Under- ' taking: My Lord, ſaid I, I will tell him what you ſay, and will ſee if I can work him to a Complyance with the Propoſal. The next day, being Thurſday, my Lord, I went to my Lord Shaftsbury again, and reported to him the Diſ-courſe I had with the Duke of Monmouth, and what Anſwer he had given to his Complaint of their deſerting him: He Reply'd, 'It was falſe, 'they had poſitively ingaged to be ready by ſuch 'a time, and had appointed the very Day; but 'now they were off, and would not tell when 'they would be ready; and withal, he told me, he greatly ſuſpected the Duke of Monmouth to have a ſecret Correſpondence with the King. I then deſired him, That he would pleaſe to conſent to the Treaty that was propoſed, and give the Duke of Monmouth, and the Lords a Meeting; he, in great heat, Replyed, No, he would come no more at them: It is ſtrange, my Lord, ſaid I, that you ſhould have ſuch an Opinion of theſe Men, that they would go about to betray you; they are not Men of that ſize: but he perſiſted in it, that they had dealt perfidiouſly with him: For, after a poſitive Agreement, when the Thing was brought juſt to the Birth, they withdrew their helping-hand; but he was ſure, in London, he could Raiſe a ſufficient Force to do the Work, and if he were but once ſet on Horſe-back, he would head them himſelf: But yet he was willing to put it off for a Fortnight, or three weeks longer, if they would be ſure to keep pace with him. With this Propoſal I went the next day, which was Friday, to the Duke of Monmouth, and had the ſame Anſwer from him, that I had before; but withal, he bid me tell my Lord Shaftsbury, That he did make it his earneſt Requeſt to him, to give him, and his other Friends a Meeting before he engaged in this buſineſs: For he found by his precipitation, he was about to deſtroy himſelf, and all that adhered to him. Thereupon, I came to my Lord Shaftsbury again, upon the Saturday; and when I came there, after a long and importunate urging all the Arguments I could think of; I ſo far prevailed with him, that he agreed to give them a Meeting, upon condition, that it ſhould be the next day; and becauſe it ſhould be ſo private, that no notice might be taken of it, he choſe to have the Meeting at his own Houſe, where no body would ſuſpect him to be, and whither he would be conveyed, under the Diſguiſe of a Parſon. I went back with this Meſſage to the Duke of Monmouth, who did undertake, that the other Lords ſhould be there.

Lord H. Steward. My Lord Howard, not to interrupt you, Did he name thoſe other Lords? If he did, pray acquaint my Lords, who they were?

Lord Howard. My Lord Shaftsbury named my Lord Ruſſel, and my Lord Gray, and a great many more that ſhould bear their parts. I went to the Duke of Monmouth, and told him of it, I ſay, and he engaged, that they ſhould certainly be there: But, upon the Sunday Morning, when I came to the Temple, there I found a Meſſage left for me, That my Lord Shaftsbury had receiv'd an Alarum, That there was ſome great Toryes living near his Houſe in Alderſgate-Street, who were continually Spying about; and ſo great a Company might make their more than ordinary Obſervation. That this gave him ſuch a Jealouſy, as would not permit him to meet according to his Appointment: Afterwards, I came to a better underſtanding of the Reaſon of this, and found there was ſome fineneſs in it, which I could not comprehend before; But after this time, I never ſaw my Lord Shaftsbury, for he removed then to other Lodgings. So that, what I now ſpeak of him, is only what I had, by hear-ſay, from others: For, I had no knowledge of what paſs'd, as to him, but what I had from Capt. Walcot; who told me, That after that, there were ſeveral days of Meeting appointed, but ſtill, from time to time, put off; but upon what reaſon, I cannot particularly remember.

This is all I know of my Lord Shaftsbury; and the latter Part is wholly by Hear-ſay from Walcot: But by reaſon of this Agitation, we continued under Expectation till ſuch time as my Lord Shaftsbury went into Holland; where he ſhortly after died. And truly, I thought, at that time, much of the Deſign was quaſhed, and laid aſide: But, ſoon after, Ferguſon came over; who, when he came here, began to revive and quicken the Buſineſs, and puſh it on to Execution. I ſpoke with him at the One Bell in the Strand; and there he gave me an Account of all the Steps that had been taken: He told me what Preparations had been made in the City, in general; what to ſeize the Gates of the City; what to poſſeſs themſelves of the Tower; what to attacque the Guards; and ſeveral other Things, which I can't now ſo well remember; the Impreſſions of them being worn out of my Memory, by length of Time, and other Accidents.

This, in general, is all that I can ſay, as to what was previous to the particular Engagement wherein I was concern'd: For, at laſt, after many Diſcourſes, the Troubles and Difficulties of the Times increaſing, and the Dangers that threatned us, as we thought, growing higher and higher, this gave an Occaſion for our uniting Councels, and entring into a kind of Junto; which, I ſuppoſe, is Foreign to this Affair before your Lordſhips; and therefore, I ſuppoſe, would be likewiſe impertinent for me, to trouble your Lordſhips with.

L. H. Steward. Mr. Attorney, Do you deſire my Lord Howard ſhould give an Account of the other Meetings, and Conſultations, at which he was preſent?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think there will be no need of it; and I am unwilling to take up your Grace's Time, to no purpoſe.

Lord Howard. As for that Noble Lord at the Bar, I know nothing concerning him.

Lord H. Steward. Then, Gentlemen, Will You have him asked any more Queſtions?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

Lord H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, Will You ask him any Queſtions?

Lord Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before my Lord Howard goes, I would ask him one Queſtion in general, Whether he knew of any Deſign of a Riſing in Cheſhire?

Lord Howard. No, my Lord, I knew of none at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we deſire my Lord Gray may be ſworn.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Will You give his Grace and my Lords an Account, what You know of any Deſigns of an Inſurrection or Rebellion, when You were beyond Sea, or before? and who were engaged in it?

Lord Gray. My Lord, I am Subpœna'd hither on behalf of the King; and I am alſo Subpœna'd on behalf of my Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar. I do not know any thing, that I can ſpeak of my own Knowledge, againſt the Priſoner; nor have

I any thing to ſay, that I know of, that will be for his Advantage. But I am here ready to anſwer ſuch Queſtions, as ſhall be ask'd me, either of one ſide, or the other.

Mr. Attor. Gen. My Lord, the Queſtion I ask you, is, what do you know of any Deſign of a Riſing in Cheſhire, and when?

Lord Gray. About the Time of Election of Sheriffs for the City of London; I mean, that memorable Time of the conteſted Election, which furniſhed the World with ſo much Diſcourſe, and was the occaſion of ſuch Heats and Animoſities: About that time, the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord of Shaftsbury began to diſcourſe about making uſe of that, as an Opportunity to accompliſh their Deſign; for they thought the Ferment was ſo high, that Men would eaſily be diſpoſed to an Inſurrection: and after many Diſcourſes to that purpoſe, they came to this Reſolution, That they would apply themſelves to make what Intereſt they could, to procure a Riſing in three ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom at once: one in Cheſhire, whither the Duke of Monmouth was to betake himſelf; and there be adviſed by my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, my Lord Delamere that then was, and the Priſoner at the Bar, what Gentlemen were proper to apply to, for joyning in the Deſign: The ſecond was in London, which was aſſigned to be the Province of my Lord of Shaftsbury: And the third was, in the Weſt; which was committed to the Care of my Lord Ruſſel. The Duke of Monmouth did accordingly go his Progreſs into Cheſhire, as is very well known; and, upon his Return, was taken into Cuſtody by the Serjeant at Arms: Upon which, Sir Thomas Armſtrong was ſent Poſt to Town, to get an Habeas Corpus; and withal, to deliver a Meſſage to me, to be Communicated with my Lord Ruſſel, and my Lord Shaftsbury: Which Meſſage, as near as I remember, was to this Effect; That he had been kindly receiv'd by the Gentlemen of the County; and had diſcours'd the Matter with them, and found them all inclined very much to his Satisfaction: That upon his being Arreſted, he had been adviſed to make his eſcape into Cheſhire, and riſe immediately; but that he would not do a Matter of that great Importance, without the Approbation of his Friends. This is all that I know of any thing, that was deſigned in Cheſhire.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, what do you know of any Meſſages that Captain Matthews or Jones brought over from Holland, and to whom, and from whom?

L. Gray. Sir, I will give the beſt account I can, upon the ſudden, for I am not prepared to give a particular diſtinct account, in regard I did not know it would be expected from me, nor indeed that it would affect the Priſoner at the Bar.

L. H. Stew. Pray, my Lord, give my Lords the Peers as ſuccinct and particular an account as you can.

L. Gray. My Lord, ſoon after the late King's Death, the Duke of Monmouth was at Amſterdam with my Lord of Argyle, where there was an account given of the Deſign that was in hand, of an Inſurrection in Scotland, and the Preparations that had been made in order to it; and at that time there came over to Holland Mr. Crag, that came as I was inform'd from Major Wildman, and his Errand was to promote and recommend a Reconciliation between the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Argyle, who till that time had acted in ſeparate Intereſts; and Crag then gave an account that Means and Money were prepared; he had no particular Meſſage to the Duke, becauſe he did not know of meeting him there at that time: The Duke of Monmouth upon this Encouragement, did ſend Captain Matthews into England, with a Meſſage to Major Wildman, wherein he did deſire him that he would procure a Meeting with my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, my Lord Delamere, and I think Mr. Charleton, and acquaint them that he had received a full account of my Lord Argyle's Affairs, and the Preparations that had been made for it, and accordingly he had ordered his own Affairs to join with him; he likewiſe ſent Crag with a Meſſage to the ſame purpoſe to other Friends in London, and he diſpatch'd away one Batteſcomb into the Weſt, to prepare things there. When Crag return'd back again to the Duke, he gave him an account that Major Wildman had procur'd a Meeting with thoſe Lords and Gentlemen, that I mentioned before, who were all of Opinion, that the Duke of Monmouth ſhould go for Scotland, for they thought that his coming there, would be the beſt Service he could do the intereſt at preſent, and they ſhould know the ſtrength of the Enemy here, by their ſending Forces to ſuppreſs the Rebellion there. There was likewiſe a particular Meſſage from Major Wildman to the Duke of Monmouth, That he deſired he would bring over with him a Broad Seal to Seal Commiſſions with, and to take upon him the Title of King; the other particular branches of the Meſſage I do not ſo well remember, but only this, he was particularly ask'd, whether the Priſoner at the Bar was there, and he ſaid he was,——

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord Gray, will you give an account what you know of Jones's coming over, and what Errand he was ſent of?

L. Gray. Jones came ſome time after Crag return'd, and he gave an account of other things conformable to what Crag had ſaid, and was ſent back again to England by the Duke of Monmouth to give an account of his being ready to ſail; he gave him alſo a Letter, the Contents whereof I did not ſee. I had ſome ſhort account of it, but whether it were written to any particular Perſon, I cannot tell; the ſum of his Meſſage was, That he would land by that time he could get thither.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Gray, you had frequent Diſcourſe with the Duke of Monmouth, and ſo I ſuppoſe you can give an account who he kept Correſpondence with, and upon whoſe Aſſiſtance he relyed.

L. Gray. I ſuppoſe few People will believe we were ſo weary of our Lives, as to come and throw them away with Threeſcore, or a very few more Men, (for it was but a very ſmall number we began with) except we had had expectation of good aſſiſtance. This I am ſure of, by all Diſcourſes with the Duke of Monmouth, he did depend very much upon Cheſhire, and was reſolv'd to have landed and begun there; but afterwards he conſidered of it, and thought better to ſend ſome ſort of excuſe for not landing in Cheſhire; that the Perſons that were to be apply'd to there, being Men of great Quality and Intereſt in their Country, and able to manage it without his Aſſiſtance; but in the Weſt, the Friends he relyed on, were not of that conſiderable Quality, and therefore he choſe to land there.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Lords did he name, that he depended upon? L. Gray.

L. Gray. I did name them; my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, and my Lord Delamere; but I obſerved when the Duke of Monmouth ſpoke of his Friends in Cheſhire, he did name my Lord Macclesfield, and my Lord Brandon as Perſons.

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord Steward, I humbly pray this Witneſs may be asked to whom that Letter was written, that he ſaith the late Duke of Monmouth ſent by Jones?

L. H Steward. You hear my Lord's Queſtion, who did Monmouth ſend that Letter by Jones to?

L. Gray. My Lord, I never ſaw the Letter, nor do I know any Directions there were upon it; I always looked upon it as a paper of Inſtructions given to him about the time when, and the name of the place where the Duke was to land.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will give an account of that by Jones by and by, my Lord. Now ſwear Nathaniel Wade.

(Which was done.)

Lord H. Stew. Well, what do you ask this Witneſs?

Mr. Attor. Gen. Wade, That which I call you for, is this, to give an account what you know of any deſign of landing in Cheſhire, or elſewhere, and of Jones's coming over, and what Errand he was ſent upon?

Mr. Wade. My Lord, I ſhall give an account as far as I know; after the death of the late King, Captain Matthews came to Amſterdam and gave an account there, that the Duke of Monmouth intended to be there ſhortly to meet and conſult with my Lord Argyle, who, we underſtood, then was preparing for an Expedition into Scotland; thereupon I was ſent into Freezland to deſire my Lord Argyle to come to Amſterdam, which he did; and there the Duke of Monmouth did conſult with him, and they did agree together, that at the ſame time that my Lord Argyle made an Inſurrection in Scotland, the Duke of Monmouth ſhould invade England, and to that end, that he ſhould ſend to thoſe Friends he had in England, to be ready to aſſiſt him when he came there; and in order to it, he did ſend Captain Matthews, who amongſt other things, was to go to the Dukes Friends in Cheſhire, and amongſt them, my Lord Delamere was named to be one, and the buſineſs was to deſire them to be ready to aſſiſt him when he ſhould land; accordingly Captain Matthews went; but a little after his going away, I think one Crag came over, and he came from Major Wildman, and his buſineſs was to endeavour a good underſtanding between the Duke of Monmouth, and my Lord Argyle, who were then at ſome Difference; and to endeavour to make them act jointly by united Councils; a little after he was ſent back again into England to Major Wildman, to deſire him to aſſiſt them with ſome Money; he went back again, and returned, but brought no Money; thereupon he was ſent again by the Duke of Monmouth, becauſe the firſt time he was not ſent by him; the Sum demanded was Six Thouſand Pounds, or Four Thouſand Pounds, and at laſt he ſent for a Thouſand Pounds; Crag returned with this Anſwer, That they could not aſſiſt them with Money, for they did not know to what end they ſhould have Money, but to buy Arms, and for that the People were well provided enough already, and there was no need of Money for that purpoſe. The Duke of Monmouth a while after ſent Mr Crag, and pawn'd all the Jewels he had, to raiſe Money, and fitted out Three Ships for this Service, laden with Ammunition, and becauſe he had promiſed my Lord Argyle to make a Diverſion in England, while he invaded Scotland, he reſolved to go with that Proviſion he had, and deſired by Mr. Crag, that ſince thoſe Lords and Gentlemen that were to aſſiſt them, had ſent no Money, as was deſired of them, and expected from them, they ſhould now trouble themſelves with no further needleſs Conſultations; but ſhould repair each Man into his own Country, where their Intereſt was greateſt, to be ready when he ſhould come; and in order to this, the Duke of Monmouth did ſet ſail from Holland, and came to Lyme, and landed there; and did afterwards order his March, ſo that he might moſt conveniently meet with his Cheſhire Friends; that is, towards Glouceſter, and ſo to get Glouceſter Bridge, that thereby gaining the command of the River of Severn, thoſe of Cheſhire, if they did, as was expected, make an Inſurrection at the ſame time, they might eaſily join together. In purſuance of this Deſign we came to Keinſham Bridge, and there a party of the King's Horſe ſet upon us, and we took ſome Priſoners, and thereupon thought it adviſable not to let the King's Army join together, but to go back and engage thoſe that were already come together, and that was the reaſon we did not go over the Bridge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of Jones's coming into Holland, and for what?

Mr. Wade. My Lord, I had forgot that; a little before Crag's going laſt away, Jones came over, and his Buſineſs was to know why we ſtaid ſo long, for the Duke of Monmouth's Friends in England had expected him long before, and he was diſpatch'd away quickly to acquaint them the Duke was coming.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was it he ſent to, to acquaint with his coming?

Wade. To Major Wildman, he was directed to Major Wildman.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who elſe were to be acquainted with it?

Wade. Among the reſt, my Lord Delamere, my Lord Macclesfield and my Lord Brandon were to be acquainted that he was coming, and expected that they ſhould raiſe what Forces they could to aſſiſt him.

L. H. Steward. Will my Lord Delamere ask m any Queſtions?

L. Delamere. No my Lord, I never ſaw his Face before, that I know of.

L. H. Steward. Who do you go to next, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Next we call Richard Goodenough; Swear him, (which was done). That which I would know of you, Mr. Goodenough, is, Whether Jones was ſent of any Meſſage, and about what?

Goodenough. My Lord, I was beyond Sea with the Duke of Monmouth, and Mr. Jones was ſent (among other Perſons) to my Lord Delamere to give him notice that he ſhould be ready againſt the time that the Duke ſhould land, and take care to ſecure himſelf, that he might not be ſeized here in Town, for we were apprehenſive ſuch a thing would be attempted.

Mr. Att. Gen. What directions were given him, what Lords to go to?

Goodenough. My Lord, we were informed in Holland, that my Lord Delamere was one of thoſe Lords Lords that had promiſed to draw his Sword in his behalf.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any diſcourſe with the Duke of Monmouth about it at any time?

Goodenough. Yes, I have diſcourſed with the Duke of Monmouth ſeveral times.

L. H. Steward. Ay, what did he ſay to you about it?

Goodenough. My Lord, he ſaid (among other things) that he hoped my Lord Delamere would not break his promiſe with him?

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, will you ask him any Queſtions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord. I never ſaw his Face before, that I know of, I will aſſure you.

L. H. Steward. That is pretty ſtrange, ſo famous an Under-Sheriff of London and Middleſex, as he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then ſwear Jones, (which was done): Pray will you give an account what Meſſage you received from the Duke of Monmouth upon your going over into Holland, and to whom you were to deliver it, and what became of it?

Jones. My Lord, I went to Holland about the latter end of April laſt; my going, as I have acquainted his Majeſty and the Council, was not only about this Affair, for I had other buſineſs that called me thither, which I ſhall not now take up your time, or trouble you with repeating of; but having ſome knowledge from Mr. Diſney, that there were ſome intentions of doing ſomething, tho it was communicated to me but very darkly, and therefore that little I did know, made me the willinger to go for Holland ſo ſoon as I did; but before I went, I had a mind to underſtand ſomething more of the deſign; and therefore the night before I went, I came to Mr. Diſney, and acquainted him with my intended Journey; Mr. Diſney did perſwade me againſt it, thinking that I had gone upon this account, but I told him the occaſion, which he partly knew, why I went; but withal I told him, I did intend to ſee the Duke of Monmouth, and if he had any Meſſage that he would have delivered to him, I would deliver it very ſafely; he told me all the Meſſage I ſhould deliver to the Duke of Monmouth, if I ſaw him, was to deſire him to keep to the laſt Concluſion which he would find in a Letter that had been ſent to him, and that if he had not yet received the Letter, it was to come by the Crop-hair'd Merchant, or the Crop ear'd Merchant, I cannot ſay which, but I think it was the Crop-hair'd; I asked him what that Meſſage was, leſt the Letter ſhould miſcarry, for I told him, if I ſhould go to the Duke of Monmouth, and refer him to a Letter wherein a Meſſage was to be brought him, which he was to keep to, and that Letter ſhould miſcarry, I ſhould in effect bring no meſſage at all to him; my Lord, thereupon he told me, that I ſhould acquaint the Duke of Monmouth that his Friends in England would not by any means have him come for England, but that he ſhould continue where he was, or if he thought good to go for Scotland, they approved of it; this is the ſum of what he ſaid to me, as near as I can remember. When I came to Amſterdam, there was one Mr. that was kill'd at Philips Norton, went with me to the Duke of Monmouth's, and when I came to him, I acquainted him, as Mr. Diſney appointed me to do, that there was ſuch a Letter ſent by ſuch a perſon, and that ſuch a Meſſage was included in it; My Lord, he was in a great paſſion, I know not how to expreſs it, and ſeemed to be very much troubled, and did reflect very much upon Major Wildman, and ſaid, that was Wildman's work; and he ſaid, (as I think that was the word he uſed) Wildman was a Villain, or to that purpoſe; but withal he ſaid it was too late to ſend ſuch a meſſage now, and that he was reſolved to come for England; and he would make Wildman hang with him, or fight for it, with him; that Wildman did think by tying his own purſe, he ſhould tye his hand, but he ſhould find it ſhould not be ſo, and ſome other words of the like nature, he uſed; but this is the ſubſtance of what he ſaid. He gave ſome account what preparations had been made, he ſaid Money was very ſhort, and he had been fain to pawn all he had to raiſe what Money was raiſed, upon his own charge. He asked me if I did think to return to England ſhortly; I told him if he had any ſervice to command me for England, I had ſome little buſineſs to do at Rotterdam, which I would diſpatch, and then I would perform his Commands; he told me, he would be glad I did return as ſoon as I could for England, and that this ſhould be the Meſſage I ſhould carry to Wildman in anſwer to the Meſſage he had ſent him, That he would come for England, and he ſhould either fight with him, or hang with him, and that was all he had to ſay to him. I was coming away from him, but he ſtopped me, and told me he would not have me go out of Town till he had ſpoke with me again; this was upon the Sunday; accordingly I did go in the Evening to him, and when I came, he told me, he would have me ſtay till Tueſday Morning, for he was going out of Town, and intended to be back again at that time, but if not, I ſhould receive from my Lord Gray what he had to ſay to me. He did not come upon the Tueſday, but my Lord Gray did come, and I think to the beſt of my remembrance Mr. Crag was with me; he told me all he had to ſay was, That the Duke intended to be in England within nine days, and that upon the Thurſday ſeven-night after I came away, the Duke would be in England; and he bid me to remember to tell Brand, that when he heard the Duke was landed, he ſhould acquaint Sir Robert Payton with it, but not till he was landed; for tho' they did think that he would join with them when the thing was begun, yet they ought to be careful who it was communicated to, for fear it ſhould be diſcovered and diſappointed; this was all that I had in command from my Lord Gray. I came to Rotterdam, and diſpatch'd my buſineſs there, and would have come away, but it happened there were no Ships coming for England, nor would there be any in a Fortnights time; thereupon I returned to Amſterdam; when I came back, I went to ſee the Duke to give him an account how it happened that I was not gone for England; the Duke told me he was glad I was not gone; for now he had a further Meſſage for me to carry, and he would have me ſtay two or three Days in Town for it; I ſtay'd three Days, and came again to him, but he told me he was not ready for me yet; then I ſtayed two or three Days longer till the 21ſt of May, to the beſt of my remembrance; it was upon a Thurſday that he gave me the Meſſage that I was to bring into England; I came to him in the Morning, and he told me I ſhould come to him upon the Evening of that Day, and when I came, there was a Paper lay before him on the Table, and he took the Paper and seal'd it up, I cannot say he wrote all that was in that Paper, but the Paper that lay before him was not finished when I came in and that he did not write while I was there, I am sure; but he took it up and sealed it before me, and when he had sealed the Paper, he told me, I must assoon as I came to London, see for Captain Matthews, Sir Thomas Armstrong's Son in Law, who lodged at Mr. Blake's in Covent Garden, and desire him to acquaint my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, and my Lord Delamere with his design of coming for England, and that he was resolved to set out upon the Saturday Morning after I came away, which was upon the Friday; he told me Captain Matthews was to send one Post to that place that was named in the Note to receive Intelligence of his landing, and that should be brought to his Friends here immediately (he designed should be twenty four Hours before the Court had notice of it in Town,) and those Lords were to be in readiness, that as soon as they knew he was landed, they might repair to their several Posts to assist him. I told him that I would deliver what Message he gave me, and asked him, what I was to do with the Paper he put into my hands; thereupon, as near as I remember, he used these Expressions to me, I do by you, as Princes do by their Admirals, when they send them out upon any considerable Expedition, which requires Secrecy in the Management of it, they have their Commission delivered to them sealed, which they are not to break open till they are at Sea. So here I deliver you your Instructions sealed up, which you are not to open till you are at Sea; and when you have opened them, and read what is contained in them, I would have you tear the Paper, and throw it into the Sea, or otherwise dispose of it, lest you be surprized and searched at your landing, and my Papers found about you. My Lord, I asked him, because I would be as punctual in my Message as I could what those Lords were to do when they came out of Town, whether they should come directly to him or no; he told me no, not that, but they should go into the Country, and secure their Interest for him there. I ask'd him then, if Captain Matthews be out of the way, and I be disappointed of meeting with him, shall I deliver this Message to the Lords my self; he told me no, by no means for those Lords were Persons of Quality, and that that was not a thing to be done by me; What shall I then do, my Lord, said I, if Captain Matthews be out of the way? You need not question that, saith he, but if you meet not with Matthews, speak to Wildman.

My Lord, with these Instructions (and this as near as I can remember is the Sum of all he said to me) I came away, and came to Sea; when I was out at Sea, I broke open the Letter that I had given me by the Duke, and I will tell you as near as I can, what were the Contents of it; there was written in it to this Effect:

TAUNTON in Somersetshire is the place to which all are to resort; the Persons to be acquainted with the time of landing, are the Lord Macclesfield, the Lord Brandon, and the Lord Delamere; the place to send the Coach to is to Taunton, to Mr. Savage's House at the Red-Lyon; the place where the Post was appointed to return, was Captain Matthews's Lodging, at Mr. Blake's, and he was to receive the Message, or if he did not, he was to appoint one that should receive it; or if it were to return to any other place, that was left to him to do as he thought fit.

And this was all, as near as I can remember; when I had seen this, I came to London, and being very weary and tired, when I came home, I went to Bed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell the Court as near as you can, what day it was you came?

Jones. I came out of Holland the 22d of May, I came home the 27th, and looking upon my Almanack, I find that it was the Wednesday Fortnight before the Duke landed that I came; when I was come home, I sent for Mr. Disney, and he came to me immediately; I told him I had seen the Duke, and desired that he would help me to the Speech of Captain Matthews; he told me he was out of Town; then I desired to speak with Major Wildman, he told me he was gone out of Town too; then I told him I must deliver my Message to him, and I told this Message as I have told your Lordships before, and therefore left it to him to convey it to the Knowledge of those Lords that were concerned; he did seem to be unwilling, and told me he did not know how to communicate it to those Lords, and asked me why I would not deliver the Message my self; I told him I did ask the Duke of Monmouth that very Question, whether I might, and he had forbid me, and ordered me to deliver it either to Captain Matthews, or to Major Wildman; and since they were absent, I knew not any to communicate it to but only to him, in order to their having notice of it. He told me he would do what he could.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray who were present when you had this Discourse with Disney?

Jones. There was none present but himself then, for it was the first time that I spoke with him after I came from Holland; I told him there was a Post to go to receive Intelligence which should bring notice of his landing 24 Hours before it could be known at Whitehall, and therefore it were fit they should be in a readiness; he did scruple at it, and said he did not know where to get any one that could convey the Message to them, but he would do what he could; and concluded to meet at night in Smithfield, and he did so, and there were two Persons with him, Mr. Crag, and Mr. Lisle, and another, I think his name was Brand, and he took me and Brand aside, and did ask me where was the place that the Post was to go; I told him where, and then he did discourse of the Dukes coming over, but I mentioned not any thing of the Lords, but only to Disney; and after an Hours talk or thereabouts, we parted. I saw Mr Disney once afterwards, but what he did with the Message I cannot tell, he gave me no account of it; I did indeed before I went out of Town see him at the Half Moon Tavern in I went out of Town, and met the Duke of Monmouth at Lyme where he landed, and when I came to him, I told him what I had done with my Message, and how it happened that I could not deliver it to the Persons that he had ordered; the Duke told me he was satisfied that I had done what I could, but seemed to be troubled that Matthews was out of Town. And this is the Sum of what passed in my Knowledge as near as I can remember.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you no Diſcourſe with Diſney what he had done with the Meſſage, when you met at Smithfield?

Jones. No, becauſe thoſe Men were Strangers to me, and I had never ſeen them before.

Mr. Att. Gen. But afterwards had you no diſcourſe with Brand nor Liſle about it?

Jones. No, not at all: Brand I never ſpoke but once with, and Liſle would not own that he was the Man that was there.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Queſtions to ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, will your Lordſhip ask him any Queſtions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord, I never ſaw his Face before this time, that I know of, in my Life.

L. H. Steward. Then who do you call next, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witneſs that we call, my Lord, is Story.

(Who was ſworn).

L. H. Steward. Well, what do you ask him?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Story, pray will you give an account what notice you had of Jones's Meſſage, and what was done upon it, and what Diſcourſe you had with any body concerning my Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, and with whom?

Story. My Lord, I had notice of it by one ——— that lived at Biſhopſgate, who told me the 28th of May laſt, that Mr. Jones was returned home from Holland upon a Meſſage from the Duke of Monmouth, and that he had agreed to go to Taunton, and there he expected Mr. Dare or Mr. Williams to bring an account that the Duke was landed; and he ſaid that Mr. Jones's Meſſage was delivered to Diſney, in the abſence of Captain Matthews, who was out of Town; that after Diſney had receiv'd the Meſſage from Jones, he went and had ſome diſcourſe with my Lord Delamere, and that that night my Lord Delamere went out of Town with two Friends, and went a by-way through Enfield Chaſe, towards Hatfield.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when was it you went out of Town, Story?

Story. The 28th of May.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who went out of Town with you?

Story. No body, but I overtook Mr. Brand that Evening.

L. H. Steward. Pray repeat what it was he acquainted you with?

Story. He told me that the day before, Jones was returned home with a Meſſage from Holland, which Meſſage was to be delivered to Captain Matthews, but in his abſence Diſney received it, and that Evening after he had diſcourſed with my Lord Delamere, my Lord that night went out of Town, and two Friends of mine he ſaid went with him, and did convey him away by a by-way through Enfield Chaſe towards Hatfield.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Queſtions to ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, had you any diſcourſe with the late Duke of Monmouth at Shepton Mallet? and about what?

L. H. Steward. By the way, Friend, where is that Brand that you ſpeak of?

Story. He is kill'd; I did not ſee him dye, but he is ſaid to be kill'd at Keinſham Bridge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what diſcourſe had you with the late Duke of Monmouth about the Priſoner at the Bar?

Story. I heard the late Duke of Monmouth ſay at Shepton Mallet, that his great Dependance was upon my Lord Delamere and his Friends in Cheſhire, but he was afraid they had failed him, or betray'd him or ſome ſuch word he uſed, and he ſaid he could have been ſupply'd otherwiſe but that he had a dependance upon them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what Office had you under the Duke of Monmouth?

Story. I was Commiſſary General.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, we have done with you.

L. H. Steward. Will you ask him any Queſtions, my Lord Delamere?

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I have a Queſtion to ask him.

L. H. Steward. Ay, with all my Heart; what Queſtion you will, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I deſire to know whether he knows one Saxon.

L. H. Steward. What Saxon does your Lordſhip mean, one that was in the Army?

L. Delamere. Yes, one Thomas Saxon.

Story. Yes, my Lord, I knew him a Priſoner in Dorcheſter Priſon, where I was a Priſoner my ſelf.

L. H. Steward. Has your Lordſhip nothing more to ask him but that?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, my Lord, we call ſome Perſons to prove, that that very night when Jones came to Town, my Lord Delamere the Priſoner at the Bar goes out of Town without any Servant, changes his Name, and goes a by-way: Swear Vaux and Edlin.

Vaux was ſworn.

L. H. Steward. Well, what ſays this Man?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lords an account whether you went out of Town with my Lord Delamere, and when?

Vaux. My Lord, perhaps I may not remember the very words that I gave my Evidence in before, but I will repeat the Subſtance.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is not ſo long ago, but you may eaſily recollect your ſelf; pray what day was it that my Lord Delamere ſent for you?

Vaux. The 26th day of May, and I went out of Town the 27th.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are upon your Oath, and you muſt remember you are ſworn to tell the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

Vaux. Sir, I ſhall take care to do it as far as I can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither was it that he ſent for you?

Vaux. To the Rummer Tavern in Queenſtreet, and the next day I went out of Town with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What day of the Month did you go out of Town?

Vaux. It was the 27th day of May.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time of the night was it you went out of London?

Vaux. It was about nine or ten of the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. What name did my Lord Delamere then go by?

Vaux. He went by the name of Brown.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would acquaint your your Grace, that this is an unwilling Witneſs, and we are forc'd to pump all out of him by Queſtions?

Vaux. I do tell you the truth of all that I know.

Mr. Att. Gen. How far did you ride that night?

Vaux. To Hoddeſden.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time did you get thither?

Vaux. About twelve of the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did you go then?

Vaux. We went to Hitchen, and I return'd back again the next day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither was my Lord Delamere going then?

Vaux. To ſee his Son that was ſick in the Country.

L. H. Steward. What? he told you ſo, did he?

Vaux. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. What other Company went with you?

Vaux. Two Gentlemen, the one I knew, th' other I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the name of him you did know?

Vaux. It was Edlin.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray was that the direct Road to Cheſhire that you went?

Vaux. We made it our way.

Mr. Att. Gen. You made it your way; but I ask you whether it be the beſt way?

Vaux. It is the freeſt Road from duſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. But I ask you a plain Queſtion, upon your Oath is it the beſt way into Cheſhire?

Vaux. Truly, my Lord, I do not know that.

L. H. Steward. Pray who gave you Directions to call my Lord Delamere by the name of Brown?

Vaux. Himſelf, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Was that the firſt time my Lord went by that name, as you know of?

Vaux. Yes, my Lord, I never heard that he was called by that name till that time.

L. Delamere. I was called by the name of Brown at that time, and I will give your Grace an account by and by of the reaſon of it.

L. H. Steward. Has your Lordſhip any Queſtion to ask him?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then go on to the next.

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witneſs is Edlin, pray ſwear him (which was done). Pray will you give my Lords and the Court an account whither you went with my Lord Delamere out of Town, and when?

Edlin. The 27*th* of May laſt, I was at the Cuſtom-Houſe, and there came Mr. Vaux, the Gentleman that was here laſt, who told me he was going out of Town as far as Hitchen, and asked me to go along with him; he ſaid he was to go that Evening; I asked him what time he intended to return? he told me he was reſolved to return the next day. I told him, then I would go along with him, and we appointed the place of meeting to be at the Bell-Inn in Coleman-ſtreet; when I came there, he ſaid there was a Friend that was going along with him, one Mr. Brown, we went as far as Hoddeſden that night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Edlin, will you look upon that Gentleman that ſtands at the Bar; is that he that went by the name of Brown?

Edlin. Yes, my Lord, that is he.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then, what time did you ſet out?

Edlin. It was very near nine of the Clock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when was it that Vaux met you at the Cuſtom-Houſe?

Edlin. It was about ten of the Clock in the Morning.

L. H. Steward. Pray did you hear or know upon the Road, whither he was going?

Edlin. My Lord, I did never ſee my Lord Delamere before in my life.

L. H. Steward. But did not he tell you as he went along, whither he was going?

Edlin. He ſaid he was going for Cheſhire to ſee a ſick Child.

Mr. Att. Gen. You ſay, Sir, that you went firſt for Hoddeſden?

Edlin. We did ſo, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, how long were you riding that, from the Bell in Coleman-ſtreet to Hoddeſden?

Edlin. It was three Hours I believe, or about three Hours and a half.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then you rid hard out of Town.

Edlin. My Lord, it was towards nine of the Clock when we got on Horſe-back, and it was about twelve or a little more, when we came to Hoddeſden.

L. H. Steward. Well, Mr. Attorney, is that all you have to ask him?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Will you ask him any Queſtions, my Lord Delamere?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, to confirm this Evidence, and to explain it, I ſhall call you a couple of Witneſſes to prove that this Gentleman went by the name of Brown in the Cant of thoſe that were engaged in this Buſineſs, that the name was known as his name by all the Party, and called ſo conſtantly in their Letters and Meſſages; ſwear Tracey Paunceford, and Thomas Babington. (which was done)

L. H. Steward. Which will you begin with firſt?

Mr. Att. Gen. We begin with Paunceford; Pray will you give his Grace and theſe Lords an account what diſcourſe you heard at Diſney's concerning the Priſoner at the Bar, and what name was he uſually called by, in your Meetings?

Paunceford. My Lord, I ſhall give as juſt an account as I can; I was acquainted with Mr. Diſney, and the 14th of June I was at his Houſe--

L. H. Steward. What June do you mean?

Paunceford. Laſt June, my Lord, and there were three more beſides, one Joſhua Lock, and a Country Gentleman that I have underſtood ſince to be one Hooper, and there was one Halſey; and being there, Lock ſtaid for ſome Declarations.

L. H. Steward. What Declarations were thoſe you ſpeak of?

Paunceford. The Declarations of the late Duke of Monmouth.

L. H. Steward. Were they printed at that time?

Paunceford. They were not ready at four of the Clock in the Afternoon; but about nine of the Clock they were finiſhed, and three were printed off, and were delivered to Joſhua Lock, and when he had received them at that time, there was a diſcourſe of having them ſent into Cheſhire to one Mr. Brown; after we had received them, we came over the Water together, and we landed at Salisbury Stairs, and Lock was very earneſt for going out of Town that night, with thoſe three Declarations, which, as he ſaid, were to be carried to one Mr. Brown: This was at nine of the Clock, and ſo we parted.

L. H. Steward. Pray into what Country was he to carry them?

Paunceford. A little way out of Town, he ſaid.

L. H. Steward. Juſt now you ſaid they were to go to Cheſhire.

Paunceford. My Lord, the diſcourſe at Diſney's Houſe was, that they were to be ſent into Cheſhire, but when we came over the Water, Lock ſaid he was to go a little out of Town to one Mr. Brown.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray who was that Mr. Brown as they meant, as you apprehended?

Paunceford. I underſtood Mr. Brown to be my Lord Delamere by ſome diſcourſe.

L. H. Steward. Whoſe diſcourſe did you underſtand it by?

Paunceford. The firſt time my Lord, that I heard of my Lord Delamere's going by the name of Brown, was upon a diſcourſe with one Edlin.

L. H. Steward. Prithee tell us what that diſcourſe thou hadſt with Edlin, was.

Paunceford. Mr. Edlin, about the latter end of May laſt, went out of Town, as I heard, and when he came back again, I asked him whither he went? he ſaid he was invited by a Friend to go with him out of Town, and my Lord Delamere went along with them, and went by the name of Brown.

Mr. Att. Gen. What diſcourſe had you with Diſney, or any body elſe about my Lord Delamere's going by the name of Brown?

Paunceford. Mr. Diſney did uſe to mention my Lord Delamere by the name of Brown.

Mr. Attor. Gen. Pray were you at any Meeting with any body, and whom, at any Tavern, and what Tavern where any ſuch diſcourſe was had?

Paunceford. My Lord, I was at a Meeting at the Caſtle-Tavern with Mr. Vermuyden, and my Brother Babington, and one Manning, but there was no mention then of any Brown that I remember, nor of my Lord Delamere, but only there was ſomething in relation to the landing of the Duke of Monmouth; the Queſtion was asked where he was to land, and Mr. Vermuyden made anſwer he did not know.

L. H. Steward. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to ask this Witneſs any Queſtions, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Pray, Sir, did you ever know any body elſe that went by the name of Brown beſides me?

Paunceford. May I anſwer this Queſtion, my Lord?

L. H. Steward. Anſwer it, yes you muſt, you are ſworn to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth, Man.

Paunceford. My Lord, there was a diſcourſe of Mr. Vermuyden's going by the name of Brown.

L. H. Steward. Will you ask him any more Queſtions, my Lord?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Babington, do you tell my Lords what you know of my Lord Delamere's going by the name of Brown?

Babington. My Lord, I ſhall give an account. When I firſt knew any thing of the Tranſactions, I was with my Brother Paunceford, Mr. Vermuyden, and one Chadwick that went into the Weſt, and there was a diſcourſe of two Gentlemen that went by names I did not know; Brown was one, and I was deſirous to know who was meant by it; I was at that time but newly acquainted with the Concerns of theſe People; and ſo I found they were fearful to entruſt me; but afterwards I was at the Caſtle-Tavern where my Brother, and my Uncle Vermuyden was, and in diſcourſe of Mr. Brown, ſome body happened to name my Lord Delamere's name, but he was preſently taken up, you mean Mr. Brown, ay, ſaith he, I do.

L. H. Steward. About what time was this, pray you?

Babington. About the middle or latter end of May laſt.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you at Diſney's when the Declarations were printed there?

Babington. Mr. Attorney, I will give an account of that afterwards, but I have ſomething elſe to ſay firſt; After this, I was diligent to know of my Uncle Vermuyden and my Brother, who this Mr. Brown was; my Uncle told me it was my Lord Delamere, and deſired me whenever I diſcourſed of him, to call him by that name, and I have very good reaſon to believe Mr. Vermuyden knew of the matter, becauſe he was acquainted with a great many of that ſort of People, and declared he had collected and knew of Moneys that were gathered for that Purpoſe; and he had a good account of Monmouth's landing, and of the Force he had in the Weſt, and how long it was preſumed that he could maintain that Force without Aſſiſtance from any body elſe, and ſo I preſume he was very well acquainted with the whole Tranſaction: Afterwards I happened to be at Diſney's over the Water, there was my Brother Paunceford, Mr. Halſey, and my ſelf.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell what paſſed there at that time.

Babington. Diſney ſhew'd me a Declaration that was not perfected quite, but after that we fell into a diſcourſe about Mr. Brown, and afterwards my Lord Delamere's name was named by ſome body, that ſome of the Declarations were to be ſent to him, and I remember Mr. Diſney ſaid he was afraid my Lord Delamere was not capable of doing that Service that was expected from him in Cheſhire for want of ſome of thoſe Declarations, which would be mighty uſeful to him to inform the People, they being Monmouth's Declarations.

L. H. Steward. Had Lock any of thoſe Declarations away for that Mr. Brown you ſpeak of?

Babington. I never knew Lock, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. What number of Declarations did Diſney print?

Babington. Diſney told us he hoped in twenty four Hours to have 500 printed, a good number of them were to be ſent to my Lord Delamere, and ſeveral of them were diſperſed.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Queſtions to ask him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward

L. H. Steward. Will you ask him any Queſtions, my Lord Delamere?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then may it pleaſe your Grace, the next Witneſs we ſhall bring, ſhall be to prove that my Lord Delamere took frequent Journies backward and forward in a very little compaſs of time, and the ſame Witneſs will likewiſe tell you what Diſcourſe he had with my Lord during the very time of Monmouth's Rebellion, to ſtir up the People to joyn with him. Swear Hope, (which was done). Pray tell my Lords what diſcourſe you had with my Lord Delamere, and when?

Hope. Upon the Sunday before the Coronation, my Lord Delamere came down Poſt to my Houſe, towards his own Houſe in Cheſhire——

L. H. Steward. Prithee where is thy Houſe? for theſe Noble Lords do not know thee, perhaps ſo well as I do, therefore tell us where it is.

Hope. My Lord, my Houſe is at the Three Tuns in Coventry.

L. H. Steward. Well, go on, tell what thou knoweſt.

Hope.——Some time after that he came down Poſt again, and a little after he went up again Poſt, and he told me he went down another way; and after that, the 21ſt of June, he came down Poſt again, this was upon a Sunday, the Sunday Seven-night after the Duke of Monmouth landed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had he any Servant with him at that time?

Hope. Yes, he had.

L. H. Steward. Had he a Servant with him every time he came down Poſt?

Hope. No, he came over I remember, without any Servant, only with a Poſt-Boy.

L. H. Steward. Well, and what diſcourſe had you with him at that, or at any other time?

Hope. My Lord, that Sunday the 21ſt of June, my Houſe was very full of People to enquire News, it being in the time of the Rebellion, every one was deſirous to know how things went; and there was one Ingram in the Houſe, that came to me, and asked what News from London, for they ſay, ſaith he, that the Duke of Albemarle is killed, and his Hearſe brought to Weſtminſter Abby; thereupon I knowing my Lord Delamere was come from London, I went into the Room to my Lord, and deſired to know of his Lordſhip what was the News in London; he told me he was little at Court, and therefore could not tell much News; I then asked him what he heard concerning the Duke of Albemarle; ſaid I, they ſay here he is killed; ſaith my Lord, I am ſorry for it, if it be ſo, but I fear it is too true; but if he be killed, it is ſaid he is killed by his own Party; I asked him how? He told me a Party of the Duke of Albemarle's Men were commanded to fire at the Duke of Monmouth's Men, but inſtead of ſhooting at them, they ſhot into the Ground, upon which they were very ſeverely handled by their Officers, which ſo inraged them, that they fired upon them, and killed ſeveral of them, and amongſt others, the Duke of Albemarle was killed; and he told me the Duke of Monmouth had ſeveral Field Pieces, and Arms ſufficient for near 30000 Men.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did he ſhew you any Places in any Maps?

Hope. There was in the Room Adams's Map of England, and my Lord Delamere ſhewed me which way Monmouth went, and pointed out ſuch and ſuch Towns that he was poſſeſſed of, and withal ſaid, he did fear there would be many bloody Noſes before the Buſineſs was at an end.

Mr. Att. General. How many times do you think my Lord did ride poſt to and fro?

Hope. About five times I believe.

L. H. Steward. Within what ſpace of time?

Hope. From the Sunday Sev'night before the Coronation to the Twenty firſt of June following.

L. H. Steward. Have you done with him, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. General. Yes, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord High Steward, with your Grace's leave, may I ask this Witneſs any Queſtions?

L. H. Steward. Yes, my Lord, what you pleaſe.

L. Delamere. Pray, Did I go down poſt four or five times, do you ſay in that ſpace?

Hope. My Lord, I ſay you did go ſo often backward and forward.

L. Delamere. What time was that, you ſay, I came without any Servant, only with a Poſt-boy?

Hope. I cannot tell.

L. H. Steward. Will your Lordſhip ask him any more Queſtions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. General. Then, my Lord, we deſire Thomas Saxon may be ſworn (which was done) Pray, Mr. Saxon, will you give an account to his Grace, and my Lords, what you know of my Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar, concerning any Inſurrection or Rebellion deſigned by him in Cheſhire, and when?

Saxon. At the beginning of June laſt, I was ſent for to Mere, my Lord Delamere's Houſe in Cheſhire, where when I came I was conveyed into a lower Room, where were my Lord Delamere, Sir Robert Cotton and Mr. Crew Offleys, and they told me I was recommended to them by my Lord Brandon, who had ſaid, I was an honeſt uſeful man, and they hoped I would prove ſo: For they had ſent to the Duke of Monmouth, who was in Holland, and received an anſwer by one Jones, and aſſoon as they had an anſwer, my Lord Delamere came away poſt into the Country under another Name, and by being conveyed through Moreſields, came down to raiſe Ten thouſand men for the Duke of Monmouth in Cheſhire, by the firſt of June; but now they had conſidered of it, and found they could not raiſe them till Midſummer, for they muſt have time to raiſe a Sum of money, forty thouſand pounds in that Country to maintain the men: They asked me, whether I would not undertake to carry a Meſſage to the Duke of Monmouth, I told them I would, and I had there given me eleven Guineas, and five pounds in Silver for my Journy, and I did hire a Horſe afterwards, and did deliver my Meſſage to the Duke of Monmouth.

L. H. Steward. When was this do you ſay?

Saxon. This was the beginning of June.

L. H. Steward. What day of June?

Saxon. I cannot tell to a day, what day in June it was, for I did not ſet it down; but I believe it was the third or fourth of June.

L. H. Steward. How came you to be recommended by my Lord Brandon to theſe Gentlemen: Were you acquainted with my Lord Brandon?

Saxon. I was acquainted with him: The firſt time I was with him was at Over, the next time was at my Lord's own Houſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, pray tell my Lord, how you came acquainted with my Lord Brandon?

Saxon. Upon the Monday in Eaſter Week laſt, being at Over, I was ſent for by my Lord Brandon to drink a glaſs of Ale, and ſmoke a pipe of Tobacco with him, and when I came thither, my Lord told me he had a deſire to be acquainted with me; ſo we drank a conſiderable while; and he was attended at that time with one Hollingſhead, and one Mr. Lee; and after we had drank pretty ſmartly, and after ſome diſcourſe, Lee and Hollingſhead went forth, being called out to ſpeak with ſome body, about an Eſtate or a Tenement that they were concerned in: After they were gone out, my Lord Brandon began to diſcourſe about the Elections of Parliament-men, how unfairly they had been carried, he ſaid, he ſtood both for the Town and County of Lancaſter, but had loſt it by an unfair Election; for the other Party had made Sevenſcore Freemen in one night in the Town, and by that means had carried it againſt him; which had exaſperated the Country ſo much, that they were reſolved to make it an occaſion of raiſing up the Country in Arms, under pretence of maintaining the Chriſtian Engliſh Liberties; and that they had a deſign to ſend for the Duke of Monmouth, and make him King; and that they muſt make uſe of ſuch men as me, that were men of Intereſt in the Country, to ſtir up the People to riſe in Arms; and if I would come to Goſworth, his Houſe, upon the Monday after, he would tell me more of that Buſineſs: I went according to the time, and there he told me a great deal to the ſame purpoſe, and withal he ſhewed me a Letter that he had written to the Duke of Monmouth; which Letter I afterwards ſaw at Bridgwater.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Queſtions to ask him?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord; But if my Lord Delamere pleaſe to ask him any Queſtions, he may.

L. Delamere. I humbly pray he may repeat the Evidence he hath given againſt me, for I have not heard what he has ſaid.

L. H. Steward. Turn toward my Lord Delamere, and repeat the Evidence that you gave againſt him, ſo as he may hear you: Which he did to the ſame effect, as before,

L. H. Steward. Pray, from whom did you receive that money?

Saxon. I received it from my Lord Delamere.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, will you ask him any Queſtions?

L. Delamere. Yes, may it pleaſe your Grace.

L. H. Steward. Then the Method you are to take, is this, you muſt propound your Queſtions to me, and then I will propound them to the Witneſs?

L. Delamere. I deſire to know, may it pleaſe your Grace, when was the firſt time that he declared this that he has now ſworn againſt me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord deſires to know of you, when it was that you firſt made known this againſt him?

L. Delamere. And to whom, my Lord?

Saxon. I ſuppoſe I told Mr. Storey of it firſt, my Lord, at Dorcheſter after I was taken Priſoner for the Rebellion.

L. Delamere. When did he tell it Storey, my Lord?

Saxon. I think it was a Fortnight after my acquaintance with him.

L. H. Steward. Were you then in the ſame Priſon with Storey?

Saxon. Yes, I lay with him in the ſame Bed.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I would ask him another Queſtion.

L. H. Steward. Ay, what you will.

L. Delamere. I deſire to know, when was the firſt time that he made Oath of this, and upon what occaſion it was?

L. H. Steward. What ſay you to that?

Saxon. The firſt time I made Oath of it, was when I lay ſick.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace pleaſe to ask him, where that was, and when?

Saxon. It was before His Majeſty's Counſellors, that were ſent to take my Examination in Newgate.

L. H. Steward. Prithee, I do not know when thou cameſt to Newgate, it may be thou haſt been there oftner than once.

Saxon. I gave my firſt Information immediately after I was brought to Town, when I was removed from Dorcheſter Goal to Newgate.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I deſire your Grace would ask him what time he came up?

Saxon. The beginning of the laſt Term.

L. Delamere. Then I deſire to know, my Lord, whether he did remain a Priſoner in the Country all the other time?

Saxon. Yes, I did ſo, from the Tenth of July, till the time that I was brought up to Newgate.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I deſire to know of him, whether I had ever imployed him about any of my Concerns, that ſhould give me an occaſion of truſting him with ſuch Secrets?

L. H. Steward. What Buſineſs of Importance had my Lord Delamere ever imploy'd you about before this time?

Saxon. I was never imployed about any Concerns of my Lord Delamere's before that time, neither was I ever in his Company, but only then, and then as recommended by him to him; for they ſaid, they muſt make uſe of ſuch as me to make their Deſigns known to the Country, for the accompliſhing what they did intend.

L. Delamere. Recommended by him, who does he mean?

Saxon. By my Lord Brandon.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I deſire to know what the Buſineſs was that he was to do?

Saxon. I was to inform the Country concerning the time of the Riſing, my Acquaintance abounded that way, and by their Diſcourſe they had got Men in every Place to acquaint the Country when they ſhould riſe.

L. H. Steward. Were you acquainted with any great Number?

Saxon. My Lord, I was a publick Tradeſman in Middlewich, and much acquainted with the ordinary ſort of People.

L. Delamere. My Lord, he ſays he was ſent for to my Houſe, I deſire to know who was the Meſſenger that was ſent for him?

Saxon.

Saxon. My Lord, I did ask him his name, but he would not tell it me; he told me he was but a Tenant to my Lord Delamere, and had been imployed in ſuch Buſineſſes for my Lord Delamere's Father, Sir George Booth, he was a lame Man in one Arm, for he had his Hand ſhot away at the Siege of Nantwich.

L. Delamere. It was Tom Long the Carrier, I ſuppoſe, or ſome ſuch Fellow or other, that I ſent for him; My Lord, I deſire to know what time of Day or Night was it when he came to my Houſe?

Saxon. It was juſt when it began to be Dark, the Meſſenger came to me in the Afternoon to fetch me thither, and I ſent for a Man's Horſe that lived near me, and when it was brought me, he asked me what made me go ſo late, I told him I had occaſion to go late, and I ſhould return late, and the Man ſtayed at my Houſe for his Horſe till it was late: but I not coming home, he left order for his Horſe to be brought to him.

L. Delamere. Next my Lord, I deſire to know when he came to my Houſe, whether he did alight from his Horſe at the Stables that belong to the Houſe or no?

Saxon. I did alight juſt at the Old Buildings, and the Man's Horſe that came with me and mine were taken into the Stables.

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, ask him who took his Horſe from him?

Saxon. The Man that came with me, and he went into the Houſe and brought out a Candle.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I would ask him whether the Door he was let in at was that which was neareſt the Stable, or which Door?

L. H. Steward. Do you know what Door of the Houſe you were let in at?

L. Delamere. My Lord, I ask him whether it were the next Door to the Stable?

Saxon. My Lord, I cannot very well give an account of that, for I never was at the Houſe before.

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, let him recollect himſelf, whether it were the Door next the Stable or not.

L. H. Steward. Ay, with all my Heart, if he can.

Saxon. I did not ſee any other Door but that I came in at, and therefore I cannot tell which Door it was.

L. Delamere. Theſe Queſtions, my Lord, I take to be proper for me to ask, and I believe I ſhall make it appear to your Grace to be ſo by and by.

L. H. Steward. Good my Lord, take your full Liberty, and ask what Queſtions you pleaſe; for I know my Lords here will be very well pleaſed that you have all the Scope allowed you that can be.

L. Delamere. I humbly thank your Grace, I deſire to know of him, who let him into the Houſe?

Saxon. The Man that came with me went with me juſt to the Door, and let me in within the Door, and I ſaw no other Man but that Man, till I came into the Room where my Lord and thoſe two Gentlemen were.

L. Delamere. Was there no body elſe but we there?

Saxon. No, you were ſo wiſe, you would let no body be by.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I ſhall trouble this Witneſs no farther at preſent.

L. H. Steward. Then Mr. Attorney General, will you proceed?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we ſhall give no more Evidence at preſent, but ſhall reſt here till we ſee what Defence this Noble Lord will make for himſelf.

L. H. Steward. Then, my Lord Delamere, your time is now come to make your Defence, you have heard what has been Evidenced againſt you, and my Lords now expect to hear what you have to ſay for your ſelf.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, a great part of the Day is ſpent, and I would beg the Favour of your Grace, that I may have the Favour till to morrow Morning to review the Notes I have taken, and then I ſhall make my Defence.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I had this very thing in my Thoughts before I came hither this Day, becauſe I did foreſee that this was likely to be a long Cauſe, and the proceeding in it would take up much time: I have a little doubt, I muſt needs ſay, in my own Mind, whether it may be done by Law; I know very well, if this were a Tryal in full Parliament, there have been Precedents to warrant the Adjournment till another Day, though it be in the midſt of a Tryal; and in the middle of the Evidence: But this Court I take to be of the ſame nature, though of a degree higher, with the other ordinary Courts of Judicature; and whether it be not obliged and tied up to the ſame Method of Proceedings with thoſe other Courts, where all Capital Offences are Tryed, is a thing I am in ſome doubt about: In thoſe Courts it has not been uſual to Adjourn the Court after Evidence given; nay, it has been ſometimes a Queſtion, whether the Judges in thoſe Courts, after the Jury are gone from the Bar, to conſider of their Verdict, could Adjourn themſelves: I ſay, the Judges have ſometimes made a Doubt of it, though I know, the Point is now ſettled, and the Practice is, that they may, and do. But this is moſt certain, after the Evidence given, the Jury cannot be Adjourned, but muſt proceed in their Enquiry, and be kept together till they are agreed of their Verdict; this has cauſed ſome Heſitancy in me, what the Law may be in this Caſe; therefore I think it may be proper to conſult with my Lords the Judges; for I deſire the thing may be conſidered and ſettled.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I humbly beg this Favour of your Grace, but to Adjourn till to Morrow.

L. H. Steward. With all my Heart, my Lord, if it may be done by Law.

L. Delamere. I hope it may, my Lord, and I beg that Favour of your Grace.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I ſhould be very glad to comply with your Lordſhip's Deſires, but truly I have conſidered it, and do doubt whether I can by Law do it: In full Parliament it is clear it may be done, but upon this Commiſſion, after my Lords the Peers are once charged, and the Evidence partly given, whether I can then Adjourn them till another Day, is with me a Doubt: My Lords, if your Lordſhips pleaſe, before ſuch time as my Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar, enters upon his Defence, I will with your leave propound the Queſtion to my

Lords

Lords the Judges, and hear their Opinion what the Law is.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I ſhall hardly be able to finiſh all I have to ſay in any convenient time this Day.

L. H. Steward. But, my Lord, if an Adjournment cannot be by Law, I cannot help it.

L. Delamere. There has a great deal been ſaid, and it will require a great deal of time to give it an Anſwer.

L. H. Steward. Ay, but if it cannot be done as you would have it, we muſt be contented to ſtay the longer together; for I would not abridge you of your Defence; therefore, my Lords the Judges, if you will pleaſe to go together and conſider of it, and report your Opinions, what the Law is in this Caſe, and we will ſtay till you come again.

Then the Judges withdrew into the Exchequer Chamber.

E. Nottingham. My Lord High Steward, I do humbly conceive this is a Matter that concerns the Privilege of the Peers, and becauſe it is a matter that doth ſo much concern the whole Peerage; I think my Lords here ought in ſome meaſure to concern themſelves about it: Therefore, my Lord, I have a ſhort Motion to make to your Grace, that, conſidering the Conſequence that the Precedent of this Caſe may draw with it, ſince my Lords the Judges are gone together to conſult of this Point, of which, I may ſay, they are not altogether the ſole Judges: We may alſo withdraw to conſider of this Matter with them, becauſe it may not be proper for my Lords in Publick here, to offer what they may have to ſay, to incline my Lords the Judges in their Judgments one way or other?

L. Falconberge. My Lord, I humbly offer this to your Grace, upon the Motion that this Noble Lord has made, that, with Submiſſion, I take this to be a thing that concerns the Priviledge of Peerage only, and I conceive the Judges are not concerned to make any Determination of that Matter. I think therefore, my Lords here ought to retire with them to conſider of it.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I think, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhips, that this is a Queſtion naturally proper for my Lords the Judges to give their Opinions in, whether this Court, as a Court of Judicature for the Tryal of this Noble Lord, may, in the midſt of the Tryal adjourn till another Day: And the Priviledge of the Peerage cannot at all come in Queſtion here as I conceive.

L. Falconberg. My Lord, that we conceive is a Point of Priviledge which certainly the inferior Courts can have no power to determine.

L. H. Steward. If your Lordſhips have a Mind to withdraw, you may.

Lords. Ay, withdraw, withdraw.

Then the Peers withdrew, and after half an Hour the Judges returned and took their places as before, and after about an Hour the Peers returned to their former places.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, the Judges have you conſidered the Matter that has been propoſed to you, and what is your Opinion?

L. C. J. Herbert. May it pleaſe your Grace, the Judges in obedience to your Graces Commands have withdrawn, and conſidered of what your Grace propoſed to them, and with humble Submiſſion they take the Queſtion to be this.

Not, whether your Grace may Adjourn your Commiſſion from one day to another, for that is clear you may, and has been practiſed, for that is the Caſe of the Earl of Somerſet and his Wife.

But the Queſtion is, Whether, after the Priſoner is upon his Tryal, and the Evidence for the King is given, the Lords being, as we may term it, charged with the Priſoner, the Peers Tryers may ſeparate for a time, which is the conſequent of an Adjournment to another Day.

And my Lord, the Judges preſume to acquaint your Grace, that this is a matter wholly new to them, and that they know not upon recollection of all that they can remember to have read, that either this matter was done, or queſtioned, whether it might or might not be done in any Caſe.

My Lord, If the matter had been formerly done, or been brought into Queſtion in any Caſe, where it had received a determination, and reported in any of our Books of Law, then it would have been our duty to contribute all our Reading and Experience for the ſatisfaction of this great Court: But being, as it is, a new Queſtion, and a Queſtion that not only concerns the particular Caſe of this Noble Lord at the Bar, but is to be a Preſident in all Caſes of the like nature for the future: All we can do is, to acquaint your Grace and my Noble Lords, what the Law is in the inferiour Courts in Caſes of the like nature, and the Reaſon of the Law in thoſe Points, and then leave the Juriſdiction of this Court to its proper Judgment.

My Lord, in the firſt place, where the Tryal is by a Jury, there the Law is clear, the Jury once charged can never be diſcharged till they have given their Verdict, this is clear; and the reaſon of that is, for fear of Corruption, and tampering with the Jury: an Officer is ſworn to keep the Jury together without permitting them to ſeparate or any one to converſe with them; for no Man knows what may happen, for (though the Law requires honeſt Men ſhould be returned upon Juries, and without a known Objection they are preſumed to be probi & legales homines, yet) they are weak Men, and perhaps may be wrought upon by undue Applications.

This, My Lord, it is ſaid, fails in this Caſe, becauſe the Lords that are to try a Peer, are Perſons of that great Integrity and Honour, that there is not the leaſt Preſumption of their being to be prevailed upon in any ſuch way; and for that reaſon, becauſe of the Confidence which the Law repoſes (and juſtly) in Perſons of their Quality, they are not ſworn as common ordinary Jurors are, but are charged and deliver their Verdict upon Honour.

My Lord, in the Caſe of a Tryal of a Peer in Parliament, as your Grace was pleaſed to obſerve, and as is very well known by late Experience, there the matter has been Adjourned till another Day, and for divers Days; the Evidence being in ſeveral Parcels, and there the danger is as great (if any were to be ſuppoſed) of Tampering: But whether the Lords being Judges in that Caſe, and in this Caſe only in the nature of a Jury, makes the difference, though in both Caſes it is but like a Verdict, for they give their Opinions Seriatim, whether the the Peer tryed be Guilty or not Guilty, that they ſubmit to your Graces conſideration.

Upon the whole matter, My Lord, whether their being Judges in the one, and not in the other inſtance, alters the Caſe, or whether the Reaſon of Law in inferiour Courts, why the Jury are not permitted to ſeparate till they have diſcharged themſelves by their Verdict, may have any influence upon this Caſe, where that reaſon ſeems to fail, the Priſoner being to be tryed by his Peers, that are Men of unqueſtionable unſuſpected Integrity and Honour, we can't preſume ſo far as to make any Determination in a Point that is both new to us, and of great Conſequence in it ſelf; but think it the propereſt way for us, having laid matters as we conceive them before your Grace and my Lords, to ſubmit the Juriſdiction of your own Court to your own Determination.

L. H. Steward. My Lords; I confeſs I would always be very tender of the Priviledge of the Peers, wherever I find them concerned; but truly I apprehend, according to the beſt of my underſtanding, that this Court is held before me. It is my Warrant that convenes the Priſoner to this Barr. It is my Summons that brings the Peers together to try him, and ſo I take my ſelf to be Judge of the Court.

My Lords 'tis true may withdraw, and they may call the Judges to them to aſſiſt them, which ſhews they have an extraordinary Priviledge in ſome Caſes more before the High-Steward, than Juries have in inferior Courts in Caſes of common Perſons: For, if it be in a common Caſe, no Jury can call either Council or Judges to aſſiſt them, in the abſence of the Priſoner, but if they will have advice, it muſt be asked in open Court in the preſence of the party accuſed.

But now, My Lords, if you have a mind to conſult with me in private, as I now ſit by Virtue of this Commiſſion, which is His Majeſties Warrant for me to hold this Court, I could not withdraw with you, but you muſt ask all your Queſtions of me, in the preſence of the Priſoner in open Court; whereas if it were in full Parliament, as were the Caſes of my Lord Stafford, and my Lord of Pembroke, then he that were the High Steward might go along with you when you withdrew, and conſult with you, and give his Opinion, which I cannot do in this Caſe; for I am bound to ſit in Court, while you withdraw to conſider of the Evidence, and am not to hear any thing ſaid to me, but what is ſaid in open Court in the preſence of the Priſoner, except it be when you deliver your Verdict.

This I confeſs my Lords has a great weight with me, and I know your Lordſhips will be very tender of proceeding in ſuch a Caſe any way but according to Law; For though you are Judges of your own Priviledges, yet, with Submiſſion, you are not Judges of the Law of this Court; for that I take to be my Province.

Why then, Suppoſe my Lords, I ſhould take upon me to do as my Lord Delamere deſires and adjourn the Court, and ſuppoſe the Law ſhould fall out to be that indeed I ought not ſo to have done, would it be any advantage to this Noble Peer, if he ſhould be acquitted by your Lordſhips after ſuch an Adjournment, might not the evil conſequence of that be, that he might be Indicted for the ſame Crime, and tryed again? For all the Proceedings after that would be Void, and lyable to be reverſed.

And if on the other ſide your Lordſhips ſhould think fit, upon the Evidence you have now heard, and what he ſhall ſay for himſelf, to convict him after I have adjourned as is deſired and I paſs Judgment upon him, as it will be a Duty incumbent upon me to paſs Sentence on him, if you convict him; what will become of the Caſe then? and how ſhall I be able to anſwer it, as having done my duty, when I pronounce a Judgment notoriouſly Erroneous and Illegal? for ſo it will be, if the Law prove to be againſt my adjourning: This, my Lords, is a matter of great Moment, and worth the Conſideration.

But in the other Caſe of a Trial in full Parliament, the Lord that Sits where I do, is only as the Chairman of the Court rather than Judge, he gives a Vote in ſuch Proceedings; and therefore my Lord the Priſoner did very well at the beginning to ask the Queſtion, whether I had any Vote in his Tryal, as a Peer jointly with your Lordſhips: If I ſat in full Parliament I ſhould without all queſtion give my Vote as well as any other Peer, but ſitting here by immediate Commiſſion from the King pro hac vice, High-Steward; I acquaint you as I did him, I have no authority to give any Vote: my Buſineſs is to ſee the Law obſerved and fulfilled as Judge.

Certainly, My Lords, your Lordſhips and I, and all Mankind ought to be tender of committing any Errors in Caſes of Life and Death, and I would be loath, I will aſſure you, to be recorded for giving an Erroneous Judgment in a Caſe of Blood, and as the firſt Man that ſhould bring in an illegal Precedent, the Conſequence of which may extend I know not how far.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will your Grace give direction for my Lord to proceed?

L. H. Steward. Yes, he muſt proceed I think.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, and you my Lords, it is an offence of a very high Nature for which I am this day to anſwer before your Lordſhips; yet I thank God I am not afraid to ſpeak in this place, becauſe I am not only certain and well aſſured of my own Innocency, no ſuch thought having as yet entred into my Heart; but I am alſo well aſſured of your Lordſhips Wiſdom and Juſtice, which cannot be impoſed upon or ſurprized by Inſinuations and florid Harangues, nor governed by any thing but the Juſtice of the Cauſe.

My Lords, I can with a great deal of Comfort and Satisfaction ſay, that theſe Crimes wherewith I am charged are not only Strangers to my Thoughts, but alſo to what has been my conſtant Principle and Practice; for I think that in matters relating to the Church and the things enjoyned therein, few have conformed more in Practice than I have done, and yet do I confeſs, and am not aſhamed to ſay it, that I have always had a Tenderneſs for all thoſe who could not keep pace with me, and Charity for thoſe that have outgone me, and differed from me, though never ſo far; nay though of a different Religion: For I always thought Religion lay more in Charity than Perſecution.

While I had the Honour to be a Magiſtrate in my Country, I did conſtantly duly and impartially execute the Laws, and in every publick truſt I was very faithful in the Diſcharge of it, for I never voted nor ſpoke in any manner but as

as my Conſcience and Judgment did dictate to me. I have always made the Laws the meaſure of my Loyalty, and have ſtill been as Zealous and Careful to give the King his Prerogative, as to preſerve to the People their Properties, and have endeavoured as far as in me lay to live peaceably with all Men.

This, My Lords, was not only the Dictates of my own Inclinations, but it was the Principle of my Father, and the Leſſon that he taught me: I ſay my Father, who was ſo greatly Inſtrumental in ſnatching this Nation out of its Confuſion, and reſtoring it to its ancient Government, by ſetling his late Majeſty upon his Throne, and conſequently was the means of his preſent Majeſty, that now is, his coming ſo peaceably to the Crown: And this I may the more boldly ſpeak, becauſe I ſpeak it by good Authority; becauſe in the Patent that created my Father a Peer, his late Majeſty is pleaſed to ſay, his Riſing was mainly inſtrumental in his Reſtauration. I beg the Favour of your Grace and my Lords, that I may read you that Clauſe in the Preamble of the Patent, which I have here ready to produce.

Which was read, and then my Lord proceeded as follows, viz.

My Lords, I ſuppoſe moſt of your Lordſhips did know him, and whoſoever did ſo, I dare ſay, did believe him to be a good Man: For my part I did not know a better Copy to write after than his Example, which I endeavoured always to imitate, and that I hope will go very far to vindicate me from the Imputation of being inclined to any ſuch Crime as I ſtand charged with.

My Lords, it is now late, and therefore I ſhall cut off a great deal of what I had intended to ſay to your Lordſhips, that I may not take up too much of your time, and come immediately to my Defence, as to what I ſtand accuſed of.

And firſt, my Lords, I ſhall obſerve that here have been a great many Witneſſes produced, and a great deal of Swearing, but little or nothing of Legal Evidence to affect me; for there is but one Man that ſaith any thing home and poſitively againſt me (and whom I ſhall anſwer by and by) all the reſt are but Hearſays, and ſuch remote Circumſtances, as may be tacked to any Evidence againſt any other Perſon, but are urged againſt me for want of greater matters to charge me with; and therefore I hope the producing and preſſing of theſe things againſt me, is rather a ſtrong Argument that I am Innocent, and that there have been miſchievous and ill deſigns of ſome againſt me, than that I am Guilty; for if they had had other and greater matters, your Lordſhips would have been ſure to have heard of them.

With your Lordſhips leave, I cannot but obſerve to your Lordſhips an excellent ſaying of that great Man my Lord of Nottingham (whoſe Name will ever be remembred with Honour in our Engliſh Nation,) when he ſat in the ſame place that your Grace does now, at the Tryal of my Lord Cornwallis, which I will read to your Lordſhips. Speaking to the Peers he has this paſſage.

I know your Lordſhips will weigh the Fact, with all its circumſtances, from which it is to receive its true and its proper Doom. Your Lordſhips are too juſt to let Pity make any abatement for the Crime, and too wiſe to ſuffer Rhetorick to make any Improvement of it: This only will be neceſſary to be obſerved by all your Lordſhips, that the fowler the Crime is, the clearer and plainer ought the Proof of it to be; there is no other good Reaſon can be given, why the Law refuſeth to allow the Priſoner at the Bar Council in matter of Fact, when Life is concerned, but only this, becauſe the Evidence by which he is condemned ought to be ſo very evident and ſo plain, that all the Council in the world ſhould not be able to anſwer it.

My Lords, I think the Evidence that has been given againſt me this day does not come up to this. And I hope your Lordſhips will regard this ſaying of my Lord Nottingham's, as more worthy of your conſideration, than the fine Flouriſhings and Inſinuations of the Kings Council, which tend (if it be not ſo deſigned) rather to miſguide your Lordſhips, than to lead you to find out the Truth.

My Lords, I ſhall now tell you the method that I ſhall proceed in, in making my Defence; and I begin with Saxon, for he I perceive is the great Goliah, whoſe Evidence is to maintain this Accuſation, and if I cut him down, I ſuppoſe I ſhall be thought to have done my own buſineſs; therefore to that I ſhall apply my ſelf firſt, and do it if I can; and I will in the firſt place examine ſeveral perſons that are his Neighbours and have converſed with him, what they have heard and know of him; and firſt I deſire Richard Hall may be called.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, if you begin that way to call Witneſſes againſt Saxon, it is fit he ſhould be here to know what is ſaid againſt him.

L. Delamere. Ay, with all my heart, My Lord.

L. H. Steward. Then call Saxon agen.

Then Saxon and Hall came both in.

L. Delamere. Pray Mr. Hall tell my Lords here what you know of Thomas Saxon.

L. H. Steward. What is it you ask of this Witneſs?

L. Delamere. My Lord, I deſire him to give an account what he knows of a Letter, that was forged by Saxon, in the name of one Hildage.

Hall. About the nineteenth of December in the year 1683, I received a Letter by Thomas Saxon from Richard Hildage, wherein he deſired me to ſend him the ſum of ſix pounds odd money which I owed him: I received the Letter and paid the money, and to the beſt of my knowledge ſome little time after I met with the ſaid Hildage at Newcaſtle, who asked me to pay him the money I owed him: I replyed I had paid the money, according to his Note, but he ſaid he never gave any ſuch Note, and threatned to ſue me; thereupon I ſent one Lord to Hildage, that is here now in the Court, and deſired Hildage his forbearance for a while, till I could get the money from Saxon back again, and afterwards he ſent again for his money, and I ſent to Saxon for it, but ſtill the money did not come.

L. H. Steward. Did you ever ſpeak with Saxon himſelf?

Hall. No, but with his Wife, who came to me about it, but he acknowledged, he wrote the Letter before John Lord.

Saxon. Did not my Wife tell you that Richard Hildage lent me the money?

L. H. Steward. Nay, you muſt not Dialogue with one another, but if you have any queſtions, you muſt propound them to the Court: My Lord Delamere, have you any queſtions to ask him?

L. Delamere, No, my Lord.

Lord

L. H. Steward. Then what is it you would have him asked, Saxon?

Saxon. I desire you would please to ask him whether or no, he did not lend me the money?

L. H Steward. He, who do you mean?

Saxon. Richard Hildage did.

L. H. Steward. What say you, did Richard Hildage lend him the money?

Hall. No my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Look you, my Lord Delamere, the Objection carries a great deal of weight in it, to prove him a very ill man, if it be fully made out.

L. Delamere. My Lord, if your Grace please, I can prove that he owned the writing of the Letter to another man.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, he does own here, that he wrote the Letter and that he wrote it in Hildage's name, but he saith, the Letter, he so wrote in Hildage's Name was by Hildage's direction, and if so, that takes off the Objection made against him.

L. Delamere. I must submit that to your Grace, whether what he says in that matter be Evidence.

L. H. Steward. What Hildage did, or did not, is the main turn of the question in this Case; for he might lend him the money, and yet afterwards might say, when he thought he might lose it, that he did not send any such Letter, and all this be true, and Saxon in no fault: I must confess, if Hildage were here himself, and should deny the lending of the money, or the giving him Directions to receive it, you would have fixed a shrewd Objection upon him; but otherwise Hear-says and discourses at second hand are not to take off the Credit of any mans Testimony.

L. Delamere. But Hall says Hildage denyed the receipt of the money, or any Order for receiving of it.

L. H. Steward. That signifies nothing, being but by second hand.

Saxon. If it please your Grace, here is my Brother in Court will give you an account of it.

L. H. Steward. Well, well, hold your tongue; will your Lordship please to go on?

L. Delamere. The next Witness, my Lord, that I shall call, shall be Francis Ling (who came in.)

L H. Steward. What do you ask this Witness?

L. Delamere. Mr. Ling, pray will you tell his Grace, and my Lords, what you know concerning Saxon's receiving any Money in the name of Mrs. Wilbraham, without her Order.

Ling. He called at this same Hildage's at Newcastle, and received twenty five Shillings, and said it was for Mrs. Wilbraham in her name, but she never received a penny of the Money, nor knew of his having received it, till he came to pay another Quarter.

L. H. Steward. Where is that Mrs. Wilbraham, is she here?

Ling. No, my Lord, she is a Neighbour of ours, an Ancient Woman, fourscore years of Age, and cannot come so far.

L. H. Steward. This is the same Case with the other, you can never think to take off the Credibility of Witnesses by such Testimony; for this is only a Tale out of an Old Woman's Mouth: What if that Old Woman told him a false Story?

Ling. She said ——

L. H. Steward. I care not what she said, this is no Evidence at all.

L. Delamere. Then pray call Richard Shaw (who came in.)

L. H. Steward. Well, what says this Witness?

L. Delamere. Shaw, can you tell any thing of Thomas Saxon's writing a Letter, and sending it in the Name of one Pangston a Bayliff?

Shaw. He writ a Letter, as I understand, concerning some Money that I owed him; for I owed him a little Money, and being I did not pay it, he does forge a Letter, and puts William Pangston's name to it, so I got up the other Morning ——

L. H. Steward. Where is Pangston? Is he here?

Shaw. No, my Lord, he is not, but he told me he did not write the Letter.

L. H. Steward. Why, this is just the same again, and we all know how easie a thing it is to hear a Bayliff tell a Lye.

Shaw. I cannot tell, but I called ——

L. H. Steward. All that is nothing. It is a difficulter matter to hear such Fellows speak truth, than any thing else, I am sure.

L. Delamere. The next Witness that I shall call, is Peter Hough (who appeared.)

L H. Steward. There is your Witness. What say you to him?

L. Delamere. 'Pray acquaint his Grace, and my Lords, what you know of Saxon's cheating you in the making of a Bond.

Hough. My Lord, he had six Pound ten Shillings in money, and ten Shillings in work done, for which he was to give me a Bond, and hereof he made the Bond himself. I thought it had been right, and took it; but about the time when the money was become due, I looked upon it, and it proved to be but for 6*l.*

L. H. Steward. What should it have been for?

Hough. It should have been for six Pounds ten Shillings in money, and ten Shillings in work.

L H. Steward. Did not he give thee a Bond for all thy money?

Hough. It should have been so, but I never had it.

L. H. Steward. Had you never the money?

Hough. No, I never had the money.

L. H. Steward. What did he say the Bond should be made for?

Hough. For seven Pounds.

L. H. Steward. What say you to it Saxon?

Saxon. My Lord, I had five Pounds ten Shillings of him, and Ten Shillings in work, for which I gave him Bond, there were the Witnesses names at it, the Bond was fairly read, and I sealed it, and he took it with him.

L. H. Steward. Ay, but he says it was to be for seven Pounds.

Saxon. I never had any more of him than six Pounds, and for that I gave him Bond.

L. H. Steward. Was the Bond read to you?

Hough. He read it himself, and he made it himself.

L. H. Steward. How did he read it? What did you apprehend by his reading it was made for?

Hough. I took it as he read it to be made for seven Pounds.

Saxon. He may say what he pleases, but I had no more of him but six Pounds; I was to give Bond for no more.

L. H. Steward. Now the Witnesses to this Bond would be very proper to be produced here: For, if he did make the Bond but for six Pounds, when the Debt that was to be secured was seven Pounds, that is a ſign that he had an intention to cheat him of the Twenty Shillings.

L. Delamere. That ſhews what a kind of Man he is.

L. H. Steward. But this is but Witneſs againſt Witneſs, for he ſays he owed no more, and was to make the Bond for no more.

Hough. It was as I tell you, I aſſure you, my Lord.

Saxon. I had no more of him than ſix Pounds.

Hough. Did not I ask you afterwards one Queſtion more, and told you it was a Cheat, and you ſaid it ſhould be mended?

L. H. Steward. Well, my Lords have heard it, they will conſider what weight to lay upon it.

Lord Delamere. Pray call Edward Wilkinſon (who appeared.)

L. H. Steward. What do you ask him?

L. Delamere. Wilkinſon, pray tell my Lords, how Saxon dealt with you about your Horſe?

Wilkinſon. My Lord, he hired a Horſe of me for three days, and was to give me twelve pence a Day, but he never came again, nor had I any ſatisfaction for my Horſe, but I loſt my Horſe by the Bargain, and my Money too.

L. H. Steward. How long ago was it ſince he hired your Horſe?

Wilkinſon. My Lord, it was the Twenty third of June, to the beſt of my remembrance.

L. H. Steward. Did he not agree with you for 12 d. a day as long as he uſed your Horſe?

Wilkinſon. I expected to have my Horſe in 3 days time.

L. H. Steward. But mind my Queſtion, Did you agree that he ſhould have him but 3 days? or, was he to give you 12 d. a day for ſo long as he kept him out?

Wilkinſon. I was to have 12 d. a day for him.

L. H. Steward. What as long as he uſed him, or only for 3 days?

Wilkinſon He did agree with me to bring him again in 3 days.

L. H. Steward. I perceive by the time, he rid into the Rebellion with this Horſe, and he was a very Knave for ſo doing, upon my Conſcience.

L. Delamere. Call William Wright. (who came in) Pray will you give my Lords an account what Reputation this Thomas Saxon is of in his Country.

Wright. My Lord, this Thomas Saxon came to live at Sambige, and I had ſome dealings with him as well as other Men, and I never found him to perfect his word in any thing.

L. H. Steward. What didſt thou never find him?

Wright. To perfect his word in any thing, My Lord.

L. H. Steward. That is, make good his word I ſuppoſe, but that is your Cheſhire Phraſe.

Wright. Whereupon I met with him one Evening after Evening Prayer, and ſaid to him, Thomas Saxon, if I cared no more for keeping my word than thou do'ſt, it were no matter if I were hang'd; for to be ſure, if thy Mouth open, thy Tongue lyes; and he turn'd away from me, and would not anſwer me a word; and ſince that he owed me ſome Money, and when I asked him for it, he told me if I did trouble him for the Money it ſhould be the worſe for me; whereof all the Town knows as well as I that I cannot ſet him forth in words as bad as he is.

L. H. Steward. Can you inſtance in particular, Friend, of any Fraud, Cheat, or Cozenage that he has been Guilty of? for it is not what the Town ſays, but what can be proved, that we muſt take for Evidence; the Town that thou liveſt in may reckon thee but an idle Fellow, and yet thou may'ſt be a very honeſt Man for all that.

Wright. I truſt, my Lord, I am ſo, and ſhall always prove ſo.

L. H. Steward. Well, what doſt thou know ill of him?

Wright. He did not keep his word with me.

L. H. Steward. Wherein doſt thou mean?

Wright. As to Money he owed me.

L. H. Steward. How much Money did he owe thee?

Wright. He owed me a deal.

L. H. Steward. How much doſt thou call a deal?

Wright. I cannot tell how much exactly.

L. H. Steward. Does he owe thee any thing now?

Wright. Yes, but I cannot juſtly tell how much.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I would be very unwilling to interrupt the method of your defence, or abridge you in your Evidence; but really this objection that you endeavour to prove by this Witneſs, is not at all, as I conceive, for your Lordſhips Service: For it is a very hard caſe, if any one that owes Money and does not pay it, ſhall for that very reaſon loſe the credit of his Teſtimony, this rather gives a countenance to what he ſays, that you know no other Objections but ſuch trivial ones to make againſt him.

L. Delamere. Then, if your Grace pleaſe, I will make ſhort work of it, and ſpare your time; I ſhall paſs over this part of my Evidence though I have more Witneſſes to this Point, and come to other matters, to matter of Fact to encounter this poſitive Proof that has been given againſt me. Your Grace and my Lords do obſerve, that this Man Saxon has teſtified, that about the third or fourth of June laſt (for there he fixed the time) this Man as an extraordinary Perſon that was fit to be truſted in an Affair of this Nature, being confided in, and recommended by my Lord Brandon, was ſent for by me to Mere, where he found me and Sir Robert Cotton and Mr. Offley, who did imploy him to tranſact the matter of ſtirring up the Country, in order to a riſing and joyning with the late Duke of Monmouth: Now I will firſt prove to your Lordſhip in general, that Sir Robert Cotton was not in Cheſhire for many Weeks, nay ſeveral Months, both before and after the time he ſpeaks of: And next in particular I ſhall prove, as to the time that he has pitched upon, by divers Perſons that ſaw Sir Robert Cotton here then in London, and give you particular reaſons for it: Firſt to prove that he was here in Town ſo long in general: I ſhall produce his Servants that ſaw him every day: Call —— Billing (who appear'd) Pray Sir, will you give an account what time Sir Robert Cotton came to London, when he went out of London, and whether you were frequently in his Company and ſaw him here?

Billing. My Lord, to the beſt of my remembrance, Sir Robert Cotton came to Town the 10*th* of April laſt, and I was with him here in Town, at his Houſe at the Horſe Ferry till the latter end

end of July, and ſaw him conſtantly more than once or twice every day for that time, I uſed to come into his Chamber moſt Mornings before he was up, I uſed to buy in his Proviſion for his Houſe, I ſaw him a Bed, or heard he was in Bed every Night.

L. H. Steward. Did you belong to him?

Billing. I am his Servant.

L. Delamere. He lived with him in the Houſe all the while he ſays?

Billing. Then about the latter end of July he went out of Town for three Days to Epſom, and then he came to Town again, and continued here till the time he was committed to the Tower, and never was in Cheſhire ſince the 6th of April laſt.

L. H. Steward. How came you to remember ſo punctually when he came to Town, and that he ſtaid here all the while?

Billing. I know it by my Accounts for the Journey up, and by the Tradeſmens Bills for the Proviſion of the Houſe ever ſince.

L. H. Steward. In what Capacity did you ſerve Sir Robert Cotton?

Billing. I bought in all the Proviſion for his Houſe, and paid the Tradeſmens Bills.

L. H. Steward. Have you any Papers in your Pocket that will point to any particular time?

Billing. I have not the Tradeſmens Bills here, my Lord, nor my own Accounts, but I have look'd upon them, and by that I am ſure what I have teſtified is true.

L. H. Steward. Who do you call next, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Call Margaret Davis, (who appeared,) Pray will you give an account to my Lord, what time Sir Robert Cotton came to Town, and to the beſt of your remembrance when he went out of Town again.

Davis. He came to Town upon the Tenth of April laſt, or thereabouts, and he has not been out of Town any Night ſince, except it were in Auguſt.

L. H. Steward. What day did he come to Town do you ſay?

Davis. About the 10th of April.

L. H. Steward. And you ſay he did not go out of Town till Auguſt?

Davis. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. How do you know this?

Davis. I was conſtantly in the Houſe with him.

L. H. Steward. But how came you to be ſo exact as to the time?

Davis. I ſaw him continually every day.

L. H. Steward. How came you to ſee him?

Davis. I live with him in the Houſe.

L. H. Steward. Pray recollect your ſelf as to the time he went out of Town, for I perceive the other Man ſays it was the latter end of July.

Davis. It was in Auguſt certainly, my Lord.

L. Delamere. My Lord, the other Witneſs ſaith it was the latter end of July, and that may be very well conſiſtent, neither of them ſpeaking to a day.

L. H. Steward. Well, are you ſure he was in Town all the Month of June?

Davis. Yes, he was.

L. H. Steward. Well, who do you call next?

L. Delamere. Mrs. Sidney Lane, (who appeared.)

L. H. Steward. What do you ask this Gentlewoman?

L. Delamere. I examine her to the ſame Point: and I queſtion not but I ſhall make it out to your Grace, and my Lords, none of us all three that he has named were there at that time.

L. H. Steward. I ſhall be very glad of it, my Lord.

L. Delamere. Pray Mrs. Lane will you give an account when it was Sir Robert Cotton came to Town, and how long he ſtaid here?

Mrs. Lane. He came to Town the April before the Coronation, and never lay out of Town I am ſure all thoſe three Months of April, May and June after he came to Town.

L. Delamere. This Gentlewoman, my Lord, lived in the ſame Houſe with him.

Mrs. Lane. I did ſo, My Lord, and ſaw him every Night and Morning.

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I have two or three more Witneſſes to the ſame purpoſe, but I would ſpare their Lordſhips time, if this point be fully cleared.

L. H. Steward. Pray, my Lord, do not abridge your ſelf, for I know my Lords will not grudge the time, but are very deſirous you ſhould have full Liberty in what is pertinent.

L. Delamere. Then I deſire Charles Reeves may be called, (who appeared) I pray, my Lord, that this Man may give an account what time it was Sir Robert Cotton came to Town, and how long he ſtay'd here.

Reeves. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, he was in Town before the Coronation, and I ſaw him here every day from that time till after July, once or twice every Day.

L. H. Steward. Did you belong to him?

Reeves. Yes, and I do now.

L. H. Steward. In what Capacity, Friend?

Reeves. My Lord, I am his Footman.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, the next Witneſs I have to produce is Mr. Aſhburnham; being he cannot eaſily remove, I beg he may be heard in the place where he is.

L. H. Steward. Ay, let him ſpeak where he is, and let him ſpeak out.

L. Delamere. Pray Sir, will you pleaſe to recollect your ſelf what time you ſaw Sir Robert Cotton, and where the laſt Summer?

Aſhburnham. My Lord, I being at Sir Robert Cotton's Houſe at Weſtminſter, he deſired me to preſent a Petition of his to the Houſe of Commons for him, and it was about the latter end of the time allotted for Petitions, I cannot exactly tell what day of the Week or Month it was, but I ſaw him that day I preſented his Petition, and I ſaw him at the Committee of Elections two or three days after.

L. Delamere. Sir William Twiſden I deſire may be alſo heard what he has to ſay to the ſame Point. Who anſwered to the ſame effect.

L. Delamere. Mr. Heveningham is my next Witneſs, My Lord; who I deſire that he would pleaſe to give your Grace and my Lords an account, when he remembers to have ſeen Sir Robert Cotton in Town.

Mr. Heveningham. My Lord, it was a more than ordinary occaſion that makes me remember the thing and the time ſo particularly. I was engaged in a diſpute in the Houſe of Commons about my own Election, and that was upon the 2*d* of June, then was a Caſe debated in the Houſe, whether a Mayor that was elected a Burgeſs for any Town could ſit upon his own Return it was then carried he ſhould not, and the next day which was the third of June, another queſtion came on, whether Sir Joſeph Williamſon was duly elected and returned, and I remember at that time I was walking with Sir Robert Cotton in the Court of Requeſts, and Mr. Neal came out of the Houſe and told me, that it was carried by five, that he was not, and then Sir Robert Cotton was with me.

L. H. Steward. So you ſpeak as to the 2*d* and 3*d* of June?

Mr. Hevening ham. My Lord, had it not been upon this particular occaſion, I could not have remember'd the time ſo exactly.

L. H. Steward. You give a very good token for your remembrance, and my Lords hear what you have ſaid.

L. Delamere. Will your Grace pleaſe that the Clerk of the Houſe of Commons may be called, and examined to the Journal of that Houſe, when it was Sir Robert Cotton preferred his Petition, and that will fix the time as to what Mr. Aſhburnham and Sir William Twiſden have ſaid?

L. H. Steward. Call whom you pleaſe, my Lord.

L. Delamere. It ſeems he is not ready, but I hope I have given your Grace and my Lords ſufficient ſatisfaction, that Sir Robert Cotton was not there at that time that this fellow ſpeaks of. I will now go on and prove Mr. Offley was not there neither, and the firſt Witneſs I call to that, ſhall be Sir Willoughby Aſton, whom I deſire your Grace will be pleaſed to hear ſpeak in his place.

L. H. Steward. Well, what do you ſay, Sir Willoughby?

Sir W. Aſton. My Lord, I deſire to be guided in what account I ſhall give by the Queſtions that ſhall be asked.

L. H. Steward. What is it you ask Sir Willoughby Aſton?

L. Delamere. Pray can you remember, Sir Willoughby, what time it was, and whether about the latter end of May laſt, or when, that you know of Mr. Offley's being at your Houſe, and how long he ſtayed there?

Sir W. Aſton. I can give an account of his Motion for ten days together, but that perhaps may be more than is neceſſary.

L. H. Steward. It will not be improper, Sir, for you to give as exact and particular account as you can of the times.

Sir W. Aſton. If your Grace pleaſe, I will do it.

L. H. Steward. Pray do, Sir.

Sir W. Aſton. Upon the 26*th* of May, which was Tueſday, at Night Mr. Offley and his Lady, and ſome of their Relations, came to my Houſe, upon Wedneſday the 27*th* of May Mr. Offley was ſo ſick that he kept his Chamber and his Bed all day, upon the 28*th* of May which was Thurſday, he was ſo ill that he kept his Chamber all day, and roſe about five at Night, and I then waited upon him, and ſat with him three Hours in his dreſſing Room, on Friday the 29*th* of May he went to Church, that Day was imployed a great part in Devotion, upon the 30*th* of May which was Saturday, Mr. Offley and his Lady went, and a great part of my Family went with them, to one Mr. Pickerings ſix Miles off my Houſe, there they dined, and returned at Night to my Houſe, upon Sunday the 31*ſt* of May, I have a particular remark whereby I remember that Mr. Offley went to viſit Mr. Needham; upon Monday the firſt of June, Mrs. Offley and the Women of my Family went to viſit my Lady Brooks, but Mr. Offley not being well ſtaid at home: On Tueſday the ſecond of June he was ſtill at my Houſe, there was a great deal of Company there, and he was in the Company all the day long: On Wedneſday the 3*d*. I fell ſick in the Morning about 4 of the Clock, but Mr. Offley was in the Houſe all the Morning, but in the Afternoon he went to make a Viſit two Miles from my Houſe, at a place called the Ware-houſe, where the Ships ride at Anchor; and upon Thurſday Morning which was the 4*th* of June, he went from my Houſe: Now if your Lordſhip deſire to know any thing about any particular time about this Compaſs, I'll give you the beſt account I can.

L. H. Steward. Can you tell where he went when he went from your Houſe?

Sir W. Aſton. He went directly home, as he ſaid.

L. H. Steward. Did you hear at any time that he ſtay'd by the way, between his going from you and coming to his own Houſe?

Sir W. Aſton. My Son went with him two or three Miles of his way, and I heard that at Middle-wich he ſtaid to ſpeak with ſome of the Militia Officers that he met with by the way there at a Muſter, and afterwards went directly home.

L. H. Steward. Pray is the uſual way from his Houſe to yours by my Lord Delamere's?

Sir W. Aſton. No, my Lord, directly another way.

L. H. Steward. Will you ask Sir Willoughby Aſton any more Queſtions?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Grace pleaſe, I would ask Sir Willoughby Aſton one Queſtion. Sir, I deſire to know how far it is from your Houſe to my Lord Delamere's?

Sir W. Aſton. Sir, it is about Eleven Miles.

L. H. Steward. Eleven Miles you ſay, Sir?

Sir W. Aſton. Yes, my Lord, Eleven of thoſe Northern Miles.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I have ſome more Witneſſes to examine to this Point.

L. H. Steward. Call whom you pleaſe, my Lord?

L. Delamere. I call Mr. Gregory next, my Lord. (who appeared) Pray give my Lord an account, when Mr. Offley went from Sir Willoughby Aſton's laſt Summer, and whither he went?

Gregory. My Lord, my Maſter went from Sir Willoughby Aſton's Houſe——

L. H. Steward. Who is your Maſter?

Gregory. Mr. Offley, my Lord. It was upon the 4*th* of June, at 9 of the Clock in the Morning, and went from thence to Middle-wich, and was at home at his own Houſe about five of the Clock in the Evening, as I was told, for I did not go directly home with him.

L. H. Steward. Was he at Mere that day at my Lord Delamere's?

Gregory. No, not that I know of, I was not with him.

L. Delamere. Then pray call Thomas Kidd. (who appeared) Pray were you that day with Mr. Offley when he went from Sir Willoughby Aſton's?

Kidd. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Delamere. What day was it?

Kidd. The 4*th* of June.

Lord

L. Delamere. Then whither went he?

Kidd. He went the direct Road to his own Houſe, I never parted from him, nor did he ſtop any where till he came to Middle-wich, where the Country Militia were exerciſing, and he juſt alighted off his Horſe, and ſpoke with Major Minſhaw and ſome of the Officers, but never ſo much as drunk by the way till he came to his own Houſe.

L. H. Steward. What to his Houſe in Staffordſhire?

Kidd. No, but to Crew Hall in Cheſhire.

L. H. Steward. Does Mere lye in the Road between Sir Willoughby Aſton's and Crew Hall, ſo that your Maſter might be there within that time?

Kidd. No, that he could not do.

L. H. Steward. Were you with Mr. Offley the whole Journey home?

Kidd. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. H. Steward. Were you no time from him?

Kidd. No, my Lord I was not.

L. H. Steward. What time did he come home?

Kidd. He came to his own Houſe about 4 or 5 a Clock at night.

L. H. Steward. And did not he go from thence that night?

Kidd. No, my Lord.

L. Delamere. Now my Lord, I will prove as to my ſelf that I was in London at the time as he ſpeaks of. And Firſt, I deſire Sir James Langham may be heard to that:

He appeared, but gaye no Evidence.

L. Delamere. Pray call——Booth (who appeared)

L. H. Steward. What is this Gentleman's name?

L. Delamere. He is my Brother, my Lord, his Name is —— Booth.

L. H. Steward. What do you ask him?

L. Delamere. Pray can you remember what time in June you ſaw me in Town here?

Mr. Booth. My Lord, I ſaw my Brother here in Town, the 3*d*, 4*th*, 5*th*, 6*th*, and ſo on to the 10*th* of June, and the 10*th* of June I went out of Town my ſelf, I ſaw him ſometimes twice or thrice a day in that time, for I did not lodge above half a ſcore doors from him.

L. H. Steward. Where was that?

Mr. Booth. In Great Ruſſel-Street.

L. H. Steward. How come you to remember the time ſo particularly?

Mr. Booth. It was that day Sennight before I went out of Town, which was Wedneſday the 10*th* of June, and had it not been for that particular Circumſtance, I had not remark'd it ſo much as to be able particularly to remember it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Booth, did you know of your Brother's going out of Town the 27th of May?

Mr. Booth. I heard he was gone out of Town about that time.

L. H. Steward. Why then, when came he hither to Town again?

Mr. Booth. I cannot tell, but I ſaw him upon the 3*d* of June in the Evening.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, it is not poſſible for him ſo to do in that time, if he rode Poſt.

L. H. Steward. He did make a great deal of haſte backward, and forward, that is certain.

L. Delamere. My Brother does not know when I went, but as he heard, he ſays.

L. H. Steward. But pray my Lord, mind the Objection that has been made, for it carries a great deal of weight in it. It is plainly proved by two Witneſſes, that you went out of Town the 27*th* of May at 9 of the Clock at Night, and rode to Hoddeſden, and the next day came to Hitchin about Noon, then they left you and return'd back again to London that Night, and you told them you were going to ſee a ſick Child of yours in Cheſhire, how came you to make ſuch Poſt-haſte back again, that he ſhould ſee you here in London the 3*d* of June?

Mr. Booth. My Lord, I am certain I ſaw him that day in the Evening, and ſo on to the 10th.

L. H. Steward. Did my Lord then tell you how your Friends did in Cheſhire?

Mr. Booth. I cannot remember the particular diſcourſe we had.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, when did he tell you he came to Town?

L. H. Steward. You ſay you uſed to ſee him every day once or twice a day.

Mr. Booth. Yes, I did ſo.

L. H. Steward. Pray where was he the Second of June?

Mr. Booth. He was not come to Town.

L. H Steward. How long time was it before that, that you had not ſeen him?

Mr. Booth. I had not ſeen him of ſeveral days before.

L. Delamere. If it pleaſe your Grace, here is another Brother of mine that ſaw me at the ſame time, and tho' he be my Brother I hope he is a good Witneſs.

L. H. Steward. Ay, God forbid elſe; what is his name?

L. Delamere. George Booth.

L. H. Steward. Well, what ſay you, Sir;

Mr. George Booth. My Lord, I ſaw my Brother Delamere here in Town the 4th of June, by this particular Circumſtance which I cannot err in, that the next day, as I take it, I went down with him to the Houſe of Lords, to hear my Lord Macclesfield's Cauſe, which was then there to be heard upon the Appeal of Mr. Fitton, and my Brother was in the Houſe of Lords at that time, which was the 5th of June.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I think it not amiſs to put you in mind of one thing, which it is fit your Lordſhip ſhould give ſome anſwer to: Does your Lordſhip deny that you went out of Town the 27th of May?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord, I do not; I acknowledge I did ſo.

L. H. Steward. Then it will be fit for you to give an account where you were the 28th of May, and ſo all along till the 3d of June?

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I hope I ſhall give you full Satisfaction in that by and by, but I have one Witneſs more to this point of my being in Town at ſuch a time, that I could not be in Cheſhire, when this Fellow ſays I was; and that is my Lord Lovelace.

L. H. Steward. There is my Lord Lovelace, what will you ask him?

L. Delamere. Whether he did not ſee me at the Tryal of my Lord Macclesfield in the Houſe of Lords?

L. Lovelace. I was in the Houſe of Lords that day that my Lord Macclesfield's Tryal was, and I remember I did ſee my Lord Delamere there.

L. H. Steward. But we are as much at a loſs now as ever we were, for what day that Tryal was does not appear: What day was my Lord Macclesfield's Tryal?

was

L. Delamere. The Journal of the House of Lords proves that to be the 5th of June.

L. Lovelace. My Lord stood just by the Bar, and if I am not mistaken took Notes.

L. Delamere. My Lord, I hope now I have satisfied your Grace, and the rest of my Lords, that none of us three whom this Fellow has mentioned were there at that time at Mere, when he says we were: For my own part I do positively affirm, and I speak it as in the Presence of Almighty God, that I have not seen Sir Robert Cotton at my House that I know of these many Years, and I believe Mr. Offley was never in my House since I was Master of it: And I do likewise protest, that to my Knowledge, I never saw the face of this Man till now that he is produced as a Witness against me; I am sure I never spoke with him in all my Life, nor never sent for him to come to my House: And if your Lordship please to consider the Story that he tells, it will easily appear to be very improbable, for he neither tells you who the Messenger was that was sent for him, nor the way that he came into the House, which any body that has ever been at the House could not mistake. For when I asked him what door it was he came in at, it was for this reason, because he must needs have gone a great way about, if he had not come in at the usual Entry into the House, for I have but one door into my House except that by the Stables, which is a great way off the House? and it being about that time of the Year, if it were 8 or 9 of the Clock in the Evening, he must needs discern which way he came in: And, besides, My Lords, is it probable what he says, that he should see no body stirring about the House except it were this Man without a Hand, that he says was sent for him? I assure your Lordships, I have not, nor had my Father ever that I know of, any Servant or Tenant that was maimed in that manner that he speaks of; he saith, he was recommended to us by my Lord Brandon: But he cannot tell your Lordship any thing that ever he had done, to recommend him either to him or us: I did ask him what important Service he had ever done for me, that might give a credibility to my imploying him in such a business as this. My Lord, I cannot help it, if People will tell false Stories of me, but I hope your Lordships will consider the credibility of it; is it to be imagined that I would take a Man I knew nothing of, upon another Man's Word, into so great a Confidence, as to employ him about a business of this Nature? I am glad that he was called in here again for your Lordships to view him. I beseech your Lordships to look at him; Is this Fellow a likely Fellow to be used in such an Affair? Does he look as if he were fit to be employed for the raising of ten thousand Men? Does he seem to be a Man of such considerable Interest in his Country? A Fellow, that though it be not direct Evidence, yet by several Witnesses, I have shewn to be a Man of no Reputation in his Country, nay of a very ill one; and could we have none else to employ in a matter of this Moment but such a Fellow as his Neighbours would not take his Word for any thing? It is an improbable Story upon these accounts, if I should say no more. Your Lordships likewise see, that he is so well thought of, that he dare not be trusted out of Newgate, but is kept still a Prisoner, and as such gives Evidence here: And I know your Lordships will not forget that he swears to save himself, having been a Rebel by his own Confession, and he would fain exchange his Life for mine; till he has a Pardon, which as yet, as I am informed, he has not; the Objection will still lye upon him, that he swears to save himself, which will render his Testimony not credible, and the Law requires the Witnesses in Treason, to be credible ones: And yet forsooth! this Man, that no body that knows him will believe a Word he says, must be taken to be the Man of Integrity, Zeal and Industry; the Man of Management and Dispatch, the Man of Interest and Authority in his Country, that nothing can be done, but he must have a hand in it. My Lords, I think I need say no more of him; your Lordships time is precious, too precious indeed to be spent upon such a Subject, and so I set him aside.

My Lords, there is a thing that I perceive the King's Council lay a great weight upon, and that is my going down upon the 27th day of May, and my frequent riding Post to and fro. I shall now satisfie your Lordships of the Reasons of my Journeys. The first time which was betwixt the Coronation and the sitting of the Parliament was upon this reason; I went down to take Possession upon a Lease of a considerable value which was renewed to me by the Bishop. I did not think of going down at that time so soon; but I had Word wrote me out of the Country that the Bishop was ill, and that obliged me in point of interest to make haste down. And this I shall prove by one that was Attorny for me, and another that was a Witness of my taking Possession: and for this, I first call Mr. John Edmonds (who came in) Pray, Sir, will you tell his Grace and my Lords, what you know of my coming down into the Country in the beginning of May, and upon what account, and what time it was?

Mr. Edmonds. May it please your Lordship, upon the 5th of May my Lord Delamere did me the Honour to come to my House, and he stayed there a little while, and desired me to be a Witness of his taking Possession upon a Lease of my Lord Bishop of Chester's, and we went into the House that was next to mine, which was and there did take Possession.

L. H. Steward. Where is your House?

Mr. Edmonds. At Boden, in Cheshire.

L. H. Steward. When was this, do you say?

Mr. Edmonds. The 5th of May.

L. Delamere. Pray Sir, will you satisfie my Lord, whether the Bishop was not ill at that time?

Mr. Edmonds. My Lord, I had been a little before at Chester, and hearing my Lord Bishop was not very well, I went to Mr. Allen, and told him I was desirous to see my Lord, and speak with him, if I might; he told me my Lord was so ill, that he would speak with no body.

L. H. Steward. Was it a Lease for Years, or a Lease for Lives?

Mr. Edmonds. It was a Lease for Lives.

L. H. Steward. Then that might require my Lord's taking Possession. Who do you call next, My Lord?

L. Delamere. Mr. Henry.

L. H. Steward

L. H. Steward. What do you ask this Man, my Lord?

L. Delamere. Pray will you give his Grace and my Lords an account, whether you were not Attorney, and delived me Poſſeſſion upon the Leaſe of my Lord Biſhop of Cheſter?

Mr. Henry. My Lord, I was Attorny by Appointment, and the 5th of May laſt I delivered Poſſeſſion to my Lord Delamere at one of the moſt remarkable places of the Land that belonged to that Leaſe of the Biſhop.

L. Delamere. My Lords, I hope this is a ſatisfactory reaſon for my going down at that time, the Biſhop being ill, and the Leaſe being worth 6 or 7000 l. The next time that I have to ſpeak to is, That of my going the 27th of May, and for that I give this anſwer; I did go out of Town the 27th of May, the occaſion of my going was, I had taken up a Reſolution before to go ſee my Child that was not well, but I had not taken my Journy ſo ſoon, nor with ſuch Privacy, but that I had notice, there was a Warrant out to apprehend me, and knowing the Inconveniences of lying in Priſon, I was very willing to keep as long out of Cuſtody as I could, and therefore I went out of the way, and under a borrowed Name. When I came to my Houſe in Cheſhire, there were not above five of my own Servants that ſaw me all the while I was there, and I ſaw no body but them, but while I was there, my Wife ſent me an Expreſs, that as to the Warrant ſhe hoped it was a Miſtake, and there was no ſuch thing; but my eldeſt Son was very ill, and if I intended to ſee him alive I muſt make haſte up, this was the occaſion of my quick return, and I ſhall ſatisfie your Lordſhips by Proof, that I came thither in that manner to avoid the Warrant, and for no other Reaſon.

L. H. Steward. You ſay you went to ſee a ſick Child in the Country.

L. Delamere. May it pleaſe your Grace, my Mother that is here, wrote me word that my Child was not well.

L. H. Steward. Pray what made you come back again ſo ſoon?

L. Delamere. Becauſe I had an Expreſs ſent me by my Wife that my other Son was like to dye.

L. H. Steward. Call your Witneſs, my Lord.

L. Delamere. Mrs. Kelſey, (who came in) Pray will you give an account what I ſaid, when I came down, was the occaſion of my coming ſo privately and changing my Name?

Mrs. Kelſey. My Lord heard he ſaid, there was a Warrant for taking of him up, and he gave me that for a Reaſon; beſides his little Son in the Country was ill.

L. H. Steward. What, ſhe lived in the Country, did ſhe?

Mrs. Kelſey. My Lord, I was in the Houſe with him.

L. Delamere. If your Lordſhips pleaſe my Mother may be examined?

L. H. Steward. Yes, with all my Heart.

She ſate by him at the Bar.

L. H. Steward. Pray Madam, will you lift up your Voice, that my Lords may hear what you ſay.

Lady Delamere. My Lords, This Child of his that was in the Country, was more than ordinarily precious to him, in regard it was born to him at that time, when he was an innocent honeſt Man, (as he is now a Priſoner in the Tower for High-Treaſon,) above two years ago, and I think it increaſed his Affection to the Child, that God had given it to him when he was in that Affliction. My Lord, I knowing the Affection that the Father and Mother both had to the Child, my Care in their abſence I thought ought to be more exerciſed about him: The Child ſucked, but I ſaw the Child decline, and therefore I was of Opinion that he ſhould be wean'd, and I ſent up word that if they did not take care quickly and look a little after him, I was afraid he would go into a Conſumption. Upon this my Son came down, I ſaw him not indeed, becauſe he was very private all the while he was in the Country, but while he was there, it pleaſed God to viſit his eldeſt Son with a dangerous Diſtemper, upon which my Daughter ſent for him Poſt, if he intended to ſee his Son alive. And thereupon I think he made what haſte back again he could.

L. H. Steward. Were you in the ſame Houſe with him, Madam?

Lady Delamere. My Lord, I ſay, I did not ſee him all the time he was there, I only tell you what I heard.

L. H. Steward. How long was he in the Country?

Lady Delamere. I cannot tell exactly that, I think he was not above two days.

L. H. Steward. He muſt be but one day by Computation of time?

L. Delamere. Pray, my Lord, I will ſatisfie you in that point preſently: Mrs. Kelſey will give an account what time it was that I came down, and when I went away.

Mrs. Kelſey. My Lord came down on the Sabbath-day night, and ſtayed there Monday, and went away the Tueſday Morning.

L. H. Steward. Look you, my Lord, the 27th of May was upon a Wedneſday, that night you went out of Town, and went to Hoddeſden. Thurſday which was the 28th you came to Hitchen at Noon. Friday was the 29th, Saturday the 30th, Sunday was the 31ſt, then you came to your Houſe, Monday the 1ſt of June, Tueſday the 2d, then you came away, and upon Wedneſday the 3d you were in Town, ſo ſays your Brother.

L. Delamere. It was ſo, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. Which way did you come back?

L. Delamere. I came Poſt through Coventry, my Lord, and that was the time that Hope ſpeaks of, that I told him I had come another way into Cheſhire, when I came down.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you ſay you went down to ſecret your ſelf from a Warrant that you apprehended was out againſt you, and that made you go a by-way, how came you then to come ſo publickly back, the ordinary Poſt-Road?

L. Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I have told you I had an Expreſs came from my Wife, that told me it was a Miſtake as to the Warrant, but that my Child was very ill, and I muſt make haſte up.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Witneſſes my Lord?

L. Delamere. Yes my Lord, I deſire Mr. Kelſey may be called, (He came in.)

L. H. Steward. Well, what ſay you?

Mr. Kelſey. My Lord came down upon the Sunday night at eleven of the Clock, and ſtayed at home all Monday, and on Tueſday Morning at

at 3 of the Clock in the Morning, he took Horſe for London, and I have Letters by me that are dated the 4th of June which was Tourſday, that told me my Lord was come to Town the night before.

L. H. Steward. Whoſe are thoſe two Letters?

Mr. Kelſey. They were from my Lady and Mrs. Vere Booth, and both came by the ſame Poſt.

L. Delamere: I ſhall call one Witneſs more, my Lord, to prove that my Child was ſick here in Town, and the time, and that is Sir Thomas Millington, who was his Phyſitian.

Sir Thomas was called, and came in.

L. Delamere. Pray Sir Thomas, can you recollect your ſelf what time my Son was ill laſt Year?

Sir Thomas Millington. My Lord, I was ſent for to my Lord Delamere's Son upon the 28th of May, and I found him then very ill, and he continued ſo for two days, inſomuch as I told my Lady Delamere his Mother that I thought the Child would not eſcape. I told it likewiſe to Sir James Langham, who is my Neighbour in Lincolns-Inn-Fields; what they did upon it, whether they ſent for my Lord Delamere to Town or no, I cannot tell, but I know punctually this was the time by reaſon the Bills I wrote are dated on that day, otherwiſe I could not have remembred the time, but the Bills being ſent me from the Apothecary, I find that date to them.

L. H. Steward. Pray, Mr. Attorney will you call Edlin again, or Vaux, either of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is Edlin, my Lord

L. H. Steward. Where did you part with my Lord Delamere, and when?

Edlin. Upon Thurſday the 28th of May at Hitchin.

L. H. Steward. What time of the day was it when you parted?

Edlin. It was about ten of the Clock.

L. H. Steward. He went forward Poſt into Cheſhire, did he not?

Edlin. He did not go Poſt I ſuppoſe, for he went upon his own Horſe.

L. H. Steward. Did he go upon his own Horſe?

Edlin. It was the ſame Horſe he went to Hitchin upon.

L. H. Steward. Have you any more Witneſſes, my Lord?

L. Delamere. No, my Lord. I hope I have given their Lordſhips Satisfaction in all Points, and need to give no further Evidence.

L. H. Steward. Have you any thing more then to ſay, my Lord?

L. Delamere. My Lords, I acknowledge I did go at that time privately a By-Road, and by the name of Brown, and as for Jones, who it is ſaid came from Holland that day, I appeal to him himſelf, and I call God to Witneſs I never ſaw the Man before now in my Life; nay, till after I was made a Priſoner upon this account, I never ſo much as heard of his Name; and your Lordſhips ſee by the Proofs, that all that has been ſaid againſt me, except what this Fellow Saxon has teſtified, is but hearſay, nay indeed but hearſay upon hearſay at the third and fourth hand.

My Lords, if People will make uſe of my name, and ſay this, and that and the other, and among themſelves talk of Meſſages ſent to me; can I or any Man in the World help it? at this rate who can be innocent, if a Man muſt be guilty becauſe others intend to draw him into Treaſon? For there is no more in the utmoſt that this proof can amount unto. It is at the pleaſure of any two men in the world, to take away the Lives, Honours, and Eſtates of any of your Lordſhips, if it be a proof ſufficient to make you guilty of Treaſon, for them to ſwear you were intended to be drawn into Treaſon.

And, my Lords, as to the truth of the thing it ſelf, that there was any Meſſage or Correſpondence between the late D. of Monmouth and me, I call God to witneſs I have neither wrote nor ſent Letter or Meſſage to him, or received Letter or Meſſage from him, this 3 years: I cannot tell what expectation he might have concerning me or any body elſe. It is very probable he might have expectation of aſſiſtance from ſome body, and that without ſuch expectations he would not have made the attempt he did: But, my Lords, all that is nothing to me, I had no correſpondence either by Letters or Meſſages with him, ſo that all that has been ſaid upon that point of his expectations, and what he declared, I muſt give the ſame anſwer to that I gave to the Evidence about Jones's Meſſage, That admitting it to be true, he did declare ſo, yet, no proof being made of an actual correſpondence, it is no more but only an intention in him to draw men into Commiſſion of Treaſon; and if that be allow'd for proof of guilt, I muſt repeat it again, there's no man can be innocent.

Upon the whole matter, my Lord, I muſt leave my Caſe to the conſideration of your Lordſhips: I am not Maſter of ſo much Law or Rhetorick as the Kings Council, to plead in my own Cauſe, and I have had but little time to recollect and apply my defence to my accuſation, but I hope what Evidence I have offered has given your Lordſhips full ſatisfaction that I am not guilty of what I ſtand charged with.

And after all that has been ſaid, my Lords, I would beg your Lordſhips to conſider this, that if in caſe I were guilty of theſe things, and were conſcious to my ſelf of having been ingaged in an Affair of this nature, can any man imagine I could have been ſo hardy as to have ſurrendred my ſelf upon the Kings Proclamation, nay, if I with thoſe other two Gentlemen that he has named, had had any tranſactions of this kind, with ſuch a Fellow as he has been made appear to be by his Neighbours (that muſt needs be thought a man of no Faith, becauſe of no Reputation, tho' he gives himſelf a great Character as a man of great Intereſt, of wonderful diſpatch and dexterity in the management of ſuch matters) ſo as at firſt ſight to put this large confidence in him; Can it be imagined I ſo little regarded my own Life and all that is dear to me, as to have ſurrendred my ſelf, were it not that I was certain of my own innocence and integrity: Life it ſelf, my Lords, is to be preferred above all things but Honour and Innocence; And Job ſaith, Skin for skin and all that a man hath will he give for his life, and why ſhould I be preſumed to have ſo little a value for it, as voluntarily to deliver up my ſelf to deſtruction, had I been conſcious that there was any one, who could really teſtifie any thing that could hurt me.

Beſides, My Lords, this very Fellow Saxon is but one Evidence, and how far you will believe him, I muſt ſubmit it to you, but ſurely one Witneſs will never be ſufficient to convict a man of Treaſon, tho' thouſands of hear ſays, and ſuch trivial circumſtances be tacked to it, eſpecially when they are tacked to an Evidence, which I dare ſay your Lordſhips are far from thinking it deſerves any Credit.

My Lords, I deſire your leave to ask this one Queſtion; Would not any of your Lordſhips think himſelf in a bad condition as to his Fortune, if he could produce no better Evidence to prove his Title to his Eſtate than what has been produced againſt me this day to take away my Life? and if ſuch Evidence as this would not be ſufficient to ſupport a Title to an Eſtate, certainly it can never be thought ſufficient to deprive a man of Life, Honour, Eſtate, and all.

My Lords, I am not the only Man that has been or may be falſely accuſed; God knows how ſoon the misfortune of a Falſe Accuſation may fall to the Lot of any of your Lordſhips; I pray God it never may, but ſince that may happen, I queſtion not, but your Lordſhips will be very cautious, how by an eaſy Credulity you give incouragement to ſuch a wickedneſs: For Knights of the Poſt will not end in my Tryal if they proſper in their Villany, and perhaps it may come home to ſome of your Lordſhips, if ſuch practices be incouraged, as I cannot but firmly believe they will not.

My Lords, the Eyes of all the Nation are upon your Proceedings this day; Nay I may ſay, your Lordſhips are now Judging the cauſe of every man in England, that ſhall happen to come under like Circumſtances with my Self at any time hereafter: For accordingly as you judge of me now, juſt ſo will inferior Courts be directed to give their Judgments in like Caſes in time to come.

Your Lordſhips very well know, Blood once ſpilt can never be gathered up agen, and therefore unleſs the Caſe be very clear againſt me, you I am ſure will not hazard the ſhedding of my blood upon a doubtful Evidence: God Almighty is a God of Mercy and Equity: Our Law, the Law of England, is a Law of Equity and Mercy, and both God and the Law require from your Lordſhips Tenderneſs in all Caſes of Life and Death, and if it ſhould be indifferent, or but doubtful to your Lordſhips (which upon the Proofs that I have made, I cannot believe it can be) whether I am innocent or guilty, both God and the Law require you to acquit me.

My Lords, I leave my Self, my Cauſe and all the Conſequences of it with your Lordſhips; And I pray the All-Wiſe the Almighty God direct you in your Determination.

Lord High Steward. Have you any thing more to ſay, My Lord?

Lord Delamere. No, My Lord.

Lord High Steward. Then Mr. Attorney, and you that are of the Kings Council, What have you to ſay more?

Mr. Soll. General. May it pleaſe your Grace, and you my Noble Lords the Peers of my Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar.

The Evidence that hath been given againſt this Noble Lord is of two Natures, part of it is poſitive Proof, and part is circumſtantial, and though it be allowed that there muſt be two Witneſſes in Caſes of Treaſon, and that Circumſtances tho never ſo ſtrong, and ſufficient to fortify one poſitive Proof, do not nor can make a ſecond poſitive Witneſs; Yet I crave leave to ſay, that there may be Circumſtances ſo ſtrong and cogent, ſo violent and neceſſary to fortify a poſitive Teſtimony, that will in Law amount to make a ſecond Witneſs ſuch as the Law requires.

My Lords, I do not ſay every Circumſtance will do it, but ſuch as is neceſſarily and violently tending to the ſame thing that was poſitively proved. As for Example,

If a Man comes and Swears againſt another that he ſaid he will go immediately and kill the King, and another Man that did not hear thoſe words, comes and teſtifies his lying in wait, that circumſtance of lying in wait, that was an action indifferent in it ſelf, yet, when applyed to the poſitive Proof, will be a ſecond Witneſs to ſatisfie the Law, which requires two Witneſſes in Treaſon.

I muſt confeſs, my Lords, when we will make Circumſtances to be a ſecond Evidence they muſt be ſuch as are neceſſarily tending to fortifie the poſitive Evidence that was given by the ſingle Witneſs: Now whether that be ſo in this Caſe, I muſt, as becomes me, leave to your Lordſhips Conſideration: It is not my buſineſs to carry the Evidence further than it will go, and I am ſure it is not my duty to let it loſe any of its weight; and if it have not that force it ought to have, I ſhould be to blame, as not having done what belongs to me to do: I will therefore ſtate the Fact to your Lordſhips plainly as it ſtands upon the Proof, and ſubmit the whole to your Lordſhips Determination.

My Lords, Our poſitive Proof with which I crave leave to begin, is but by one ſingle Witneſs, and that is Saxon, and his Evidence is this, that being in Cheſhire where he lives, he was ſent for about the 3*d* or 4*th* of June laſt to my Lord Delamere's Houſe at Mere, and there he was brought into a lower Room, where he ſaw my Lord Delamere, Sir Robert Cotton, and Mr. Crew Offley: That my Lord Delamere told him he had received a Meſſage lately by one Jones, that was ſent from the Duke of Monmouth, whereby he underſtood that the Duke would ſpeedily be in England, and that they muſt provide Men and Arms to aſſiſt him when he came; That he was a Man recommended to them by my Lord Brandon, and that upon his recommendation they had thought fit to intruſt him in the matter, and withal told him, they were to raiſe 40000 l. and 10000 Men in that County: He tells you likewiſe, theſe Gentlemen gave him 11 Guineas and 5 l. in Silver to go of an Errand for them to the Duke of Monmouth, which he undertook to do, and hired a Horſe to that purpoſe.

This, my Lords, is the poſitive Proof, and this, I muſt acknowledge, ſtanding ſingle and by it ſelf, will make but one Witneſs; but whether the Circumſtances that have been offered to your Lordſhips by the other Witneſſes, be ſuch violent Circumſtances as neceſſarily tend to fortifie and ſupport that poſitive Evidence, and ſo will ſupply the defect of a ſecond Witneſs, is the next queſtion that I come to conſider, and I ſhall take them into conſideration in the ſame order that the Evidence was delivered.

The firſt Step, my Lords, that was made as to any Evidence that toucheth this Noble Lord at the Bar, was what was teſtified by my Lord Gray, for as to the other part of the Evidence that related to the Conſpiracy in general, I need not trouble your Lordſhips with the repetition of it (that there was ſuch an one is notoriouſly known) but I ſay that part of the Evidence in his Hiſtory of the Conſpiracy, which my Lord Gray brought home to my Lord Delamere was this,

That upon the firſt Meetings and Conſultations, it was reſolved upon, That the Duke of Monmouth ſhould go into Cheſhire to make an Intereſt there, and among the Perſons that he was directed to go to, and to apply to for advice there, as Perſons fit to be truſted, this Noble Lord was one.

That upon the Duke of Monmouth's Return out of Cheſhire, he did give his Confederates here in Town an Account, how well he had been received, and that he liked all things very well there: This my Lords is the firſt Circumſtance that has been offered to you, to ſhew that he had a Confidence in my Lord Delamere, as a Principal Support of his Deſigns at that very time.

The next thing that we offer, is this Meſſage of Jones's, and for that, our Evidence has fully and plainly made it out to your Lordſhips, that Jones did go over into Holland, and his Buſineſs there was an Errand from Diſney and Major Wildman, and the Confederates here. The effect of his Meſſage was, That it was their Opinion, That the Duke of Monmouth ſhould go for Scotland and joyn with my Lord Argyle; but upon the Receipt of the Meſſage, he being angry, ſaid, it was too late for ſuch a Meſſage now, and he would come into England, for he was ready to Sail, and thereupon he did ſend this ſame Jones back again into England upon a Meſſage, to inform the Lords and others of his Party, among whom my Lord Delamere was one, that he would have them betake themſelves into their ſeveral Countries, and not ſtay to be taken or clap'd up here, for that, he did underſtand, was the deſign; and this Meſſage was delivered in Writing (now that the Duke of Monmouth did write a Note and give it to Jones, is verified by my Lord Gray's Teſtimony too) and this Sealed up, and he was not to open it till he came to Sea, and when he did open it, he found it containing a Signification of the Place where he was to Land and where he was to Rendezvouz which was Taunton, and who were the Perſons that were to have Notice of it, among whoſe Names we find my Lord Delamere's to be one; but he likewiſe tells you, he was not the Man that was to carry the Meſſage to theſe Perſons, but he was to deliver it to Matthews or Wildman, and they were to tranſmit it to the other Perſons.

He tells you likewiſe, that when he came to Town, which was the 27*th* of May, he met neither with Matthews nor Major Wildman; whereupon being at a loſs what he ſhould do with his Meſſage, for want of thoſe other Perſons, he acquainted Diſney, that was Executed, with his Errand, who promiſed to take care that it ſhould be delivered.

This, my Lords, is all Jones's Evidence, for Jones does not ſay that he himſelf acquainted, or that Diſney did acquaint my Lord Delamere with the Meſſage.

But here my Lords, is the main Circumſtance that renders the matter ſuſpicious, That very Night that Jones came to Town, and Diſney being acquainted with the Meſſage, had undertaken to get it delivered, does my Lord Delamere at Ten of the Clock at Night go out of Town, in the Company of two Friends under the Diſguiſe of the Name of Brown, and a Bye Road, and ſo goes down to his own Houſe in Cheſhire; This I ſay, is the Circumſtance that renders the thing ſuſpicious.

Now my Lords, if we do prove by ſuch ſufficient Evidence, as may make the matter manifeſt to you, that my Lord Delamere had Notice of Jones's Meſſage (for upon that Point the Caſe will turn, whether he had Notice ſuch a Meſſage was brought, that ſuch things were in agitation, ſuch Preparations made, and that they were all to go into the Country) then I ſay, his going down is a violent Preſumption, he had an intent to comply with the Meſſage, and joyn in the Deſign.

But now, my Lords, comes the Queſtion, the main Queſtion, How is it made out that he had Notice, Jones brought ſuch a Meſſage?

Jones indeed, my Lords, does not ſay that he himſelf imparted it to him, or that Diſney told him he had Communicated it, but I think there is another Witneſs, and that is Storey, who ſaith, that Brand, one that knew of the Meſſage, did acquaint him, that my Lord had received it at the Coffee-Houſe, and that Night went out of Town.

It is true my Lords, this is but a Hear-ſay, but that which followed being matter of Fact, my Lord's going out of Town that Night, ſo late in the Night, and in ſuch an unuſual ſuſpicious manner, gives more Credit to the Relation, than a bare Hear-ſay could have of it ſelf.

For unleſs there be ſome good account given of my Lords thus going out of Town, it is a kind of neceſſary Preſumption, that he was acquainted with the Meſſage, part of which was, that he ſhould go out of Town; and if ſo, it can have no other Conſtruction, with Submiſſion, than to be in purſuance of, and complying with the Directions that that Meſſage brought him from the Duke of Monmouth.

My Lords, to carry this a little further, there were two Witneſſes produced that went out of Town with him; they ſeem indeed unwillingly to give their Evidence, but I ſhall faithfully repeat what Teſtimony they gave: Their Names were Vaux and Edlin.

Vaux he ſaith he met my Lord Delamere at the Rummer-Tavern in Queen-ſtreet the 26*th* day of May, which was the day before Jones came to Town, and that then he appointed to go out of Town the next day, which was the 27*th*, and accordingly he did go.

Edlin he ſaith, he met Vaux at the Cuſtom-Houſe upon the 27*th* of May in the Morning, and being deſired by him to go with him out of Town he did ſo, and there was with him a Gentleman whoſe Name was Brown, and who now appears to be my Lord Delamere; they went in Company with him as far as Hitchin, where they left him upon Thurſday the 28th at Noon.

This Evidence is produced to ſhew, that my Lord did go out of Town at that time, and in that manner as has been alledged, and that theſe Perſons went with him to conduct him a private way that he ſhould not go the common Road. Your Lordſhips will conſider what Anſwer hath been given to this, and what account my Lord Delamere has given of himſelf.

Another thing my Lords that renders this matter ſuſpicious, is the Name which my Lord was pleaſed to aſſume to diſguiſe himſelf by, it being a Name by which the Party uſe to call call my Lord in their Diſcourſes of him; and to prove that, we have likewiſe produced two Witneſſes, Babington and Paunceford.

Babington, he ſays, That in their Conſultations there were Diſcourſes of my Lord Delamere under the Name of Brown, and once at a Tavern when my Lord Delamere was named by one in the Company, he was preſently catched up for it, and replied to, You mean Mr. Brown; and ſo it ſeems that was the Canting Name under which they diſcourſed of my Lord Delamere.

The other Witneſs Paunceford, he tells you, That being at Diſney's Houſe, and concerned with him in the Printing the late Duke of Monmouth's Declarations (for the printing of which, Diſney was Executed) one Lock came for ſome of thoſe Declarations for Mr. Brown, and they were to be ſent into Cheſhire: ſo that though your Lordſhips obſerve the Witneſs ſaith, ſome body elſe was called by the Name of Brown, yet you have had no account given you, that there was any other Brown in Cheſhire.

It is true indeed, my Lords, that theſe are only things that Diſney ſaid, and Lock ſaid; But I muſt take leave to ſay, it is very ſuſpicious, that if my Lord went out of Town into Cheſhire under the Name of Brown, and ſome Perſons ſhall on the behalf of Brown come for Declarations to be ſent into Cheſhire, and my Lord commonly in that Party go by the Name of Brown, that thoſe Declarations were for my Lord, and that will be a great Evidence of his Correſpondence with Monmouth.

But I confeſs, my Lords, all this while our Proof is Circumſtantial, and indeed there is no poſitive Proof but that of Saxon, and in him our Proof muſt center, for without him I muſt acknowledge nothing that has been offered will be Proof againſt my Lord upon this Indictment, for bare Circumſtances and bare Suſpicions will be no Proof againſt any Man, but ſuch as are violent and neceſſary, and thoſe joyned to a poſitive Proof, ſuch as the Law requires.

Now then, my Lords, I come to the Conſideration of what weight and ſtreſs is to be laid upon this poſitive Evidence of Saxon: And here I muſt confeſs there are objections made to this Teſtimony, to which I cannot readily give an Anſwer; for Saxon has Sworn, that he was there at ſuch a time, and that he was ſent for and entertain'd as a Perſon recommended by my Lord Brandon, as fit to be intruſted with the Secret, and capable of being imployed to ſtir up the Country, in order to the proſecution of a Deſign they had on foot to raiſe a Rebellion, and he does Charge Sir Robert Cotton and Mr. Crew Offley to have been there at the ſame time.

The Evidence, my Lord, that has been produced to falſifie this poſitive Witneſs, in the Point of Sir Robert Cotton's being there, has been by or five or ſix Witneſſes, who teſtifie Sir Robert Cotton's being in Town, and not not elſewhere from the 10th of April to the latter end of July; and I do not ſee what we have to ſay in anſwer to their Teſtimony; I muſt agree the Proof to be full in that Point, and if the Evidence they give be true, I cannot ſay that Saxon's Evidence can be true in that Point.

Likewiſe as to Mr. Offley, Sir Willoughby Aſton and others have teſtified, that he was not at my Lord Delamere's at the time Saxon ſpeaks of: For he gives you an account where he was every day from the 26th of May to the 4th of June, and his own Servants bring him to his own Houſe, upon the 4th of June in the Evening, which is quite another way than from Sir Willoughby Aſton's to my Lord Delamere's; If this likewiſe be true, what Saxon ſays cannot be true, I muſt agree to it.

There is another thing that is offered on my Lord Delamere's part, that he was himſelf in Town at that time that Saxon ſays he was at Mere; But here indeed the matter ſeems to be a little more ſtrange and dubious, that my Lord ſhould make ſo much haſt down, as to go out late at Night, and ſo cautiouſly as to go by a wrong Name, and yet to ride to Town again the Poſt-way to be here juſt the 3d of June, when Saxon ſwears he was in Cheſhire.

I muſt confeſs there is the Proof of his two Brothers that ſay, they ſaw him in Town the 3d and 4th of June: There is likewiſe ſome account given of his going out of Town, that it was upon a Meſſage received from his Mother; that his Child in the Country was Sick, and indeed he did go a By-way and change his Name, for fear of a Warrant in a Meſſengers Hands that was out againſt him to apprehend him.

Now, my Lords, I do not hear any thing that has been offered, that there was any ſuch Warrant, or any diſcourſe to ground that apprehenſion upon; my Lord had the firſt and only apprehenſion of a Warrant; but upon what Reaſons he himſelf beſt knows: This apprehenſion made him go out of Town ſo privately, he ſays, becauſe he would not be prevented of ſeeing his ſick Child.

But how comes it to paſs that my Lord makes ſuch a ſpeedy Return? By the Proofs it appears he did not get there till Sunday Night, and upon the Tueſday Morning comes Poſt for London.

The account that he gives of that, is this, his haſt was to ſee another Child, that was here ſick in Town: For he had received an expreſs from his Wife upon the Monday to acquaint him, that the Coaſt was clear, and there was no Warrant out againſt him, but if he intended to ſee his Child alive, he muſt make haſt up to Town; and accordingly upon the Tueſday Morning early he ſets out, and upon the Wedneſday in the Evening is here in Town again.

But, with ſubmiſſion, my Lords, there is no good Account given by this noble Lord, what reaſon there was for ſo many Poſt-Journeys backward and forward, as, had been teſtified, he to have made within a very little compaſs of time; for beſides this of his return Poſt upon the 2d of June, there is only an Anſwer given to one of the reſt, which is, that of the 5th of May, when he ſaith he went to take poſſeſſion of the Land that he held by a Leaſe then renewed to him by the Biſhop, which being of ſome Value and Conſideration to his Lordſhip, and the Biſhop being ſick, he thought it neceſſary to go down Poſt himſelf, and would not be content to receive Livery by Attornment. This is the only anſwer that is given to all thoſe times of his riding Poſt that have been given in Evidence.

Theſe are matters of Suſpicion that are offered to your Lordſhips, but I confeſs matters of Suſpicion only, unleſs clear, poſitive, probable Proof be joyned with them, will not weigh with your Lordſhips to convict a Man of High-Treaſon where two Witneſſes are required. But whether theſe matters of Suſpicion be ſuch violent and neceſſary Preſumptions as tend to fortifie the positive Testimony, I must leave that to the Consideration of your Lordships.

L. H. Steward. You do not call any more Witnesses then I perceive.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, it has not been usual of late, for those who have sate in the place where I now am, upon those Occasions to give your Lordships any trouble in repeating or observing upon the Evidence: In this Case the Evidence that hath been given has been very long, and it would be too great a Presumption in me, should I have any manner of doubt in the least, that either your Lordships have not well observed it, or the learned Council for the King have been defective in collecting or remarking upon it, so as to need my Assistance.

But my Lords, I confess there is something I cannot omit taking notice of, not for your Lordships sakes, but for the sake of this numerous and great Auditory, that one Mistake in point of Law might not go unrectified, which seemed to be urged with some earnestness by the Noble Lord at the Bar, that there is a necessity in point of Law, that there should be two positive Witnesses to convict a Man of Treason.

He seemed to lay a great stress upon that, but certainly his Lordship is under a great mistake, as to the Law in that Point; for without all doubt, what was urged in answer to this Objection by that learned Gentleman that concluded for the King, is true, There may be such other substantial Circumstances joyned to one Positive Testimony, that, by the Opinion of all the Judges of England, several times has been adjudged and held to be a sufficient Proof.

As for the purpose, in this Case, suppose your Lordships, upon the Evidence that has been given here this day, should believe Saxon swears true, who is a positive Witness, and shall then likewise believe that there was that Circumstance of Jones's coming over from Holland with such a Message upon the 27th of May (which is directly sworn in Evidence, you are the Judges of that Evidence) and what the other Witnesses have sworn likewise, and is not denied by my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, that he went out of Town that Night, changed his Name, and went an indirect By-Road, certainly these Circumstances if your Lordships be satisfied he went for that purpose do necessarily knit the positive Testimony of Saxon, and amount to a second Witness.

That is, if Saxon's positive Testimony be true, then suppose all these Circumstances that gave the Jealousie do make up a strong Presumption to join with the positive Evidence of Saxon, then you have two Witnesses as the Law requires, especially if the answer given by the Prisoner to those Circumstances be not sufficient (as the slender account he gives of his so frequent Journeys in so short a compass of time) but that there still remains some Suspicion; I could have wished indeed, that matter might have been made somewhat more clear; that no shadow of Suspicion might remain.

Your Lordships are Judges: And if you do not believe the Testimony of Saxon, whose Testimony hath been so positively contradicted by divers Witnesses of Quality, the Prisoner ought to be acquitted of this Indictment: if your Lordships please, you may go together and consider of it.

Lords. Ay, withdraw, withdraw.

Then the Peers withdrew in their order according to their Precedency, with the Serjeant at Arms before them.

L. H. Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, take your Prisoner from the Bar.

The Prisoner was taken into the little Room appointed for him at the Entrance into the Court.

The Peers staid out about half an hour, and then returned in the same Order that they went out in, and seated themselves in their places as before.

Cl. Crown. Serjeant at Arms, take the Appearance of the Peers. Lawrence Earl of Rochester Lord High Treasurer of England.

He stood up uncovered and answered.

Lord Treasurer. Here.

And so did all the rest.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, are you agreed of your Verdict?

Lords. Yes.

The Lord High Steward took their Verdict Seriatim, beginning with the puisne Peer in this manner:

L. H. Steward. How say you my Lord Churchill, is Henry Baron of Delamere guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted and hath been Arraigned, or not guilty?

The Lord Churchill stood up uncovered, and laying his Hand on his Breast answered,

Lord Churchill. Not guilty upon my Honour.

And so did all the rest of the Peers.

L. H. Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower, bring your Prisoner to the Bar.

The Prisoner was brought again to the Bar.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Delamere, I am to acquaint you that my Noble Lords your Peers, having considered of the Evidence that hath been given, both against you and for you, after they were withdrawn, have returned and agreed of their Verdict, and by that Verdict have unanimously declared, that you are not guilty of the High-Treason, whereof you have been indicted, and this day Arraigned, and therefore I must discharge you of it.

L. Delamere. May it please your Grace, I shall pray to Almighty God, that he will please to give me a Heart to be Thankful to him for his Mercy, and my Lords for their Justice; and I pray God deliver their Lordships, and all honest Men, from wicked and malitious, lying and false Testimony; I pray God bless His Majesty and long may he Reign.

L. H. Steward. And I pray God continue to him his Loyal Peers, and all other his Loyal Subjects.

Cl. Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. Oyes. My Lord High-Steward of England, his Grace straightly willeth and commandeth all manner of Persons here present to depart hence in God's Peace and the Kings, for his Grace my Lord High Steward of England now dissolves his Commission.

God save the King.

At which words his Grace taking the white Staff from the Usher of the Black Rod, held it over his own Head and broke it in two: Thereby dissolving the Court.

The

Proceedings againſt the Lord Biſhop of London, in the Council Chamber at White-hall, by the Lords Commiſſioners appointed by His Majeſty to inſpect Eccleſiaſtical Affairs. 2 Jac. 2. 1686.

The King's Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion.

Lord Chief Juſtice of the Pleas, before Us to be holden, Aſſigned,* Greeting. We for divers good, weighty and neceſſary Cauſes and Conſiderations, Us hereunto eſpecially moving, of Our meer Motion and certain Knowledge, by force and virtue of our Supream Authority and Prerogative Royal, do Aſſign, Name, and Authorize by theſe Our Letters-Patent, under the Great Seal of England, You the ſaid Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Lord Chancellor of England, Lord High Treaſurer of England, Lord Preſident of Our Council, Lord Biſhop of Dureſme, Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Our Chief Juſtice aforeſaid, or any Three or more of you, whereof You the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, from time to time, and at all times during Our Pleaſure, to Exerciſe, Uſe, Occupy and Execute under Us all manner of Juriſdictions, Privileges, and Prehominencies in any wiſe touching or concerning any Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdictions, within this Our Realm of England, and Dominion of Wales, and to viſit, reform, redreſs, order, correct and amend all ſuch Abuſes, Offences, Contempts, and Enormities whatſoever, which by the Spiritual or Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this Our Realm can or may lawfully be reformed, redreſſed, corrected, reſtrained, or amended, to the Pleaſure of Almighty God, and increaſe of virtue and the Conſervation of the Peace and Unity of this Realm. And we do hereby give and grant unto you, or any Three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, thus by us named, aſſigned, authorized and appointed, by force of our ſupream Authority and Prerogative Royal, full Power and Authority, from time to time, and at all times during our Pleaſure, under us to exerciſe, uſe and execute all the Premiſes, according to the tenor and effect of theſe our Letters-Patents, any matter or cauſe to the contrary, in any wiſe notwithſtanding. And we do by theſe Preſents give full Power and Authority unto you, or any Three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, by all lawful ways or means from time to time hereafter during our Pleaſure, to enquire of all Offences, Contempts, Tranſgreſſions, and Miſdemeanours done and committed, and hereafter to be done and committed, contrary to the Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this our Realm, in any County, City, Borough, or other place or places exempt or not exempted, within this our Realm of England, and Dominion of Wales; and of all and every Offender or Offenders therein, and them and every of them to order, correct, reform, and puniſh, by cenſure of the Church. And alſo we do give and grant full power and authority unto you, or any Three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellor to be one, in like manner as aforeſaid, from time to time, and at all times during our Pleaſure, to enquire of, ſearch out, and call before you all and every Eccleſiaſtical Perſon or Perſons, of what degree or dignity ſoever, as ſhall offend in any of the particulars before-mentioned, and them, and every of them to correct, and puniſh for ſuch their misbehaviours and miſdemeanours, by ſuſpending or depriving them from all Promotions Eccleſiaſtical, and from all Functions in the Church, and to inflict ſuch other Puniſhments or Cenſures upon them, according to the Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this Realm. And further we do give full Power and Authority unto you, or any three or more of you as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, by Virtue hereof, and in like Manner and Form as is aforeſaid, to enquire, hear, determine, and puniſh all Inceſt, Adulteries, Fornications, Outrages, Misbehaviours, and diſorders in Marriage, and all other Grievances, great Crimes or Offences which are puniſhable, or reformable by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws of this our Realm, committed or done or hereafter to be committed or done, in any place exempt or not exempt, within this our Realm, according to the Tenor of the Eccleſiaſtical Laws in that behalf: Granting you, or any three or more of you as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, full Power and Authority to order and award ſuch Puniſhment to every ſuch Offender, by Cenſures of the Church, or other lawful Ways, as is aforeſaid; and further we do give full Power and Authority unto you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, all and every Offender and Offenders in any of the Premiſes, and alſo all ſuch, as by you, or any three or more of you as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one,

one, ſhall ſeem to be ſuſpected Perſons in any of the Premiſes, and them to examine, touching every or any of the Premiſes which you ſhall object againſt them; and to proceed againſt them, and every of them, as the nature and quality of the Offence, or ſuſpicion in that behalf ſhall require. And alſo to call all ſuch Witneſſes, or any other Perſon or Perſons that can inform you concerning any of the Premiſes, as you, or any three or more of you as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, and them, and every of them, to examine upon their corporal Oaths, for the better tryal and opening of the Truth of the Premiſes, or any part thereof. And if you, or any three or more of you as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, ſhall find any Perſon or Perſons whatſoever obſtinate or diſobedient in their Appearance before you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, at your Calling and Commandment, or elſe not in obeying, or in not accompliſhing your Orders, Decrees and Commandments, or any thing touching the Premiſes or any part thereof, or any other Branch or Clauſe contained in this Commiſſion, that then you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, ſhall have full Power and Authority to puniſh the ſame Perſon and Perſons ſo offending, by Excommunication, Suſpenſion, Deprivation, or other Cenſures Eccleſiaſtical; and when any Perſons ſhall be convented or proſecuted before you as aforeſaid, for any of the Cauſes above expreſſed, at the inſtance and ſuit of any Perſon proſecuting the Offence in that behalf, that then you, or any three or more of you as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, ſhall have full Power and Authority to award ſuch Coſts and Expences of the Suit, as well to and againſt the Party, as ſhall prefer or proſecute the ſaid Offence, as to and againſt any Party or Parties that ſhall be convented according as their Cauſes ſhall require, and to you in Juſtice ſhall be thought reaſonable. And further our Will and Pleaſure is, That you aſſume our Well beloved Subject William Bridgman Eſquire, one of the Clerks of our Council, or his ſufficient Deputy or Deputies in that behalf to be your Regiſter, whom we do by theſe Preſents depute to that Effect, for the Regiſtring of all your Acts, Decrees and Proceedings, by virtue of this our Commiſſion; and that in like manner, you, or any three or more of you, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, by your Diſcretions ſhall appoint one or more Meſſenger or Meſſengers, or other Officer or Officers neceſſary and convenient to attend upon you for any Service in this behalf. Our Will and expreſs Commandment alſo is, That there ſhall be two Paper Books indented and made, the one to remain with the ſaid Regiſter, or his ſufficient Deputy or Deputies, the other with ſuch Perſon, and in ſuch places as you the ſaid Commiſſioners, or any Three or more of you, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, ſhall in your Diſcretions think moſt fit and meet; in both which Books ſhall be fairly entred all the Acts, Decrees and Proceedings made or to be made, by virtue of this our Commiſſion. And whereas our Univerſities of Oxford and Cambridge, and divers Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Colledges, Grammar Schools, and other Eccleſiaſtical Incorporations, have been erected, founded, and endowed by ſeveral of our Progenitors, Kings and Queens of this Realm, and ſome other by the Charity and Bounty of ſome of their Subjects, as well within our Univerſities as other Parts and Places, the Ordinances, Rules and Statutes whereof be either imbeſled, loſt, corrupted, or altogether imperfect. We do therefore give full Power and Authority to you, or any Five or more of you, of whom we will you the forenamed the Lord Chancellour always to be one, to cauſe and command in our Name, all and ſingular the Ordinances, Rules and Statutes of our ſaid Univerſities, and all and every Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Colleges, Grammar Schools, and other Eccleſiaſtical Incorporations, together with their ſeveral Letters Patents, and other Writings, touching or in any wiſe concerning their ſeveral Erections and Foundations, to be brought and exhibited before you, or any five or more of you, as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, willing, commanding, and authorizing of you, or any five or more of you, as aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, upon the exhibiting, and upon diligent and deliberate view, ſearch and Examination of the ſaid Statutes, Rules and Ordinances, Letters Patents and Writings as is aforeſaid, the ſame to correct, amend and alter; and alſo where no Statutes are extant, in all or any of the aforeſaid Caſes, to deviſe and ſet down ſuch good Orders and Statutes as you, or any five or more of you, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, ſhall think meet and convenient, to be by us confirmed, ratified, allowed, and ſet forth, for the better order and rule of the ſaid Univerſities, Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Colleges and Grammar Schools, Erections and Foundations, and the Poſſeſſions and Revenues of the ſame, and as may beſt tend to the Honour of Almighty God, increaſe of Virtue, Learning and Unity in the ſaid Places, and the publick Weal and Tranquillity of this our Realm. Moreover, our Will, Pleaſure and Commandment is, that you our ſaid Commiſſioners, and every of you, ſhall diligently and faithfully execute this our Commiſſion, and every part and branch thereof, in manner and form aforeſaid, and according to the true meaning thereof, notwithſtanding any Appellation, Provocation, Priviledge or Exemption in that behalf, to be had, made, pretended, or alledged by any Perſon or Perſons reſident or dwelling in any place or places exempt, or not exempt, within this our Realm; any Law, Statutes, Proclamations or Grants, Privileges or Ordinances, which be, or may ſeem contrary to the Premiſes notwithſtanding. And for the better Credit, and more manifeſt notice of your ſo doing, in the Execution of this our Commiſſion, our Pleaſure and Commandment is, That to your Letters miſſive, Proceſſes, Decrees, Orders and Judgments, for or by you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, to be awarded, ſent forth, had, made, decreed, given or pronounced, at ſuch certain publick places as ſhall be appointed by you, or by any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid, for the due Execution of this our Commiſſion, you or ſome three or more of you as is aforeſaid, whereof you the ſaid Lord Chancellour to be one, ſhall cauſe to be put and fixed a Seal, ingraven with a Roſe and Crown, and the Letter J. and figure 2 before, and the Letter R. after the ſame, with a Ring or Circumference about the ſame Seal, containing as followeth, Sigillum Commiſſionariorum Regiæ Majeſtatis ad Cauſas Eccleſiaſticas. Finally, We will and command all ſingular other our Miniſters and Subjects in all and every place and places, exempt and not exempt, within our Realm of England, and Dominion of Wales, upon any Knowledge or Requeſt from you, or any three or more of you, as is aforeſaid to them, or any of them, given or made, to be aiding, helping or aſſiſting unto your Commandments, in and for the due executing your Precepts, Letters and other Proceſſes, requiſite in and for the due Executing of this our Commiſſion, as they and every of them tender our Pleaſure, and will anſwer the contrary at their utmoſt Perils. In Witneſs, &c.

The King's Letter.

Dated Monday, July the 14*th*.
Delivered at Fulham on Thursday, being the 17th of the same June in the Afternoon, by Mr. Atterbury the Messenger.

James R.

Right Reverend Father in God, We greet you well. Whereas We have been inform'd, and are fully satisfied, that Dr. John Sharp, Rector of the Parish Church of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, and in your Dioceſs, notwithstanding our late Letter to the most Reverend Fathers in God the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, and our Directions concerning Preachers, given at our Court at Whitehall, the 15*th of* March, 1685. in the second year of our Reign; yet he, the said Dr. John Sharp, in Contempt of the said Orders, hath in some of the Sermons he hath since preached, presumed to make unbecoming Reflections, and to utter such Expressions as were not fit or proper for him; endeavouring thereby to beget in the Minds of his Hearers an Evil Opinion of Us and Our Government, by insinuating Fears and Jealousies to dispose them to Discontent, and to lead them into Disobedience and Rebellion. These are therefore to require and command you immediately upon Receipt hereof, forthwith to Suspend him from further Preaching in any Parish-Church or Chappel in your Dioceſs, until he has given Us Satisfaction, and Our further Pleasure be known herein. And for so doing this shall be your Warrant: And so We bid you heartily Farewel.

Given at our Court at Windsor, the 14th Day of June, 1686. in the Second Year of Our Reign.

By His Majesties Command.

Sunderland.

The Bishop of London's Answer.

Sent by Dr. Sharp to the Earl of Sunderland, then at Hampton-Court, upon Friday June 18. who could have no Answer.

To the Right Honourable the Earl of Sunderland, Lord President, &c.

My Lord,

I Always have, and shall count it my Duty to obey the King in whatever Commands he lays upon me, that I can perform with a safe Conscience: But in this, I humbly conceive, I am obliged to proceed according to Law; and therefore it is impossible for me to comply; because, tho' His Majesty commands me only to execute his Pleasure, yet in the Capacity I am to do it, I must Act as a Judge; and your Lordship knows no Judge condemns any Man before he has Knowledge of the Cause, and has cited the Party. However, I sent to Mr. Dean, and acquainted him with His Majesties Displeasure, whom I find so ready to give all Reasonable Satisfaction, that I have thought fit to make him the Bearer of this Answer, from him that will never be unfaithful to the King, nor otherwise than,

My Lord, your Lordships
most humble Servant,
H. London.

On Sunday after Dr. Sharp carried a Petition to Windsor, which was not admitted to be Read. Which is as follows.

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty,

The Humble Petition of John Sharp, Clerk.

Sheweth,

That nothing is so afflictive to Your Petitioner, as his Unhappiness to have incurred your Majesties Displeasure, which he is so sensible of, that ever since your Majesty was pleased to give notice of it, he hath forborn all publick Exercise of his Function, and still continues so to do.

Your Petitioner can with great Sincerity affirm, that ever since he hath been a Preacher, he hath faithfully endeavoured to do the best Service he could in his Place and Station, as well to the late King, your Royal Brother, as your Majesty, both by preaching and otherwise.

And so far he hath always been from venting any thing in the Pulpit tending to Schism or Faction, or any way to the Disturbance of your Majesties Government, that he hath upon all Occasions in his Sermons, to the utmost of his Power, set himself against all sorts of Doctrines and Principles that look that way: And this he is so well assured of, that he cannot but apprehend that his Sermons have been very much misrepresented to Your Majesty.

But if in any Sermon of his, any Words or Expressions have unwarily slipt from him, that have been capable of such Constructions, as to give Your Majesty Cause of Offence, as he solemnly professes he had no ill Intention in those Words or Expressions, so he is very sorry for them, and resolves for the future to be so careful in the Discharge of his Duty, that Your Majesty shall have Reason to believe him to be Your most faithful Subject.

And therefore he earnestly Prayeth, that Your Majesty out of Your Royal Grace and Clemency, would be pleased to lay aside the Displeasure You have conceived against Your Humble Petitioner, and restore him to that Favour which the rest of the Clergy enjoy under Your Majesties Gracious Government.

So shall Your Petitioner ever Pray, &c.

In

In the Council-Chamber at White-Hall, &c.

Mercurii 4 die Auguſti, 1686.

Preſent in Council, Lord Chancellour, Lord Biſhop of Durham, Lord Treaſurer, Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, Lord Preſident, Lord Chief Juſtice Herbert.

Upon my Lord Biſhops appearing before them, according to a Summons ſent unto him, the Lord Chancellour Jeffreyes began, viz.

Lord Chancellour. MY Lord Biſhop of London, the Lords here preſent have received Orders from the King to inſpect all Eccleſiaſtical Affairs and Perſons; and he hath commanded us to cite you before us; and I deſire you would give a poſitive and direct anſwer to it: What was the reaſon you did not ſuſpend Dr. Sharp, when the King commanded, and ſent you expreſs Order ſo to do, and told you what it was for, viz. for Preaching Seditiouſly, and againſt the Government.

Lord Biſhop. I have received ſuch an Order; and if what was done in that affair was done amiſs, and contrary to my Duty, it was my ignorance and inadvertency, and not a wilful fault: I have been always ready to expreſs my duty to his Majeſty, and if in this particular I have not complyed, it was becauſe, as I was told, I could not. I was not ſo ſhallow as to go on my own Head, but took the beſt advice I could get: I conſulted thoſe whoſe buſineſs it is more perfectly to underſtand theſe proceedings, all told me I could not legally do it, but by way of Citation and hearing him.

Lord Chanc. Ignorantia Juris non excuſat; you ought to have known the Law, and it was a wonder you did not: The King is to be obey'd, and if you have any reaſon to ſhew in this particular, we are ready to hear you.

Lord Biſhop. I knew not what would be laid to my Charge, and therefore was not provided to make ſuch a Defence as I might have done; but if your Lordſhips will give me a Copy of your Commiſſion, and a Copy of my Charge, and allow me ſome time, I will endeavour to give your Lordſhips ſatisfaction.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, I would not miſ-interpret your Words, but ſhall deſire you to explain their meaning: If by deſiring a Copy of our Commiſſion, you deſign to quarrel with the Juriſdiction and Legality of the Court, I have another anſwer for you; but till I know your meaning here my anſwer is, that no Copy of the Commiſſion can be granted, and it is unreaſonable to deſire it, it is upon Record, all the Coffee-houſes have it for a penny a piece, and I doubt not but your Lordſhip has ſeen it.

Lord Biſhop. I have never ſeen it; nor have I deſir'd it for ſuch ends to diſpute the legality of it: But your Lordſhip knows it is a thing altogether new to this Generation, and it may be ſomething may be found in it whereby I may be inſtructed and directed in my anſwer, and behaviour in the matter: But, my Lord, if I may not have a Copy of it, will your Lordſhips pleaſe I may either read, or hear it read.

Lord Chanc. That is a thing I cannot grant of my ſelf, I muſt ask my Lords Commiſſioners Judgment; and if you will be pleaſed to withdraw you ſhall hear it.

The Biſhop and all the Company withdrew for a quarter of an Hour, then returning, the Lord Chancellour ſaid,

My Lord, all the Commiſſioners are of opinion that your Requeſt is not to be granted, and that it is unreaſonable: Might every one that appears here challenge the ſight of our Commiſſion, and the Reading of it, all our time will be ſpent in the Reading, and we have ſomething elſe to do.

The Proceedings of Courts in this kind are never by Libel and Articles: ſapientem ſuccinctim ore tenus, by word of Mouth only; and it is a ſhort Queſtion I ask, Why you did not obey the King?

Lord Biſhop. It is a ſhort Queſtion, but requires more words to Anſwer it. I pray your Lordſhips to conſider I a am Peer, a Biſhop, and have a Publick Truſt, though unworthy, under a Publick Character; and I would behave my ſelf as becomes one in theſe Capacities.

Lord Chanc. We know very well your Lordſhips Quality and Character, and are willing to ſhew all due reſpect to your Lordſhip, but yet we muſt have a due regard for the King and Government too: His Majeſty muſt not be neglected.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I ſuppoſe there is no Appeal from the Court; and when a Man is to be Condemned at one Bar, and is in danger of being knockt down at one blow, you would think it unreaſonable he ſhould not have ſome time to make his Defence.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, I ſuppoſe their Lordſhips will be willing to grant ſome time: I pray what time does your Lordſhip deſire?

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, it is the Aſſize time, and moſt of the Council, upon ſome occaſion or other, (either buſineſs or diverſion) are in the Country: I pray you, my Lord, I may have till the beginning of the Term.

Lord Chanc. Hah! That's unreaſonable: His Majeſties buſineſs cannot admit of ſuch delays; methinks a Week ſhould be enough: What ſay your Lordſhips, Is not a Week enough?

The Commiſſioners being asked, ſignified by the Chancellour that a Week was enough.

Lord Biſhop. Since your Lordſhip will grant no more, I will ask no more.

Lord Chanc. Adjourn until Monday next, the Ninth of Auguſt, 1686.

Upon

Upon the Tenth day his Lordſhip came, attended with his Nephew, the Earl of Northampton, his Brother in Law Sir John Nicholas, and his Brother Sir Francis Compton, &c.

There being preſent in Council the ſame as before in the ſame Proceedings.

Lord Chanc. MY Lord, we are here to hear your Reaſons.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I have loſt no time for preparing my Anſwer, but am not ſo ready as I might have been, becauſe I could not light of the Commiſſion your Lordſhip told me was upon Record, and in every Coffee-houſe, but imployed a whole Week to ſearch for it, and could not have a ſight of it until laſt Night; if your Lordſhip doubts the truth of this, I have the perſon ready to make Oath here of it.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, you are a perſon of Honour, and we will not queſtion the truth of what you ſay, there needs no Oath: But my Lord I muſt tell you, that we will not admit of any quarrelling with our Commiſſion, we are well aſſured of the legality of it, otherwiſe we would not be ſuch Fools as to ſit here.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I have other Reaſons why I deſire a ſight of your Commiſſion; it may be it may not reach me, being a Peer and a Biſhop; and it may be it may not reach this particular Caſe, and therefore I deſire a ſight of it, in regard I could not ſee it until the laſt Night. I have not had time to take advice what to anſwer; if your Lordſhip will not be ſatisfied, I muſt give ſuch an anſwer as I have prepared, but it is my deſire to have longer time for it.

Lord Chanc. Is this all you have to ſay?

Lord Biſhop. This is the firſt thing: I do not deſire to prolong the time, the neceſſity of the Caſe requiring it, the Council being out of Town in whom I think to confide.

Lord Chanc. If your Lordſhip will withdraw, we will give you an Anſwer.

He withdrew for a quarter of an Hour.

L. C. My Lord, as I formerly told you, we will not endure any quarrelling at our Commiſſion; it will be an odd thing in us to give you time to pick holes in it, but we are willing to pay all due reſpect to your Lordſhip: What time do you require?

Lord Biſhop. I ſhall ſubmit to your Lordſhips; but I hope a fortnight will not be unreaſonable.

Lord Chanc. Agreed: You ſhall have it until to Morrow fortnight in the Morning.

To which my Lord Chancellour added,

L.C. My Lord, when I told you our Commiſſion was to be ſeen in every Coffee-houſe, I did not ſpeak with any deſign to reflect on your Lordſhip, as if you were a hunter of Coffee-houſes. I abhorr'd the thoughts of it, and intended no more by it but that it was common in the Town.

Note, When the Biſhop ſpake concerning the Commiſſion, Sir Thomas Clarges ſpake with a loud Voice, ſaying, Well put, well put; my Lord ſpeaks nothing but truth. There was alſo another Gentleman, Sir John Lowther, of Lincolnſhire, who as he was coming away in the Crowd, ſaid, There are ſome who have repreſented me as a Papiſt, but the contrary ſhall appear; I will not be afraid, nor aſhamed, to Vindicate my Lord Biſhops Cauſe, before the Commiſſioners themſelves.

Tueſday, Auguſt 1686.

There being preſent in Council the ſame as in the former proceedings: The Lord Biſhop attending, the proceedings were as follow.

Lord Chanc. MY Lord, we are now ready to hear your Lordſhips Anſwer.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, notwithſtanding the time hath been very ſhort, conſidering the weightineſs of the matter, and the abſence of many of the Learned Council, I have taken what advice I could, and have conſulted thoſe that are very Learned in the Laws. I hope there will be no Miſ-interpretation of my Words, I do not intend any thing which is derogatory to the Kings Supremacy; that is undutiful to His Majeſty, or Diſreſpectful to your Lordſhips. My Council tells me, that your proceedings in this Court, are directly contrary to the Statute Law, and are here to plead it if your Lordſhips will admit them.

Lord Chanc. We will neither hear your Lordſhip nor your Council in the matter; we are ſufficiently ſatisfied of the legality of our Commiſſion, as we often told you.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I am a Biſhop of the Church of England, and by all the Law in the Chriſtian Church, in all Ages, and by the particular Law of this Land, I am, in caſe of offence, to be Tryed by my Metropolitan and Suffragans; I hope your Lordſhip will not deny the Right and Priviledge of Chriſtian Biſhops.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, you know our proceedings are according to what has been done formerly, and that we have an Original Juriſdiction; this is ſtill queſtioning our Court.

Lord Biſhop. It is partly.

Lord Chanc. Nay, it is abſolutely ſo.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I hope you will interpret every thing in your Commiſſion in favour of the Perſon that is brought before you: I humbly conceive that your Commiſſion doth not extend to the Crimes laid to my Charge, for you are to cenſure faults which are committed: This that I am accuſed of, was before the Date of your Commiſſion.

Lord Chanc. I confeſs there is ſuch a Clauſe, but thoſe are general Clauſes that take in things that are paſt, as well as thoſe that are to come; hath your Lordſhip any thing more?

Lord Biſhop. My Lords, proteſting in my own Right, to the Laws of the Realm, as a Subject, and the Rights and Priviledges of the Church, as a Biſhop, I ſhall, with your Lordſhips leave, give you my anſwer.

Which was accepted; and the Biſhop withdrew, and left Dr. Sharp's Petition, which the King had refuſed to accept.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, we have read the Paper.

Lord Biſhop. My Lords, it is Dr. Sharp's Petition to the King.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, be pleas'd to take it again, we are not concerned in it; will you pleaſe that your Lordſhips anſwer be read?

Lord Biſhop. Yes, if your Lordſhip pleaſe. My Lord, I have this to ſay further, What I did in in this matter was Juriſperitorum Concilio. I conſulted my Council, who is the Judge of my Courts, as well as others; and the Law ſays, That what is done by the advice of Council, ſhall not be interpreted to be done maliciouſly, or obſtinately. The Law, in this Caſe, requires, that if a Prince require a Judge to execute an order, which is not agreeable to the Law, he ſhall Reſcribere & Reclamare Principi: Now, my Lord, I conceived I acted in this according to my Duty, for I wrote back to my Lord Preſident, in as becoming words as I could; and acquainted him, that an Order to ſuſpend before Citation and hearing the Perſon, is againſt Law, and expected his Majeſties further pleaſure.

In the next place, my Lords, I did in effect what the King commanded to be done, for I adviſed Dr. Sharp to forbear Preaching till His Majeſty had received Satisfaction concerning him; and accordingly he hath forborn in my Dioceſs.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, will you have your Paper read?

Lord Biſhop. Yes, if your Lordſhip pleaſe.

Which contained the Kings Letter, and the Biſhops anſwer thereto.

Lord Chanc. Hath your Lordſhip any more to ſay?

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I deſire your Lordſhip would hear my Council, by whom you may have more clear and full Satisfaction concerning what I have ſaid.

Whereupon the Biſhop was deſired to withdraw, and after half an Hour, he and his Council were called in; who were Drs. Oldiſh, Hodges, Price, and Newton. A brief Account of what they pleaded.

Dr. Oldiſh. My Lord, the queſtion before your Lordſhip, is, whether the Biſhop of London hath been Diſobedient to the Kings Command; concerning which it muſt be conſidered, Firſt, What was commanded to be done.

Secondly, What he did in Obedience to it.

Thirdly, What Judgment ought to have been given by him.

It is apparent by the Letter, that the King did not take cognizance of the Cauſe, for the Words are (being inform'd) that Dr. Sharp, &c. ſo that it could not be an abſolute Suſpenſion, for that ſuppoſeth a Proof of the Crime charged upon him: Then let us conſider the Words themſelves:

That you Suſpend him from Preaching. Now, my Lords, we have no ſuch thing in our Laws, ſo that the meaning muſt be Silencing of him. Where there is an abſolute Suſpenſion, there ought to be Citation, form of Proceeding, Judgment and Decree; to act otherwiſe is contrary to the Law of God, of Nature, of all Nations in all Ages, and was never known in the World.

Lord Chanc. I am loth to Interrupt you, but I muſt tell you, this is an unneceſſary Harrangue; we know that it was not an abſolute Suſpenſion, but the Queſtion is, Whether the Biſhop could Suſpend him from Preaching?

Dr. Oldiſh. Then, my Lords, I have gained another Point; if it were only Silencing him, the Queſtion is, Whether the Biſhop did not execute the Kings Commands? I think he did, and in ſuch a Method as is obſerved in our Courts.

When any eminent Perſon is accuſed, the Judges ſend to him by a Letter, and if he appears and complys with the Judges order, the Law is ſatisfied.

Judicium redditur in invitum non involentem: The Biſhop did ſend for Dr. Sharp, ſhewed him the Kings Letter, adviſed him not to Preach till the King had received Satisfaction; in which he promiſed to obſerve his Lordſhips command, and hath not Preached to this day, ſo that His Majeſties command was in effect fulfilled. My Lord, there is the like proceeding in the Common Law, for if an Attorney takes a Mans Word for his appearance, there lyes no Action againſt the Attorney.

Lord Chanc. Cujus contrarium: There lyes an Action of Eſcape againſt the Attorney——

Dr. Hodges. My Lords, the matter of fact hath been ſtated, and the Queſtion is, Whether the Biſhop hath been diſobedient to the Kings Command? It appears that he has not: Becauſe upon the receipt of his Majeſties Letter, he requir'd the Doctor not to Preach, and he hath obeyed him in that which the King commanded. To ſuſpend him the Biſhop could not do, the Act of Suſpenſion is a Judicial Act: The King writes to him as to a Biſhop, to ſuſpend as a Biſhop and as a Judge, which could not be done without the hearing of the Cauſe. If the Prince ſends to a Perſon that is not a Judge, that is only in a Miniſterial Office, that Office is to execute his Commands: But when the King commands a Judge, he commands him to act as a Judge. This is no light matter the Doctor is accus'd of; it is for Preaching Sedition and Rebellion, which requires a ſevere Cenſure. And if the Biſhop, as a Judge, had Suſpended him, he had begun at the wrong end, for this had been Judgment before Proceſs: In this Cauſe there ought to have been a Citation, our Books giving many Inſtances which would be too tedious to your Lordſhips——I will give this one: The Emperours proceedings againſt the King of Sicily, upon Information which he had received; and giving him no Citation, the King appealed to the Pope, who declared the Proceedings to be void; and that it was againſt the Law of Nature, which is above all poſitive Laws, to paſs Sentence before Citation. This is the method of proceeding before all Courts, and I humbly conceive it is, and will be, the method of this Court; for otherwiſe, the Biſhop need not to have been cited before you. The Biſhop has done what was his Duty, he was bound to return his Reaſon to the King, why he did not do that which he commanded, and to expect his further anſwer; which was done. I affirm, that if a Prince, or a Pope, command a thing which is not lawful, it is the Duty of a Judge Reſcribere; which is all he can do, Quoting his Author.

Dr. Price. The Queſtion is ut ſupra: A Citation is Jure Gentium, and can never be taken away by any poſitive Command or Law whatſoever: The Biſhop hath obeyed the King ſo far, as that he could not Reſcribe, and expecting His Majeſties further pleaſure. If the Biſhop could have Suſpended him, it muſt have been done in Agnes; but in regard it was only ſilencing him, which was requir'd, it might be done in a private Room: The advice of a Biſhop is in ſome ſence an admonition, which is a Judicial dicial Act, and this was given by a Biſhop, and obeyed by the Doctor.

Dr. Newton. My Lord, the Queſtion is not ut ſupra, the Biſhop hath not been diſobedient. As in Nature no Man can be deſired to do that which is impoſſible, ſo no Man can be obliged to do an unlawful Act. (Id non fit quod non legitime fit.) This Rule obliges all Men, at all places, and at all times. The charge againſt Dr. Sharp is of a very high Nature, and he deſired to be heard before he was condemned.

My Lords, the Biſhops are Cuſtodes Canonum, and therefore muſt not break them themſelves: I affirm, the Biſhop was ſo far from being Diſobedient, that he was Obedient to the King: For where he did Reſcribere, and heard not the further pleaſure of the King returned, he ought to conclude, the King was ſatisfied with what he had written, according to his Duty, and the King had altered his Commands. A Citation, as your Lordſhips have heard, is according to all Laws, in all Places, in all Judicial Acts; there is ſomething to be done according to Law, and ſomewhat according to the Diſcretion of the Judges, and for that Reaſon as well as theſe, the Offenders ought to be cited before him; that which was in the Biſhops power to do he hath done, and it was in effect what the King commanded to be done.

Lord Biſhop. If through miſtake I have erred in any circumſtance, I am ready to beg His Majeſties Pardon, and ſhall be ready to make any reparation I am capable.

The Biſhop withdrew for half an Hour, then was called in.

Lord Chanc. We will be here again on Wedneſday next, and I deſire your Lordſhip to be here again about 10 in the Forenoon.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I deſire that care may be taken concerning the Minutes which are taken by the Clerks of what hath paſſed, and that I may not be miſrepreſented to the King by the miſtake of the Pen-man.

Lord Chanc. My Lord, you need not fear it; I hope you have a better Opinion of us; there ſhall be no advantage taken by them or us.

Biſhop Rocb. There ſhall be no advantage taken, but all imaginable care taken concerning it.

Note, When the Councellors were Pleading, Dr. Pinfold, the Kings Advocate, ſtood at the Chancellors Elbow and took Notes; by which it was expected that he ſhould make a Reply, but he ſaid nothing; and 'tis ſuppoſed that he ſtaid with the Council, when the Biſhop withdrew, and gave them Reaſons for his ſilence.

Die Lunæ, 6. Septemb. 1686.

There being preſent in Council the ſame as in the former proceedings.

Lord MY Lord, pray ſit down: You were deſired to appear this day to hear your Sentence, which (to prevent miſtake) we have ordered to be put in writing.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, may I have leave to ſpeak before Sentence is read?

Lord Chanc. My Lord, we have heard you and your Council already.

Then the following Inſtrument whereby the Biſhop of London was Suſpended, was, by the Commiſſioners order, read by Mr. Bridgman, their Lordſhips Regiſter.

By His Majeſties Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

WHereas Henry, Lord Biſhop of London, hath been convened before us, for his Diſobedience, and other his Attempts, mentioned in the Proceedings of this Cauſe; and the ſaid Biſhop being fully heard thereupon, We have thought fit, upon mature conſideration of the matter, to proceed to this Our definitive Sentence, Declaring, Decreeing and Pronouncing, that the ſaid Henry, Lord Biſhop of London, ſhall for his ſaid Diſobedience and Contempt be Suſpended, during his Majeſties Pleaſure; and accordingly, we do by theſe preſents, Suſpend him the ſaid Lord Biſhop of London, Peremptorily Admoniſhing and Requiring him hereby, to abſtain from the Function and Execution of his Epiſcopal Office; and from all Epiſcopal and other Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, during the ſaid Suſpenſion, upon pain of Deprivation and Removal from his Biſhoprick.

Given under our Hand and Seal the 6th day of September, 1686. Sealed with the Seal of the Court, C. J. 2. Roſe and Crown with this Inſcription round it, viz. Sigillum Commiſſionariorum Regiæ Majeſtatis ad Cauſas Eccleſiaſticas.

Signed by no body at all.

Some days ſince one of the Meſſengers attending the Court, deliver'd to the Dean of St. Pauls, a Warrant, the Tenour whereof followeth:

By His Majeſties Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

WHereas We have given Sentence of Suſpenſion againſt Henry Lord Biſhop of London, a Copy of which Sentence, under our Seal, is hereunto affixed. We have thought fit, and do hereby enjoyn and require you, to cauſe the ſaid Sentence to be affixt on the Door of that Chapter Houſe, and on the place now called the South Door of the ſaid Church; to the end that publick Notice may be taken of the ſaid Suſpenſion. And you are to certifie us, under your Common Seal, of the due Execution of what is hereby required.

At our Council Chamber at White Hall, on Tueſday the 28. of this Inſtant September, at 11 of the Clock in the Morning. Given under our Seal this Day of September, 1686. Sealed with the ſame Seal as the Sentence, but no Perſons Names: Subſcribed to the Dean and Chapter of London.

The Proceedings againſt the Vice-Chancellour and Univerſity of Cambridge. 3 Jac. 2.

ON the 9*th*. day of February, being Aſhwedneſday, came a Letter under His Majeſties Signet Manual, dated the 7*th* of the ſame Month; the ſubſtance whereof, was, That hearing much in Commendation of one Alban Francis a Benedictine, the King was pleaſed to command the Univerſity, that they ſhould admit him to the degree of Maſter of Arts, without adminiſtring to him any Oath or Oaths whatſoever, any Law or Statute to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding, with which His Majeſty was graciouſly pleas'd to diſpence in the behalf of the ſaid Alban Francis. On Monday the 21*ſt* the Vice Chancellour having ſummon'd a Congregation, read His Majeſties Letter, purporting as before, and ſuperſcrib'd to our Truſty and well beloved Vice Chancellour of our Univerſity of Cambridge, to be communicated to the Senate there; on the Reading whereof the Senate, who made the beſt advantage they could of the Vice Chancellours delay in order to get advice, reſolved to teſtifie their common and almoſt unanimous ſence of the thing, and in a matter of ſuch conſequence and novel matter to interpoſe; accordingly there was a Paper, it is commonly call'd a Grace, the original Paper whereof I have ſeen drawn up in order to be put to the Vote of the Houſe after the ordinary and uſual way; but the conſtitution of that Body being ſuch, that this muſt then of neceſſity have been firſt propoſed to what we call the Head, which conſiſts of ſix Perſons, each of which has an Arbitary Voice and Power, upon diſlike to ſtop any proceedings finally, and hinder it being put to the Houſe at all; this method was laid aſide as impracticable upon that occaſion, becauſe Mr. Baſſet a declar'd Roman Catholick, and one that had openly aſſerted Mr. Francis's Cauſe, hapned to be one of the ſix who compoſe the Head for this Year; it was therefore preſum'd, with great appearance of Reaſon, that he would put a bar to the proceedings, ſo the Grace not being ſuffered to be offered to the Houſe, the Senates ſence could never have been fully and particularly known thereupon.

This conſideration conſtrain'd them to the uſe of another courſe, which was, without the formality of a Suffrage, voluntarily to teſtifie their concurrence with the Vice Chancellour, and adviſe him to forbear the admitting Mr. Francis till the King had been Petitioned to revoke his Mandate; as ſoon as the Letter came to Town, the Vice Chancellour wrote a Letter to the Duke of Albemarle our Chancellour, to beg his Interceſſion with the King, which he returned word was tryed with none effect, but poſſibly ſuch a body as the Univerſity concurring and ſigning a Petition, if that could be admitted, might prove better and more Succeſsful. Now perhaps if every ſingle Man preſent to the number perhaps of 150 or 200 ſhould Addreſs in Perſon to the Vice Chancellour, this might look tumultuary, and it was thought the more quiet, decent, and reſpectful way to ſend up their ſenſe by Meſſengers from each Houſe; to this purpoſe, Dr. Smoult Profeſſour of Caſuiſtical Divinity, was made choice of by the Non Regents, and Mr. Norris Fellow of Trinity Colledge by the Regents. The ſubſtance of what they delivered, was, That the Houſe thought the admiſſion of Mr. Francis without the uſual Oaths, illegal and unſafe, and for that reaſon advis'd the King might be petition'd, in the doing which they were ready to joyn and make it their act. The Opinions were given freely to the two Meſſengers of each Houſe, and the thing was ſo unanimouſly approved of, that the only Perſons taking notice of it, were three Papiſts, and one or two beſides; afterwards there was a Gentleman admitted Doctor of Phyſick, having firſt taken the Oaths; and the Eſquire Beadles and Regiſters were ſent to let Mr. Francis know, that the Senate were ready to admit him alſo, provided that he would Swear as the Laws appointed; but he refuſed, inſiſting on the Kings diſpenſation: and this was the buſineſs of the firſt Meeting about this matter.

Immediately upon the Congregations breaking up, Mr. Francis took Horſe for London, to repreſent at White-Hall what had been done, and the ſame Afternoon the Heads met in the Conſiſtory, to conſult what Letters ſhould be ſent, and to whom; they agreed upon one to the Duke of Albemarle, and another to the Earl of Sunderland, being the Secretary of State, through whoſe hands the Mandate paſſed: An Eſquire Beadle was diſpatched preſently to London, who after having waited on the Duke of Albemarle, endeavoured ſeveral times to get acceſs to the Lord Sunderland, but could not; at laſt having ſent in his Letter, the main whereof was a moſt humble Submiſſion to His Majeſty, with very Solemn and unfeigned Proteſtations, that what was now done, proceeded from no Principle of Diſobedience and Stubbornneſs, but a Conſcientious ſence of our Obligation to Laws and Oaths, and a reſpectful intimation that we were ready to Petition the King that it might be admitted, but not daring to approach Him without ſome ſignifications, that it would be acceptable, we applyed our ſelves to his Lordſhip, deſiring him to do the Univerſity the favour to mediate for them, &c. He was diſmiſſed without any particular anſwer; within a few days came a ſecond Letter, dated February 24*th*, which by reaſon of the Aſſizes and ſome other publick buſineſs intervening, was not read in the Senate till Thurſday March the 11*th*; the Univerſity and the Vice Chancellour in the mean time received a Letter, wherein they found great Satisfaction by the Opinions of ſome Eminent Lawyers, who concurr'd in the approbation of what was already done, and for the future, could adviſe no better courſe than humbly to repreſent the Caſe to His Majeſty, and entreat him not to think amiſs of ſo Loyal a Body, as always the Univerſity has ſhewed her ſelf to be. The ſecond Letter being read the day aforeſaid, which was exactly the ſame as the former, excepting only the addition of a Clauſe, to do it at our own Peril: The Senate proceeded as before, to adviſe the Vice Chancellour to ſome expedient Form repreſenting the Caſe fully and clearly to the King, as well with reſpect to the illegality of ſuch admiſſion, as the many ill conſequences that were likely to enſue from it; this the Non Regent Houſe did by Mr. Billers, Fellow of St. John's Colledge (the Publick Orator) and Mr. Newton Fellow of Trinity Colledge (the Mathematical Profeſſor) the Regent Houſe by Mr. Henry Finch, Son to the late Lord Chancellour, Mr. Burton of St. John's Colledge, and Mr. William Bowles of Kings Colledge; all which was done without the leaſt hurry, or irregularity, without ſo much as asking an Opinion, but every Man went and gave it quietly and of his own accord, ſo that no manner of inducement was put upon any one to declare himſelf in the buſineſs, but what proceeded meerly from his own Conſcience, and a due ſenſe of things. Another large Letter being prepared for the Duke of Albemarle, wherein was every thing that could be thought of to prevail with His Majeſty, and one likewiſe ſhorter and leſs particular to the Earl of Sunderland; that very Afternoon Mr. Braddock Fellow of Catherine Hall, and Mr. Stanhope of Kings Colledge, were deſired by the Vice Chancellour to go to London with theſe Letters, and other Inſtructions to apply themſelves to ſeveral Perſons of Quality and Character, that they would joyn forces, and think it a common cauſe, for ſo addreſſing to the King, the ſucceſs would be more probable, and the honour done to the Univerſity the greater. Sunday, March the 13*th*, the two Gentlemen waited on the Duke of Albemarle their Chancellour, who received them with all the goodneſs in the World, with aſſurance, that notwithſtanding he had waited on the King before, and knew his Inclinations; nay, though he had been received with ſomething of diſpleaſure, yet conſidering the relation he bore us, he would make another attempt, and thought himſelf oblig'd to omit no endeavours for the Univerſities Safety and Advantage. Monday the 14*th* in the Evening the Duke of Albemarle waited on the King, and in the paſſage towards the Bedchamber, took the two Cambridge Gentlemen into the Anti-chamber, that they might be introduc'd if occaſion were; the King, on the Duke of Albemarle's acquainting him with the affair, told him he had not then leiſure to talk, but he commanded the Letter, which the Vice Chancellour ſent to the Duke of Albemarle, with which in his hands he paſſed through the Rooms; and making that Evening a viſit to the Queen Dowager, gave the Duke no further opportunity of knowing his pleaſure at that time. At the Dukes Return from the Inner Room, the Gentlemen deſired him to give leave that they might uſe his Name to procure an eaſie admittance to the Earl of Sunderland; for they reſolved to deliver their Letter to no hands but his own, if that might be: The Duke immediately ſent one of his Gentlemen of the Horſe to one of the Lord Sunderland's Secretaries, making it his deſire that Mr. Braddock and his Companion might ſee the Earl, who accordingly appointed them to attend next Morning, and then conducted them to the Earl of Sunderland's Bed-ſide, who took the Letter, and after ſome further Application to him by Word of Mouth, he promiſed to acquaint His Majeſty, and tell them his Pleaſure. On Thurſday, at that time when Mr. Braddock, and Mr. Stanhope came, the account they received was only this, That the King had ſeen the Vice-Chancellours Letter, and was offended at the proceedings of the Univerſity, and would take care very ſhortly to give a further anſwer.

Saturday the 9*th*. of April, Mr. Atterbury came down with a Summons from the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners to this effect; That whereas complaint to them was made againſt the Vice Chancellour and Senate of Cambridge, for having refuſed to comply with His Majeſties Royal Letters in behalf of Mr. Francis; they were therefore commanded to appear, the Vice Chancellour in Perſon, the Senate by themſelves, and their Deputies before the Lords Commiſſioners, in the Council Chamber the 21*ſt*. of April, to anſwer to ſuch things as ſhall be objected againſt them in His Majeſties behalf upon the premiſes, &c. Monday April the 11*th*. a Senate was called, and perſons nominated to repreſent the Univerſity; together with the Vice Chancellour, all which being unanimouſly approved by the Senate, they impowered them by an Inſtrument under the Common Seal, to anſwer in their behalf; and be their full Actors, Attorneys and Proctors, as to what ſhould ariſe from the Commiſſion upon the late Summons; and Mr. Atterbury having received private Inſtructions to ſtay, and cite every Man that was choſen perſonally: He came accordingly into the Senate Houſe, and Summon'd as many as were preſent, waiting on the reſt on a convenient time: The perſons deputed by the Senate to Repreſent and Act were theſe.

Dr. John Peachell, Vice Chancellour.
Dr. John Eacherd, Maſter of Catherine Hall.
Dr. Humphry Babington, Fellow of Trinity College.
Dr. Tho. Smoult, Fellow of St. John's College, and Profeſſour of Caſuiſtical Divinity.
Dr. Will. Cooke, Dr. of Civil Law, and Fellow of Jeſus College.
Mr. John Billers, Fellow of St. John's College, and the Publick Orator.
Mr. Iſaac Newton, Fellow of Trinity College, and Mathematical Profeſſor.
Mr. James Smith, Fellow of Queens College.
Mr. George Stanhope, Fellow of Kings College.

Thurſday, April the 21ſt, Council-Chamber. Commiſſioners preſent,

L. Chancellour Jeffreys, L. Biſhop of Durham.
L. Preſident Sunderland, L. Biſhop of Rocheſter.
L. Mulgrave, L. Ch. Juſtice Herbert.
Earl of Huntington.

L. Chancellour. IS Mr. Vice Chancellour here?—Which is he? He ſtanding over againſt the Lord Chancellour, bowed and ſhewed himſelf.

L. Chancellour. Is there any one come from the Senate to attend him?

Mr. Stanhope. Yes, my Lord, we are Eight of us here deputed by the Senate to anſwer what ſhall be objected againſt them, according to your Lordſhips Summons. (The noiſe and croud being being great, Mr. Bridgman the Regiſter, was forced to repeat that again to the Lord Chancellour.

L. Chancellour. Read the Summons.——Which was done.

L. Chancellour. Now Mr. Vice Chancellor what have you to ſay why you did not obey His Majeſties Command, in behalf of the Gentleman mention'd there?

Mr. Vice Chancellour. My Lord, you enquire of me why I did not admit Mr. Francis, according to the King's Letters?

L. Chancellour. Yes, that's the Queſtion I ask you.

Mr. Vice Chancellour. Is this the only Queſtion your Lordſhip is pleaſed to ask me?

L. Chancellour. Nay, Mr. Vice Chancellor, we will not Capitulate in the very beginning; pray anſwer the firſt, and then you ſhall know what we have to ſay more.

Mr. Vice Chancellour. It is but a little while ſince we met in Town, and this is a Queſtion of great Concern; I am not prepared to anſwer it on a ſudden.

L. Chancellor. Why, Mr. Vice Chancellour, my Lords ſpecified it in their Summons what would be queſtion'd, on purpoſe you ſhould not come unprepared; but it may be Mr. Vice-Chancellour did not attend ſufficiently to that part of the Summons, therefore let it be read to him once more —— which was done.

Lord Chanc. Now, Sir, you hear it is for refuſing to comply with the King's Commands.

Mr. Vice-Chanc. My Lords, I beg time to anſwer you; my Lords, I am a plain Man, not uſed to appear before ſuch an Honourable Aſſembly, and if I ſhould anſwer haſtily, it may be I might ſpeak ſomething indecent or unſafe, which I ſhould be afterwards ſorry for, therefore I beg leave, my Lords, to have time allowed us, for giving in ſuch anſwer, as may be both for our Safety and your Lordſhips Honour.

Lord Chanc. (Smiling) Why, Mr. Vice-Chancellour, as for your own Safety, my Lords are willing you ſhould take all the care you can, but for what concerns our Honour, do not you trouble your ſelf, we are able to conſult that without any Interpoſition of yours.

Mr. Vice-Chanc. My Lords, I beg your Pardon if I have ſaid any thing unbecoming, I mean only the Honour that is due to your Lordſhips Quality my Lord; and therefore being to anſwer before Perſons of Quality, I beg leave to do it with Council and in writing.

Lord Chanc. Well, withdraw a little, and my Lords will conſider of your Requeſt.

Then all the Company withdrew, and about three quarters of an hour after the Vice-Chancellour was ſent for into the Anti-Chamber, where Mr. Bridgeman told him the Lords Commiſſioners had given him time till Wedneſday next, till four in the Afternoon, and leave to put his Anſwer in writing and with Council; and by what Council he would.

When the Council had heard the Commiſſioners had granted it, they were ſomething ſurprized, and loath to move in the thing without a Rule of Court, therefore on Friday Morning Dr. Eacherd and Mr. Stanhope went to Mr. Bridgman's Office, to deſire ſuch an Order, or at leaſt a Copy of what had been ſaid to the Vice-Chancellour; but he told them he had no Power to give either: only he repeated the Words over again, for the Satisfaction of them and the Council, which was the ſame the Vice-Chancellour had related from his Mouth before.

Wedneſday, April 27. In the Council Chamber, Commiſſioners preſent as before.

ABout a quarter of an hour before the Lords met, Mr. Bridgman came to the Vice-Chancellour, and deſired to know of him whether he gave his anſwer in writing only, or whether any Council would appear to argue it; to which the Vice-Chancellour anſwered, that his Anſwer was drawing out in writing, and that he did not expect any Council there that day; Mr. Bridgman replyed, the Lords had commanded him to ask theſe Queſtions, and would expect to know ſo much before they began to proceed. When the Delegates were call'd in, the Lord Chancellour ſaid, Lord Chanc. Mr. Vice-Chancellour, the laſt time you were here you deſired time to put in your anſwer in writing, my Lords have indulged you ſo far, now where is your Anſwer?

Mr. Vice Chanc. My Lord, here it is——and gave it to Mr. Bridgman; who after a Whiſper put it round the Table.

Lord Chanc. Read it —— to Mr. Bridgman.

The Anſwer of the Univerſity and Senate of Cambridge, to the Queſtion: Why they did not admit Alban Francis to the Degree of Maſter of Arts in the ſame Univerſity, according to His Majeſties Mandatory Letters under His Signet Manual. The Vice Chancellour and Senate of Cambridge, for, and in behalf of themſelves, and the ſaid Univerſity, Say,

'THat by the Statute made Primo Eliz. and Entituled, An Act to reſtore to the Crown the Ancient Juriſdictions over the State Eccleſiaſtical and Spiritual, and aboliſhing Foreign Power repugnant to the ſame; It is enacted amongſt other things, That every Perſon that ſhall be promoted to any Degree of Learning in any Univerſity within this Kingdom, before he ſhall receive or take any ſuch Degree, ſhall before the Chancellour or Vice Chancellour of the Univerſity, take the Oath in the Statute mention'd and appointed; purporting, that he doth thereby teſtifie and declare in his Conſcience, that His Majeſty is the only ſupream Governour of this Realm, as well in all Spiritual and Eccleſiaſtical Things and Cauſes, as Temporal; That no Foreign State or Potentate, hath or ought to have any Juriſdiction, Superiority or Authority, Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual within this Realm; and that therefore he doth renounce and forſake all Foreign Juriſdiction and Authority, and promiſe to bear Faith and true Allegiance to the King, his Heirs and Succeſſors, and to his Power aſſiſt and defend all Juriſdictions and Authorities granted, united or annexed, to His Majeſties Imperial Crown of England. That by the Statute made 5th Elizabeth, Entituled, An Act for the Aſſurance of the Queen's Royal Prerogative, over all Eſtates and Subjects within Her Dominions, it is likewiſe Enacted, That every Perſon that ſhall be admitted to any Degree of Learning in any of the Univerſities, before he ſhall be allowed or ſuffered to take upon him ſuch Degree, ſhall take the aforemention'd Oath before ſuch Perſon or Perſons, as ſhall have

Authority

'Authority by common uſe to admit him to ſuch 'Degrees.

'That by the Statute made by His Majeſties 'Royal Grandfather King James the Iſt, in the '3d Year of His Reign, Entituled, An Act 'for the better Diſcovering and Repreſenting of Popiſh 'Recuſants, another Oath is commonly pre'ſcribed, the Oath of Obedience; by which 'Oath, is the Perſon that takes it among other 'things enjoyned to Swear, that His Majeſty 'is Lawful and Rightful King of this Realm, 'and all other His Dominions and Countries; 'and that the Pope neither of himſelf, or by 'any other means, hath Power or Authority to 'depoſe His Majeſty, or diſpoſe of Him, His 'Kingdoms or Dominions; or to authorize any 'Foreign Prince to invade him or them, or to 'diſcharge His Subjects from their Obedience or 'Allegiance to His Majeſty, or to give leave to 'bear Arms againſt Him; and that he with true 'Faith and Allegiance to His Majeſty, will de'fend Him to the utmoſt of his Power. And af'terwards, in the Statute made in the 9th Year 'of His Majeſties ſaid Royal Grandfather, Enti'tuled, An Act for Adminiſtring the Oath of Allegi'ance; in it is enacted, That the ſaid laſt menti'on'd Oath, ſhall be taken by the Vice Chancel'lour and Principal of Houſes in the Univerſity, 'in the Convocation before the Senior Maſters, and 'by every other Perſon that ſhall be permitted 'or promoted to any Degree in Schools, before 'the Vice Chancellour for the time being in the 'Congregation Houſe.

'That the Vice Chancellour, and every 'Member of the Senate have taken the ſaid 'Oath, and the Vice Chancellour and Senate 'are intruſted to put them in Execution in the 'ſaid Univerſity.

'That the Vice Chancellour by his Oath of 'Office has alſo ſworn duly to execute his Office 'according to the Laws, and cannot admit to 'any Degree without the Senate.

'That the ſaid Statutes were made for the Pre'ſervation of Doctrine and Religion, profeſſed 'by the Church of England, and eſtabliſhed by 'the Laws of this Realm, and of the Preroga'tive and rightful Power of His Majeſty; that 'upon the Receipt of His Majeſties Royal Let'ters Mandatory, the ſame were by the Vice 'Chancellour communicated to the Senate; 'and in order to the admitting the ſaid Alban 'Francis to the Degree of Maſter of Arts, 'the ſaid Oaths were offered to be Admini'ſtred to the ſaid Alban Francis, if he would 'take the ſame, but he refuſed.

'That the admitting him without the ſaid 'Oaths had been contrary to the ſaid Statutes, 'and a Breach of the Truſt in the Vice Chancel'lour and Senate repoſed, and a Violation of 'their Oaths, and therefore they could not ad'mit him to the ſaid Degree of Maſter of Arts; 'and by humble Application to His Sacred 'Majeſty, did, and now again do humbly deſire 'your Lordſhips to repreſent this their Caſe to 'His Majeſty, that they may not lye under His 'Majeſties Diſpleaſure upon any Miſapprehen'ſion thereof; But, whether your Lordſhips 'will as a Court take Cognizance of this Mat'ter, they humbly pray your Lordſhips Conſi'deration, ſince that the taking a Degree of 'Maſter of Arts in the Univerſity, or the ad'mitting and refuſing to ſuch a Degree, is not 'any cauſe or matter Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual, 'but of Lay and Temporal Cognizance.

'And they further offer to your Lordſhips, 'that in the Statute made in the 16th of the 'Reign of His Majeſties moſt Royal Father 'King Charles the Firſt, Entituled, An Act for 'repealing of the Branch of a Statute Primo Eliza'bethæ, concerning Commiſſioners for Cauſes Eccleſia'ſtical; and whereby the ſaid Branch is Repea'led; it is enacted, That no New Court 'ſhall be erected, ordained or appointed with'in this Realm, which ſhall or may have like 'Power, Juriſdiction or Authority, as the High 'Commiſſion Court then had or pretended to 'have; but that all and every ſuch Commiſſi'oners and Grants, and all Powers and Autho'rity granted or pretended to be granted there'by, ſhall be void and of none Effect, as in and 'by the ſaid Statutes more fully appears.

Which being read, my Lord Chancellour ſaid, Is it ſign'd?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes my Lord.

Lord Chancellour. Read their Names——— Which was done.

L. Chancellour. Well, have you any more to ſay?

Mr. Vice Chancellour. No my Lord, not at this time.

L. Chancellour. Then withdraw.

All the Company withdrew, and about an hour and a half after the Court roſe; and afterward Mr. Bridgman deſired to ſpeak with the Vice Chancellour and Delegates in the Council Chamber, to whom he ſaid, That their Lordſhips had commanded him to tell them, they put off all further Conſideration of this matter till Saturday come Sevennight, and then they expected their Attendance: Again Mr. Vice Chancellour asked him, if Council would be expected to plead on their Anſwer; he replyed their Lordſhips had given him no Commiſſion to ſay any thing to that. So they all withdrew.

Saturday May the 7th.

THis day it was publickly diſcourſed through the Town, that the Lords had received a new Commiſſion; and immediately Lawyers were conſulted whether it were proper to urge that at this Appearance: What could be gathered thereupon, was to this Effect: That it were a good Plea, if it could be well proved, for in receiving a new Commiſſion in the midſt of Proceſs, eſpecially, if there be any Alteration in it as to the extent of their Power, would at leaſt be a good Pretence to begin the whole Cauſe again and gain time; but that it was by no means ſafe to alledge the thing, for a flying Report is no Evidence: And if that Report were falſe, it might be a great Prejudice to them and their Cauſe.

Council-Chamber——Commiſſioners preſent as before.

L. Chanc. MR. Vice-Chancellour, the laſt time you were here, you gave in a Paper to my Lords, ſigned by your ſelf and ſeveral others coming from the Univerſity, which conſiſts of ſeveral parts; but there is one thing I muſt crave leave of my Lords to Diſcourſe you on, which concerns your ſelf: The Lords took notice that you alledge an Oath, that Oath it ſeems hindred you from obeying the King's Mandate——Pray what was the Oath?

Mr.

Mr. Vice-Chanc. My Lord, this is a new Queſtion which you were pleas'd not to put before, and I beg leave and time to anſwer it.

Lord-Chanc. Why, Mr. Vice-Chancellour, this requires no time; my Lords, I tell you, took notice of an Oath you pleaded for your ſelf, and now they deſire to know what the Oath is.

Mr. Vice-Chancellour. I beg I may not anſwer haſtily, but that your Lordſhips would let me know what Queſtions you would ask me, and let me anſwer them in writing and by Council.

Lord Chancellour. Why did you not conſult Council when you took your Oath? I am really concerned for the Univerſity of Cambridge, whereof I my ſelf was once a Member, that the Vice-Chancellour, who is the Head, and the Repreſentative of ſo learned a Body, ſhould come here before the King's Commiſſioners, and not be able to give an account of the Oath he acted by all this time, but deſires Council and time to tell him what the Oath is.

Dr. Cooke. My Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, I think I remember the Words of the Oath.

L. Chancellour. Nay, good Doctor, how came you, who never were Vice Chancellour, and ſo never took this Oath, to know it better than one that is Vice-Chancellour, and hath taken it?

Vice-Chancellour. I cannot call to mind the very Words of the Oath, but the ſubſtance of it is this, That I ſhould well and faithfully præſtare or adminiſtrare munus or Officium procancellarium.

L. Chancellour. Ay, Munus or Officium: Well, what then?

Vice-Chancellour. And my Lord, this Office I take to be ſtated by the Statutes of the Univerſity, and the Laws of the Land.

Lord Chanc. Well, and how long has this been the Vice Chancellours Oath?

Vice Ch. Indeed, my Lord, I am not able to tell you exactly.

Lord Ch. How long do you think? I will not tye you to any time.

Vice Ch. Ever ſince I knew what belonged to it; ever ſince I was Head of a Colledge.

Lord Ch. How long have you been Head of a Colledge?

Vice Chanc. Six or Seven Years, my Lord.

L. Ch. Have not other Vice Chancellours admitted to Degrees without Oaths, who have taken the Obligatory Oath as you have done?

Vice Ch. Indeed my Lord I cannot tell; I cannot remember every particular thing that has been done.

L. Ch. Well, becauſe we will keep cloſe the Queſtion, don't you remember any Maſter of Arts made without Oaths?

Dr. Cook. Not under the Quality of an Univerſity Noble Man, my Lord.

L. Ch. Nay, good Doctor, you never were Vice Chancellour yet. When you are, we may conſider you.

Vice Ch. The Anſwer to your Queſtion will depend upon our Univerſity Book and Records, and if you'll allow us time to conſult them, we can give your Lordſhip an Account.

L. Ch. Nay, look you Mr. Vice Chancellour, you have given in Anſwer in Writing already, and becauſe there is ſomething in that, my Lords would be further ſatisfied in, they have left it to me to ask you ſome Queſtions. I ask you therefore if you remember any Maſter of Arts, who hath been admitted heretofore without theſe Oaths?

Vice Ch. I cannot ſay I remember any, my Lord.

L. Ch. Did you never hear of one Dr. Lightfoot?

Vice Ch. I think, my Lord, I have heard of ſuch an one.

Dr. Cook. My Lord, I beg leave to ſpeak a few Words.

L. Ch. Well, Doctor, What is it you have to ſay?

Dr Cook. My Lord, Dr. Lightfoot did Subſcribe.

L. Ch. What Superſcription do you mean?

Dr. Cook: To the 39 Articles; and the firſt of them is the Kings Supremacy.

L. Ch. Superſcribing is Swearing, Doctor. But Mr. Vice Chancellour, how many have you admitted by Mandate?

Vice Ch. Never but one, my Lord, and he took the Oaths.

L. Ch. Do you never admit without Oaths them who have not ſuch particular Letters Patent from the King?

Mr. Stanhope. Never, my Lord: And as for Dr. Lightfoot, they were aware before of this particular Perſons being objected, and therefore provided an Anſwer to it.

Mr. Stanhope undertook it, becauſe the Books and Univerſity Papers had been committed to his Inſpection and Care: In Anſwer, had he been permitted to ſpeak, he had this to offer, That the Regiſter of Subſcribers was then in Court, and had a Paper ready in his Hands to be produced, where Dr. Lightfoot Subſcribed with his own Hands to the 39 Articles: The firſt whereof is the Kings Supremacy, and that he could not refuſe the Oath upon a Principle, becauſe the ſame muſt have hindred his Subſcription: And as a farther Proof he did Swear, they were ready to offer this, That two Gentlemen, Roman Catholicks, Servants to the Queen Dowager, did by Virtue of the ſame Letters from the King, at the time of his coming to Cambridge, deſire their Maſter of Arts Degree; their Names were Perara and Stevens. Theſe Gentlemen were Propoſed and Granted, but upon refuſal to Swear, not admitted: Of this, they could have produced, Firſt, A Teſtimony upon Oath of a Gentleman then in Court; and beſides that, the Univerſity Papers and Graces, which ſhew theſe Gentlemens Names, among the Perſons paſt in the Houſe, but wanting in the Liſt of Subſcribers and Commencers. After which they would have referred it to the Court, whether it was probable that the Univerſity ſhould admit one of the Queens Servants without Oaths, and yet refuſe two more, who had the ſame Title every way, becauſe they would not take the Oaths; but the Lord Chancellour would not hear him.

L. Ch. Nay, look you now, that young Gentleman expects to be Vice Chancellour too; when you are Sir, you may ſpeak, but till then it will become you to forbear. Mr. Vice Chancellour, When was it pray that you received the Kings Letters? the firſt I mean.

Vice Ch. I do not perfectly remember, my Lord, I can't call to mind the day of the Month.

L. Ch. When were they dated, do you know? (to Mr. Bridgman) My Lord pauſing.

Vice

Vice Ch. My Lord, I remember it was Aſh-Wedneſday.

L. Ch. And when was it theſe Letters were Publiſhed in the Senate?

Vice Ch. It was the Seven night after, my Lord.

L. Ch. What's the meaning of the delay, Mr. Vice Chancellour? the Kings buſineſs uſed to have a quicker diſpatch.

Vice Ch. It was a Novel thing, and I was willing to give my ſelf and others time to conſider on it.

L. Ch. But when you had read the Letters, why was not the Gentleman admitted?

Vice Ch. My Lord, the Senate ſent to me, to deſire me, that I would forbear admitting Mr. Francis, till I had Petitioned the King to revoke the Mandate.

L. Ch. Why does the King's Mandate uſed to be diſputed? Did you ever ſee a Mandate voted in the Houſe, whether it ſhould be obeyed or not?

Vice Ch. No, my Lord, uſually they are not; but the Houſe ſent to me to forbear, for they have not had any of this nature before.

L. Ch. Did you ever know any Mandates of the Kings refuſed by the Univerſity before?

Vice Ch. After ſome pauſe—— Yes, my Lord, ſeveral.

L. Ch. Pray, give us one inſtance.

Vice Ch. My Lord, one Tatnell.

L. Ch. When pray? How long was that ago?

Vice Ch. I cannot recollect juſt the time, but it was in His late Majeſties Reign; I believe, about fourteen or ſixteen Years ago.

L. Ch. How was that?

Vice Ch. My Lord, the Mandate was given to one Tatnell, a Non-conformiſt Miniſter, and he refuſed to Subſcribe and take the Oaths; whereupon my Lord, the Univerſity Petitioned the King, and repreſented the matter to him, and the King was pleaſed to recal his Mandate.

L. Ch. Mr. Vice Chancellour, had not you a Mandate for another Gentleman at the ſame time with this, which you refuſed?

Vice Ch. Yes, my Lord, it was to make a Gentleman Doctor of Phyſick.

L. Ch. And he was admitted upon it, was he not?

Vice Ch. Yes, my Lord.

L. Ch. Did the Senate Vote his Mandate?

Vice Ch. No, my Lord, they did not.

L. Ch. Why ſhould they interpoſe in the one and not in the other?

Vice Ch. They had no Diſpenſation, my Lord, for the Oath in it.

L. Ch. But however, if they did not Vote it, nor do any others of the Kings Letters, how do you know their Conſent?

Vice Ch. My Lord, it is preſumed upon their being ſilent, and offering nothing to the contrary.

L. Ch. Ay, we have a Proverb, Mr. Vice-Chancellour, Silence gives Conſent, but it ſeems he was admitted immediately, was he not, before you could know whether they conſented to both or no?

Vice Ch. No, my Lord, he was not admitted till the Houſe deſired me to forbear in Mr. Francis's Caſe.

L. Ch. But, as to this buſineſs of the Senate, deſiring you (my Lords) I hope you will Indulge me to ſpeak a little of that, for having been formerly a Member of that Univerſity my ſelf, I think I have ſome ſmall Remembrance of the manner of the Proceedings there: Pray, Mr. Vice-Chancellour, how was it that you knew their Minds in this Buſineſs?

Vice Chancellour. My Lord, the Houſe ſent up their Opinions.

L. Chancellour. How, pray? By whom?

Vice Chancellour. The Non-Regents by Dr. Smoult the firſt Day; and Mr. Billers the Orator, and Mr. Newton the Mathematical Profeſſour, my Lord, the ſecond Day.

L. Chancellour. By whom do you ſay the firſt Day?

Vice Chancellour. By Dr. Smoult, my Lord, from the Non-Regent Houſe, and Mr. Norris from the Regent Houſe.

L. Chancellour. Well: What ſaid theſe two to you?

Vice Chancellour. My Lord, I don't know the very Words, but it was to this Effect, That I ſhould forbear admitting Mr. Francis till the King was petitioned.

L. Chancellour. Is that Dr. Smoult in Court?

Vice Chancellour. Yes, my Lord, he is here—— then he ſhewed himſelf.

L. Chancellour. Come, Sir, What was it, I pray you, that you told the Vice Chancellour?

Dr. Smoult. I have forgot, my Lord, the Words, but it was to the ſame purpoſe the Vice Chancellour told you juſt now, That the Houſe deſired me to acquaint him they were petitioning, that the Mandate might be recalled.

L. Chancellour. And pray, Sir, who are you, that you ſhould be thought fit to repreſent a whole Houſe? Why ſhould they chooſe you rather than any Body elſe?

Dr. Smoult. My Lord, I ſuppoſe becauſe I was one of the Seniors.

L. Chancellour. One of the Seniors! If you come to that, why was not the very Senior choſen?

Dr. Smoult. I cannot tell, my Lord, they came to me.

Vice Chancellour. My Lord, he is one of our Profeſſors.

L Chancellour. Nay, when I ask you Queſtions they prompt you, and now you prompt them; but I muſt tell you Mr. Vice Chancellour, you ought to take an account of what is done in the Houſe your ſelf, and not from others.

Vice Chancellour. My place is at a great diſtance from the Non-Regent Houſe, and I could not ſee what was done there.

L. Chancellour. But ſhould you take the Senſe of a whole Houſe from one Man?

Vice Chancellour. He came and told me, my Lord, the Houſe was of that Opinion, and I thought I had no reaſon to queſtion what he ſaid.

L. Chancellour. How loud did he ſpeak when he told you this?

Vice Chancellour. Pretty loud my Lord.

L. Chancellour. Was it ſo loud that all the Houſe might hear it?

Vice Chancellour. No my Lord.

L. Chancellour. Did you ſend afterwards to enquire whether he had told you their Opinions true or not?

Vice Chancellour. No, my Lords, I confeſs I did not.

L. Chancellour. But how came this new way of giving Opinions, are not the Proctors uſually the Men that bring the Senſe of the Houſe to the Vice Chancellour?

Vice Chancellour. Not the Non-Regent, my Lord, they are not admitted into that Houſe, nor have at all to do there.

L. Chancellour. Have you any thing elſe to offer to my Lords?

Dr. Cook. My Lord, if the anſwer that we gave in the laſt day be not ſatisfactory, we deſire to have time allowed us to make a farther Defence, and to do it with Council.

L. Chancellour. Have you nothing to ſay beſides?

Dr. Cook. No my Lord.

L. Chancellour. Nor you Gentlemen?——then withdraw.

After the Vice Chancellour, and three or four of the Delegates were gone off, and the Croud was retiring, Mr. Billers, being a Perſon ingaged in carrying up the Senſe of the Houſe, would have informed the Court (who ſeemed under a Miſtake) more particularly of the Senates Proceedings; and how it came to paſs that the uſual way of Suffrages was impracticable at that time.

Mr. Billers. My Lords, I beg leave to ſpeak one Word.

L. Chancellour. Who are you?

Mr. Billers. My Name is Billers, my Lord.

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, he is one of the Gentlemen that ſign'd the Paper in which was the Anſwer.

Mr Billers. I am one of the Perſons, my Lord, that Sign'd the Paper in which was the Anſwer.

L. Chancellour. Nay, hold Mr. Billers, give me leave to compare your Memory with Mr. Vice Chancellour's a little; Mr. Vice Chancellour tells me, Mr. Billers and Dr. Smoult went up both of a Day; then comes Mr. Billers and ſays that Dr. Smoult and he went up two ſeveral Days.

Mr. Billers. My Lord, I could not poſſibly go up from the Houſe; I do not belong to the Regent Houſe.

L. Chancellour. Indeed he ſaid ſo, Sir; indeed he did, my Lords——did he not? [To Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Stanhope. behind the Biſhop of Rocheſter. My Lord, under favour, my Lord Chancellour is miſtaken; the Perſon Mr. Vice Chancellour told your Lordſhip, went up from the Regent Houſe the ſame Day, with Dr. Smoult, was Mr. Norris.

Biſhop of Rocheſter. My Lord, I think your Lordſhip forgets; it was Mr Norris that went up from the Houſe the ſame day with Doctor Smoult.

L. Chancellour. Well, Sir, was this that you would ſay?

Mr. Billers. I was only juſt acquainting your Lordſhip what was done, and that there was no other way——

The thing Mr. Billers intended to urge, was, That the uſual way of Suffrage could not be practiſed at that time; ſo the other was taken.

Earl of Sunderland. We heard that before.

L. Chancellour. Ay, Sir, we took both what was done, and what was not done; therefore withdraw.

Then all the Company retired, and after an Hour and a halfs Attendance, they were call'd in again, and the Lord Chancellour pronounced the Sentence upon Mr. Vice Chancellour, in the following manner:

Lord Chanc. Mr. Vice-Chancellour, the Lords have commanded me to tell you, that they have taken ſome time to conſider your Anſwer, and are at laſt come to a Reſolution upon it; my Buſineſs is to tell you what the Reſolution is, Mr. Vice Chancellour. My Lords conſider you have been guilty of an Act of great Diſobedience to the King's Commands, and other Crimes and Contempts, and ſuch that now you appear before us, you have little to ſay in excuſe of it; therefore as a mark of His Majeſties and their Lordſhips Diſpleaſure, they have thought fit to appoint, that you be henceforth deprived of the Office of Vice Chancellour of Cambridge. They likewiſe order, that you don't preſume, at any time hereafter, to meddle with any of the publick Buſineſs of the Univerſity. Likewiſe, Mr. Vice Chancellour, their Lordſhips conſider you have a Headſhip of a College, and becauſe the Example of ſo ill a Man may be a pernicious Conſequence to all under your Government, they have likewiſe thought fit that you be deprived of it, during His Majeſties Pleaſure; but becauſe they have a Tenderneſs for the Colledge, for which all along you have ſhewed little regard, my Lords are pleaſed to appoint, that the Revenues of your Headſhip ſhall go to the benefit of the Society: This is their Lordſhips Pleaſure, and to this they require your Obedience. There are likewiſe ſome other Gentlemen that have ſigned a Paper here, but my Lords expect their Attendance when they ſit next, which will be on Thurſday next; then we ſhall take them into Conſideration.

On Monday, Dr. Peachell wrote by an Eſquire Beadle, who attended him, to deſire a Copy of the Sentence, but anſwer was return'd. The Sentence as yet was not committed to writing, but Verbal only, and ſo he could not have a Copy; but he repeated the Heads only with this Alteration, That he was ſuſpended his Maſterſhip and not deprived; which was an Errour in the Lord Chancellours delivering it.

The beginning of the next Week was employed in making Inquiries after the new Commiſſion, the Hannaper Six Clerks, and the Riding Six Clerks Office knew nothing of it, nor any Court of Record could be directed to: Mr. Bridgman did own there was ſuch a thing, but did not inſtruct them how to come to the ſight of it: thoſe that ſpoke beſt of the Commiſſioners, urged the removal of the Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench to the Common Pleas, as a thing that made a new Commiſſion neceſſary for rectifying his Title, but a Gentleman, who pretended to have read it, gave them private Intimations that there were very large Additions, and very conſiderable Alterations in it; at my Lord Chancellours own Houſe, the Servants brought Word, that my Lord would ſpeak with the Perſon himſelf that deſired to ſee it, and appointed him a time; the Sollicitor went at the Hour, but did not gain acceſs to my Lord, and ſo they could not ſee it at all, for it was Wedneſday Night, or Thurſday Morning.

Thurſday May the 12th.

Council-Chamber, Commiſſioners preſent as before, the Delegates appear with Dr. Peachell.

Lord Chanc. THE laſt time you appeared here before us, my Lords thought fit to ſet a mark of their Juſt Diſpleaſure upon the the Vice Chancellour. Gentlemen, you cannot but be ſenſible, and ſo muſt all the World, how pernicious and obſtinate the Univerſity has ſhown themſelves in refuſing the King's Commands, and ſuch Commands, I muſt tell you, that ought to be obeyed.

There was a time, you may remember Inſtances, if you do not, I'll turn you to one in the Year 1667. when the Letters were ſo far from being diſputed, that they paſſed for a Law among you, and do this day ſtand Recorded among the ſolemn Acts, and Publick Statutes of the Univerſity. Gentlemen, my Lords conſider there is a Difference between the Vice Chancellour's Caſe and yours, and therefore did not conclude you, who repreſent the Senate with him, but have required your Attendance at this time; they impute the miſcarriage of the Body to the Head Diſeaſe chiefly, though neither are you without Fault, for ſhewing ſo much as uneaſie under the King's Commands. Gentlemen, I muſt tell you, my Lords underſtand very well, the ſly Inſinuations in your Paper, and have commanded me to tell you, That they know upon what Grounds they go, though they do not think fit to deſcend to particulars; they know too how far that Authority extends, not only to you of the Univerſity, but to the Societies within this Kingdom. Gentlemen, your beſt Courſe will be by a ready Obedience to His Majeſties Command for the future, and by giving a good Example to others, to make amends for the ill Example that has been given you; therefore I ſhall ſay to you what the Scripture ſays, and rather becauſe moſt of you are Divines; Go your way, and ſin no more, leſt a worſe thing come unto you.

The late King's Letters, mentioned by my Lord Chancellour, Anno 1667. concern the Regulating ſome of the publick Exerciſes in the Univerſity; the meaning whereof is this, The King is their Viſitor, and whenever there is any thing belonging to the local Statutes and Cuſtoms which they think ought to be altered, or any uſe which ſhould be rectified and redreſs'd, their way is to beg the King's Royal Conjunction in the Caſe, which they keep upon Record, and obey as a Statute; how good an Argument is this againſt them, for not obeying a private Mandate contrary to four known Laws of the Land, and how parallel, the Caſe is eaſie diſcern'd.

As they were drawing off, he call'd them again, and ſaid.

Lord Chanc. Hold, Gentlemen, I know ſomething more to ſay to you. My Lords require, as a Teſtimony of your Obedience, that you, who repreſent the Senate, ſhould take care they have the Univerſity Statutes brought to lye before them here.

Dr. Cook. My Lord, we do no longer repreſent the Senate, our Delegation is determined with the Vice Chancellour's Deprivation, my Lord.

Lord Chanc. Well, if your Commiſſion be expired, we will give you a new one, we are able to give you a Commiſſion; we ſuppoſe you had ſufficient Authority for appearing here.

Dr. Cook. Does your Lordſhip expect that we ſhould attend with the Statutes our ſelves?

Lord Chanc. No, no, ſend them up by a proper Officer; you are only to carry a Meſſage from us to the Senate, and tell them what we expect.

Dr. Eachard. In what time does your Lordſhip expect them?

Lord Chanc. In a convenient time, we will not tye you up, but if you be tardy, my Lords will take care to quicken you by an Intimation; I mean only a Copy, not original Statutes: You are now diſcharged from any farther Attendance here.

The Delegates, upon the Vice Chancellour's Deprivation, being no longer capable of acting as publick Perſons, and conſequently of deriving any ill Conſequence upon the Body they have repreſented, thought they might venture their own Perſons more boldly; therefore, in order to ſatisfie the World, they were mighty deſirous to bring about a Second hearing of the ſame Points, which before the Vice Chancellour's Sentence, they were not ſuffered to ſpeak to, and which, when the Vice Chancellour was asking, they had not an Opportunity of anſwering ſo very particular as they could have wiſh'd, confining themſelves to ſuch Queſtions, all the while, as did not concern the Vice Chancellour ſolely and perſonally, but affected the whole Senate jointly with him; which Order they had likewiſe obſerved in interpoſing at the Tryal. This Anſwer they had ready to offer in Writing, if that could be admitted, but if not, reſolved to argue it by Word of Mouth; the ſubſtance of it may be reduced to two Heads:

Firſt, the Buſineſs of admitting others, and particularly Dr. Lightfoot, without Oaths: As to Lightfoot's Caſe, what they intended to have urged in Court, you have ſeen already; but as to others:

I. That Peers are by the very Act of Parliament 5to. Eliz. Exempted from the Oath.

II. That all ſuch as the Univerſity calls Noblemen, have time out of mind, enjoyed the Privilege of Peers.

III. That under that Quality they never admit any without Oaths.

IV. That if at any time, upon the entertaining of a Prince, or any ſuch Solemnity, any one has ſlipt out in the Croud, which they are not conſcious of; this is to be imputed to hurry and inadvertency, and cannot be parallel to this Caſe, where the Senate acted with Leiſure and Deliberation.

V. That even theſe Degrees, given to Noblemen and Strangers, are Honorary and Complemental, and ſo different from what the Statute calls Degrees of Learning, and Men uſe, exerciſe and make a Gain of their Profeſſion.

VI. That ſuppoſing never ſo many to be admitted without Oaths, this they acknowledged to be irregular, and the Breach of a Law in one can be no Precedent for another to follow.

VII. That however they are very fully and particularly aſſured, no Man was ever admitted who poſitively refuſed the Oaths, which this Mr. Francis did.

I. That every Man who is a Member of that, or any other Senate, hath ſuch a Right to propoſe, debate and adviſe, as occaſion ſhall require, and proteſt againſt any irregular Proceedings in it.

II. That in a matter contrary to the Laws, and ſo highly concerning their Univerſity and Religion, as the opening ſuch a Gap for the Men of any Perſwaſion to become Members of their Body and Senate (which every Reſident Maſter of Arts is) it had been the greateſt Infidelity and Negligence to have ſate ſtill.

III. That their Suffrage not being ask'd by the common way, ought not to have been a Bar, becauſe every Man in his Matriculation Oath, obligeth himſelf to be aſſiſting to the Chancellour and Vice Chancellour, and to defend the State, Honour and Dignity of the Univerſity, according to his Power and Capacity; and this to do Suffragio & Concilio, rogatus & non rogatus.

IV. That repreſenting the whole Houſes Opinions by a few, is a Practice common to all numerous Congregations, and uſual in this, for any ſingle Man, voluntarily to go and Addreſs the Vice Chancellour in behalf of this whole College, or otherwiſe.

V. That the late King commanded, by His Royal Letters, that all Addreſs to the Vice Chancellour ſhould be made in the moſt quiet, decent, and reſpectful manner: and this way was thought more conformable to that Command, than the hurry of every Man applying himſelf perſonally.

VI. To give the better Reputation to the thing, and make it unexceptionable, the Perſons ſent from the Senate to the Vice Chancellour, were all Men either of publick Character in the Body, or the Seniors of their Houſes, or ſome way eminently known in the Univerſity; but they being admitted, as you have ſeen, on Thurſday, there was no Opportunity at all of offering a Diſpute.

Animadverſions on Wedneſday, April the 27th.

THIS Day the Plea was given in, and the only thing needful to be remark'd, is, The uſual way of demurring to the Courts Juriſdiction, which is commonly either the only, or firſt Plea, in ſuch Caſes; but the Delegates look'd upon themſelves as obliged not only to defend their Cauſe, but to ſatisfie the World, therefore they were deſirous that all People ſhould be ſatisfied upon what Reaſons they acted, and to this Purpoſe they firſt inſiſted upon them, which they did not at all doubt, but it would be patiently heard; whereas, if the Courts Juriſdiction had come firſt, that would, in all Probability have occaſion'd the whole Plea to be ſtifled and over-ruled.

Saturday, May the 14th.

Mr. Atterbury came to Cambridge, with two Orders under the Commiſſioners Seal, one to the Proctors to proceed in the Choice of a new Vice Chancellour, and the other to Magdalen College Fellows; to each of which was annexed a Copy of the Sentence to be fixed upon the School Doors, and Magdalen College Gates; and on Thurſday, May the 17th Doctor Balderſon, Maſter of Emmanuel College ſucceeded in the Office of Vice Chancellour.

A Copy of Dr. Peachell's Sentence, as it was fixt on the publick School Doors, and Magdalen College Gates.

By His Majeſties Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, and the Viſitation of the Univerſity, and of every Collegiate and Cathedral Churches, Colledges, Grammar Schools, Hoſpitals, and other the like Incorporations, or Foundations or Societies.

WHereas John Peachell, Dr. of Divinity, Vice Chancellour of Cambridge, Maſter of Magdalen Colledge, in the ſaid Univerſity, has been Conven'd before us for his Diſobedience to His Majeſties Royal Letters Mandatory, and other his Contempts; and the ſaid Dr. John Peachell having been fully heard thereupon, we have thought fit after mature Conſideration of the Matter, to Declare, Decree and Pronounce, that the ſaid Dr. John Peachell, ſhall for the ſaid Diſobedience and Contempts, be deprived from being Vice Chancellour of the ſaid Univerſity, and from all Power of acting in the ſame: And alſo, that he be Suſpended ab Officio & beneficio of his Maſterſhip of the ſaid Colledge, during His Majeſties Pleaſure; and accordingly we do by theſe Preſents deprive him, the ſaid Dr. John Peachell, from being Vice Chancellor of the ſaid Univerſity, and from all Power of acting in the ſame. And we alſo Suſpend him ab Officio & Beneficio of his Maſterſhip of the ſaid Colledge, peremptorily admoniſhing and requiring him hereby, to abſtain from the Function of Maſter of the ſaid College, during the ſaid Suſpenſion, under pain of Deprivation from his Maſterſhip. And we alſo farther Order and Decree, that the Profits and Perquiſites belonging to his ſaid Maſterſhip, ſhall during the ſame Suſpenſion, be applyed to the Uſe and Benefit of the ſaid College.

Given under Our Seal, the 7th of May, 1687.

An impartial Relation of the whole Proceedings againſt St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxon, in the Year of our Lord 1687. containing only Matters of Fact as they occurred.

A Narrative of the Election of Dr. Hough, Preſident to S. Mary Magdalen Colledge, Oxon, 1687.

THE Preſidentſhip of St. Mary Magdalen College, in the Univerſity of Oxon, being void by the death of Dr. Henry Clerk, late Preſident of the ſame, the Vice Preſident gave notice to all the Fellows preſent in the Chappel, on Thurſday the 31ſt of March, 1687. where it was unanimouſly agreed to proceed to the Election of a Preſident, on Wedneſday the 13th of April following, at Nine of the Clock in the Morning, in the Chappel: And in order thereto, the Vice Preſident cauſed a Citation to be fix'd on the Chappel pel Door of the ſaid College, ſignifying the Vacancy, Time and Place of the Election; according to the Direction of the Statutes. But before the Day of Election, being credibly informed, that His Majeſty had been pleaſed to grant his Letters Mandatory in behalf of Mr. Anthony Farmer, they moſt humbly repreſented to His Sacred Majeſty, in their Petition bearing Date April the 9th, That the ſaid Mr. Farmer was uncapable by their Statutes, of being Preſident; and therefore did moſt humbly pray His Majeſty to leave them to a free Election, or recommend ſuch a Perſon to them, as was capable by their Statutes. Monday, April the 11th, His Majeſties Letters Mandatory were delivered by the Hands of Mr. Robert Chernock, Maſter of Arts, and Fellow of the ſaid College, directed to the Vice Preſident and Fellows of Magdalen College in Oxon, requiring them forthwith to Elect the ſaid Mr. Farmer, and admit him Preſident: Which Letter the Vice Preſident read in the Chappel of the ſaid Colledge, between the Hours of four and five of the Clock in the ſame day, after Evening-Service, before the Fellows of the College, there preſent, and asked them, Whether they in Obedience to His Majeſty's Letters, would forthwith Elect and Admit Mr. Farmer Preſident? Who all agreed, in conſideration to Mr. Farmer's not being qualified, and the danger of Expulſion to any of the Fellows that ſhould be abſent from the Election, and that the time of Election, according to the Citation, was ſo near, to defer their Anſwer till Wedneſday following; whereupon the Vice Preſident required all the Fellows to be preſent in the Chappel the ſaid Wedneſday Morning at nine of the Clock. All the Fellows being then met, the Vice Preſident read the Statute De Electione Preſidentis; and the Statute, 5 Eliz. againſt corrupt Elections was read alſo; after which the Vice Preſident read the King's Letter in behalf of Mr. Farmer, and the ſecond time demanded an Anſwer of the Fellows thereto. Their Anſwer was to this Effect: That having a Petition now lying before His Majeſty, they ought not to proceed to Election, till they had received His Majeſty's Anſwer to the ſame: And thereupon they all agreed, (except Mr. Charnock) that the Election ſhould be deferred: which was accordingly done, until the next Morning nine of the Clock.

Thurſday April the 14th, at nine a Clock in the Morning, all the Fellows being met, the Vice-Preſident told them, That the Election of a Preſident had been deferred upon account of their Petition to His Majeſty, in anſwer to which, they had not then received His Majeſty's Pleaſure; that the next day was the utmoſt time they could defer the Election by the Statutes, and therefore it was neceſſary they ſhould come to ſome Reſolution: he told them farther, That the King had commanded them to Elect Mr. Farmer, and asked their Senſe therein: Which was unanimous (except Mr. Chernock) that the Election ſhould be deferred till the next Morning eight of the Clock; and in order thereunto, the Sacrament to be adminiſtred firſt; and accordingly it was adjourned.

Friday April the 15th, at eight a Clock in the Morning the Vice Preſident and Fellows being met, Dr. Tho. Smith and Captain Bagſhaw, two of the Fellows, acquainted the reſt, from my Lord Preſident of the Council, That in anſwer to their Petition, His Majeſty having ſent his Letter to the Colledge, expected to be obeyed. After which, the Vice Preſident read again the King's Letter to them, and ask'd, whether in Obedience thereunto, they would elect and admit Mr. Farmer Preſident? They anſwered, That they deſired they might proceed to an Election. Then the Vice Preſident having propoſed, whether having received His Majeſties Pleaſure in anſwer to their Petition, they would make any further Addreſs? The Vice Preſident, Dr. Fairfax, Dr. Pudſey, and Dr. Tho. Smith, were for a ſecond Addreſs; but all the reſt declared immediately for proceeding to the Election.

Then the Vice Preſident propoſed, whether they would go to an Election Viva voce, or by Scrutiny? The Vice Preſident, Mr. Thompſon, and Mr. Charnock were for proceeding to an Election Viva voce; all the reſt were for going to an Election by Scrutiny, except Dr. Tho. Smith, who was not for going to Election, until the King ſhould again be petitioned.

This therefore being their Senſe, That they ought to proceed to the Election of a Preſident according to the Statutes, and this the laſt day limited for Election: In order thereunto, the Holy Sacrament was ſolemnly taken by all except Mr. Charnock. Then the Statute De Electione Præſidentis, and 5 Eliz. againſt corrupt Elections was read by the Vice Preſident. Every one took the Oath preſcribed in the Statutes to be taken, in order to the Nomination of a Preſident, (except Mr. Thompſon and Mr. Charnock who refuſed it): And the two Senior Fellows were ſworn Scrutators in the Scrutiny of the whole Society: For the Nomination of a Preſident, Mr. Hough and Mr. Maynard had each of them the major part of all the Voices; and were accordingly pronounced by the Senior Scrutator, Nominati in Ordine ad Electionem Præſidentis: Then the Thirteen Senior Fellows being met to elect one of theſe two Preſident; and every one of them ſworn according to the Statute; eleven of them elected Mr. Hough, who was accordingly pronounc'd Preſident of St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxon, by the Senior Scrutator, in the preſence of all the Fellows: and Mr. Maynard was appointed by the thirteen Senior Fellows to preſent the ſaid Preſident Elect to the Viſitor, in order to his Admiſſion. After this, Mr. Thompſon and Mr. Charnock declared Viva voce for Mr. Farmer; according to His Majeſty's Letter.

Saturday April the 16th, Mr. Hough, Preſident Elect, was preſented to the Viſitor by Mr. Maynard, who at the ſame time delivered to his Lordſhip an Inſtrument under the College Seal, containing the Proceedings of the Election; after a ſight whereof, Mr. Hough was ſworn and admitted Preſident by his Lordſhip, according to the Statutes.

Sunday April the 17th, Mr. Hough at his return to the College, took the ſame Oath again before the Society, and afterwards as Preſident took his Seat in the Chappel, at four a Clock Prayers in the Afternoon.

TRuſty and Well-beloved, We greet you well. Whereas we are well ſatisfied, of the Piety, Loyalty and Learning of our Truſty and and Well-beloved Anthony Farmer, Maſter of Arts, of that your Colledge of St. Mary Magdalen, We have thought fit hereby effectually to recommend him to you for the place of Preſident of our ſaid Colledge, now void by the Death of Doctor Clark, late Preſident thereof; willing and requiring you forthwith, upon Receipt hereof, to elect and admit him the ſaid Anthony Farmer, into the ſaid place of Preſident, with all and ſingular the Rights and Privileges, Emoluments and Advantages thereunto belonging, any Statute, Cuſtom or Conſtitution to the contrary notwithſtanding, wherewith We are Graciouſly pleaſed to diſpence with in this behalf. And ſo, not doubting of your Compliance herein, We bid you Farewel.

Given at our Court at White-hall, the Fifth Day of April, 1687. in the Third Year of Our Reign.

A Copy of Magdalen Colledge's Petition.

To the King's moſt Excellent Majeſty.

The Humble Petition of the Vice Preſident and Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge, in Oxon.

Moſt humbly ſheweth,

WE have been credibly informed, That Mr. Anthony Farmer, who was not of our Foundation, has obtained Your moſt Excellent Majeſty's Recommendation to be Preſident of Your Majeſty's College, in the room of Doctor Henry Clark, deceaſed.

We therefore, with all Submiſſion, as becomes Your moſt Dutiful and Loyal Subjects, moſt humbly Repreſent to Your Sacred Majeſty, That the ſaid Mr. Farmer is a Perſon in ſeveral reſpects uncapable of that Character, according to our Founder's Statutes: And do moſt earneſtly beſeech Your Majeſty, as Your Majeſty ſhall judge fitteſt in Your moſt Princely Wiſdom, either to leave us to the diſcharge of our Duty and Conſciences, according to Your Majeſty's late moſt gracious Toleration, and our Founder's Statutes; or to recommend ſuch a Perſon who may be more ſerviceable to Your Majeſty, and to this Your Majeſty's Colledge:

And Your Petitioners ſhall ever pray, &c.

A Copy of the Lord Sunderland's Letter to the Fellows.

Gentlemen,

THE King being given to underſtand, That notwithſtanding his late Mandate, ſent to you for Electing Mr. Farmer to be Preſident of your Colledge, you have made choice of another Perſon; His Majeſty commands me to tell you, He is much ſurprized at theſe Proceedings, and expects you ſhould ſend me an account of what paſſed on that Occaſion, and whether you did receive His Majeſty's ſaid Letters Mandate, before you choſe Dr. Hough. I am,

Gentlemen,

Your Affectionate and Humble Servant,

Sunderland.

The Caſe of the Vice Preſident and Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge in Oxon, in their late Election of a Preſident.

UPon the Notice of the Death of Dr. Henry Clark, late Preſident of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge in Oxon; the Vice Preſident called a Meeting of the Fellows, in order to appoint a day for the Election of a new Preſident. The 13th of April was the day prefix'd with Power to prorogue the Election to the 15th, as they ſhould ſee Cauſe, beyond which time it was not in their Power to defer the ſame. This being agreed, a Citation, or Præmonition was fix'd upon the Chappel-Door of the College, ſignifying the ſame; and ſummoning all the abſent Fellows to repair home to the enſuing Election, as the Statute in that Caſe directs. After this, upon the 11th of April, they receiv'd His Majeſty's Letter in behalf of Mr. Farmer, requiring them to elect and admit him Preſident: But he having never been Fellow of that Colledge, nor New College, in which are the only Perſons capable of being choſen by the Statutes; and wanting likewiſe ſuch perſonal Qualifications as are required in the Character of a Preſident, they did not imagine it was, or could be His Majeſty's Pleaſure, that they ſhould act ſo directly contrary to the expreſs Words of their Statutes, to which they are ſtrictly and poſitively ſworn: But did humbly conceive they were bound in Duty to believe, that His Majeſty had been mis-informed in the Character and Capacity of Mr. Farmer. And therefore on the 15th of April, the laſt of thoſe days within which they were confin'd to finiſh the Election, they proceeded to a Choice, and having firſt received the Bleſſed Euchariſt, and taken an Oath as the Founder enjoyns, to chooſe a Perſon ſo qualified, as is there ſpecified; they did elect the Reverend Mr. John Hough, Batchelor in Divinity, who is a Perſon every way qualified by the Statutes of the ſaid College: And if it ſhall be objected that His Majeſty did in His Letter for Mr. Farmer graciouſly diſpenſe with all the Statutes that rendered him uncapable of being elected; and that therefore they might have obeyed without breach of their Oaths: They humbly beg leave to repreſent, that there is an expreſs Clauſe in that Oath, which every Man takes when he is admitted Fellow of the College; wherein he ſwears not to procure, accept, or make uſe of any Diſpenſation from his Oath, or any part thereof, by whomſoever procured, or by what Authority ſoever granted. As to their former Practice when they have elected in Obedience to the King's Letter heretofore; it has been always in ſuch Caſes where the Perſons recommended have been every way qualified for the Office by their Statutes; in which Caſes they always have been, and ever will be, ready to comply with His Majeſty's Pleaſure; it not being without unſpeakable regret, that they diſobey the leaſt of His Commands. They know how entirely their Welfare depends upon the Countenance of their Prince; nor doth any thing more deeply affect and grieve their Souls, than when they find themſelves reduc'd to this unfortunate Neceſſity, of either diſobeying his Will, or violating their Conſciences by notorious Perjuries.

A Copy of a Letter to the Duke of Ormond, April the 18th, 1687.

May it pleaſe your Grace,

WE the Preſident, and Fellows of Magdalen College in Oxon, ſenſible of the Benefits and Honour we enjoy under Your Grace's Patronage, and how much it imports us to have your Advice in all the Difficulties where-with we are preſs'd; having as we fear, diſpleaſed His Majeſty, in our Election of a Preſident; do humbly beg leave to repreſent to your Grace, a true ſtate of our Caſe, and hope you will pleaſe to inform the King how uncapable we were to perform His Commands.

to

His Majeſty was pleaſed on the Death of Dr. Henry Clark, Preſident of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge, to Command us by His Letter, to Elect and admit Mr. Anthony Farmer in that Office, a Perſon utterly uncapable of it by our Statutes, as we are ready to make appear in many Particulars; and ſince we have taken a poſitive Oath of Obedience to them, and that excluſive to all Diſpenſations whatſoever; we humbly conceive we could not obey that Command in favour of Mr. Farmer; unleſs he had brought thoſe Qualifications with him, which our Founder requires in the Perſon of the Preſident; and being confined as to the time of Election, we have been forced to proceed to the choice of one, who has approved his Loyalty in the whole courſe of his Life, and whom we think ſuitably qualified for the place.——

May it therefore pleaſe your Grace to interpoſe with His Moſt Sacred Majeſty for us, that we may not lye under the Weight of His Diſpleaſure, for not being in a capacity for obeying his Commands. We know him to be a Prince of eminent Juſtice and Integrity, and cannot think he will value any inſtance of Duty to himſelf, which manifeſtly breaks in upon the Obligation of our Conſciences. And your Grace's extraordinary unblemiſh'd Loyalty to the Crown; and that Regard which, we aſſure our ſelves, our Moſt Honoured Lord and Chancellor has to the Peace and Welfare of this Place, induceth us to preſume your Grace will omit no Endeavours to ſet before His Majeſty the true Reaſon and Neceſſity of our Proceedings. That God Almighty protect your Grace, ſhall be the daily Prayers of,

May it pleaſe your Grace, &c.

The Biſhop of Winton's Letter to the Lord Preſident of the Council.

My Honoured Lord,

THE Obligation I have upon me as Viſitor of St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxon, occaſions this Addreſs: For I am inform'd that great Endeavours are uſed with His Majeſty to recommend one Mr. Farmer, who is not at preſent, nor ever was Fellow of the College, to be Preſident of it; which is directly contrary to the Statutes of the Founder, (as I am confident ſome who promote Mr. Farmer's intereſt, cannot be ignorant of:) And were there not many Perſons now actually Fellows, and ſeveral who have been (in particular the Biſhop of Man, and Dr. Jeſſop) very eminent for Learning and Loyalty, and every way qualified according to the Statutes, I ſhould not preſs your Lordſhip to lay the Concern of the College (which hath upon all occaſions expreſt its Zeal and Forwardneſs in Defence of the Crown, and (as I particularly know) in the great Affairs of the Succeſſion) before His Majeſty; who, I hope, will leave them to their Rules as the Statutes, which have hitherto (excepting in the times of Rebellion) been conſcientiouſly obſerved, and which will be the higheſt Satisfaction to the truly Loyal Univerſity, and promote His Majeſty's Service, which has always been the Endeavour of,

Your Lordſhips Moſt Humble Servant.

A Copy of the Citation to the Vice-Preſident and Fellows, for to appear at White-Hall, June the 6th, 1687.

By His Majeſties Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, and for the Viſitation of the Univerſities, and of all, and every Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, Colleges, &c.

COmplaint having been made unto Us, that the Vice-Preſident, and Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxon, have refuſed to comply with His Majeſties Letters Mandatory, for electing and admitting Mr. Anthony Farmer Preſident of the ſame College, in the room of Dr. Clark deceaſed, and that notwithſtanding His Majeſties Letters they have elected Mr. John Hough Preſident of the ſaid College: You and either of you are hereby requir'd to Cite and Summon the ſaid Vice-Preſident and Fellows, requiring 'em, or ſuch of the ſaid Fellows as they ſhall depute in their behalf, to appear before Us in the Council-Chamber at White-Hall, upon Monday the 6th of the next Month of June, at four in the Afternoon, to anſwer to ſuch Matters as ſhall be objected againſt them, concerning the Premiſes; and of the due Execution thereof, You are to certifie Us then and there.

Given under our Seal the 28th of May, 1687.

To Thomas Atterbury,
and
Robert Eldows.
Or to either of them.

The Anſwer of the Vice-Preſident, and other Fellows, of Magdalen College in Oxon, who were deputed by the ſaid College, to the Queſtion propounded by the Right Honourable, and Right Reverend the Lords Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, viz.

Why they did not obey His Majeſties Letter, requiring them to Elect, and Admit Mr. Anthony Farmer Preſident of the ſaid College?

THE ſaid Vice Preſident, and other deputed Fellows anſwered and ſaid, That the ſaid College of St. Mary Magdalen in Oxon is a Body Corporate, governed by Local Statutes, granted and confirmed to them by His Majeſty's Royal Predeceſſor, King Henry the 6th, for Him and His Heirs and Succeſſors, under the Great Seal of England, which are alſo ſince confirmed by ſeveral other Patents of others of His Majeſties Royal Predeceſſors, under the Great Seal of England. That by the ſaid Statutes of the College (to the Obſervation of which, each Fellow is ſworn) it is ordered that the Perſon elected Preſident thereof, ſhall be a Man of good Life and Reputation, of approved Underſtanding and good Temper, Diſcreet, Provident, and Circumſpect, both in Spiritual and Temporal Affairs. And at the time of Election of a Preſident, the ſaid Fellows are bound by the ſaid Statutes, to take an Oath that they ſhall nominate none to that Office, but ſuch as are, or have

have been Fellows of the ſaid College, or of New College in Oxon: or if they are not actually Fellows at that time of Election; that they be ſuch as have left their Fellowſhips in their reſpective Colleges upon credible accounts. And when two qualified Perſons ſhall be nominated at the time of Election, by the greater number of all the Fellows, to the ſaid Office of Preſident; the thirteen Seniors alſo ſwear that they will Elect one of them, whom in their Conſciences they think moſt proper and ſufficient, moſt diſcreet, moſt uſeful, and beſt qualified for the Place; without any regard to love, hatred, favour or fear. And every Fellow when he is firſt admitted into his Fellowſhip in the ſaid College, ſwears that he will inviolably keep and obſerve all the Statutes and Ordinances of the College, and every thing therein contained, ſo far as does or may concern him, according to the plain, literal, and grammatical ſenſe and meaning thereof, and as much as in him lies will cauſe the ſame to be kept and obſerved by others; and that he will not procure any Diſpenſation contrary to his aforeſaid Oath, or any part thereof, nor contrary to the Statutes and Ordinances to which it relates, or any of them; nor will he endeavour that ſuch Diſpenſation ſhall be procured by any other, or others, publickly or privately, directly or indirectly. And if it ſhall happen that any Diſpenſation of this ſort, of whatſoever Authority it ſhall be, whether in general or particular, or under what form of Words ſoever it be granted, that he will neither make uſe of it, nor in any ſort conſent thereunto. That upon Notice of the Death of Dr. Clark, late Preſident of the ſaid College, the Vice-Preſident called a Meeting of the ſaid Fellows, in order to the appointing a day for the Election of a new Preſident, and the 13th of April was the time prefix'd, with power to prorogue the ſame as they ſhould ſee Cauſe, till the 15th, beyond which time they could not ſtatutably defer their Election, and in purſuance thereof a Citation or Premonition was fix'd upon the Chappel-door of the ſaid College, ſignifying the ſame, and by which the abſent Fellows were Summoned to repair home, as the Statute in the Caſe requires. And the ſaid Vice Preſident, and other deputed Fellows farther ſay, that on the 11th of April aforeſaid, they received His Majeſties Letters Mandatory, to Elect and Admit the ſaid Mr. Anthony Farmer Preſident of the ſaid College: But foraſmuch as the ſaid Vice Preſident and Fellows, apprehended the right of Election to be in them, and believed His Majeſty never intended to diſpoſſeſs them of their Rights: And foraſmuch as the ſaid Mr. Farmer had never been Fellow either of Magdalen or New College in Oxon, and had not thoſe Qualifications which in, and by, the ſaid Statutes of the College are required in the Character of a Preſident, as they in their Conſciences did, or do verily believe; and in regard that they could not comply with His Majeſties Letter, without the Violation of their Oaths, and hazard of their legal Intereſt and Property, wherewith they are by their Statutes poſſeſſed, and which by their Oaths they are bound to maintain, they repreſented the ſame by their humble Petition to His Majeſty. And having deferred their Election of a Preſident to the laſt day limited by their Statutes, then they proceeded to Election, and having firſt received the Euchariſt, and taken the ſaid Oaths, as the Statutes enjoyn, to chooſe a Perſon ſo qualified as before expreſſed, they did Elect the Reverend Mr. John Hough, B.D. and one of the Fellows of their College, a Perſon every way qualified to be Preſident, who has been ſince confirmed by the Biſhop of Winton their Viſitor, as the Statutes of the ſaid College direct.

And that they might not lye under His Majeſties Diſpleaſure by their Proceedings, they did on the 18th of April make an humble repreſentation thereof to His Majeſty, by his Grace the Duke of Ormond, Chancellor of the Univerſity of Oxon, ſetting forth their indiſpenſable Obligations to obſerve their Founder's Statutes.

All which Matters the Vice Preſident, and other deputed Fellows, do humbly offer to your Lordſhips, and pray to be diſmiſſed with your Lordſhips favour.

The Fellows Reaſons why they Elected not Mr. Farmer, &c.

WHereas the Vice Preſident, and other deputed Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxon, have in their Anſwer to your Lordſhips, ſet forth, that by the Statutes of the ſaid College it is ordered, That the Perſon to be elected Preſident thereof, ſhould be a Man of good Life and Reputation, and of good Manners and Temper; and likewiſe, that Mr. Anthony Farmer hath not thoſe Qualifications which in and by the ſaid Statutes are requir'd in the Character of a Preſident, as they in their Conſciences did and do verily believe. They humbly crave leave to repreſent to your Lordſhips ſome of thoſe Reaſons which induced them to ſuch belief, viz.

That Mr. Farmer did miſ-behave himſelf in Trinity College in Cambridge: That he received Admonition from the Maſter of the College, in order to his Expulſion; which remains in the Regiſter of the ſaid College, under his own Hand.

That having left Cambridge, he taught School at Chippenham in Wiltſhire, under a Nonconformiſt Miniſter, without Licenſe.

That in September 1683. the ſaid Mr. Farmer was entred into St. Mary Magdalen Hall in Oxon, where ſuch frequent Complaints were brought againſt him to the Principal, for his troubleſome Humour and unquiet Temper, that to preſerve the Peace of the Society, he was deſired to leave the ſaid Hall.

That after his leaving Magdalen Hall, he was admitted into Magdalen College, where diſcourſing about Religion, he declared, That there was no Proteſtant but would cut the King's Throat: notwithſtanding which, at other times he declared to ſome of the Fellows of the ſaid College, That whatſoever he pretended, he was really a Member of the Church of England; and that he made an Intereſt with ſome Roman Catholicks, only to get Preferment by their Means, and for that reaſon was willing to be thought of their Religion.

That at the very time when His Majeſty's Letter came to the College in his behalf, the ſaid Mr. Farmer was at [illegible]bington in very ill Company, where he continued drinking to exceſs two or three days and Nights together; and amongſt other Diſorders, was one of thoſe that then in the night time threw the Town-Stocks into the River:

River: and that in general the ſaid Mr. Farmer hath had the Unhappineſs to lie under an ill Fame, as to his Life and Converſation, as by ſeveral Letters and Certificates, ready to be produced, will more largely appear.

Copies of Letters and Certificates delivered to the Lords Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, June 27. 1687.

I. I Anthony Farmer, Batchelour of Arts, and Scholar of this College, do confeſs, That I have behav'd my ſelf very unlike a Member of this College, and even a Chriſtian, at the Dancing-School: for which I humbly ask Pardon, and do acknowledge before the Seniority, that I have deſervedly received of the Maſter my firſt Admonition in order to Expulſion.

II. THeſe are to certifie, That Mr. Anthony Farmer was Uſher to Mr. Benj. Flower, a Nonconformiſt Preacher in the Town of Chippenham in the County of Wilts, for the ſpace of half a Year or upwards, the ſaid Mr. Flower keeping School without Licenſe from the Biſhop, and the ſaid Mr. Farmer continuing his Uſher for the time mentioned, without any Licenſe alſo. Witneſs our Hands,

Will. Lake,
Will. Loude, } Vicar.
Will. Gale.

III. MR. Anthony Farmer was entred of St. Mary Magdalen Hall in Oxford, Septemb. 1683. Where, after he had been ſome time, frequent Complaints were brought to me by ſome of the Maſters, that he raiſed Quarrels and Differences amongſt them; that he often occaſioned Diſturbances, and was of a troubleſome and unpeaceable Humour. Whereupon, that Love and Friendſhip might be preſerv'd and continu'd in the Society, as it uſed to be, I adviſed the ſaid Mr. Farmer to make tryal if he could live more eaſily and quietly in ſome other Houſe. Accordingly he did voluntarily leave the Hall, July the 13th, 1685. and got himſelf admitted into Magdalen College.

William Levet, Principal.

IV. I Do certifie, That Mr. William Bambrigg, Gentleman Commoner of Magdalen Hall, Oxon, did ſay, That Mr. Anthony Farmer, Maſter of Arts, did intice him from his Studies in the Univerſity to go to London, where he the ſaid Mr. Farmer did attempt to draw the ſaid Mr. Bambrigg into ſeveral Debaucheries both at Taverns and Bawdy-houſes. Witneſs my Hand, John Ryland, Mr. of Arts of Magd. Hall.

V. I Do certifie, That Mr. William Bambrigg, Gentleman Commoner of Magdalen Hall, did ſay, That Mr. Anthony Farmer, Maſter of Arts of the ſaid Hall, did receive Money of him and other Gentlemen, publickly to expoſe unto him a naked Woman; which he acccordingly did. Witneſs my Hand,

Richard Clerk, Mr. of Arts of Magd. Hall

June 9. 1687.

VI. I Am very willing to juſtifie any thing I have formerly ſaid, relating to ſo ſerious a matter as this is you enquire after.

Mr. Farmer, one Night in the Cloyſter, asked me why I did not get a Commiſſion: I told him truly, I had not Friends to do it for me. He then asked me, what I would do for one: I told him, I would fight for my King, and whatſoever he ſhould command me. He then ask'd me, if I would fight for the King's Religion: I told him, there would be no occaſion for that, nor would it ever be required of me. He ask'd me of what Religion I was: I told him a Proteſtant. And then he ſaid, There was no Proteſtant but would cut the King's Throat; and that he ſhould loſe Three Thouſand Pounds, for being of that Religion he intended to be of; which he ſaid was a Papiſt. This, to the beſt of my Remembrance, is the full of what he ſaid. If I have omitted any thing, it is my care not to write more than I would honeſtly and juſtly ſwear to. I am, SIR,

Your moſt Obliged and moſt Humble Servant,
John Brabourn.

VII. IN or about January laſt, 1687. Mr. Anthony Farmer declared before us, That the Report of his being a Papiſt was falſe; but that he was willing to be thought ſo, becauſe it might do him a Kindneſs: That the reaſon of his Acquaintance with Mr. Brent and Mr. Walker, was to get Preferment by their Intereſt: That he had not forſaken the Proteſtant Religion; adding, we ſhould call him Rogue, if ever he did: That he would not make any publick Declaration of this, but would declare it amongſt Friends, when and where he pleaſed.

Henry Dobſon.
Ja. Fayrer.
Tho. Goodwin.

VIII. I Do hereby certifie, That Robert Gardiner, Porter of St. Mary Magdalen College, did tell me, that Mr. Farmer did very often come into the College late at Night, ſo much in drink, that he could ſcarce go or ſpeak. Witneſs my Hand, this 9th day of June 1687.

George Fulham.

IX. UPon Monday April the third, Mr. Farmer came to the Lobſter in Abington with Mr. Clerk, Mr. Gravener, and Mr. Jennyfar, about eight in the Morning, and ſtaid ſome time in the Houſe, and went from thence to the Tavern; return'd again about eleven at Night, and ſat up till one in the Morning: The next day they went to the Buſh Tavern and ſent for a quarter of Lamb for their Supper, and there Mr. Farmer, Mr. Clerk, Mr. Gravener, and two Troopers and others, continued till paſt eleven at Night, and ſo return'd to the aforeſaid place, and ſat up till paſt three in the Morning.

This I do aſſert, was the Company that the ſaid Mr. Anthony Farmer kept, and theſe were the unſeaſonable Hours. In witneſs whereof, I am ready to ſwear, whenever a Subpœna ſhall be ſent to me.

George Mortimer.

X. MRs. Mortimer is ready to aſſert, That when Mr. Anthony Farmer return'd to the Lobſter about eleven at Night, he came much concern'd in Drink, and was for kiſſing the ſaid Mrs. Mortimer, which, he being a Stranger, ſhe permitted him to do; but in doing of it, he the ſaid Mr. Anthony Farmer put his Tongue in her Mouth, which was ſuch a Rudeneſs, that ſhe immediately went out of his Company and would not come nigh him any more.

Martha Mortimer.

XI. BEing in Company with William Hopkins of Abington, the 12th of June laſt 1687. I heard him declare, That himſelf, with one Mr. Farmer of the Univerſity of Oxon, and ſome others, did in a Frolick, at an unſeaſonable time of Night, take away the Town-Stocks from the place where they conſtantly ſtood, and carried them in a Cart a conſiderable way, and threw them into a Pool commonly call'd Mad Hall's Pool. Witneſs my Hand, the Day and Year above written.

Charles Peacock.

Some Clauſes of particular Statutes to which the Caſe relates.

IN their Statutes concerning their Election of a Preſident, his Character is thus deſcribed: That he muſt be a Man of good Reputation, and good Life, and circumſpect both in Spiritual and Temporal Affairs.

In the ſame Statutes the Oath which every Fellow is obliged to take, before he can give his Vote in the Nomination of a Preſident, is this: viz.

That he will name one or two of St. Mary Magdalen College, or of thoſe who have been Fellows there, or have left their places upon a legal and credible account: Or that he will name one or two of the Fellows of St. Mary Wincheſter College, commonly called New College in Oxon, or of thoſe who have been formerly Fellows there, and have left their places upon a credible account. After this, the thirteen Seniour Fellows ſwear, That out of the two thus nominated, they will with all ſpeed, Elect one to exerciſe the Office of a Preſident, whom in their Conſciences they think moſt proper and ſufficient, moſt diſcreet, moſt uſeful, and beſt qualified for it, either without any regard to Love, Hatred, Favour, Fear, &c. as in the forementioned Statute is more largely expreſſed.——

Part of the OATH which every Fellow takes when Admitted.

Item. I Do Swear that I will not procure any Diſpenſation contrary to my aforeſaid Oath, or to any part thereof, nor contrary to the Statutes and Ordinances to which they relate, or any one of them; nor will I endeavour that ſuch Diſpenſations be procured by any other or others, publickly or privately, directly or indirectly: And if it ſhall happen that any Diſpenſation of this ſort ſhall be procured, or freely granted or obtain'd, of what Authority ſo ever it be, whether in general or particular, under what form of Words ſoever it be granted, I will neither make uſe of it, nor in any ſort conſent thereunto.

So help me God.

WHereas it appears to us, that Mr. John Hough, B D. hath been unduly Elected Preſident of Saint Mary Magdalen College, in the Univerſity of Oxon, we have thought fit, upon mature Conſideration thereof, That the ſaid Election be declared void, and the ſaid Mr. John Hough be amoved from the ſaid Preſidentſhip; and accordingly we do hereby declare and decree, That the ſaid Election is void; and do amove the ſaid Mr. John Hough from the place of Preſident of the ſaid College.

A Copy of his Majeſty's Mandate for the Biſhop of Oxon to be Preſident.

James Rex.

TRuſty and Well beloved, We Greet you well: Whereas the place of Preſident of Our Colledge of St. Mary Magdalen, is now void, Our Will and Pleaſure is, That We do hereby Authorize and Require you forthwith, upon receipt hereof, to Admit the Right Reverend Father in God Samuel Lord Biſhop of Oxon, into the ſaid place of Preſident, to hold and enjoy the ſame, with all the Rights, Priviledges and Profits, Emoluments and Advantages thereunto belonging, any Statute or Statutes, Cuſtom or Conſtitution to the contrary, in any wiſe, notwithſtanding, wherewith We are Graciouſly pleaſed, and do accordingly hereby Diſpenſe in his behalf: And ſo, expecting your ready Obedience herein, We bid you Farewel.

Given at Our Court at Windſor, Aug. 14th 1687. in the Third Year of Our Reign.

By His Majeſty's Command.

Sunderland.

A Copy of the Lord Sunderland's Letter to the Seniour Fellow of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge, in the Univerſity of Oxon, or in his abſence, to the Seniour Fellow reſiding there.

THe King having been pleaſed by His Letters Mandatory, to require the Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge, to Admit the Lord Biſhop of Oxon, Preſident of that Colledge; His Majeſty Commands me to let you know, That immediately upon the receipt hereof, he would have you Aſſemble the Fellows, and Communicate to them His Majeſty's ſaid Letters: And I am further Commanded to tell you, That His Majeſty expects a ready Obedience to be paid to His Pleaſure herein. I deſire you would ſend me an Account of your Proceedings, as ſoon as you can, that I may acquaint His Majeſty with it. I am Yours Sunderland.

A Copy of the Biſhop of Oxon's Letter to the Seniour Fellow of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge, in Oxon, or in his abſence, to the Seniour Fellow reſiding there.

SIR,

YOU will receive herewith His Majeſty's Mandate to Admit me Preſident of your Colledge of St. Mary Magdalen, in Oxon, together with a Letter of my Lord Sunderland, purſuant to His Majeſty's Commands. I am indiſpoſed, as I have been for ſome time, and not in a condition as yet to Travel; and therefore my requeſt to you is, That upon receipt of the King's Pleaſure, you would do me the Favour to Admit me by Proxy, (i. e.) Either the next Seniour Fellow under your ſelf, reſident, or either of my Chaplains, Mr. William Wickins, or Mr. Thomas Collins, whom I depute in my ſtead, which is as valid in Law, as if I were preſent my ſelf; and is the moſt uſual and cuſtomary Practice. And by ſo doing, you will oblige

Your very Loving Friend and Brother,

Samuel Oxon:

OXON, September 4*th*, 1687.

The Lord Sunderland ſent an Order to the Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge, to attend the King at Chriſt-Church, at three in the Afternoon. They attended accordingly.

King WHat's your name, are you Dr. Pudſey?

Dr. P. Yes, may it pleaſe your Majeſty.

K. Did you receive my Letter?

Dr. P. Yes, Sir, we did.

K. Then you have not dealt with me like Gentlemen, you have done very uncivilly by me and undutifully——Here they all kneeled, and Dr. Pudſey offered a Petition, which His Majeſty refuſed to receive: And ſaid

K. Ye have been a ſtubborn turbulent Colledge, I have known you to be ſo theſe 26 years: You have affronted me in this. Is this your Church of England Loyalty? One would wonder to find ſo many Church of England men in ſuch a buſineſs. Go home and ſhew your ſelves good Members of the Church of England. Get you gone; know I am your King, I will be obey'd; and I command you to be gone: Go and admit the Biſhop of Oxon Head, Principle; What d'ye call it of the Colledge——? (One ſtood by ſaid Preſident) I mean Preſident of the Colledge. Let them that refuſe it look to it; they ſhall feel the weight of their Sovereign's Diſpleaſure.

The Fellows going out of the Lodgings were call'd back.

K. I hear you have admitted a Fellow of the Colledge, ſince you receiv'd my Inhibition; Is this true? Have you not admitted Mr. Holden Fellow?

Dr. P. I think he was admitted Fellow: But we conceive——

Mr. Cra. May it pleaſe Your Majeſty, there was no new Election or Admiſſion, ſince Your Majeſty's Inhibition; but only the Conſummation of a former Election. (They always Elect to one years Probation) then the Perſon Elected is received, or rejected for ever.

K. The Conſummation of a former Election, 'twas downright Diſobedience, and 'tis a freſh aggravation. Get you gone home, I ſay again; go, get you gone, and immediately repair to your Chappel, and Elect the Biſhop of Oxon, or elſe you muſt expect to feel the weight of my hand——

The Fellows offered again their Petition, on their Knees.

K. Get you gone, I will receive nothing from you till you have obey'd me, and admitted the Biſhop of Oxon.

Upon which they went immediately to their Chappel, Dr. Pudſey propoſing whether they would obey the King, and elect the Biſhop of Oxon? They anſwered in their turns, They were as ready to obey His Majeſty in all things that lay in their power, as any of the reſt of His Subjects: But the Electing the Biſhop of Oxon, being directly contrary to their Statutes, and the poſitive Oaths they had taken, they could not apprehend it in their power to obey Him in this Matter.

A Copy of the Petition offer'd at Oxford, September 4. 1687.

To the King's Moſt Excellent Majeſty, &c.

Humbly ſheweth,

THat upon the 27th of Auguſt we receiv'd Your Majeſty's Letters Mandatory, Dated Auguſt 14th, requiring us to admit the Right Reverend Father in God Samuel Lord Biſhop of Oxon, to be our Preſident; and diſpenſing with all Statutes and Conſtitutions to the contrary. It is an unexpreſſible Affliction to us, to find our ſelves reduced to ſuch an extremity, that either we muſt diſobey Your Majeſty's Royal Command, contrary to our own Inclinations, and that conſtant courſe of Loyalty which we have ſhew'd in all inſtances hitherto upon all occaſions whatſoever; or elſe break our Founder's Statutes, and deliberately perjure our ſelves.

For our Founder hath obliged us under Oath, when we came in Fellows, inviolably to obſerve his Statutes, and one Clauſe therein injoyns us never to admit, or make uſe of a Diſpenſation granted by any Authority whatſoever, whereby we may be abſolved from the ſame. In this Statute for the Election of a Preſident, he commands us upon Oath to Elect ſuch a Perſon into the place of Preſident, within 15 days after the vacancy, who either is, or has been Fellow of our own, or New-Colledge: Which we repreſented to Your Majeſty in our humble Petition, ſign'd April 9th, wherein we offered our ſelves ready to Elect any Perſon capable of the ſame, who Your Majeſty ſhould be pleaſed to recommend, and having waited the utmoſt time limited by our Statutes, and receiv'd no Anſwer to that effect, we did then according to the exigence of our Statutes (having firſt taken the Holy Eucharift, and our ſeveral Oaths to that purpoſe) nominate and Elect ſuch a Perſon, as we in our Conſciences did believe to be every way qualified for the Place: By which Act of ours we have conveyed all that right to him, which our Founder hath intruſted us with, and it does not lie in our power to admit any other. Our Founder in another Statute obligeth us under the pain of Perjury, a dreadful Anathema, and eternal Damnation, not to ſuffer any of his Statutes to be altered, infringed, or diſpenſed with, and commands us under the ſame Sacred Obligations, not to execute any Orders or Decree whatſoever, contrary or repugnant to the ſaid Statutes; by which ſaid Statutes, and Oaths, we are utterly incapacitated to admit the ſaid Reverend Father in God to be our Preſident.

May it pleaſe Your Sacred Majeſty, to give us leave to lay this our Caſe, and our ſelves, with all ſubmiſſion, at Your Royal Feet, moſt earneſtly beſeeching Your Sacred Majeſty, to extend to us Your humble Petitioners, that Grace and Tenderneſs which Your Majeſty hath vouchſafed to all Your other Subjects; and not to believe us guilty of any obſtinacy or undutifulneſs, Crimes which our Souls abhor; but to receive us into Your Majeſty's Grace and Favour, the greateſt temporal Bleſſing which our Hearts can wiſh.

And your humble Petitioners ſhall always (as in Duty bound) pray to Almighty God, to bleſs Your Majeſty with a long and happy Reign over us, and afterwards to receive you to an immortal Crown of Glory.

A Copy of the Addreſs which the Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen gave to the Lord Preſident of the Council, Sept. 6. 1687; and which was delivered his Majeſty at Bath.

WE Your Majeſty's moſt humble, and moſt dutiful Subjects, the Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge in Oxon, being deeply afflicted with the late ſence of Your Majeſty's heavy Diſpleaſure; grounded, as we in all reaſon humbly preſume, upon a moſt unkind miſrepreſentation of our Actions, in relation to an Election of a Preſident, into Your Majeſty's ſaid Colledge: Do humbly beg leave to proſtrate our ſelves at Your Royal Feet, offering all real Teſtimonies of Duty and Loyalty. And as we have never fail'd to evidence both our Principles and Practices to be truly Loyal, in obedience to the Commands of Your Royal Brother, and Your Sacred Self, in matters of the like Nature: So whatſoever way Your Majeſty ſhall be pleaſed to try our readineſs to obey Your Royal Pleaſure, in any inſtance that does not interfere with and violate our Conſciences, which Your Majeſty is ſtudious to preſerve, we ſhall moſt gladly and effectually comply therewith: A ſtubborn and a groundleſs reſiſtance of Your Royal Will and Pleaſure, in the preſent, and all other Caſes, being that which our Souls eternally abhor, as becomes,

Your Majeſty's moſt Loyal and moſt Obedient Subjects, &c.

A Copy of a Letter directed to Dr. Bayly Fellow of Magdalen Colledge, Oxon; ſuppoſed to be Writ by Mr. W—— P——.

Sir,

UPon an inquiry made of your preſent Fellows of Magdalen Colledge, I am inform'd that you are a perſon eminent in that Learned Body, for your Temper, Prudence, and good Conduct in Affairs; and therefore very fit to be addreſs'd to by me, who do not ſend you this to trapan you, and your Brethren; but out of a paſſionate concern for your intereſt, to perſwade you, either to a compliance with his Majeſty's Letters Mandatory; or to think among your ſelves of ſome Expedient to prevent the ruin of your Colledge, and your ſelves: And to offer it to His Majeſty's Royal Conſideration, that the Order for the Quo Warranto againſt the Colledge may be recall'd, before it be too late; for you cannot be ſenſible how highly His Majeſty is incens'd againſt you, neither can you give one inſtance whether ever that ſort of proceeding was judged againſt the Crown. Your Cauſe muſt think it very hard; but you are not in Prudence to relye on the goodneſs of your Cauſe; but to do what the preſent inſtant of Affairs will permit, and in patience to expect a Seaſon that will be more auſpicious to Perſons of your Character. Every Mechanick knows the temper of His preſent Majeſty, who never will receive a baffle in any thing that he heartily eſpouſeth, and that he doth this, your ſelves have had too late and manifeſt an inſtance, to doubt of his zeal in the Affair.

Where there are ſo many Statutes to be obſerved, 'tis impoſſible but ſome muſt be broken at one time or another; and I am informed by the Learned of the Law, that a failure in any one point, point, forfeits your Grant, and lays your Colledge open to the Royal diſpoſal.

I could give many other prudent Arguments, that might poſſibly incline you to a ſpeedy endeavour of putting an end to your Troubles, almoſt, at any rate; but I ſhall ſuggeſt this one thing to you, that your fatal overthrow would be a fair beginning of ſo much aimed at Reformation, firſt of the Univerſity, then of the Church, and adminiſter ſuch an opportunity to the Enemy, as may not perhaps occur in His Majeſty's Reign. I am

Your affectionate Servant, &c.

The Anſwer to the aforementioned written Letter, Dated Oct. 3*d.* 1687.

THE incloſed Paper is a Copy of a Letter, which by the charitable purpoſe of it, ſeems to be writ by you, who have been already ſo kind as to appear on our behalf, and are reported by all that know you to imploy much of your time in doing good to Mankind, and uſing your Credit with His Majeſty, to undeceive him in any wrong impreſſions given him of his conſcientious Subjects, and where his Juſtice and Goodneſs have been thereby abuſed, to reconcile the Perſons injur'd to His Majeſty's Favour, and ſecure them by it from Oppreſſion and Prejudice. In this confidence, I preſume to make this application to you, deſiring your excuſe for not ſubſcribing it: For if you did write the Letter, you know to whom it was directed; and if you did not, I hope your Charity will induce you to make ſuch uſe of your light you have by it, into the Affairs of our Colledge, as to mediate for us with His Majeſty, to be reſtored to his good opinion, as the only thing which is deſired by us, who are zealous, above all earthly things, for his Felicity and Glory.

We are not conſcious of ever giving His Majeſty any juſt offence, as it will appear with you, when you ſhall have peruſed the encloſed Papers; and have therefore no reaſon to fear the iſſuing out of a Quo Warranto againſt us. And though you are pleaſed to apprehend it, no inſtance can be given of a Judgment againſt the Crown, upon the proceſs of that Writ: The Learned in the Law tell me, there is nothing more common, and whereof many Caſes are reported by Kellaway, from Page 128, to Page 152, of his Book of Reports: And I think I have heard of a Caſe in Coke's ninth Report of the Abbeſs of Prata Marcella, which evinces the ſame; wherein alſo there is a recital of Judgment given againſt Roger Mortimer for the King, upon a Quo Warranto in Court of Eyre, revers'd for Errour in the King's Bench. We hope though we have many Statutes, it will be found that we have not wilfully tranſgreſs'd any of them, for all our preſent Troubles are derived to us from our adherence to them, and our fear to offend God, and blemiſh our Conſciences, by departing from them.

His Majeſty is intentionally righteous and juſt in all his Proceedings, He will never knowingly invade any Man's Property, as He was ſolemnly pleaſed to declare in his Excellent Speech made in Council, on the 6th of February, 1684, at his Acceſſion to the Government; which is again repeated in His gracious Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, of the 4th of April laſt paſt. It is upon His ſacred, inviolable, and Royal Word and Promiſe, we muſt depend; not doubting but when His Majeſty ſhall be rightly inform'd of our Caſe, in reference to both His Mandatory Letters to our Colledge, His Anger towards us will be totally extinguiſhed. Our compliance to the firſt (which was Mr. Farmer's Election) would have involv'd us in the guilt of manifeſt Perjury; and the wilful violation of our Statutes: And we are confident his Majeſty would never have granted the ſecond on the behalf of my Lord Biſhop of Oxon, if he had known we were then poſſeſs'd of a Preſident duly Elected according to our Statutes, and confirmed by the Biſhop of Winton, our Viſitor (as the Statutes require); and if he is thereby inveſted with a Lay Freehold under the protection of his Majeſties Laws, which we cannot undo or attempt to invade, without ſubjecting our ſelves to Suits at Law, and doing an apparent injury to the Preſident, who doth not conceive himſelf to be affected with the Sentence of the Lords Commiſſioners, (to which he was no Party) whereby his Place is declared void, without any Citations, Summons, or hearing of him

I believe no inſtance can be given of a Quo Warranto brought againſt a Colledge or Hall in the Univerſities, from the firſt foundation of them to this day, or any other Eccleſiaſtical Corporation: for the Abuſes of ſome Conſtitutions or Franchiſes in them, and the Miſdemeanours of particular Perſons will not deſtroy a Colledge: And if the Corporation of a Colledge ſhould be diſſolv'd, the Revenues therefore will return to the Founders Heirs, and not devolve to the Crown. And if our Colledge muſt be the firſt Example of that kind, we ſhall be better juſtified by the ſtrict Obſervation of our Statutes, (at leaſt to God and our own Conſciences) than we could have been by a voluntary and deliberate Breach of them.

It was Loyalty and Conſcience, that in the Reign of King Charles the Firſt, made thirty four of our forty Fellows, and moſt of the Scholars of our Foundation, rather quit their Places, and embrace Miſery and Ruine, than to ſubmit to the Government of the Uſurpers of the Crown. And in Monmouth's Rebellion, the ſame Inducements prevailed on us to raiſe a Company at our own charges, under the command of one of our Fellows, to engage againſt him. And we hope that theſe and many other the like inſtances, which may be given of the Loyalty and Zeal of our Society to the Royal Family, will be received as Evidences thereof, and that our good and gracious Soveraign will not exclude us from that Liberty of Conſcience, which he was pleas'd to extend to all his Subjects.

SIR, I am your moſt Affectionate Servant.

Some QUERIES ſent to the Fellows of Magdalen Colledge from Windſor, September 15. 1687.

Firſt, WHether, waving your Election of the Biſhop of Oxon, you cannot, without violence to your Conſcience, ſignifie to his Majeſty, or the above Reverend Biſhop, your willingneſs to admit the Lord Biſhop Preſident of your Colledge?

Secondly, Whether it be not more Intereſt to the Proteſtant Religion, to have a ſuſpected Popiſh Preſident, than to have all the places of the Colledge refilled by the Kings ſole Authority with Popiſh Novices and Prieſts?

Thirdly,

Thirdly, Whether you are not under a miſtake, in thinking you ſhould render your ſelves more acceptable to the Proteſtant Nobility and Gentry, by your being turned out of your Fellowſhips by Injuſtice and Violence, as you conceive; or rather will not they be very cautious how they receive you into their Families, for fear of giving of Offence?

Fourthly, Whether his Majeſty, as Supream Viſitor of the Univerſity, cannot place or diſplace there ad libitum; or whether you have a right notion of the Proceedings which have been practiſed againſt you? Whether you ſuppoſe that the Lords Commiſſioners proceeded againſt you as Lords Commiſſioners, or Viſitors? Which Notion, I am ſure, will overthrow ſome bodies Plea and exception againſt their Authority.

Fifthly, Whether you acted like men skilled in buſineſs, when you refuſed Mr. Pen's Mediation, who you may be ſure had good Authority for what he did? You could not but know that man, and therefore muſt needs be forearmed againſt any Wiles that could be offered to you. Whether an unanimous Subſcription for an Expedient, (which indeed I think you ought not to refuſe in good manners, ſince the King was pleaſed to propoſe it) preſented to his Majeſty by Mr. Pen, or another Favourite, would prevent the deſtruction of the beſt Foundation in Europe?

Laſtly, Whether you be not drawn beyond your Knowledge, by ſome hotheaded Adviſers, which never conſider the preſent ſtate of his Majeſty's Court of Juſtice?

An Anſwer to ſeveral Queries to the Vice-Preſident and Fellows of Magdalen Colledge in Oxon, ſent from Windſor, dated the 25th of September, 1687.

To the Firſt. WE cannot, without violence to our Conſciences, and deliberate Perjury, admit any perſon to be Preſident of our Colledge, that is not elected thereunto, and qualified according to our Statutes; whereby the Biſhop of Oxon is in no ſort capable; nor is there any Memorial in all our Regiſter of any admiſſion of a Preſident without Election, but of one Dr. Nicholas Bond, whoſe caſe was as followeth, (viz) Upon the death of Dr. Lawrence Humphreys, about the 30th or 32th of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, the Queen recommended Dr. Bond (being a Fellow of our Colledge) to be Elected Preſident. Many of the Fellows inclin'd in their judgment to Elect one Smith (another of the Fellows) and at their meeting for Election, the Contention was ſo great, that they roſe without Electing, and the Obſtinacy continued till the place became laps'd: And there being no proviſion in our Statutes to direct us what to do in ſuch a Caſe, the Queen, by her Letters Patents, Conſtituted the ſaid Dr. Bond to be Preſident; and therein declared, That her Majeſty being inform'd that the Fellows had neglected to make Election of a Preſident in due time, (as their Statutes required) and thoſe Statutes having made no proviſion for ſuch an Omiſſion, She, out of her Princely care for the place, and indulgence for thoſe perſons who had been guilty of that neglect, did by advice of the Biſhop of Winton, their Viſitor, Conſtitute Dr. Bond their Preſident; with proteſtation nevertheleſs, that She did not thereby pretend to ſuperſede their Statutes, or invade their Right of Election, which was thereby inveſted in them, but took this courſe as the only means left to ſupply their Defect of Election.

To the Second. We muſt not make our ſelves guilty of deliberate Perjury, for any conſiderations whatſoever, both in reſpect to our Conſciences, and that we may not by ſuch a Breach upon our Statutes, expoſe our Conſtitution to a Forfeiture, nor do Evil that Good may come on it.

To the Third. We conceive we ſhall be more acceptable to all good men, for acting honeſtly according to our Conſciences, than for voluntarily and unjuſtly departing from our Right.

To the Fourth. We pretend not to make it a Queſtion, whether his Majeſty, by his Authority Royal as Supream Viſitor, can grant a Commiſſion for Viſitation of any Colledge that has a Local Viſitor by their Statutes, and are not Royal Foundations: But we are adviſed, that no Commiſſion can be granted under the Great Seal to Viſitors, to place and diſ-place Members of Colledges (whoſe places are Freeholds) ad libitum, or diſcretum; but they muſt proceed according to legal diſcretion, that is, by the Laws and Statutes of the Land, and the Local Statutes of the Colledge. And places concern'd for the Headſhips and Fellowſhips of Colledges, are Temporal Poſſeſſions, and cannot be impeach'd by Summary Proceedings. One Dr. Thomas Loveney Preſident of our Colledge, was deprived in Queen Elizabeth's time, by the Biſhop of Winton the Legal Viſitor thereof Eſtabliſh'd by Royal Authority, and he appeal'd to the Queen; but by the advice of all the Judges, it was held, that that the Queen by her Authority, as Supream Viſitor, could not meddle in it, but he muſt bring Weſtminſter-Hall, becauſe Deprivation was a Cauſe meerly temporal. The King has a great Authority Spiritual as well as Temporal; but no Commiſſioners can be authorized by the Crown to proceed in any Commiſſion under the Great Seal or otherwiſe, but according to Law; in Spiritual Cauſes by the Canon Law, in Temporal by the other Laws, and Statutes of the Land. And wherein the proceedings in ſome Commiſſions are directed to be ſummarie & de plano, &c. thoſe words are to be applied to ſhorten the Forms of Proceſs, and not for matter of Judgment: for Magna Charta provides for our Spiritual Liberties, as well as our Temporal.

An Account of the Viſitation of St. Mary Magdalen Colledge in Oxon.

ON October 19*th*, Mr. Atterbury the King's Meſſenger fix'd a Citation on the Colledge and Chappel-Doors, requiring the Pretended Preſident and Fellows, and other Members of the Colledge to appear before the Lords Commiſſioners, Biſhop of Cheſter, Lord Chief Juſtice Wright, and Mr. Baron Jenner, in the Chappel, at Nine of the Clock on Friday Morning, November 21.

On Thurſday the Lords Commiſſioners came to Oxon, attended with three Troops of Horſe which Quarter there.

On Friday-Morning at Nine they went into the Chappel; the Preſident and Fellows thinking they had deſign'd to ſit in the Quire, made no preparation of Seats in the outward Chappel; upon which their Lordſhips adjourned to the Hall, where their Commiſſion was then read, which which in general was the ſame with the former: Theſe three being added to the other Lords Commiſſioners, and particularly impower'd to viſit Magdalen Colledge only.

This done, the Names of the Preſident and Fellows were called over, Dr. Hough being firſt called. All in Town appeared, (except Dr. Fairfax) and excuſes were made for the abſent.

Then a Speech was made by the Biſhop of Cheſter, and in it his Lordſhip was Severe againſt Diſloyalty and Diſobedience. He urg'd that the Church of England taught an unconditionate and unlimited Obedience; He ſpake of the Kings Gracious Promiſes to Arch-Biſhops and Biſhops, &c. which had deſerved thanks on bended Knees, notwithſtanding the Oxon Reaſons to the contrary, which they knew beſt who was the Author thereof. He told them that it could not be expected, but that the King would give all incouragement to thoſe of his own Religion, which could be done without ſeverity and cruelty which His Majeſty abhorr'd, and without injuring the Church of England, which was at preſent eſtabliſh'd by Law: He told them that this Corporation as well as others were the Creatures of the Crown; and that it was inſolence in their Local Statutes to ſpurn againſt their Maker.

That their Diſtempers had brought this Viſitation upon them, the Conſequences of which might be ill to the Church and Univerſities: That however they might eſcape in this World, theſe Sins were to be accounted for above their other Sins in the next. He Exhorted them by the Bowels of Chriſt to conſider theſe things: He told them, that the Eyes of the World were upon them, and they ought to take care that their Practices might not influence their deluded admirers. In ſhort, the whole deſign of the Speech ſeem'd to be promiſes and threats, to aim at the inducing them to a compliance.

The Court was then Adjourned till Two in the Afternoon.

In the Afternoon were called over the Names of the Demys, Chaplains, Clerks, Choriſters, and Colledge Servants. The Preſident then interpos'd, deſiring leave to ſpeak before they proceeded any further, which being granted, he told their Lordſhips: That Preſident. THE time betwixt your Citation and Appearance was ſo ſhort; that the Society had not time to adviſe with the Council how to behave themſelves on this Occaſion: Therefore deſired of your Lordſhips a Copy of the Commiſſion, and time to conſider of it.

Biſhop Ch. 'Tis upon Record, you may have it above.

Pr. Is it the ſame the other Lords Commiſſioners had?

Biſh. Ch. Yes for the moſt part it is.

Pr. Then my Lord, I do aſſure you (and will make Oath if you pleaſe) that I have often endeavoured to get a Copy of it, and could not procure it.

L. C. J. Have you not heard it Read, or will you hear it again?

Pr. I am not capable of making a Judgment of it my ſelf, but it is poſſible there may be Errours and Defects in't, ſuch as the Society may make uſe of to their own advantage, and I am confident it is neither his Majeſties intention nor your Lordſhips we ſhould be debar'd from it.

A Copy was then denyed.

Biſh. Ch. Dr. Hough, will you ſubmit to this Viſitation?

Pr. My Lords, I do declare here in the name of my ſelf, and the greater part of the Fellows; that we ſubmit to the Viſitation, as far as it is conſiſtent with the Laws of the Land, and the Statutes of the Colledge, and no further. I deſire your Lordſhips that it may be Recorded.

This was twice Repeated.

L. C. J. You cannot imagine that we Act contrary to the Laws of the Land, and as to the Statutes the King has diſpenſed with them: Do you think we come here to act againſt Laws?

Pr. It does not become me (my Lords) to ſay ſo, but I'll be plain with your Lordſhips; I find that your Commiſſion gives you Authority to change and alter the Statutes, and make new ones as you think fit: Now my Lords we have an Oath, not only to obſerve theſe Statutes (laying his hand on the Book) but to admit of no new ones, or alterations in theſe; This muſt be my behaviour here, I muſt admit of no alteration from it, and by the Grace of God never will.

Biſh. Ch. Do you obſerve all theſe Statutes?

Pr. Yes, my Lord, I hope we do.

Biſh. Ch. You have a Statute there for Maſs, why don't you read Maſs?

Pr. My Lord, the matter of this Oath is unlawful; and in ſuch a Caſe, no Man is oblig'd to obſerve an Oath: Beſides, the Statute is taken away by the Laws of the Land.

Biſh. Ch. By what Law?

Dr. Stafford. By that which obliges to ſay Common-Prayer.

Biſh. Cheſter. What, the Act of Uniformity? I have often conſidered it, and don't remember one word of Maſs in it.

Dr. Staff. But that obliges us to uſe the Liturgy of the Church of England, in all Collegiate Churches and Chappels. And, I hope, my Lords, you do not imagine that we can ſay Common-Prayer and Maſs together.

Biſh. Ch. Do you allow that Act of Parliament can free you from the obligation of a Statute?

Pr. I do not ſay, but that his Majeſty may alter our Statutes, nor do I know but a Parliament may do the ſame; I diſpute not their Power: only this, my Lord, I ſay, that I who already have taken an Oath to obſerve theſe Statutes as they now ſtand, and am ſworn not to admit of any change or alteration by any Authority whatſoever, [And then turning to the Oath where they were to obſerve thoſe Statutes and no other, according to the Literal and Grammatical ſence, &c. and reading it to their Lordſhips.] can obey none: But then thoſe who come after ſuch Limitations and Reſtrictions are made, are not oblig'd to obſerve 'em; and that, my Lords is our Caſe as to the Statutes of the Maſs.

Then the Decree of the 22*d* of June was read, declaring the Preſident's Election Null and Void.

Biſh. Ch. Did you know of this Commiſſion, &c.?

Pr. Yes, my Lord, I have heard of it.

Biſh. Ch. Why then did you not obey it?

Pr. I was never Cited before their Lordſhips, nor was either heard by them in Perſon or Proxy; xy; and I think I am the only inſtance that is extant, of any Man that was ever depriv'd of a Freehold, wherein he was legally inveſted, and of which he was quietly poſſeſs'd, without being Summon'd or Heard.

Here mention was made of Dr. Fairfax's Suſpenſion.

Pr. My Lord, he is abſent, and if your Lordſhips give me leave, I have ſomewhat to ſay on his account; your Lordſhips may pleaſe to obſerve in that Decree, that the reaſon given, why Dr. Fairfax was Suſpended from his Fellowſhip, was, becauſe had not obeyed his Majeſty's Command, in not Electing Mr. Anthony Farmer Preſident of the Colledge: Now the Charge of Immorality given in againſt Mr. Farmer by the Colledge-Delegates was made out, and their Lordſhips fully ſatisfied in it, on the 29*th* of July, notwithſtanding which, this Decree for Suſpenſion of Dr. Fairfax, was fix'd on the Colledge Gates, Auguſt 2*d*.

Biſh. Ch. The King hath for the moſt part recommended to the Preſidentſhip of this Colledge.

Pr. I am the Twentieth Preſident, and only four of that number have been recommended by the Kings and Queens of England, whereof three were every were qualified for that Office.

Biſh. Ch. Who were thoſe?

Pr. My Lord, there was one in the time of Edward the Sixth, one in Queen Elizabeth's, and two in the late King's Reign.

Biſh. Ch. Was there never a one in King Charles the Firſt's Reign?

Pr. Not that we know of.

Biſh. Ch. What think you of Dr. Oliver?

Pr. It doth not appear to us, my Lord, that he ever had a Mandate.

Biſh. Ch. But it appears to us, and that I will bring you one to ſwear, that he had a Mandate.

Pr. The truth is, we have loſt the Regiſter of Dr. Oliver's Election and Admiſſion; the Regiſter betwixt the Year 1640, or thereabouts, and 60 being taken away by thoſe who were turn'd out of the Colledge at that time; but I believe, my Lord, we are able to prove that he was Elected and Admitted according to the Statute.

Biſh. Ch Was Dr. Clarke a Statutable Perſon?

Pr. Yes, my Lord.

Biſh. Ch. Do not the Statutes require that he ſhould be in Orders? was he in Orders?

Pr. My Lord, the Statutes only require that he ſhould be Doctor of Divinity, Phyſick, Law, or Maſter of Arts: There is indeed one Statute which ſays, The Preſident or Seniour Fellow ſhould Read Prayers upon ſuch certain Days; from whence we conclude, that the Founder ſuppos'd we might have a Preſident that might not be in Orders; and in ſuch a Caſe he takes care that the Seniour Fellow ſhould do his Duty.

Mr. Char. My Lord, will you be pleaſed to ask Dr. Hough, whether Dr. Clark was Married or not?

Pr. No, Sir, he was a Widower.

Then a Petition was read from the Society to his Majeſty, ſigned the 9th of April, and preſented the 10th to the Earl of Sunderland, by the hands of Dr. Thomas Smith and Captain Bagſhaw, wherein 'twas ſet forth, that having heard that his Majeſty would recommend Mr. Farmer to them, a Perſon uncapable; they did humbly beſeech him, either to leave them to a free Election, or to recommend a qualified Perſon.

Biſh. Ch. Was this the Petition?

Anſwer. Yes.

Biſh. Ch. Why then did you not ſtay for his Majeſty's Anſwer?

Pr. My Lord, We did till the very laſt Day wherein we are limited to finiſh the Election; and my Lord Sunderland returned in the King's Name, this Anſwer, that His Majeſty expected to be obeyed. Now, my Lord, we did no longer defer the Election, becauſe our Statutes enjoyn us within ſuch a time, and we ſtaid to the utmoſt. Nor could we chuſe the Perſon his Majeſty did recommend, knowing him to be ſo unfit, as we afterwards made him appear to be. The Society was therefore to proceed to the Election of another Perſon, and did agree on ſuch as you ſee.

Biſh. Ch. A Mandate always implies an Inhibition.

Pr. My Lord, I cannot conceive that.

Biſh. Ch. But I can; and if you queſtion it, here's the King's Council ready to argue it.

Pr. My Lord, Whilſt the Perſon his Majeſty recommends appears duly qualified for the place, it ſeems indeed to imply that we ſhould not proceed to the Election of another; but when he is known to be utterly uncapable, it ſeems to be the ſame as if there were no Letter at all.

Some other things and queſtions leſs material were put, and then the Court was Adjourned to Saturday the 22*d*. at Nine in the Morning, to the common Room, the Hall being (as they ſaid) too publick and incommodious.

Saturday, October 22d. 1687.

As ſoon as their Lordſhips met in the common Room, and the Society before them, the firſt Word was Withdraw; and after a little time, the Preſident was called in alone.

Biſh. Ch. DO you ſubmit to the Decree of the Commiſſioners, whereby the Election is declared Null?

Pr. As to that Decree of the Lords above, it is a Nullity in its ſelf from the beginning to the end, as it relates to me, I never having been Cited, nor having ever appeared before them, either in Perſon or Proxy: Beſides, my Cauſe it ſelf was never before them; their Lordſhips never inquiring or asking one queſtion concerning the Legality or Statutableneſs of my Election: for which reaſons (as I am informed) that Decree was of no Validity againſt me, according to methods in the Civil Law: But if it were, I am poſſeſſed of a Free hold, according to the Laws of England, and the Statutes of the Society, having been Elected as Unanimouſly, and with as much Formality as any one of my Predeceſſors Preſidents of this Colledge, and afterwards Admitted by the Lord Biſhop of Winton, our Viſitor, as the Statutes of the Colledge require; and therefore I can't ſubmit to that Sentence, becauſe I think I cannot be depriv'd of my Free-hold, but by courſe of Law in Weſtminſter Hall, or by being ſome ways incapacitated by the Founder's Statutes.

Biſh. Ch. Will you deliver up the Keys of the Preſident's Office and Lodgings, to the uſe of that Perſon whom the King has appointed your Preſident, as the Statutes require?

Pr.

Pr. I will immediately do it, if that appear.

Biſh. Ch. Turn to that part of the Preſident's Oath where he promiſeth to ſubmit quietly if he ſhall be Expelled, either for his own Fault vel ob aliam Cauſam.

Pr. My Lord, that Statute only concerns me, if I am Expelled for any fault committed by me.

Biſh. Ch. Vel ob aliam cauſam?

Pr. Then, my Lord, to be ſhort, here is no cauſe at all.

Biſh. Ch. I ask you again, Will you deliver up the Keys to the Preſident whom His Majeſty hath appointed?

Pr. There neither is nor can be a Preſident ſo long as I live, and obey the Statutes of the Colledge; and therefore I do not think fit to give up my Right, the Keys and Lodgings.

Biſh. Ch. We may demand them of you as Viſitors.

Pr. My Lords, we never deliver up the Keys to the Biſhop of Winton; and we own no greater Viſitatorial than his, he hath the King's Authority. 'Tis by Vertue of a Royal Charter that we live together, and enjoy the benefit of this Place, that impower'd our Founder to give us a Rule, and obliged us by Oath to act ſuitable unto it: and the Biſhop of Winton is hereby conſtituted to be our Viſitor; and all this we own from the King's Authority. The Biſhop of Winton is our ordinary Viſitor; the King (I preſume) our extraordinary. But your Lordſhips know it hath been controverted, whether the King can viſit a private Colledge or not? The Authority of the Preſident is made by delivering up the Statute-Book, and Keys; and therefore I look upon them as an eſſential Badge of my Office.

But I humbly beg that I may ask your Lordſhips one Queſtion.

Your Lordſhip is pleaſed to demand of me to give up theſe things: Does your Lordſhip own my Right? For if not, what is it your Lordſhips would have me give up?

Biſh. Ch. No, we look upon you as an Intruder.

Pr. If I am an Intruder, the Biſhop of Winton made me one, and I thank God for it. My Lords, the time we have been allowed for this appearance, has been very ſhort, but one day betwixt it and the Citation: We are Men ignorant in the Laws, and I muſt confeſs it of my ſelf in particular, that I have endeavoured to give your Lordſhips a plain ſatisfactory Reply to ſuch Queſtions as your Lordſhips have been pleaſed to put to me. It is very probable that through ignorance and inadvertency I may expreſs my ſelf unwarily: If ſo I beſeech your Lordſhip let no advantage be taken of it, my intention has been always to expreſs my ſelf with all imaginable Duty to the King, and Reſpects to your Lordſhips. If I have done otherwiſe, I beſeech your Lordſhips Candour in a favourable Interpretation of what I ſaid, that nothing may be taken amiſs, where all was dutifully intended. And now my Lords, thus far have I appear'd before you as Judges; I now addreſs to you as Men of Honour, and Gentlemen, I beſeech you to repreſent me as dutiful to His Majeſty to the laſt Degree, as I always will be, ſo far as my Conſcience permits me, to the laſt Moment of my Life; and when I am diſpoſſeſt here, I hope your Lordſhips will interceed, that I may no longer lie under His Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, or be frown'd upon by my Prince, which is the greateſt Affliction can befal me.

Upon this the Preſident was ordered to withdraw, and after a little time, he and the Fellows were called in again. Then the Biſhop repeated this Queſtion.

Biſh. Ch. Dr. Hough, Will you deliver up the Keys, and quiet Poſſeſſion of the Lodgings, to the Perſon whom His Majeſty has appointed Preſident? To which no Anſwer was return'd. The Biſhop repeated a ſecond time.

Pr. My Lords, I have neither ſeen nor heard any thing to induce me to it.

Biſh. Ch. Dr. Hough, Will you deliver up the Keys and quiet Poſſeſſion of the Lodgings, to the Perſon whom His Majeſty has appointed Preſident?

Whereupon the King's Proctor ſtood up and accuſed Dr. Hough of Contumacy; then the Biſhop of Cheſter admoniſh'd him in theſe Words, three times.

Biſh. Ch. Dr. Hough, I admoniſh you to depart peaceably out of the Lodgings, and to act no longer as Preſident, or pretended Preſident of this College.

Which being ſo done, they ſtruck his Name out of the Book, and admoniſh'd the Fellows, and others of the Society, that they ſhould no longer ſubmit to his Authority.

Saturday, October the 22d, 1687. Oxon.

Dr. Fairfax's Caſe before the Commiſſioners.

AT the firſt Seſſions Doctor Fairfax purpoſely abſented himſelf; but Mr. Atterbury making Affidavit he was in Town, and that he adviſed him to appear, the Doctor accordingly did ſo the next day. The Doctor being called in alone, and the Doors immediately ſhut, he beg'd of their Lordſhips ſome Company might be let in; becauſe, as all had obſerved, the Biſhop in his Speech, at the opening their Commiſſion, promiſed to tranſact every thing in the Face of the World. The Biſhop complained of the Crowd. The Doctor then deſired to fetch in but Two or Three, at length but One, and him at the Door, viz. The College Steward, a Publick Notary.

Bar. Jen. You muſt not think to preſcribe to the Court.

Biſh. Ch. What's the Cauſe of your Contempt, in not appearing at either Seſſions Yeſterday?

Dr. Fair. No Contempt, my Lord, but for theſe enſuing Reaſons.

Firſt, I thought my Suſpenſion above had eaſed me of that trouble. The Doctor tendring a Copy of it, which was read by the Commiſſioners. The Doctor inſiſted very much on the Reaſons their Lordſhips at White-Hall gave for his Suſpenſion, (viz.) For not obeying His Majeſty, in Electing Mr. Farmer, he tendring a Copy of Articles made good againſt him; and yet their Lordſhips ordered his Suſpenſion to be fix'd on the College-Gates five Days after that famous Hearing. Second Reaſon for his Non-appearance, that upon the firſt day of the enſuing Term, he intended to meet the Lord Chief Juſtice, at his Court of King's Bench, for relief againſt the Sentence, his Fellowſhip being a Freehold, witneſs Coveny's Caſe.

Biſh. Ch. You will find but little Favour there.

Dr. Fair. My Lord, in Courts of Judicature, I only expect Juſtice, and turning to the Lord Chief Juſtice. I have my ſelf ſaid he, been above four Years in all the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall, and found excellent Juſtice, and I will ſee how it is now.

L. Ch. Juſt. You ſhall have Juſtice.

Dr. Fair. But your Lordſhip may ſave me the labour of two Journies and my Charges, by improving your Lordſhips deſerved Intereſt with my Lords Commiſſioners there, and get them now to take off my Suſpenſion: It is ill travelling at this time of Year; and beſides I am not rich.

Bar. Jen. To ſue in Weſtminſter-Hall requires a Purſe.

Dr. Fair. My Lord, I did not ſay I was poor.

L. Ch. Juſt. You muſt make your Supplication and Submiſſion to the King.

Dr. Fair. My Lord, they tell me that this buſineſs lyes in your Lordſhip's Court, and only there, (beſides the trouble I am otherwiſe to give your Lordſhip) What a noiſe will the cauſe make that Dr. Fairfax is ſuſpended for this very reaſon, (viz.) not obeying the King in Electing Anthony Farmer, ſuch a Virtuoſo, and under Correction, your Lordſhips are obliged to take off my Suſpenſion, to take off the ſhame from that Body, whoſe number by a common Adjunct you your ſelves have lately increas'd.

Bar. Jen. We muſt not endure theſe Reflections on the Court.

Biſh. But will you ſubmit to this Viſitation?

Then Dr. Fairfax read a Paper ſubſcribed by him, Dated October the 22d, in theſe Words: 'My Lords, I have been Summon'd, and ap-'peared in this Cauſe before the Lords Eccle-'ſiaſtical at White Hall, with whom your Lord-'ſhips are now joyn'd in Commiſſion; and 'then gave in my Anſwer: I have nothing to 'add to it, and find no reaſon to retract it'.

Henry Fairfax.

Biſh. Will you admit of the Biſhop of Oxford?

Dr. Fairfax. I am ſuſpended.

Biſh. Have you done no Collegiate Act ſince your Suſpenſion?

Dr. Fair. My Lord, I have gone into the Hall, and laid in my Chamber: I did not think their Lordſhips, when they ſuſpended me, ever intended that I ſhould not eat, drink or ſleep.

Biſh. If your Suſpenſion was off, would you ſubmit to the Biſhop of Oxford:

Dr. Fair. Truly my Lord, I cannot do it.

Then all the Fellows were called into Court.

The Preſident being withdrawn, the Biſhop put the Queſtion to all the Fellows, (viz.) Whether they would aſſiſt at the Admiſſion of the Biſhop of Oxford to be inſtalled Preſident by vertue of the King's Mandate? To which was anſwered by all the Fellows, to this Effect: (except Dr. Pudſey, and Dr. Tho. Smith, who anſwered doubtfully, and Chernock that he would aſſiſt) That they were under Oaths to the contrary, and therefore could not do it.

Then all were ordered to withdraw; and Dr. Pudſey being called in alone, they asked him concerning the Manner and Form of Inſtalling a Preſident; which he inſtructed them in.

The Court Adjourn'd till Two in the Afternoon.

AS ſoon as they met, a Letter from the Earl of Sunderland to Dr. Pudſey, was read, dated the 2d of Auguſt, ſignifying, That the Society in anſwer to His Majeſty's Letter commanding them to admit the Biſhop of Oxford, agreed unanimouſly in this Anſwer, That the place was full. Their Lordſhips were pleaſed to ask the Fellows ſingly, Whether that was their Anſwer? And as many as were there, owned that it was.

During this Examination, the Preſident came into Court, and having waited until it was ended, and their Lordſhips at a Pauſe, he made his Application to them: 'My Lords, if your 'Lordſhips pleaſe to give me leave, I would 'gladly ſpeak a few Words'. They were all pleaſed to put off their Hats, and ſay he might. Whereupon he ſaid, 'My Lords, you were 'pleaſed this Morning, in purſuance to a De-'cree of the Lords Commiſſioners at London, 'to deprive me of my place of Preſident of 'this College, and to ſtrike my Name out of 'the Buttery Book: I do hereby proteſt againſt 'all your Proceedings, and againſt all that you 'have done, or hereafter ſhall do in Prejudice 'of me and my Right, as illegal, unjuſt and 'null: and therefore I appeal to my Sovereign 'Lord the King in his Courts of Juſtice'. Upon which the Strangers and young Scholars in the Room gave a Hum; which ſo much incenſed their Lordſhips, that notwithſtanding all the Proteſtations the Preſident and Fellows could make, the Preſident in particular offering to purge himſelf by Oath, that he was no way acceſſary to or abetting of it, and declared that he was heartily aſhamed and troubled at it; yet the Lord Chief Juſtice was not to be pacified, but charging it upon the Preſident, bound him in a Bond of 1000 l. and Security to the like value, to make his Appearance at the King's-Bench-Bar, the 12th of November.

After this, was read the Anſwer the Fellows returned to His Majeſty upon his Command to them upon the 4th of September, to elect the Biſhop of Oxford: the Anſwer was under the hand of a publick Notary, ſubſcribed by all the Fellows then preſent, except Mr. Chernock. The Biſhop of Cheſter was pleaſed to charge the Fellows of Unmannerlineſs, for ſending ſuch an Anſwer to their Prince after ſuch a manner.

So they Adjourned till Tueſday the 25th, at Eight in the Morning.

Tueſday the 25th of October.

WHen the Court met, Dr. Stafford offered a Paper in anſwer to what was objected on Friday, that a Mandate implied an Inhibition; which their Lordſhips having peruſed, would not ſuffer to be read publickly, but askt the Fellows whether they would ſign it, bidding them to do it at their Peril.

Then the Fellows had leave to withdraw into the Hall, and not being ſatisfied that it was neceſſary to ſign a Plea, which their Lordſhips refuſed to have argued, they returned the Paper into the Court, ſubſcribed only by Dr. Fairfax and Dr. Stafford. The latter after ſome debate, deſired to withdraw, but Dr. Fairfax ſtood to it.

A Copy of Dr. Stafford's and Dr. Fairfax's Plea.

To the Right Reverend and Right Honourable His Majeſty's Commiſſioners for the viſiting of S. Mary Magdalen College in Oxford.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips,

ON Friday laſt in the Afternoon, you ſeem'd to inſiſt very much on this, (viz.) That His Majeſty in commanding the Fellows of the ſaid College to Elect Mr. Farmer Preſident, did thereby inhibit them to Elect any other Perſon whatſoever; which has not yet been made appear to be Law, either out of the Books of Civil, Canon or Common Law. Neither is it agreeable to Reaſon, that a Command to Elect a Perſon uncapable, ſhould include in it an Obligation not to Elect a Perſon capable, that being a kind of Contradiction in terminis. Yet this being granted, it cannot in the leaſt affect the ſaid Fellows, or invalidate their Election of Dr. Hough, notwithſtanding His Majeſty's Mandate in behalf of Mr. Farmer, who being incapable of the place, the Fellows cannot be ſaid to be guilty of any Diſobedience or Diſloyalty, in proceeding to the Election of another Perſon who was qualified according to Statute, being forced to make an Election. For they are obliged by the Statutes of their College, (when call'd together) to Elect a Preſident, or any Officer under pain of perpetual Expulſion from the College, to meet and make an Election; which Puniſhment they incur ipſo facto, who either refuſe to meet when ſo call'd, or being met, to nominate or elect a Perſon into the Office void, as appears by the Statutes of the ſaid College: Titulo de numero Scholarium & electione Præſidentis. Now according to the Founders direction in the ſaid Statute, on the 15th of April laſt, the Fellows were call'd together by the Vice Preſident to Elect a Preſident in the place of Dr. Clark deceas'd, and the Oath deſired to be taken before the Election was adminiſtred by the Vice Preſident to them, whereby they are oblig'd to nominate and Elect a Perſon that either is or has been Fellow of Magdalen College or New College in Oxon; which Oath when the Fellows had taken, it was not in their Power to Elect Mr. Farmer; and yet they were then oblig'd to make an Election, under pain of perpetual Amotion from the College, as appears by the forecited Statute. And it cannot be imagin'd that his moſt Sacred Majeſty did expect that the Fellows ſhould be either perjur'd, or forfeit their Right to their Fellowſhips, rather than diſobey his Command; His Majeſty having moſt graciouſly declar'd, that Conſcience ought not to be forced, and that none of his Subjects ſhould be moleſted in the Enjoyment of their Rights and Privileges, &c. Now that our Proceedings at the Election cannot lay any Imputation of our Diſobedience or Diſloyalty upon us, will thus be made appear: Either we had the Power to Elect a Preſident, or we had not; if we had not, to what end or purpoſe did His Majeſty command us to elect one? if we had, our Power was either reſtrain'd to Perſons ſo and ſo qualified, or we were at liberty to chuſe whom we pleas'd; but we could not do the latter, as appears by our Statutes: and therefore we could not Elect Mr. Farmer, being not inveſted with any Power to Elect a Perſon unqualified. And if we had ſo done, our Election would have been null and void in it ſelf, and the Perſon elected liable to be turn'd out by our Viſitor.

As for the Decree of His Majeſty's Commiſſioners (in purſuance of which your Lordſhips have admoniſh'd Doctor Hough to receed from the place of Preſident, and quietly to reſign the Keys of his Office, and have ſtruck his Name out of the College Book) we humbly conceive it to be null and void in it ſelf, to all intents and purpoſes, Dr. Hough being thereby depriv'd of Freehold for Life, (of which he was duly and legally poſſeſt) without ever being call'd to defend his Right, or any Miſdemeanour objected againſt him. Wherefore we humbly beg leave of your Lordſhips, that Dr. Hough may be permitted to defend his Right and Title to the Preſidentſhip at Common-Law, before any other Perſon is put in Poſſeſſion of the place.

Thomas Stafford.
Hen. Fairfax.

After this Mr. Wiggins, Chaplain to the Biſhop of Oxford was called in, who delivered a Paper impowering him as Proxy, to be Inſtalled Preſident for his Lord; which being read, together with the King's Mandate for the Biſhop of Oxon. The Queſtion was put to two or three of the Seniours, Whether they would aſſiſt at this Inſtalment? which they refuſing, the Court Adjourned to the Chappel, where the Biſhop of Cheſter put Mr. Wiggins into the Preſident's Stall, where he took the Oath which the Statutes enjoyn the Preſident at his Admiſſion, and the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; the latter of which he was ordered to take upon his Knees, which he accordingly did. Then their Lordſhips conducted him to the Door of the Preſident's Lodgings, where knocking three times, and the Door not being opened, they returned to the Common Room, and Commiſſion'd Atterbury and a Tipſtaff, to fetch a Smith to force it open, which was done, their Lordſhips being preſent all this while. None of the Fellows except Mr. Chernock aſſiſting, or being ſo much as preſent at either of theſe Performances. Then the Commiſſioners being returned to the Common Room, Dr. Fairfax deſired leave at their leiſures to ſpeak; which was granted.

Dr. Fair. My Lords, your Lordſhips have been doing of what I can by no means conſent to.

Biſh. Ch. You are big to be delivered of your own Deſtruction. Will you ſubmit to the Biſhop of Oxon, as now inſtalled Preſident, by vertue of the King's Mandate?

Dr. Fair. I will not; I cannot; becauſe we have a Statutable and legal Preſident already.

Then the ſame Queſtion was put to the Society, which being a buſineſs of Moment, they deſired time till the Afternon to conſider it.

Then the Court Adjourned till Three a Clock; at which time the Anſwer was given in by the Society, (except Dr. Fairfax, who had given his in the Morning) 'That whereas His 'Majeſty hath been pleaſed by his Royal Au-'thority to cauſe the Right Reverend Father in 'God, Samuel Biſhop of Oxon, to be Inſtalled 'Preſident; we whoſe Names are hereunto 'Subſcribed do ſubmit, as far as is lawful and 'agreeable to the Statutes of the College, and 'no

'no way prejudicial to the Right and Title of 'Dr. Hough'.

This Anſwer was accepted, except the laſt Clauſe; which the Lord Chief Juſtice, and Baron Jenner declared, as Judges, to be inſignificant, ſince nothing they could do, could any way invalidate Dr. Hough's Title, but left them ſtill at liberty to be Witneſſes for him, or any other way be ſerviceable to him in the recovery of his Right. Upon this Aſſurance, the Society was prevailed with to leave out the laſt Clauſe.

Then all were commanded to withdraw: And Dr. Fairfax being called in, the Biſhop asked him what he meant by his Paper abovementioned, dated October the 22d; and whether he did ſubmit to the Authority of the Court?

Dr. Fair. As I have denied it above, ſo I do here.

Then the Court was opened; and the Doctor complained before them all, that he was twice cloſeted, and being asked Whether he would obey the Court and Biſhop of Oxon? he plainly denied both. Upon which the Buttery-Book was called for, and the Biſhop of Cheſter commanded his Name to be ſtruck out: And this Sentence paſſed, viz.

Foraſmuch as you have denied the Authority of the Court, and refuſed to obey the Biſhop of Oxon, whom the King hath made your Preſident; and taken Commons after your Suſpenſion: We declare your place void, and command you quietly to depart the College within Fourteen Days.

Dr. Fair. My Lords, all the huge Calamities that have befallen me, are on the ſole account of a religious and conſciencious Obſervation of our pious Founder's Statutes; whoſe Bread I have eaten almoſt this Thirty Years.

L. C. J. No Speeches: beſides, if you have any Papers, inſtead of reading them, leave them in the Court.

Then with much ado, the Doctor prevailed with them to let him read his Proteſtation, which he left in the Court.——

'I Henry Fairfax, Fellow of St. Mary Magdalen 'College, do under my former Anſwer 'heretofore made, and to the intent it may ap- 'pear that I have not conſented, nor agreed to 'any thing done againſt me, and to my Pre- 'judice, I proteſt that your Sentence given 'here againſt me, is Lex nulla, and ſo far as it 'ſhall appear to be aliqua; I do ſay it is iniqua '& injuſta, and that therefore I do from it, as 'iniqua & injuſta, appeal to our Sovereign Lord 'the King, in his Courts of Juſtice, as the 'Laws, Statutes, and Ordinances of the Land 'will permit in that behalf. Subſcribed

October 25. 1687. Henry Fairfax.

This Proteſtation was over ruled, and a Copy of the Sentence denyed, though moſt earneſtly deſired at the inſtance of Dr. Hedges, and Mr. Vice Chancellor, two days after.

At the cloſe of the Seſſions, their Lordſhips declared, that they were very well ſatisfied with the Anſwer the Society had given them; and though before they had laid a Libel to their charge, yet that Night they declared, they had met with nothing from them but Civility, and that they ſhould receive the ſame from them; that they had ſhewn themſelves Men of excellent Tempers this day and before; and that they would repreſent it faithfully above to their advantage, and that if it any way lay in their power to ſerve them, they ſhould be very ready to do it.

Then they Adjourned till Wedneſday Morning, ordering them to bring in their Anſwer to the following Queſtions:

I. What Gifts and Proviſions have you for Entertainment of Strangers?

II. What is the Value of it?

III. How is it applied?

IV. And where is the Place of Entertainment?

Wedneſday, October the 26th, 1687.

IN the Morning they made it appear to their Lordſhips very ſatisfactorily, that they were obliged to give in Charity-Money, 2 l. 3 s. 4 d. and that beſides that, they gave communibus annis, almoſt 100 l. as appeared by a Paper they then delivered in. Upon this their Lordſhips were pleaſed to expatiate upon their generous Bounty and Liberality, ſaying the Complement of this account was groundleſs, and that it would induce the King to a better belief of them in all other matters.

Then a Petition of Dr. Rogers, late Organiſt, was given in, deſiring to be reſtored, which was read; but ſeveral Miſdemeanours being proved againſt him, it was thrown out; and he adviſed to reſt ſatisfied with 30 l. per annum, which the College had beſtowed on him when they turn'd him out of his Place.

Thurſday, October the 27th, 1687.

THis Morning they received a Liſt of Leaſes, &c. which had been renew'd two Years laſt paſt: Mr. Chernock, the new Convert, asked their Lordſhips, whether thoſe Leaſes ſtood good, which had been ſealed ſince Dr. Hough's Election? The Lord Chief Juſtice anſwer'd, Yes; for Corporations always ſtick by their Seals. Then their Lordſhips peruſed the College Regiſters, and finding nothing in them to object againſt, they were returned, and the Court Adjourned till the Afternoon: At which time their Lordſhips told them, That having received no Expreſs from above, as they expected, they would Adjourn till Friday at Eight in the Morning.

Friday, October the 28th, 1687.

THE Commiſſioners being ſeated, all were commanded to withdraw: then only the Fellows were called in, and the Biſhop of Cheſter ſaid they had repreſented them fairly to the King, but His Majeſty expected ſome farther Submiſſion, which they adviſed them to make, by acknowledging their Contempt to His Sacred Majeſty in Perſon, and to His Letters; and that they ſhould promiſe to behave themſelves Loyal for the future; and that they ſhould ſome ways own the Proceedings and Legality of the Court, and implore His Majeſty's Pardon, and lay themſelves at His Feet.

The Fellows making a little Pauſe, the Biſhop of Cheſter told them, they might word it themſelves; or if they thought fit Mr. Tucker ſhould aſſiſt them in a Form. Then all the Fellows withdrew into the Hall, and drew up the following Anſwer.

May

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips,

WE have endeavoured in all our Actions, to expreſs our duty in all humility to His Majeſty, and being conſcious to our ſelves, that in the whole Conduct of the Buſineſs before your Lordſhips, we have done nothing, but what our Oaths and Statutes indiſpenſably oblige us to, we cannot make any Declaration, whereby we acknowledge that we have done any thing amiſs, having acted according to the Principles of Loyalty and Obedience, ſo far as we could, without doing Violence to our Conſciences, or Prejudice to our Rights, (one of which we humbly conceive the Electing a Preſident to be) from which we are ſworn upon no account whatſoever to depart. We therefore humbly beg your Lordſhips to repreſent this favourably, with our utmoſt Duty to His Majeſty, whom God grant long and happily to Reign.

Upon their Lordſhips peruſing of the Anſwer, they expreſſed their diſlike of it, ſaying, It did not come up to the Addreſs ſent to His Majeſty at Bath which was read; to this it was replyed, That they hoped their Behaviour ſince, had been every way anſwerable to what they had therein promiſed. Then their Lordſhips ſaid, that it did not come up to what they delivered in on Tueſday.

Dr. Bayly. My Lords, we have acted conformable to our ſelves, and truly my Lords, I cannot poſſibly confeſs any Crime.

Biſh. We do not expect of you to confeſs any Capital Crime, only to make ſome Acknowledgement.

Mr. Fulham. My Lord, We were ordered to addreſs our ſelves, as having acted in Contempt of His Majeſties Authority, which my Lord, I look upon as ſo great a Crime; that on no account I would be guilty of it. My Lord, We have endeavoured to obey His Majeſty to the utmoſt of our Power, and ſeeing your Lordſhips were pleaſed to accept our Anſwer on Tueſday, I humbly conceive your Lordſhips Honour is engaged, that nothing further be required of us.

Biſh. You are a very forward Speaker, and abound in your own Senſe.

Mr. Fulham. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhip will give me leave to ſpeak, when our Fortunes are ſo conſiderably at Stake.——

Then Dr. Bayly deſired of their Lordſhips, to give him leave to explain what he meant by the word ſubmit in his Anſwer on Tueſday; becauſe (ſaith he) I hear your Lordſhips underſtood more than was meant, and leaſt your Lordſhips ſhould go away under a Miſtake, by the word ſubmit in the former Anſwer, I did not intend any future Obedience to the Biſhop of Oxford; but meant it in reference to the King's Authority, inaſmuch as I did not oppoſe or reſiſt the Biſhop of Oxford's Inſtalment.

Upon this, a freſh Queſtion was put to the Fellows, whether they would obey the Biſhop of Oxford as their Preſident in licitis & honeſtis; to which all except one or two anſwered, They could not obey the Biſhop of Oxford as their Preſident.

Then Mr. Fulham was particularly asked the Queſtion.

Mr. Fulham. Dr. Hough being duly Elected and admitted Preſident, doth thereby obtain a right, which I am not ſatisfied he hath any way forfeited, and therefore can obey no Perſon as Preſident.

Biſh. Ch. Will you obey the Biſhop of Oxford as in Poſſeſſion?

Mr. Fulham. I cannot, becauſe the Biſhop hath not lawful Poſſeſſion.

Then he was ask'd wherein?

Mr. Fulham. He hath not Poſſeſſion in due form of Law, nor by proper Officers: I am informed that the proper Officers to give Poſſeſſion of a Freehold, is the Sheriff with a Poſſe Comitatus.

L. C. J. Pray, who's the beſt Lawyer, you or I? Your Oxford Law is no better than your Oxford Divinity: If you have a mind to a Poſſe Comitatus, you may have one ſoon enough.——

Mr. Fulham. My Lords, I intended nothing but reſpect to your Lordſhips, and have endeavoured to ſpeak and behave my ſelf with due Reverence, and I hope your Lordſhips will put a favourable Conſtruction on what I ſaid.——

Then all were commanded to withdraw, and the Buttery-Book was called for, and after that, Mr. Fulham was ſent for in; and by the Biſhop of Cheſter ſuſpended as followeth.——

Biſh. of Ch. Mr. George Fulham, We have thought fit to ſuſpend you from the Profits of your Fellowſhip during His Majeſties Pleaſure, for your Contempt and opprobrious Language.——

Then they Adjourned till Wedneſday the 16th of November, ordering the abſent Fellows to be ſent for home againſt that time. So they immediately went for London.

Wedneſday November the 16*th*, 1687. at Nine in the Morning.

THE Lords Commiſſioners being ſate, the firſt thing they did, ſent for the Buttery-Book; then called for Mr. Joyner and Mr. Allibone, and entered them actual Fellows. The former in the room of Dr. Fairfax whom they had Expelled; the latter in place of Mr. Ludford lately deceaſed: All Oaths being diſpenſed with, beſides that of a Fellow. That done, the Fellows being called, and Reaſons given in for thoſe that were abſent. The Biſhop of Cheſter ſpoke a Speech to this Effect.

Gentlemen, your many Contempts and wilful Diſobedience, have occaſioned this Viſitation, which will end at laſt in your Ruin. This Society of yours has been long exerciſed in the Methods of quarrelling; has always been troubled with factious Spirits, and teſty Mutineers, ever ſince the Reſtoration of the late King: You have encourag'd Quarrels among your ſelves; Quarrels between your ſelves and Preſident; Quarrels, at length between your ſelves and Viſitor. For I have often heard your late Viſitor complain, that this Society was ever ſtocked with an unquiet and turbulent Generation. By theſe Steps from quarrelling with the Preſident and Viſitor, you have at laſt advanced to the higheſt pitch of Inſolence, to quarrel with your Prince, and affront His Sacred Majeſty. I endeavour'd before, at the opening our Commiſſion, to make you ſenſible of the Scandal that your Diſobedience will bring upon your Religion; how much you ſtain and diſhonour your liberal and ingenious Education, in this Society.

You cannot but know His Majeſty is your Supream Ordinary. You cannot but have read in Bracton, who was twenty Years Lord Chief Juſtice under King Henry the Third: Nemo preſumat de factis ejus diſquirere, ne dum contra factum ejus venire: All Diſobedience imploys Pride: For no Man can diſobey his Governor, but he who thinks himſelf wiſer. The Reputation and Honour of a Prince at home, and his his Reſpect abroad, are chief Standards of a Government. But theſe Pillars as much as in you lies, you have endeavour'd to ſhake. And unleſs His Majeſty's Honour and Right be vindicated by us, He can neither be feared at home, nor obſerved abroad. Your Puniſhment muſt be as publick as your Crime. It cannot be conceived but His Majeſty in Juſtice, in Honour, in Clemency, and in His Royal Tenderneſs, could have proceeded otherways than he has done. On the firſt of April it was publiſhed that Dr. Clark was dead: On the Eleventh a Mandamus was directed to you, for chuſing Mr. Farmer. On the Ninth you preſented a Petition to the Lord Preſident: wherein you laid your ſelves proſtrate at His Majeſties Feet, repreſenting to him the Incapacity of Mr. Farmer, deſiring the Benefits of His Gracious Declaration for preſerving your Rights and Properties, and beſeeching him to Nominate another Perſon qualified according to your Statutes, in the Election of whom you would ſhew your ready Obedience. So ſaid and ſo done, Gentlemen, had been very well.

But immediately after the delivery of the Petition, you not waiting His Majeſties Anſwer, proceeded on April the 15th to an Election of Dr. Hough; ſo that by this Act, which was plainly contrary to His Majeſty's Authority, whoſe Mandate did certainly imply an Inhibition; you directly confronted your former Promiſes of ready Obedience, and were reſolved to give the King nothing but good Words; when you had done this, as Men of ill Deſigns are always in haſt, for a Confirmation of it, you immediately went and ſurprized your Viſitor, and by that means perſwaded him to confirm Dr. Hough, that very day he received an Order from the Lord Preſident to the contrary.

Upon this News the King was much amazed, and required an account of your Proceedings; therefore the Lords Commiſſioners iſſued out a Citation; and after hearing the Plea, upon mature Conſultation with the Learned of both Laws, judged the pretended Election of Dr. Hough to be void and null, and him to be removed, by an Inſtrument dated the which was affixed on the Gate. After this a Mandate was ſent on the to you to Elect the Biſhop of Oxon; upon which terms His Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed to diſpence with your Diſobedienee hitherto. But this being diſobeyed, His Majeſty in Perſon on the 4th of September ſent for you to Chriſt-Church, and required you immediately to Elect the Biſhop of Oxon Preſident. You went ſtrait to the Chappel, a place one would think ſhould have inſpired more Devotion and Awe of His Sacred Majeſty in you; and there contemptuouſly ſubſcribed and ſigned a Paper, directly thwarting His Majeſties Command. The ground of your Diſobedience you pretend that you could not Elect him, whereas you could not but know by a written Mandate that lay by you, that Admiſſion would have ſatisfied His Majeſty. Conſcience the ſtale Topick of Rebellion was here brought to vindicate your petulant and contumacious behaviour. You pretended that you were obliged by Oaths, and I am ſorry that at the ſame time you forgot that of Allegiance. And indeed there is not a greater ſign of Hypocriſie, than partial Obedience. Had you any reſpect to the Father of your Country, and your Mother the Church, you would have ſacrificed your pretended Scruples, as a Peace-Offering to the King. The beſt of us, I am ſure, have reaſon to beg God and the King's Pardon. But you, as if His Majeſty reigned by Courteſie, would have a King under you, but none over you. You urged the Obſervance of your Statutes, of which as it hath appeared, you have not been ſo conſtant Obſervers, when your own Humour prompts you to a Diſpenſation, then you can readily embrace it; witneſs but that of being ſerved per Maſculos, by which great Scandals have come to this Society by reaſon of Baſtards.

But when the King interpoſed, in whoſe Power alone it is to diſpence with them, then you preſently act according to ſuch Methods as theſe. None of theſe Pretences will eaſe you with wiſe and ſober Men.

This was the only Oppoſition His Majeſty in his Progreſs received: Where-ever His Sacred Majeſty came, he worked a miraculous Converſion, except in Oxford; and ſo far ſatisfied every one with the Equity of His Proceedings, that none went away diſcontented from His Preſence, unleſs it was for this Reaſon, that they could not enjoy it any longer.

October the 20th. We came down, and upon opening our Commiſſion, I took care to repreſent to you the Heinouſneſs of your Offence, and to perſwade you to a ſerious Repentance; but all in vain.

For on Saturday Morning we required you to Admit and Inſtal the Biſhop of Oxford; which all, except three, refuſed: In the Afternoon Dr. Hough having been deprived, and by us commanded to depart the College, came unto us without any leave, but not without great Attendance; Circumſtances I think, much unbefitting a Man pronounc'd Expelled; and there entered a Proteſtation againſt all that we had done, or hereafter ſhould do, as illegal, unjuſt and Null; which he delivered not in Writing, but by Word of Mouth: a thing repugnant to the nature of all Appeals: and which was worſe, without the uſual Salvo to His Majeſty's Supream Power. When he had ſpoken it, there followed ſuch a Tumultuous, Seditious and Inſolent HUM, which if you your ſelves had not applauded, or at leaſt conſented to, it was impoſſible but that you would have diſcovered ſome of thoſe Mutineers. However, ſince his Carriage and Language gave occaſion to it, 'twas thought fit that he only ſhould be obnoxious; and accordingly he was bound over.

On Tueſday we our ſelves cauſed the Biſhop of Oxon to be Inſtalled by his Proxy; after which we propoſed to you, whether being now Inſtalled, you would ſubmit to him in licitis & honeſtis? To which you gave an Anſwer under your Hands in the Affirmative. You then alſo deſired of us to repreſent your Caſe favourably to His Majeſty, giving all aſſurance of your Loyalty and Obedience. But this aſſurance of Submiſſion laſted not long; for on Thurſday, being required of us to ſubſcribe ſuch a Submiſſion to His Majeſty as we thought agreeable to your Duty, you required time to conſult of it; and after Deliberation, ſign'd ſuch a Paper, which ſeem'd rather to be a Proteſtation againſt your former Submiſſion, than an Acknowledgment of your Crime. Upon this we might juſtly then have proceeded to an Expulſion: but we thought fit, in Compaſſion to you, to take a Journey to London, and acquaint His Majeſty with your diſobedience and ungrateful Behaviour. His Majeſty was extreamly amaz'd that His Clemency ſhould be deſpiſed; but yet, to your Comforts be it ſpoken, His Patience and Goodneſs extends as far as your Provocations can: But if you ſtill perſiſt in your Obſtinacy, thoſe that are too Tall to Stand, and too Stubborn to Bend, deſerve to be Broken. And now I think, I have ſaid enough to let you know, that the Figg-leaves you have ſo artificially ſtitched together, are not ſufficient to cover your Nakedneſs. I wiſh to God you had the ſame Tenderneſs for your Concern, as His Majeſty's Commiſſioners have for you. But if you ſtill perſiſt to oppoſe the Royal Power of the King, we who are come to vindicate the Right and Honour of His Majeſty, reſolve to diſcharge our Conſciences and Duties to God and the King, without any reſpect of Popularity; that's but the Paradiſe of Fools, and Scorn of Wiſe Men: and therefore as for us, we have no more regard to Peoples diſlike, than what they dream: By reaſon therefore of your late Hypocritical Submiſſion, the Commiſſioners have thought fit, upon mature Conſideration, to draw up an Inſtrument which ſhall be read to you, to which, if you ſhall immediately ſubſcribe, before you leave the Room, we ſhall leave you to His Majeſty's Pardon, And this we expect from you all, except Dr. Tho. Smith and Mr. Charnock, with whoſe Behaviour the King is ſo well ſatisfied, that he expects no more from them.

Then all the Fellows being called in, their Lordſhips tendred a Form of Submiſſion to them to be ſign'd. Which take as followeth:

To the King's Moſt Excellent Majeſty.

The Humble Petition and Submiſſion of the Fellows of St. Mary Magdalen College in the Univerſity of Oxon, whoſe Names are ſubſcribed.

WE Your Majeſties moſt humble Petitioners, have a deep ſenſe of being juſtly fallen under Your Majeſties Diſpleaſure, for our Diſobedience and Contempt to Your Majeſty; and to the Authority of Your Majeſties Commiſſioners and Viſitors; We do in all Humility proſtrate our ſelves at Your Majeſties Feet, humbly begging Your Pardon for our ſaid Offences, and promiſing that we will for the future behave our ſelves more dutifully, and as a Teſtimony thereof, we do acknowledge the Authority of Your Majeſties ſaid Viſitors, and the Juſtice of their Proceedings; and we do declare our entire Submiſſion to the Lord Biſhop of Oxon as our Preſident.

To which Paper all (except Dr. Thomas Smith, and Mr. Chernock) refuſed to ſubſcribe.

Dr. Aldworth as Vice Preſident was firſt call'd in to ſign the Paper which had been read to all the Fellows.

Vice Preſident. My Lords, we deſire time to conſider of it, and to give our Anſwer in Writing.

Biſh. Ch. No, you muſt every one ſign, or refuſe as you are called.

Bar. Jenner. There is no anſwer to be given, but ay or no.

They all moved again for time, but 'twas refuſed.

Vice Preſident. My Lords, this is the firſt time of my Appearance before your Lordſhips ſince your ſitting here, and therefore I pray to be heard.

My Lords, I am as ready to comply with the King's Pleaſure, as any Man living; neither do I know, that we have ever in this place been diſobedient to the King, where it was in our Power to obey His Commands: Our Founder in the firſt Clauſe of the Oath we take at this Election, has provided, that no one ſhall be Preſident of his College, but who was bred in it, or in the College where he himſelf was bred. Now for us who have Elected Dr. Hough, a Perſon qualified according to our Statutes, who has been Inſtalled, Sworn, Confirm'd and Approv'd of in all the ways and manner preſcribed in the Statutes for us. My Lords, to accept and admit of a Stranger, and a Forreigner in his place, is to the beſt of my Underſtanding, a giving up the Rights of the College to other Uſes then the Founder deſigned it. Here he was interrupted.

Biſh. Ch. Your Statutes are over-rul'd by the King's Authority.

Vice Preſident. My Lords, Your Lordſhips ſit here as the Viſitors; which implies, there are certain Laws and Statutes we are bid to obſerve, and by which we are to be govern'd; and if it ſhall appear to your Lordſhips, that we have acted conformably to theſe Statutes, I hope we ſhall neither incur the King's Diſpleaſure nor your Lordſhips. The whole Tenour of our Statutes run, That we ſhould inviolably maintain our Rights, and obſerve the Rules of our Founder; he has laid his Curſe upon us if we vary from them. (Here he repeated the Words of the Founder) Ordinamus ſub pœnâ Anathematis, & indignationis Omnipotentis Dei, &c. Item ſub interminatione Divini Judicii interdicimus.

Biſh. Ch. Are you not to obey the King as well as the Founders Statutes?

Vice Preſident. My Lord, I ever did obey the King, and ever will: Our Statutes which we are ſworn to obſerve, are confirm'd by ſeveral Kings and Queens before and ſince the Reformation, and as we keep them, are agreeable to the King's Laws both Eccleſiaſtical and Civil, and ſo long as we live up to them, we obey the King.

Biſh. Ch. Your Statutes were never confirm'd by His Preſent Majeſty.

Dr. John Smyth. My Lord, Neither have they been repealed by His Majeſty, and what is not repeal'd is confirm'd.

Then their Lordſhips preſſing to ſign or refuſe; the Vice Preſident ſaid,

Vice Preſident. My Lords, I'll then deal plainly, in regard to my Oath and the Statutes, to the right of all our Succeſſors and of Dr. Hough, whom I believe to have been as fairly Elected, and as legally poſſeſſed as ever any ſince the Foundation of the College: I cannot ſubmit to the Biſhop of Oxon as Preſident. So he was ordered to withdraw.

Then the ſame Queſtion was put to all the other Fellows ſingly, who all refuſed to ſign the Submiſſion, (except Dr. Thomas Smyth and Mr. Chernock, who were not preſt for the Reaſons above.)

Mr. Thompſon being called in to ſign the Paper ſaid,

Mr. Thompſon. My Lords, I have been always obedient to His Majeſties Commands, I was not concerned in the Election of Dr. Hough; I voted for Mr. Farmer, and am ready to ſubmit to the Biſhop of Oxon.

Biſh. Ch. Did you not put your Hand to this Petition? Is not this your Hand——Read the Petition---It was Read——In which the Fellows deſired His Majeſty, to nominate any qualified Perſon, and to retract His Mandate granted for Mr. Farmer.

Mr. Thompſon. My Lord, I conceive the Petition not to be diſobedient. We had not yet receiv'd the Mandate, as ſoon as it came, I humbled my ſelf.

Bar. Jen. Then why can't you humble your ſelf again; is there any hurt in it?

Mr. Thompſon. This Paper requires me to own my Diſobedience to His Majeſty; I am not conſcious of any, and therefore I cannot ſubſcribe.

After a ſhort time, all who refuſed to ſign the Submiſſion were called in, and by Sentence of their Lordſhips, expell'd the College for Contempt, &c. (except as before)——After Sentence, all that were expell'd ſpoke to this Effect:--'My 'Lords, we profeſs all Duty to the King, and 'Reſpect to your Lordſhips, but muſt beg leave 'to declare; That we think our ſelves injur'd in 'your

'your Lordſhips Proceedings, and therefore 'proteſt againſt them, and ſhall uſe all juſt and 'legal ways of being Relieved——

After a ſhort time, an Inſtrument was fix't on the College-Gates, in theſe Words.

By His Majeſties Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, &c. particularly authorized and impowered to viſit St. Mary Magdalen College in the Univerſity of Oxon.

WHereas in our Viſitation of the ſaid College, it appeareth unto us, that Doctor Charles Aldworth, Dr. Alexander Pudſey, Dr. John Smith, Dr. Tho. Bailey, Dr. Tho. Stafford, Maſter Robert Almond, Mr. Manwaring Hamond, Mr. John Rogers, Mr. Richard Strickland, Mr. Henry Dobſon, Mr. James Bailey, Mr. John Davies, Mr. Francis Bagſhaw, Mr. James Fayrer, Mr. Joſeph Harwar, Mr. Tho. Bateman, Mr. George Hunt, Mr. William Cradock, Mr. John Gillman, Mr. George Fulham, Mr. Charles Pennyſton, Mr. Robert Hyde, Mr. John Yerbury, Mr. Robert Holden, and Mr. Stephen Wilks, Fellows of the ſame College, have been ſeverally guilty of Diſobedience to His Majeſty's Commands, and obſtinately contemn'd His Royal Authority, and do ſtill perſiſt in the ſame: We have thought fit, upon mature Conſideration thereof, to Declare, Pronounce and Decree, That the ſaid Dr. Charles Aldworth, &c. and every of them, be Deprived and Expelled from their reſpective Fellowſhips: And we do by this our Sentence and Decree, Deprive and Expel them and their ſaid ſeveral and reſpective Fellowſhips.

Given under our Seal, this 16th day of November, 1687.

WHITE-HALL December 10.

HIS Majeſty's Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, and for viſiting all Cathedral and Collegiate Churches and Colleges, &c. met this Day; and taking into their Conſideration all that had paſſed in the buſineſs of S. Mary Magdalen College in Oxford, and the contemptuous and diſobedient Behaviour of Dr. John Hough, and ſeveral of the Fellows of that College, throughout the whole Proceeding, their Lordſhips Declared, Decreed and Pronounced, That Dr. Hough, Dr. Charles Aldworth, Dr. Henry Fairfax, Dr. Alexander Pudſey, Dr. John Smith, Dr. Thomas Bailey, Dr. Thomas Stafford, Mr. Robert Almond, Mr. Manwaring Hamond, Mr. John Rogers, Mr. Richard Strickland, Mr. Henry Dobſon, Mr. James Bailey, Mr. John Davies, Mr. Francis Bagſhaw, Mr. James Fayrer, Mr. Joſeph Harwar, Mr. Thomas Bateman, Mr. George Hunt, Mr. William Cradock, Mr. John Gillman, Mr. George Fulham, Mr. Charles Pennyſton, Mr. Robert Hyde, Mr. Edward Yerbury, Mr. Henry Holden, and Mr. Stephen Wilks, ſhould be uncapable of receiving, or being admitted to any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, Benefice or Promotion: And ſuch of them who are not yet in holy Orders, were adjudged uncapable of receiving or being admitted into the ſame. All Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Eccleſiaſtical Officers and Miniſters within the Kingdom of England, being required to take notice of the ſaid Sentence and Decree, and to yield Obedience thereunto.

THE 17th of January, 1687. being the day that the Thirty Demies of Magdalen College were, by Summons from the Biſhop of Oxon, the new Preſident, commanded to appear before him; and none appearing, Mr. Chernock, the new Vice Preſident, called for the Buttery-Book, and ſtruck out the Names of Mr. Holt, Mr. Adams Senior, Mr. Veſey, and Mr. Brabourn Maſters of Art; Mr. Hyde, Mr. Woodward, Mr. Fulham, Mr. Watkins, Mr. Stacy, Mr. Sherwin, and Mr. Kenton, Batchelors of Art; Mr. Croſs, Mr. Buſh, and Mr. Wells, Under Graduates: Which Fourteen were then Reſident in the Univerſity, and three more, who eſcaped Expulſion at that time.

L. C. J. Let it be filed.

Mr. Att. Gen. By this Retorn your Lordſhip obſerves, what it is my Lords the Biſhops were committed to the Tower for; it is by Warrant from the Council Board, where, when their Lordſhips appeared, they were not pleaſed to give their Recognizances to appear here, as they were required by the King to do; and thereupon they were committed to the Tower, and now come before the Court upon this Retorn of the King's Writ of Habeas Corpus, and by the Retorn it does appear, it was for Contriving, Writing, Framing, and Publiſhing a Seditious Libell againſt His Majeſty and the Government; my Lord, it is our Duty, who are the King's Council, purſuant to our Orders, to proſecute ſuch kind of Offences, and when the proper time ſhall come for us to open the nature of the Offence, your Lordſhips will then judge, what reaſon there is for this Proſecution; but in the mean time, what we are now to offer to your Lordſhip is, The Officer of this Court has an Information againſt his Grace the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and the reſt of my Lords the Biſhops, which we deſire may be read to them, and pray that they may plead to it, according to the Courſe of the Court.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, to ſpare us a Word for my Lords the Biſhops.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, We pray for the King the Information may be read.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We deſire to be heard a word firſt.

* Sir Will. Williams.

* Mr. Soll. Gen. We oppoſe your ſpeaking any thing, till the Information hath been read.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But what we have to offer is proper before it be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your time is not yet come, Sir Robert.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes, this is our proper time, for what we have to ſay, and therefore we move it now, before there be any other Proceedings in this matter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is irregular to move any thing yet, pray let the Information be read firſt.

Mr. S. Pemberton. If your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſpare us, we will offer nothing but what is fit for us to do.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. And now is our proper time for it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Gentlemen, You do know the way of Proceeding in ſuch Caſes better than ſo, I am ſure, as for you, Sir Robert Sawyer, you have often oppos'd any ſuch Motion as irregular, and I hope the Caſe is not alter'd, however you may be; the courſe of the Court is the ſame.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. With Submiſſion, if your Lordſhip pleaſe to ſpare me a Word, that which I would move, is, to diſcharge my Lords the Biſhops upon this Return, and from their Commitment upon this Warrant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Surely theſe Gentlemen think to have a Liberty above all other People; here is an Information, which we pray my Lords the Biſhops may hear read, and plead to.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Certainly, Sir Robert Sawyer, you would not have done thus half a Year ago.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. What would not I have done? I move regularly (with Submiſſion) to diſcharge my Lords the Biſhops from their Commitment; if they are not here legally impriſoned, now they are before your Lordſhips upon this Writ, then you will give us leave to move for their Diſcharge, before any thing elſe be ſaid to them; and that is it we have to ſay, to demand the Judgment of the Court upon this Retorn, whether we are legally impriſoned?

Mr. Att. Gen. Under Favour, my Lord, neither the Court, nor they, are ripe for any Motion of this Nature yet.

Mr. S. Pemberton. If we do not move it now, it will afterwards (I fear) be too late.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Theſe Gentlemen are very forward, but certainly they miſtake their time; this is a Habeas Corpus that's brought by the King, and not by the Priſoners; and therefore they are too ſoon, till they ſee what the King has to ſay to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordſhip cannot as yet be moved for your Judgment about the Legality of this Commitment, becauſe this Writ was granted upon our Motion, who are of Council for the King, and upon this Writ they are brought here; and what is it we deſire for the King? Certainly nothing but what is Regular; we have here an Information for the King againſt my Lords, and we deſire they may plead to it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Good my Lord, will you pleaſe to hear us a little to this Matter.

L. C. Juſt. Brother Pemberton, we will not refuſe to hear you by no means, when you ſpeak in your proper time, but it is not ſo now; for the King is pleaſed, by his Attorney and Sollicitor, to Charge theſe Noble Perſons, my Lords the Biſhops, with an Information, and the Kings Council call to have that Information read, but you will not permit it to be read.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray my Lord ſpare us a word: if we are not here as Priſoners regularly before your Lordſhip, and are not brought in by the due Proceſs of the Court, then certainly the Kings Council, or the Court have no Power to charge us with an Information; therefore we beg that you will hear us to that, in the firſt place, whether we are Legally here before you?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Theſe Gentlemen will have their proper time for ſuch a Motion hereafter.

Mr. Pollexfen. No, Mr. Sollicitor, this is, without all Queſtion, our only time for it, we ſhall have no time afterwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, you will, for what do we who are of Council for the King now ask of the Court, but that this Information may be read? when that is done, if we move to have my Lords the Biſhops plead, then they may move what they will; but before we make that Motion, they cannot break in upon us with their Motion; and with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, whether my Lords the Biſhops were duly Committed, is not yet a Queſtion.

Mr. Finch. But it is, and this the fitteſt time for it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray will you hear us quietly what we have to ſay, and then anſwer us with Reaſon, if you can; I think we are in a proper way, but they are not my Lord; for (as I ſaid,) my Lords the Biſhops are brought by the Kings Writ upon our Motion for the King, not upon theirs, and now we have them here before the Court, We for the King would charge them with an Information; which Information, that they and the Court may know what it is they are charged with, we pray it may be read to them by the Clerk; and when it is read, let theſe Gentlemen ſay what they will for them, they ſhall have their time to ſpeak; but certainly they ought not to obſtruct the Kings Proceedings, nor oppoſe the Reading of the Information to theſe

theſe noble Lords, who are brought here in Cuſtody into Court, to this very purpoſe, that they may be charged with this Information.

Mr. S. Pemberton. But we have ſomewhat to ſay, before you can come to that, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You ought not to be heard as yet.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Under favour we ought to be heard.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, Mr. Sollicitor has oppoſed our being heard, but we now deſire he would hear our anſwer to it, and that which we have to ſay, is this, That my Lords the Biſhops are not here Regularly in the Court to be charged with an Information; and if the Law be not with us in this point, as we doubt not to make appear it is, no queſtion but when your Lordſhip has heard what we have to ſay, you will give a right Rule in it: My Lord, we ſay, that by the Rules of Law, no man ought to be Charged with an Information or Indictment, by the Expreſs Statute of Edward the Third, unleſs he come into the Court by Legal proceſs; that is a ſtanding Rule, and the practice of this and all other Courts is purſuant to it; Now in this Court you have ſeveral proceſſes that go out of this Court, and he that comes as taken by vertue of a Capias, or an Attachment after a Summons, or by Venire in the nature of a Subpœna; I ſay, he that comes in upon theſe proceſſes, may be charged with an Information; but where a perſon is in Priſon, committed by another Juriſdiction, and another Authority, than that of this Court; when the Priſoner is brought here by Habeas Corpus, the firſt thing the Court has to do, is to enquire whether he be Legally Committed; to that end the Return is filed, and the party has leave to make his Exceptions to it, as we do in this Caſe. My Lords are brought here upon a Habeas Corpus, the Return of which has been read, and now the Return is filed, we are proper to move, that my Lords may be diſcharged; for you now ſee what they are Committed for, it is for a Miſdemeanour in making and publiſhing a Libel, that's the matter for which they are committed; and it appears by the Return likewiſe, that they who are thus committed are Peers of the Realm, for ſo my Lords the Biſhops all are, and for a Miſdemeanour they ought not by Law to have been committed.

L. C. J. You go too far now, Sir Robert Sawyer, I would willingly hear you whatſoever you have to ſay; but then it muſt be in its due time.

Mr. Att. Gen. This very diſcourſe (indeed I have heard) has paſs'd up and down the Town for Law; We may ſee now whence they had it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I know it has heretofore been urged by me, but denied by them who now urge it, and I am glad that they now learn of me to tack about.

L. C. J. Look you Gentlemen, do not fall upon one another, but keep to the matter before you.

Mr. S. Pemberton. So we would, my Lord, if the Kings Council would let us; Firſt, we ſay, we being brought here upon a Return of a Habeas Corpus, there was neither at the time of the Commitment Cauſe to Impriſon us, nor was there by the Warrant any Cauſe to detain us in Priſon; and for that, beſides what has been hinted at, we ſay further, that here it is returned, that we were Committed by ſuch and ſuch Perſons, Lords of the Privy Council; but the Return doth not ſay, that it was done by them, as Lords of the Privy Council, which muſt be in Council; for if it be not in Council, they have not power to make ſuch a Warrant for the Commitment of any Perſon, and that we ſtand upon; here is a Return that is not a good Return of a Legal Commitment, and therefore we pray my Lords may be diſcharged.

Mr Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, ſpare me a word, that is the thing we humbly offer to your Lordſhips Conſideration; and under Favour, I think we are proper both as to the Matter, and as to the Time; the Return is now filed before you: if by this Return there appears to have been ſuch a Cauſe to commit theſe Lords to Priſon, as is Legal, then we acknowledge they may in a Legal courſe be brought to anſwer for their Offence; but with Submiſſion, it appears not by any thing that is in this Return, that my Lords the Biſhops were committed by the Order of the Privy Council. All that is ſaid, is, That they were Committed by my Lord Chancellor, and thoſe other Perſons, named Lords of the Privy Council; which we conceive is not a good Return, for they can do nothing as Lords of the Privy Council, except only as they are in Council, and by order made in Council; except that do appear, they have no Power to commit; then take the Caſe to be ſo; here is a man committed by one that has no Authority to commit him, and he is brought by Habeas Corpus into this Court, what ſhall the Court do with him? Shall they charge him with an Information? No, it does appear that he was never in Cuſtody, but under a Commitment, by thoſe who had no Legal Power to commit him; and therefore he muſt be diſcharged; and that we pray for my Lords the Biſhops. What the Kings Council may have to ſay to them afterwards, by way of Information or otherwiſe, they muſt take the Regular Methods of the Law to bring my Lords the Biſhops to anſwer; but as the Caſe ſtands here before you, upon this Return, it does appear, they had no Authority to commit them, by whoſe Warrant they were committed; and therefore this Court has nothing to do but to diſcharge them.

Mr. Finch. I beg your Lordſhips leave to ſay one word farther on the ſame ſide, I think with humble Submiſſion, this is the moſt proper time for us to make this Motion, for here is a Habeas Corpus Returned, this Return is filed, and then the Kings Council move to charge my Lords the Biſhops with an Information, that Motion of theirs (we ſay) is too ſoon, unleſs my Lords are here in Court, I mean Legally in Court; for no man is in Court ſo as to be a liable to be charged with an Indictment, or Information, that is not brought into Court by Legal proceſs, or as a priſoner upon a Legal Commitment; then, my Lord, with humble ſubmiſſion we ſay, that it doth appear by this Return, that my Lords the Biſhops are not here Legally in Court, becauſe this Commitment of theirs was not a Legal Commitment; and two Objections we have to it, The one is, that the Perſons committing had no Authority to commit, for the Return ſays, that it was by Vertue of a Warrant under the Hands of ſuch and ſuch, being Lords of the Council, and they (we ſay) have no Authority to do this; The other Objection is, that the Fact for which they were committed, they ought not to have been Impriſoned for: the Fact charged upon them is in the nature of a bare Miſdemeanour, and for ſuch a Fact it is the Right of my Lords the Biſhops (as Peers of the Realm) that they ought to be ſerved with the uſual Proceſs of Subpœna, and not to be committed to Priſon. Theſe are the two Objections that we have to this Return, and this is (under favour) the proper time for us to make this Objection, before the Kings Council can charge my Lords the Biſhops with an Information.

L. C. J. What ſay you to it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. With ſubmiſſion, my Lord, theſe Gentlemen have out of courſe, and preposterouſly let themſelves into this Diſcourſe, and when all is done, we muſt recur to that which we moved to your Lordſhip before, to deſire that your Lordſhip would order the Information to be read, and when we call my Lords to plead to the Information, then will be their proper time to make this Objection; for 'tis a ſtrange thing certainly for Men to make Objections before they know what it is they are charged with; They ſay, the ground of their Motion is, becauſe my Lords the Biſhops are here in Court upon the Return of an Habeas Corpus, and therefore they come in upon a Commitment (as they ſay) for that which they ought not to be committed for at all, and we cannot charge them unleſs they be properly in Court. Now for that, it is true if that Commitment of theirs were the only thing that was here before the Court, then the Court would, if that Commitment were Illegal, diſcharge them of that; but when a Man is preſent here in Court, brought into Court, let him come how he will, he is not to have any longer time than that Inſtant to appear to, and be charged with the Information; 'Tis true, upon a Subpœna, which is in the Nature of a Summons, there a Man hath (as it were) an Eſſoyn, and may make his Excuſe, and he ſhall have time; but when he is preſent in Court, either as a Perſon priviledged, as an Officer, or as a Priſoner, he ſhall be charged preſently; and theſe Gentlemen are not to let themſelves into Invectives againſt the Commitment, thereby to keep off their being charged with the Information. Beſides that, it is ſtrange theſe Gentlemen ſhould know the Priviledge of my Lords the Biſhops as Peers, better than all the Lords of the Council, who are moſt of them themſelves Peers, and they that make the Objection ſhould have conſidered, whether theſe Lords that made the Commitment, did not think themſelves concerned in all the Priviledges of Peerage, as well as theſe ſeven Noble Lords?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is this an Anſwer to our Objection, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. I ſay, it is a ſtrange Objection, and I anſwer, 'tis out of due time; for this we ſay, that my Lords the Biſhops being now here in Court as Priſoners upon a Commitment, and we deſiring to charge them with an Information, you are not to examine the matter of their Commitment, and therefore I do inſiſt upon it, that the Information ſhould be read, and then you will conſider, whether they are not bound to plead to it.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I hope Mr. Attorney General will not think Legal Objections to be Invectives.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly I know not what you call Legal Objections, I do not think yours are ſo, nor do I think Legal Objections are Invectives, but I uſed that Expreſſion, as very proper for what you urged againſt the Commitment.

L. C. J. Nay, Gentlemen, don't quarrel about words.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we would not willingly have Words given us to quarrel at.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, the Queſtion is, whether we are in the right Method of Practice, as to the courſe of the Court, or they? It may be theſe Gentlemen think to make us angry, and take Advantage of our being in a Paſſion.

Mr. Finch. Mr. Sollicitor, we deſire to have our Objections anſwered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nay, if you begin to be angry, Gentlemen, we can be angry too.

L. C. J. I would have neither of you be angry.
